START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

August 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER: BSO-56-065

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholar-ship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

REEL 65

Volumes 105-106

BSO, Pops, Tanglewood

1961-1962

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION[SM] RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 105

BSO
Pops

1961 - 1962

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
56-032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
56-033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
56-034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
56-036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
56-041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
56-042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA - 1961-1962 SEASON

PRE-SEASON - BOSTON ---------- 1
BURGIN RETIREMENT ---------- 9
PRE-SEASON - NEW YORK ---------- 13
SYMPHONY DEFECIT ---------- 15
ORGAN RECITALS ---------- 16
OPEN REHEARSALS ---------- 17
MOTEL LUNCHEONS ---------- 19
PRE-SEASON - RADIO and TELEVISION ---------- 22
MISCELLANEOUS ---------- 26
PRE-SEASON - SPRINGFIELD ---------- 31

OCTOBER

BOSTON I ---------- 33
BOSTON II - Michele Boegner ---------- 35
SPRINGFIELD ---------- 37
RICHARD BURGIN
BOSTON III - Nikita Magaloff ---------- 39
PROVIDENCE - Samuel Mayes ---------- 42
MID-WESTERN TOUR ---------- 43
ROCHESTER ---------- 43
CINCINNATI - Samuel Mayes ---------- 44
LEXINGTON ---------- 49
COLUMBUS - Samuel Mayes ---- Richard Burgin ---------- 51
DETROIT ---------- 52
ANN ARBOR - Samuel Mayes ---------- 53
BOSTON IV ---------- 54
RICHARD BURGIN

NOVEMBER

BOSTON V - Lukas Foss ---------- 59
BOSTON VI - Joseph de Pasquale ---------- 63
MONDAY SERIES ---------- 65
TUESDAY CONCERT - Vlado Perlemuter ---------- 68
FIRST NEW YORK TOUR ---------- 70
BOSTON VII ---------- 84
RICHARD BURGIN
WORCESTER CONCERT ---------- 87
RICHARD BURGIN -

DECEMBER

BOSTON VIII ---------- 88
ERNEST ANSERMET
BOSTON IX ---------- 91
ERNEST ANSERMET
SECOND NEW YORK TOUR ---------- 93
PROVIDENCE ---------- 100
CHRISTMAS VACATION ---------- 101
BOSTON X ---------- 103

MISCELLANEOUS ---------- 245
1961 - 1962 PROSPECTUS ---------- 257
ARTHUR FIEDLER ---------- 261
RADIO and TELEVISION ---------- 267
RECORDINGS ---------- 270

JANUARY

BOSTON XI ---------- 105
WILLIAM STEINBERG

BOSTON XII - Erica Morini ---------- 108

BOSTON XIII ---------- 111
RICHARD BURGIN

THIRD NEW YORK TOUR ---------- 114

BOHEMIAN CLUB DINNER for DR. MUNCH ---------- 120

FEBRUARY

BOSTON XIV - Jeanne Marie Darre ---------- 122

BOSTON XV - Rudolf Serkin ---------- 124

BOSTON XVI - Andre Navarra ---------- 127

PENSION FUND CONCERT - February 18 ---------- 129

FOURTH NEW YORK TOUR ---------- 131

MARCH

BOSTON XVII ---------- 142

BOSTON XVIII ---------- 145

BOSTON XIX ---------- 148
ELEAZAR de CARVALHO

BOSTON XX - Nichole Henriot-Schweitzer ---------- 152

BOSTON XXI ---------- 156

APRIL

FIFTH NEW YORK TOUR ---------- 158

BOSTON XXII - Ruth Posselt ---------- 167
RICHARD BURGIN

PROVIDENCE ---------- 170

BOSTON XXIII - Nadia Boulanger ---------- 171

BOSTON XXIV ---------- 176

MUNCH FINALE ---------- 181

UNESCO CONCERT - October 24 ---------- 192

YOUTH CONCERTS ---------- 195

ERIC LEINSDORF ---------- 201

ORGAN RECITALS ---------- 221

JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN ---------- 222

NEW TRUSTEES ---------- 225

HARVEY GENEREUX ---------- 228

WGBH BENEFITS ---------- 231

MRS. HIRSHMAN ---------- 233

SYMPHONY PERSONNEL CONCERTS ---------- 235

MADAME KOUSSEVITSKY ---------- 242

KREISLER - IBERT DEATHS ---------- 243

MISCELLANEOUS ---------- 245

1961 - 1962 PROSPECTUS ---------- 257

ARTHUR FIEDLER ---------- 261

RADIO and TELEVISION ---------- 267

RECORDINGS ---------- 270

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director

SCHEDULE OF CONCERTS

WINTER SEASON 1961–1962

SEPTEMBER

29–30	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. I)

OCTOBER

2	Springfield
3	Boston	(Tues. A)
6–7	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. II)
8	Boston	(Sun. a)
10	Providence	(I)
12	Boston	(Rehearsal I)
13–14	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. III)
16	Rochester
17	Cincinnati
18	Lexington
19	Columbus
20	Detroit
21	Ann Arbor
22	Ann Arbor
24	Boston	(UNESCO
27–28	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IV)
31	Cambridge	(I)

NOVEMBER

2	Boston	(Rehearsal II)
3–4	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. V)
6	Boston	(Mon. I)
7	Boston	(Tues. B)
10–11	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VI)
13	Storrs
14	New Haven
15	New York	(Wed. I)
16	Washington
17	Brooklyn	(I)
18	New York	(Sat. I)
21	Cambridge	(II)
24–25	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VII)
26	Worcester
28	Providence	(II)

DECEMBER

1–2	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. VIII)
3	Boston	(Sun. b)
5	Boston	(Tues. C)
7	Boston	(Rehearsal III)
8–9	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. IX)
10	New York	(United Nations)
12	Hartford
13	New York	(Wed. II)
14	Englewood
15	Brooklyn	(II)
16	New York	(Sat. II)
18	Boston	(Mon. II)
19	Providence	(III)
29–30	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. X)*

JANUARY

2	Boston	(Tues. D)*
4	Boston	(Rehearsal IV)
5–6	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XI)
7	Boston	(Sun. c)
9	Cambridge	(III)

JANUARY (continued)

11	Boston	(Rehearsal V)
12–13	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XII)
15	Boston	(Mon. III)
16	Boston	(Tues. E)
19–20	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIII)
23	New London
24	New York	(Wed. III)
25	Baltimore
26	Brooklyn	(III)
27	New York	(Sat. III)
30	Boston	(Tues. F)

FEBRUARY

2–3	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIV)
4	Boston	(Sun. d)
6	Providence	(IV)
8	Boston	(Rehearsal VI)
9–10	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XV)
12	Boston	(Mon. IV)
13	Boston	(Tues. G)
15	Boston	(Rehearsal VII)
16–17	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVI)
19	Hartford
20	New Haven
21	New York	(Wed. IV)
22	New Brunswick
23	Brooklyn	(IV)
24	New York	(Sat. IV)
27	Cambridge	(IV)

MARCH

2–3	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVII)
4	Boston	(Sun. e)
6	Boston	(Tues. H)
8	Boston	(Rehearsal VIII)
9–10	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XVIII)
16–17	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XIX)
19	Boston	(Mon. V)
20	Boston	(Tues. I)
23–24	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XX)
25	Boston	(Sun. f)
27	Cambridge	(V)
29	Boston	(Rehearsal IX)
30–31	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXI)

APRIL

3	Princeton
4	New York	(Wed. V)
5	Washington
6	Brooklyn	(V)
7	New York	(Sat. V)
10	Providence	(V)
13–14	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXII)
17	Cambridge	(VI)
19–21	Boston	(Thurs.-Sat. XXIII)
23	Boston	(Mon. VI)
24	Boston	(Tues. J)
26	Boston	(Rehearsal X)
27–28	Boston	(Fri.-Sat. XXIV)

* Chamber orchestra concerts

Pre-Season-Boston

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271

OCT 1961

SYMPHONIC HIGHLIGHTS

SPECIAL A six-week series, in the coming New York Philharmonic season, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, will be entitled "The Gallic Approach." Beginning September 28, it will emphasize the musical ties between France and the United States. Another six-week series, "The Teutonic Approach," will begin March 29, 1962. . . . Richard Korn, as musical director of The Orchestra of America, has announced that, in addition to the music of the past and present in the United States, the repertoire will be expanded to include the music of our neighbors of the Western Hemisphere—Canada and the Latin-American countries. It is also announced that the orchestra will each season present as soloist a winner of the annual award of the National Federation of Music Clubs . . . For the opening concert of the 1961-62 season, the Beverly Hills (Los Angeles) Symphony Orchestra will perform Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee by Gunther Schuller. Thirty original Paul Klee paintings, gathered from private and public collections, will be on exhibition at the concerts.

PRAISEWORTHY The Boston Symphony will have a fifty-week season in which 221 concerts will be given. As Henry B. Cabot, President of the Orchestra's Trustees, states, "The Trustees believe the Orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards. At the same time the Trustees feel a responsibility for the welfare of the orchestra members. By steady employment through most of the year, the ladies and gentlemen who make up the Boston Symphony Orchestra can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families." The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the orchestra's concert activity in Boston since 1925, will be given at Symphony Hall on November 6, December 18, January 15, February 12, March 19 and April 23 . . . The New York Philharmonic opened its local season on September 26 with a special non-subscription concert benefiting the Pension Fund. Leonard Bernstein conducted and Eileen Farrell was soloist . . . The Fresno (California) Philharmonic Orchestra announces its policy, with the present season, of pairing concerts. This has come about because of the great demand for season tickets. By giving each program twice, single-admission music lovers will have a chance also to hear the concerts . . . Expansion of the Kansas City Philharmonic orchestra's over-all activities until it approaches a grand total of nearly one hundred concerts is the announcement for the Philharmonic's coming season, its twenty-ninth, and the fourteenth for its musical director-conductor, Hans Schwieger.

TOURS The Boston Symphony gives each year six concerts in Cambridge, five in Providence, five in Brooklyn, ten in Manhattan, and twenty on tour . . . The

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

SEP 1961

Charles Munch Honored In Special Remarks Before Congress

WASHINGTON — Representative Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) noted the recent announcement that Charles Munch would retire as music director of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

In his remarks to the House of Representatives Conte said: ". . . it is with true sorrow and wonderful memories that I bring to the attention of the House the coming retirement of one of the greatest artists of the musical world . . . With the end of the 1962 season, at the age of 70, he will leave Boston. It will be the end of an era, for conductors of the quality of Dr. Munch are individuals who bring their interpretations to music, just as literature produces genius of approach to a theme."

Conte also quoted from an editorial in the Boston Globe: "Boston has much to thank him for: besides giving his all, he kept the orchestra at the top of form."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763

SEP 23 1961

French Pair To Debut in Symphony

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by two noted French pianists and a distinguished French 'cellist during the orchestra's 81st season and the 13th and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as music director. He will begin the season next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

The piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre and Michele Boegner (Beh—as in birth—n'yay). Last year the title of Chevalier des Arts et Letfres was conferred on Mme. Darre. In 1950, she had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honer.

Esteemed throughout Europe as a virtuoso, Mme. Darre also is famous as a professor of piano af the Paris Conservatory. In a shorter career, Mlle. Boegner has shown remarkable achievements. Her 20th birthday occurred last month. Andre Navarra is the eminent French 'cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

Already well known in America but new to these concerts will be the Russian-born piano virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff. As a small boy he won the encouragement of Prokofiev. After the Russian Revolution he studied in Finland with Alexander Siloti, famous pupil of Liszt, then continued at the Paris Conservatory with Isidore Philipp, toured Europe and American and, since 1949, has taught the virtuoso class of the Geneva Conservatory.

A newcomer among his orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow. Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's distinguished associate conductor, Richard Burgin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

SEP 23 1961

Music

Complete Plans for Community Concerts

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Plans have been completed for the kick-off of the 1961-62 Community Concert season in this city. The combined Greater-Lowell and Lawrence group will meet Sunday evening at the Vesper Country club to get the season rolling.

From the indications this season could be the most successful to date. The announcement of two major events, a song recital by the noted Metropolitan Opera company's baritone, Robert Merrill, and a concert by the Italian chamber group, I Musici, has already created more than usual interest.

Adele Addison

There will be at least one more event scheduled for this series, and if the response warrants, two more. As an incentive to local members, Rosalind Elias, Lowell's young Met star, will appear in the series in Manchester, N. H.

And again, as in past years, every Community Concert member will be accorded the privilege of attending concerts throughout the area where this series is held. Those holding tickets again will be assured of many programs, which means that the price of an individual event will come to a total of only a few cents.

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony orchestra by two noted French pianists and distinguished French 'cellist during the orchestra's 81st season and the 13th and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as its music director. He will begin the season on the early dates of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, September 29 and 30.

The piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre and Michele Boegner. Last year the title Chevalier des Arts et Lettres was conferred on Mme. Darre. Previously, in 1950, she had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Esteemed throughout Europe as a virtuoso, she also is famous as a professor of piano at the Paris Conservatory of Music. In a shorter career, Mlle. Boegner has shown remarkable achievements. Her 20th birthday occurred last month. Andre Navarre is the eminent French 'cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

ALREADY WELL-KNOWN in America, but new to these concerts, will be the Russian-born virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff. Since 1949 he has taught the virtuoso class at the Geneva Conservatory of Music.

A newcomer among this orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow. He established himself then as a masterly conductor at the head of the Israel Philharmonic orchestra. Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's distinguished associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Lukas Foss will direct his composition, "Time Cycle," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Returning soloists at the piano will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and the youthful Evelyne Crochet. Following an absence of 15 years, the eminent violinist, Erica Morini, is to return. Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's prodigious principal 'cellist will be soloist in Boston, Providence and on tour.

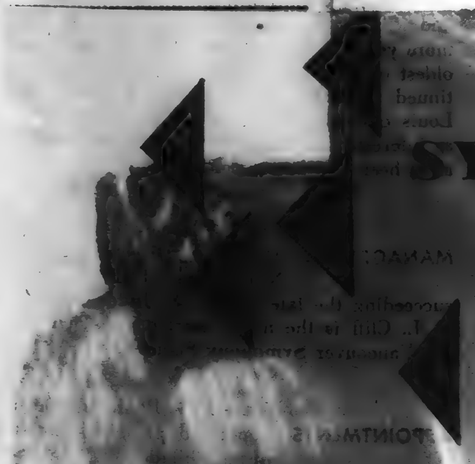
The new Monday evening concerts will begin on Nov. 6 and the open rehearsal (on 10 Thursday evenings), Oct. 12. Dr. Munch will inaugurate the season with this program: Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

THE GREATEST TI

Pre-Season-Boston

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271
OCT 1961

SYMPHONIC HIGHLIGHTS



SPECIAL A six-week series, in the coming New York Philharmonic season, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, will be entitled "Two Gallic Approaches." Beginning September . . . it will emphasize the musical ties between France and the United States. Another six-week series, "The Teutonic Approach," will begin March 29, 1962. . . . Richard Korn, as musical director of The Orchestra of America, has announced that, in addition to the music of the past and present in the United States, the repertoire will be expanded to include the music of our neighbors of the Western Hemisphere—Canada and the Latin American countries. It is also announced that the orchestra will each season present as soloist a winner of the annual award of the National Federation of Music Clubs. . . . For the opening concert of the 1961-62 season, the Beverly Hills (Los Angeles) Symphony Orchestra will perform Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee by Gunther Schuller. Thirty original Paul Klee paintings, gathered from private and public collections, will be on exhibition at the concerts.

PRAISEWORTHY The Boston Symphony will have a fifty-week season in which 221 concerts will be given. . . . Henry B. Cabot, President of the Orchestra's Trustees, states, "The Trustees believe the Orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards. At the same time, the Trustees feel a responsibility for the welfare of the orchestra members. By steady employment through most of the year, the ladies and gentlemen who make up the Boston Symphony Orchestra can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families." The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the orchestra's . . . activity in Boston since 1925, will be given at Symphony Hall on November 6, December 18, January 15, February 12, March 19 and April 23. . . . The New York Philharmonic opened its local season on September 26 with a special non-subscription concert benefiting the Pension Fund. Leonard Bernstein conducted and Eileen Farrell was soloist. . . . The Fresno (California) Philharmonic Orchestra announces its policy, with the present season, of pairing concerts. This has come about because of the great demand for season tickets. By giving each program twice, single-admission music lovers will have a chance also to hear the concerts . . . Expansion of the Kansas City Philharmonic orchestra's over-all activities until it approaches a grand total of nearly one hundred concerts is the announcement for the Philharmonic's coming season, its twenty-ninth, and the fourteenth for its musical director-conductor, Hans Schwieger.

TOURS The Boston Symphony gives each year six concerts in Cambridge, five in Providence, five in Brooklyn, ten in Manhattan, and twenty on tour . . . The

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
SEP 1961

Charles Munch Honored In Special Remarks Before Congress

WASHINGTON — Representative Silvio Conte (R-Mass.) noted the recent announcement that Charles Munch would retire as music director of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

In his remarks to the House of Representatives Conte said: ". . . it is with true sorrow and wonderful memories that I bring to the attention of the House the coming retirement of one of the greatest artists of the musical world . . . With the end of the 1962 season, at the age of 70, he will leave Boston. It will be the end of an era, for conductors of the quality of Dr. Munch are individuals who bring their interpretations to music, just as literature produces genius of approach to a theme."

Conte also quoted from an editorial in the Boston Globe: "Boston has much to thank him for: besides giving his all, he kept the orchestra at the top of form."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
SEP 23 1961

French Pair To Debut in Symphony

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by two noted French pianists and a distinguished French 'cellist during the orchestra's 81st season and the 13th and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as music director. He will begin the season next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

The piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre and Michele Boegner (Beh—as in birth—n'yay). Last year the title of Chevalier des Arts et Lettres was conferred on Mme. Darre. In 1950, she had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Esteemed throughout Europe as a virtuoso, Mme. Darre also is famous as a professor of piano at the Paris Conservatory. In a shorter career, Mlle. Boegner has shown remarkable achievements. Her 20th birthday occurred last month. Andre Navarra is the eminent French 'cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

Already well known in America but new to these concerts will be the Russian-born virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff. As a small boy he won the encouragement of Prokofiev. After the Russian Revolution he studied in Finland with Alexander Siloti, famous pupil of Liszt, then continued at the Paris Conservatory with Isidore Philipp, toured Europe and American and, since 1949, has taught the virtuoso class of the Geneva Conservatory.

A newcomer among his orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow. Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's distinguished associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Lukas Foss will direct his composition, "Time Cycle," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Returning soloists at the piano will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and the youthful Evelyne Crochet. Following an absence of 15 years, the eminent violinist, Erica Morini, is to return. Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's prodigious principal 'cellist will be soloist in Boston, Providence and on tour.

The new Monday evening concerts will begin on Nov. 6 and the open rehearsal (on 10 Thursday evenings), Oct. 12. Dr. Munch will inaugurate the season with this program: Beethoven's "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 33,185
SEP 23 1961

Music

Complete Plans for Community Concerts

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Plans have been completed for the kick-off of the 1961-62 Community Concert season in this city. The combined Greater-Lowell and Lawrence group will meet Sunday evening at the Vesper Country club to get the season rolling.

From the indications this season could be the most successful to date. The announcement of two major events, a song recital by the noted Metropolitan Opera company's baritone, Robert Merrill, and a concert by the Italian chamber group, I Musici, has already created more than usual interest.

Adele Addison

There will be at least one more event scheduled for this series, and if the response warrants, two more. As an incentive to local members, Rosalind Elias, Lowell's young Met star, will appear in the series in Manchester, N. H.

And again, as in past years, every Community Concert member will be accorded the privilege of attending concerts throughout the area where this series is held. Those holding tickets again will be assured of many programs, which means that the price of an individual event will come to a total of only a few cents.

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony orchestra by two noted French pianists and distinguished French 'cellist during the orchestra's 81st season and the 13th and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as its music director. He will begin the season on the early dates of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, September 29 and 30.

The piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre and Michele Boegner. Last year the title Chevalier des Arts et Lettres was conferred on Mme. Darre. Previously, in 1950, she had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Esteemed throughout Europe as a virtuoso, she also is famous as a professor of piano at the Paris Conservatory of Music. In a shorter career, Mlle. Boegner has shown remarkable achievements. Her 20th birthday occurred last month. Andre Navarre is the eminent French 'cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

ALREADY WELL-KNOWN in America, but new to these concerts, will be the Russian-born virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff. Since 1949 he has taught the virtuoso class at the Geneva Conservatory of Music.

A newcomer among this orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow. He established himself there as a masterly conductor at the head of the Israel Philharmonic orchestra. Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's distinguished associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Lukas Foss will direct his composition, "Time Cycle," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Returning soloists at the piano will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and the youthful Evelyne Crochet. Following an absence of 15 years, the eminent violinist, Erica Morini, is to return. Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's prodigious principal 'cellist will be soloist in Boston, Providence and on tour.

The new Monday evening concerts will begin on Nov. 6 and the open rehearsal (on 10 Thursday evenings), Oct. 12. Dr. Munch will inaugurate the season with this program: Beethoven's "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

THE GREATEST T

2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
SEP 17 1961

DR. CHARLES MUNCH

MUNCH CONDUCTS HUB SYMPHONY IN OCTOBER

Junior League Concert Series Will Begin Next Month

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 2 for the opening concert of the 1961-62 Junior League concert series. The other three concerts in the series will be the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater in "The Barber of Seville" Dec. 12, Gina Bachauer famed Greek pianist Jan. 25, and to conclude the series on March 26 will be the Metropolitan Opera star, baritone, George London. Tickets which have already been purchased, have been mailed to subscribers this past week. Mail orders are now being accepted at the Forbes and Wallace box office, and it will be open during store hours starting Monday, the 25th for the week prior to the first concert.

Plans to Retire

This spring Dr. Munch announced his retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so this might be his last appearance for Springfield audiences conducting the famed orchestra. This fall marks Dr. Munch's 12th anniversary as musical director of the Boston orchestra which has a tradition steeped in music.

Charles Munch was born in Strasbourg in 1891, his father was a member of a distinguished musical family. He was himself an organist, string player, leader of the St. Guillaume choir in the Strasbourg Cathedral and professor at the conservatory, and he was Charles' first violin teacher. The Munch children consisting of five boys and two girls were all musical. In the summer, the Munch family would move to the country home of Charles' maternal grandfather, which was at Niederbronn-les-Bains in the Vosges Mountains, which was was called the "music box" when the family arrived with their instruments and sheaves of chamber music.

At 21, Charles Maunch went to Paris to study for a career in medicine. He, however, found himself devoting all of his time to the study of the violin under Lucien Capet.

He studied in Berlin under Carl Flesch in 1920, and served as concertmaster of the Strasbourg Orchestra. He next went to Leipsiz where for eight years he sat with the first violins in the Gewandhaus Orchestra under Furtwangler and Walter.

Dr. Munch returned to Paris in 1932 where he conducted concerts of the Straram Orchestra. He founded the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris in the same season and conducted the Lamoureux Concerts. Soon he began his tour of guest engagements that have made him a world traveler. Dr. Munch's first invitation to conduct in the United States came in 1939, and he traveled as far as the Azores when his travel arrangements were canceled abruptly. In 1946, as soon as transoceanic travel was resumed, Dr. Munch came to the United States for the first time to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor.

In the spring of 1948, Munch was engaged by the orchestra to succeed Serge Koussevitsky as musical director of the Boston Symphony to begin with the season of 1949-50. Prior to his going with the Boston Orchestra, he made a transcontinental tour of the United States with the Orchestre National de la Radiodiffusion Francaise, the French national broadcasting orchestra of which he was conductor. By commission of his government, which made him a commander in the Legion of Honor, he led every concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
SEP 25 1961

Symphony Season's Upon Us Despite That Barefoot Feeling

By MAGGIE WELLS, Society Editor

It's hard to believe that the Symphony season is upon us. Seems like only yesterday we were walking barefoot across the lawns of Tanglewood.

This year's fashionable Friday afternoon concerts (the only time to go, if you're Anybody) will start this week. And socialites will be briefed in advance about the music to be played.

LUNCHEONS BEFOREHAND

It's a dreadful temptation to break the news by rhyming "lunch" with "Munch," but Robert Frost would never forgive us. Suffice it to say that a series of pre-Symphony luncheons will be held this year in a new motel near Symphony Hall. eyereetaoi shrdl cmfwyp

The Consul General of Spain and the Marquesa de Santa Cruz are sponsoring the first luncheon (the first Symphony program will include Debussy's symphonic poem, "Iberia").

Nicholas Slonimsky, musicologist, composer, author and pianist, will give a 20-minute, piano-illustrated talk after the luncheon and before the concert.

The release announcing the series says "Knowing full well the tastes and habits of the Symphony-goer, Mr. Slonimsky will limit his musical talks to a dramatic summation of the program." Sounds as if somebody's talking down to somebody.

This will be the 81st season for Boston's beloved BSO, and the 13th and final one here for Dr. Charles Munch, who has announced his plans for retirement next year.

DINNER AFTER SALEM MEETING

Until recently, the words "dutch treat" brought to the mind of the average proper Bostonian a piece of chocolate, or Edam cheese. It is only in the past few years that "Dutch treat" dinners have become popular in social circles.

One such buy-your-own dinner party will precede the 22d annual meeting of the Salem Hospital Aid Association in that community on Monday, Oct. 2. Both the meeting and the dinner will be held at the Hotel Hawthorne.

Mrs. Cyrus W. Haller of Marblehead, president of the Association, will preside at the meeting. And Mrs. Richard J. of Salem will present a check from the Association to Hospital Board president Daniel N. Crowley.

Mrs. H. Graham Pope of Swampscott, program chairman, will introduce the speaker of the evening. He's Dr. Ellsworth T. Neumann, administrator of Massachusetts General Hospital, who talks on the subject "The Hospital As A Living Institution."

During the course of the evening, service pins will be presented to volunteers who have logged anywhere from 100 to 6,000 hours service at the hospital.

Reservation chairman is Mrs. Alphonse Bachorowski of Salem.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
SEP 30 1961

Boston Symphony Opens 81st Season

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday opened its 81st season and the last under the directorship of Charles Munch.

Munch, now beginning his 13th year with the orchestra, will be succeeded next September by Erich Leinsdorf.

The orchestra also will begin a new Monday night series this season with the first of six concerts scheduled Nov. 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
SEP 26 1961

End of an Era

Charles Munch, who succeeeded Serge Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony and has built up an avid following in Hartford during the past decade, will be conducting his final concert here next Feb. 19.

The distinguished French musician is approaching 70 and has announced his intention to retire at the close of the present season.

He will be succeeded in Boston by Erich Leinsdorf, who has conducted on a number of occasions on the Bushnell stage.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 217,449 S. 274,296
SEP 3 1961

Artist Series

THE ARTIST SERIES is anticipating six sell-out concerts for the coming 1961-62 season. With [illegible] sell-outs last year and an even greater lineup of exciting attractions coming up, full houses are not unlikely for the five concerts at Music Hall and the one at Taft Auditorium.

Almost every type of musical offering is included in the big six—one of the world's great symphony orchestras, Europe's most popular folk dance and song group, a colorful Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, direct from a hit run on Broadway, America's most dynamic ballet company, a choral concert with famous soloists, chorus and full orchestra, and a demand performance by one of the world's most talented young pianists.

The season opens Tuesday, October 17, at Music Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the farewell appearance here of Conductor Charles Munch, who has announced his retirement at the end of this season. Cincinnati is one of only 10 U. S. cities in which this noted orchestra will give concerts.

Munch, Boston Symphony
Music Hall, Oct. 17

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

SEP 17 1961

Boston Symphony 81st Season Will Begin Sept. 29 and 30

Dr. Charles Munch will begin the 81st season of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his own 13th and final season as conductor, at Symphony Hall, Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30, Sept. 29 and 30.

The opening program will consist of Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Debussy's "Iberia," and the "Pathetic" Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

An innovation will be a new series of six concerts on Monday evenings, to begin Nov. 6.

Guest conductors will include Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Carlo Maria Giulini, of whom the last-named will appear for the first time here. Associate conductor Richard Burgin will take several programs. In the Spring, Nadia Boulanger will come from France to conduct a concert.

Soloists will include cellist Andre Navarra and pianists Michele Boegner and Jeanne-Marie Darre, all to make their American debuts. Pianist Nikita Magaloff will play with the orchestra for the first time. Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin and Evelyne Crochet, pianists, will be heard, together with violinist Erica Morini, who last played here in 1946.

Among the music new to Boston will be the "Time Cycle" of Lukas Foss, to be conducted by him, with soprano Adele Addison as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

SEP 30 1961

Music

Community Concert Membership Drive Ends

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Today will mark the close of the current drive for members who will enjoy the superb list of concerts that the 1961-62 Community Concert programs will offer. The campaign, however, is open throughout the day and those desirous of taking advantage of the standard offer of the "most for the least" will have the opportunity.

To date, the artist list offers such front line names as Robert Merrill, Metropolitan Opera baritone, and the fabulous Italian chamber music ensemble, I Musici. These will be followed by at least one remaining concert, and if the expected response to the drive materializes, there will be a fourth.

Gary Graffman

The popular policy of extending membership rights to the Greater-Lowell-Lawrence members will be in effect and two outstanding events on the agenda will be the appearance of Rosalind Elias in Manchester, N.H., and the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra in Nashua, N.H. Other programs are those to be presented in Danvers, Framingham and Stoneham. This list is only partial, and listed to be heard in these communities are such artists as Fernando Corena, Metropolitan Opera bass; Alexander Brailowsky, pianist; Netherlands Chamber orchestra; Les Grands Ballet Canadiens; the New York Concert Trio, and the Belafonte Singers.

A concert of band music will be presented this evening in the Little Theatre at Lowell State college by the Boston Central band. The program is being sponsored by the Salvation Army of Lowell.

NEXT TUESDAY afternoon at 3 o'clock in All Souls church, Wilfred Kershaw, organist at All Souls will present a recital. The program is being presented by the Women's Alliance of the parish. Mr. Kershaw will present a program well in keeping with the accepted tradition.

Entering the musical field for the first time is the Unitarian Players of Chelmsford. This outstanding group of thespians has been a leader on the county theatrical scene for 30 odd years and to date has achieved all of the organization's success in the field of legitimate theater.

The group whose purpose is to advance culture in the community through the field of drama has decided to advance activities and has selected as an initial offering in musical comedy, the Broadway hit, "Damn Yankees." Casting has been going on during the past week and it is expected that this initial endeavor on the part of the local thespians will score another first. The cast will be selected shortly. Fred Matthews is directing.

Among the soloists who will return for the 1961-62 season with the Boston Symphony orchestra will be Gary Graffman, pianist. Mr. Graffman, who is rapidly ascending into the top tier of gifted instrumentalists will also endeavor to meet a full scaled season. A Community Concert artist, this young American musician has already achieved a nation wide reception.

It is expected that this season's Monday evening series by the Boston Symphony orchestra will not only establish a new high in the number of concerts played in a season, but also provide a means whereby more people than ever may attend programs by the organization.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 217,449 S. 274,296
SEP 10 1961

Farewell Appearance

CHARLES MUNCH

Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the Boston Symphony, makes his farewell appearance in Cincinnati October 17 when this outstanding orchestra plays the first engagement of the Artist Series.

Other stellar attractions will be the Mazowsze Polish folk dancers; Stratford Festival production of Pirates of Penzance; San Francisco Ballet; David Ban-Illian, brilliant Israel pianist; and the Choral Concert with Mary Curtis-Verna, Metropolitan Opera star, and the College-Conservatory chorus.

Beginning tomorrow, Art Series tickets will be on sale to new subscribers. Seat preferences will be filled in the order received at the Community Ticket Office, Baldwin's, 415 Race St. Sale of season subscriptions will close on September 23.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

SEP 24 1961

Homage to Mount For Dr. Munch

By ROBERT TAYLOR

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra launches its 81st season next weekend, the concerts will signal (a) the earliest opening of the series of recent record, and (b) the final year for Charles Munch as the reigning monarch of our music.

Both facts are epochal. The Boston Orchestra is becoming the first of our country's great orchestras to provide its personnel with year-round employment. As for Dr. Munch, his services to Boston and to art are so widely recognized that we may expect his 13th and ultimate year here to be a steadily mounting wave of affection and homage.

World Premieres

According to rumor, the French conductor plans to reintroduce during the 81st season many of the scores presented as world premieres in his tenure. This should prove significant. One of the commonest complaints or rather, cliches, of modern reviewing is the phrase, "perhaps at second hearing this music will seem less puzzling."

The second hearing occurs often enough, but unless the work immediately establishes itself as an unquestioned masterpiece like Poulenc's "Gloria" of last season, the second hearing also transpires in some other American music capitol. Once or twice Dr. Munch has revived new scores in a short space of time; yet for most of us, the second hearing is frequently omitted.

There are some scores that, I feel, have exhausted their potential for me, on first hearing. I'm afraid I can't muster much enthusiasm for Easley Blackwood's First or Schuman's Seventh, but one ought not be doctrinaire, and one more time may disclose the astigmatism of one's original views. Certainly, the price of discovering a cherisable new score, a little dullness, is low enough.

The Open Rehearsal an institution that Dr. Munch established here, may be expected to flourish in this last Munch season. The first, Oct. 12, inaugurates a season of 10—an unparelleled opportunity for the student and the person of limited means to hear an orchestra that is one of the glories of world civilization. The Open Rehearsal, moreover, affords an unusual chance to perceive the structure of actual performance taking shape.

If Charles Munch had done little else, by creating the Open Rehearsal policy which insures a continuing audience for symphonic music, his name would rank high in our annals of art. This year's series is a living tribute.

Solo Problem

You can look forward to a trove of soloists in the 81st season. The profusion of soloists in the contemporary music milieu seems one of those things decreed by fate. Fortunately, the Boston Symphony Orchestra attracts a high caliber.

Soloists are good boxoffice; but as Irving Kolodin has pointed out, the supply of first-class violinists and pianists is not as great as the demand, and soloists severely restrict the repertoire. They set out to show they can play the things other violinists and pianists play, only better.

In the case of the BSO's 81st season, the solo performers fill a function, as a rule, for they are artists of note whom the local audience should know.

Jeanne-Marie Darre, the pianist, has a splendid European reputation, and is recognized as a puissant teaching force at the Paris Conservatory; Michele Boegner, who is only 20, has already flashed across the French firmament as a piano virtuoso; also from France is Andre Navarra, the eminent 'cellist. Nikita Magaloff, the pianist, enjoys an American reclaim, but is unknown to Boston.

Among the conductors Carlo Maria Giulini comes here after a widely-hailed debut year at the head of the Israel Philharmonic. And, naturally, the guest concerts by Ernest Ansermet, Steinberg, de Carvalho, and Nadia Boulanger exhibit extraordinary advance interest.

Of less interest is the opening program, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Debussy's "Iberia"; the "Pathétique". Opening concerts of a symphony season are usually devoted to trite programming; perhaps one must venture toward unknown waters like a timid swimmer getting immersed. Or is that the theory? But we should not close on a carping note. The 81st season promises excitement.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

SEP 16 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA . . . Charles Munch directs the first Channel 2 Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the 1961-62 season, broadcast direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard University on Tuesday, Oct. 31, at 8:30 p.m., part of Boston's first-rate education TV programming. Mr. Munch is retiring his post at the end of the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

SEP 24 1961

DR. CHARLES MUNCH will conduct his 13th and final season of performances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning with a pair of concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393

SEP 25 1961

SMART SET . . . By ROSE WALSH

Noted Artist Hub Visitor

Noted bird artist Francis Lee Jaques and his talented author wife, Florence Page Jaques, of Minnesota, will renew Boston friendships during the next two months while he is working here at the Museum of Science. Visitors to the Museum are familiar with his fine panoramics of beavers, shore birds, coast of Maine and Concord River Waterfall.

A fifth panoramic background for the Museum—this time the Moose—brings artist Jaques here. On Thursday he and his wife will go to New Haven for the opening of his art exhibition (which will continue through mid-November) at the Peabody Museum of Natural History. Included in the collection are his illustrations from the second volume of Hon. William O. Douglas' (Associate Justice of the Supreme Court) "My Wilderness."

Mrs. Jaques, author of books on travel and children's verse ("There Once Was a Puffin" is a great favorite) will find time to do a little writing. She has no worry about illustrations for the volumes. Her husband enjoys that diversion.

The Jaques, who were the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Whitman (former Minnesota neighbors) in Framingham Center during the "Esther" threat, have been married 34 years. Only twice in that period have they been separated. Once when Mr. Jaques made a six-months trip to the Arctic with Capt. Bob Bartlett, the second time when he journeyed to the South Seas with Templeton Crocker.

★ ★ ★

AN INNOVATION FOR music lovers is the series of Friday pre-Symphony Lectures by Nicholas Slonimsky, well-known musicologist, composer, author and pianist at the Midtown Motor Inn, a few steps from Symphony Hall. The first one on Friday, to coincide with the opening of Boston Symphony Orchestra's 81st season of concerts, will be preceded by luncheon at 12:30.

At 1:45 each Friday the guest artist will offer a twenty minute talk, "Impressions of a Symphony", with piano illustrations. These will be focussed on the current weekly Symphony program with some digressions. Since many unfamiliar Symphony works may be introduced, the instructive entertainment will be helpful to the concert followers.

Apropos of Boston Symphony conductor Dr. Charles Munch including Debussy's "Iberia" in his first program, Consul General of Spain and La Marquesa de Santa Cruz have been invited to open the Pre-Symphony Luncheon series.

Reservations are being accepted from the Symphony membership. Mr. Slonimsky will limit his musical talks to a dramatic summation of the program.

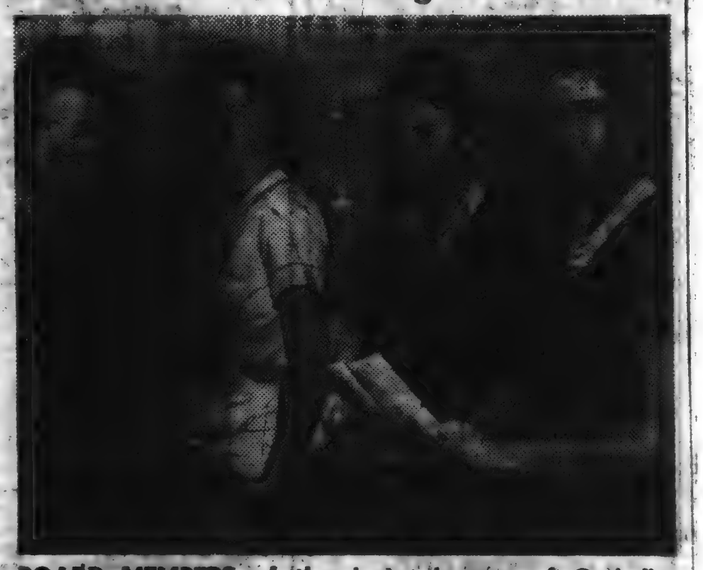
★ ★ ★

NEWTON COLLEGE OF the Sacred Heart alumna, Loretta Maguire of the class of 1960, is working as a lay apostolate in Kingston, Jamaica, BWI. Sponsored by the Mission Club of Newton College, she left Boston Sept. 10 to take up her new duties as a nursery day school teacher for the Diocese of Kingston, under the supervision of Bishop John J. McEleney, S. J.

Loretta, niece of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Porter of Watertown, is the fifth member of Newton's Alumnae to volunteer her services for a year. The girls are in various areas of the United States and the Caribbean. Before going to Kingston, she worked for the Shawmut National Bank in Boston.

★ ★ ★

THE DALLIANCE & Divergence Society (young career and professional people living in the Back Bay) had to think up something big to honor 2500 newcomers to the group. They did—a Benefit Block Dance to be held Friday evening on Marlborough street, between Dartmouth and Clarendon, from 8:30 to midnight. Admission $1, and the proceeds will go to the Mayor's Charity Fund. Rain date will be the following evening.



BOARD MEMBERS of the Junior League of Catholic Women prepare program for season opening tonight at League House, 1 Arlington st., city. L. to r., Mary Finn, Mary McCauley, Janet Iannicello, Lee Smith, chairman.

Member 9/16/61
s—Entertainment

ny Season

Guest Conductors Announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 81st season—and its conductor Charles Munch's 13th and final one—on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Sept. 29 and 30. The program will be Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 ("Pathétique"). Erich Leinsdorff will assume directorship of the orchestra in 1962-63.

Six Monday evening concerts, beginning Nov. 6, will be added to the orchestra's schedule this season. There will be ten open rehearsals, which will start Thursday, Oct. 12, at 7:30 and will continue on selected Thursdays.

Guest conductors this year will include Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, and Eleazar de Carvalho. Carlo Maria Giulini will make his Boston debut in this capacity. Associate conductor Richard Burgin will direct some of the performances. A spring concert will be conducted by Nadia Boulanger, who plans to come to Boston from Paris for the event.

Soloists will include Andre Navarra, cellist, and Michel Boegner and Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianists, all making American debuts. Nikita Magaloff, pianist, will play with the orchestra for the first time. Piano soloists returning will include Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and Evelyne Crochet. Erica Morini, violinist, will also be a soloist.

"Time Cycle," by Lukas Foss, will be among new music to be played and will be conducted by the composer, with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

SEP 28 1961

BSO Soloists for Season Announced

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by two noted French pianists and a distinguished French 'cellist during the orchestra's eighty-first season and the thirteenth and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as its music director. He will begin the season this weekend, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Sept. 29 and 30.

Opening program will include Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

Piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre and Michele Boegner. Andre Navarra is the eminent French 'cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

Already well known in America, but new to these concerts, will be the Russian-born virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff.

A newcomer among this orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow as conductor of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra.

Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Lukas Foss will direct his composition, "Time Cycle," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Returning piano soloists will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin and Evelyne Crochet. The eminent violinist, Erica Morini, will also appear.

Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist will be soloist in Boston, Providence and on tour.

The new Monday evening concerts begin Nov. 6, the open rehearsals on ten Thursday evenings, Oct. 12.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 4 1961

SMART SET . . . . . By ROSE WALSH

A Munch Fan From K-C

Dr. Charles Munch, Boston Symphony Orchestra's noted conductor, had this interesting experience after the opening of the 81st season of Symphony concerts. (It was also the beginning of his 13th and final season.)

In the small group of friends waiting to greet the distinguished conductor in the Green Room (part office and part reception room) of Symphony Hall, Dr. Munch noted someone he couldn't place.

The urbane visitor quickly stepped up to him and explained his presence there. He introduced himself, Richard Sight, a businessman from Kansas City.

He had traveled here—his first trip to Boston—for the specific purpose of hearing Dr. Munch conduct the Boston Symphony "in its own home city." I have been in love with the Boston Symphony since I heard it 10 years ago at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor while I was a student at nearby Olivet College."

He continued his story telling how he has built up a collection of complete recordings of Dr. Munch's conducting of the Boston Symphony. Mr. Sight also paid tribute to the Boston concert audience he had just left. The music lovers showed such warmth and appreciation that he was greatly impressed.

All this delighted Dr. Munch who promptly hunted up one of his photographs and inscribed it for his Kansas City fan.

★ ★ ★

ESSEX IN THE DAYS of horse cars, hansom cabs and delivery wagons will be presented by Miss Eleanor Broadhead to the lecture attendance tonight at Essex Institute, Salem. Her illustrated talk, "Compliments to the Customers", open to the public, will feature Salem trade cards of the late 1800's.

Star exhibitor of the Photographic Society of America, Miss Broadhead unearthed the novel material for her lecture from an album of cards she found during the photographing of objects for "Here is Salem . . . Old and New." A second album, property of Essex Institute, produced additional trade cards.

Colorful and mounted several decades ago, the specimens provide not only names and addresses for former stores and shops but also give details of costumes, customs, cures and curiosities.

★ ★ ★

SINCE WE ARE ON North Shore topics, we hear that Dr. John Ashton Dodge (with his wife, Mary) recently arrived from Cardiff, S. Wales to assume duties as pediatric resident at the North Shore Babies' and Children's Hospital, Salem. For the past two years he has been registrar to Department of Child Health at the Cardiff Royal Infirmary.

The 27-year old doctor comes to the hospital on affiliation from the Children's Medical Center in Boston for a six months period. This residency program was assigned to the hospital in 1947 and at that time a close association with the teaching center began.

Members of the board of trustees and the medical staff and their families have been invited to meet Dr. and Mrs. Dodge in the Hospital Medical Lounge this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock. Mrs. W. Randall Bell of Marblehead is in charge of the tea.

Presiding at the urns will be Mrs. Robert Moulton, Mrs. Harry Lowd, Jr., Mrs. Joseph Cutler and Mrs. William R. Dorsey.

★ ★ ★

GENEVRA HOBBS WILL have the honor of announcing the prize winners of this year's Beacon Hill Window Box Contest and presenting beautiful flowering plants to them Thursday evening at an 8 o'clock open meeting in the Charles Street Meeting House (corner of Mt. Vernon). Genevra, contest chairman, reports more than 600 entrants in this annual "beautify - the - neighborhood" project. Some 50 organizations and individuals also had a hand in making it a success.

The charming "awarding program" will offer a film "Let's Keep America Beautiful"; a short talk by John Ryan, chairman of Beacon Hill Civic Ass'n clean-up committee and member of BRA; questions on window box problems, and a refreshment session.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
SEP 30 1961

Society: Opening Night at Symphony Always Social, Fiscal Success

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

It's still the best place in the world to be on a Friday afternoon in Boston from October to April, and visitors with only a few hours here save them for Symphony, joining a third-generation audience that hands down its Symphony seats along with the family silver and portraits.

Symphony is always sold out for its opening. It was in the days when seats were sold at auction and the late Mrs. Jack Gardner's fabulous hats and her first-balcony seats brought the highest price in the house for the second-balcony row directly above her.

It was yesterday, when the 81st year of these wonderful world-acclaimed concerts began with the rustling rise to salute director Charles Munch.

Familiar faces, row on row, some of them with memories of more than half of these opening concerts, banked the big hall with here and there an honored guest.

M. Jaques Simon of the Paris Opera took most of his few hours in Boston yesterday to sit in Symphony Hall with delight. Here from the West Coast in time to join his sister, Hazel Draper, at the season's first concert was writer James Archibald.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth Thane of London, who are flying to Canada today, arrived in Boston in time for lunch at the Ritz before the symphony, which they last attended here as guests of Boston's beloved Serge Koussevitzky whose beautiful widow was in her usual place yesterday.

BROADWAY GUEST at Symphony Hall yesterday was stage and screen star Ilona Massey who lunched with the Spanish Consul and Marquesa de Santa Cruz de Inguanzo.

Mrs. William T. Aldrich back from a trip in time for the traditional opening, also lunched in town before the concert.

The lovely Marquesa de la Calzada and her husband, Marquis de Santa Cruz de Inguanzo, Spanish Consul in Boston, had as their Symphony guest the glamorous platinum haired Ilona Massey of Hollywood and Broadway.

Contessa Guy de Passy was a Cabot guest, and the Roger Coolidges of Vermont had as their guest Canadian M. Philip Bonard.

Here from New York to spend some time in Boston with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard, their attractive daughter, Katherine, was Mrs. Howard's Symphony guest, and others in the vast privileged audience included Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Stephen Harris, Mrs George Lewis, Mrs. Hamilton Osgood, Mrs. Nicholas Perry of Newport and New York, Mrs. John Rock, Mrs. Carl Rose, Mrs. Francis Sears, Senior and Junior, Mrs. Peter Cabot, down from New Hampshire for the opening.

Mrs. Richard Ehrlich, Mrs. Stephen Casey, Mrs. Julian Eogers, Maxim Karolik, Mrs. Richard Thompson, and hundreds more.

The student division included Chinese, Indian, Russian, French, Spanish, and Italian music lovers.

MUSIC STUDENT Richard Sight made his first trip to Boston yesterday to hear the orchestra, and plans to attend today's concert, too. He heard the Boston Symphony for the first time when it was on tour, at Olivette College in 1951, and made plans then to hear it on its home stage.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
SEP 17 1961

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Open Season Sept. 29-30

The final season of the tenure of Dr. Charles Munch, and the 81st of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Sept. 29 and 30. On completion of this season, Dr. Munch will have served the longest continuous term of office in the orchestra's history with the exception of Serge Koussevitzky's record of 25 years. As announced last Spring, Erich Leinsdorff will assume the orchestra's directorship in 1962-63.

An innovation this season will be the series of six Monday evening concerts, added to the ten Open Rehearsals which Dr. Munch inaugurated in his second season to meet ticket demands.

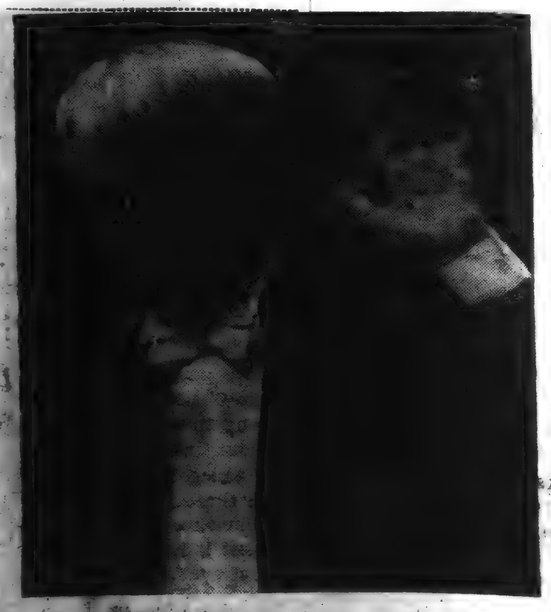
Plans for the new season include the return of Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, and Eleazar de Carvalho as guest conductors, and the Boston debut of Carlo Maria Giulini. Associate conductor Richard Burgin also will direct. A spring concert will be conducted by Nadia Boulanger, who will come to America specially for the event.

Soloists will include the 'cellist Andre Navarra, and the pianists Michele Bogner and Jeanne-Marie Darre, all making their American debuts. Nikita Magaloff, pianist, will make his debut with this orchestra. Returning piano soloists will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and Evelyne Crochet. After a long absence, violinist Erica Morini will be heard.

New music will include the "Time Cycle" of Lukas Foss, to be conducted by him, with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

The opening program will consist of the Brahms Variations on a Theme from Haydn: "Iberia," by Debussy; and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6, (Pathetique).

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 208 585 S. 276 407
AUG 13 1961



LAST TIME ON TOUR

Early in his final season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch will make his farewell appearance in Columbus in the first of the Symphony Club concerts. The season opener is scheduled for Oct. 19 at Veterans Memorial. The three concerts to follow will present the Berlin Philharmonic, the Minneapolis Symphony with Byron Janis as solo pianist, and the perennial Philadelphians. Season reservations are still being accepted.

At the Drive-Ins

6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
SEP 16 1961

Symphony Season Readies for Opening -

6-61

Guest Conductors Announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 81st season—and its conductor Charles Munch's 13th and final one—on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Sept. 29 and 30. The program will be Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 ("Pathétique"). Erich Leinsdorff will assume directorship of the orchestra in 1962-63.

Six Monday evening concerts, beginning Nov. 6, will be added to the orchestra's schedule this season. There will be ten open rehearsals, which will start Thursday, Oct. 12, at 7:30 and will continue on selected Thursdays.

Guest conductors this year will include Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, and Eleazar de Carvalho. Carlo Maria Giulini will make his Boston debut in this capacity. Associate conductor Richard Burgin will direct some of the performances. A spring concert will be conducted by Nadia Boulanger, who plans to come to Boston from Paris for the event.

Soloists will include André Navarra, cellist, and Michele Boegner and Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianists, all making American debuts. Nikita Magaloif, pianist, will play with the orchestra for the first time. Piano soloists returning will include Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and Evelyne Crochet. Erica Morini, violinist, will also be a soloist.

"Time Cycle," by Lukas Foss, will be among new music to be played and will be conducted by the composer, with Adele Addison so soprano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 26 1961

Two Symphony Players Are Retiring

Charles Munch has announced that two members of the Boston Symphony have retired. They are Emil Kornsand, violinist, and Theodore Brewster, bassoonist.

In most cities quite a little fuss is made when the local symphony orchestra engages or retires players. In Boston these matters are taken quite coolly. Whether the fault lies with the orchestra, the press, or both, is difficult to say.

In any event those persons who review music events for these pages would like it known that they are deeply aware of the fine contributions made by both gentlemen, in the orchestra and in the city's general musical life.

Mr. Kornsand joined the orchestra in 1939, playing for many years in the viola section before going over to the first violins.

Mr. Brewster was appointed in 1949. He has been a prized member of the orchestra and other ensembles since that time.

It is certain that both men will find ample scope for their talent and musicianship. The best wishes of the music community go with them.

J. W.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
SEP 28 1961

Munch Announces Schedule For Next Symphony Season

Three French Soloists To Be Guests For 1961-62 Orchestra Year

American debuts will be made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra by two noted French pianists and a distinguished French cellist during the orchestra's eighty-first season and the thirteenth and final one of Dr. Charles Munch, who is to retire as its music director. He will begin the season on the early dates of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Sept. 29 and 30.

The piano soloists making their American bows are Jeanne-Marie Darre' and Michele Boegner — pronounced approximately "Beh (as in birth)-n' yay." Last year the title of Chevalier des Arts et Lettres was conferred on Mme. Darre'. Previously, in 1950, she had been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Esteemed throughout Europe as a virtuoso, she also is famous as a professor of piano at the Paris Conservatory. In a shorter career, Mlle Boegner has shown remarkable achievements. Her twentieth birthday occurred last month. Andre Navarra is the eminent French cellist who makes his first American appearance with this orchestra.

Already well known in America, but new to these concerts, will be the Russian-born piano virtuoso, Nikita Magaloff. As a small boy he won the encouragement of Prokofiev. After the Russian Revolution he studied in Finland with Alexander Siloti, famous pupil of Liszt, then continued at the Paris Conservatory with Isidore Philipp. He has toured Europe and America, and also, since 1949, has taught the Virtuoso Class of the Geneva Conservatory.

A newcomer among this orchestra's guest conductors will be Carlo Maria Giulini, who only last year made his American bow. He established himself then as a masterly conductor at the head of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, which was making its first tour of this continent in nine years. Returning guest conductors will be Ernest Ansermet, William Steinberg, Eleazar de Carvalho and Nadia Boulanger. Also sharing the concerts will be the orchestra's distinguished associate conductor, Richard Burgin. Lukas Foss will direct his composition "Time Cycle," with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Returning soloists at the piano will be Gary Graffman, Rudolf Serkin, and the youthful Evelyne Crochet. After an absence since 1946, the eminent violinist, Erica Morini, is to return.

Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's prodgious Principal 'Cellist will be soloist in Boston, Providence [illegible] be [illegible].

The new Monday evening concerts begin on November 6, the open rehearsals (on ten Thursday evenings) on October 12.

Dr. Munch will inaugurate the season with this program: Brahms' "Variations on a Theme of Haydn," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 5 1961

WGBH Extends Air Time

Friday

WGBH-FM will observe its 10th anniversary Friday, Oct. 6, and to celebrate the occasion is extending its broadcasting time by five hours a day, on a regular schedule. This will mean good music, good theater, news, and information from noon to midnight each week day.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and G. Wallace Woodworth, whose previews of "Tomorrow's Symphony" is as popular today as it was 10 years ago, will join forces for a special WGBH commemorative intermission feature during the Friday afternoon Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, which is broadcast at 2:10 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
SEP 10 1961

fourth concert on next Jan. 9.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will give two concerts in the Woolsey Hall Series, the first on Nov. 14 and the second on Feb. 20.

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its appearances here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
SEP 26 1961

BUSHNELL EDITION

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, a favorite in Hartford since 1890s, will perform its final Bushnell concert under Charles Munch's baton this season. Mr. Munch retires at close of 1961-62 season. The Boston orchestra has contracted to perform a second Bushnell concert this season with Europe's distinguished Ernest Ansermet as conductor.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY UNION STAR
Wednesday, August 23, 1961

TWO MEMBERS OF THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra who are leaving the organization were introduced to the final audience at Tanglewood by Dr. Charles Munch, the director. They were Emil Korsand, first violinist who is retiring, and Theodore Brewster, whose future plans were not revealed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 19 1961

2 Boston Symphon Musicians Retire

Charles Munch, the Bosto Symphony Orchestra's mus director, has announced th two members of the orchestr will retire after tomorrow' concert at Tanglewood whic concludes the Berkshire Festi val's 1961 season. The retiring musicians are violinist Emil Kornsand, a member of the orchestra since 1939, and Theodore Brewster, bassoon, who joined the orchestra in 1949.

Munch also announced the appointment of violinist Gerald Gelbloom, of Hartford, and bassoonist Matthew Ruggiero, of the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, as replacements. They will join the orchestra when it opens the 1961-62 season Sept. 29 in Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 21 1961

Retiring Musicians

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's music director, announces the retirement of two members, Emil Kornsand, violinist, a member since 1939, and Theodore Brewster, bassoonist, who joined the orchestra in 1949.

Dr. Munch has also announced the appointment of two musicians to replace Messrs. Kornsand and Brewster, who will join the Orchestra when it opens its 1961-62 season on Sept. 29 in Boston.

The new members will be Gerald Gelbloom, Hartford violinist, concertmaster of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra since 1954, and Matthew Ruggiero, bassoonist, who has been a member of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D. C., and the orchestra of the New York City Center.

8

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen
COLCHESTER, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 550
AUG 17 1961 047

Violinist Gerald Gelbloom . . . Earns Coveted Appointment

Gerald Gelbloom Wins Contest

Former Colchester Resident Named To Boston Symphony

Gerald Gelbloom of West Hartford, a former resident of Colchester and concert master of the Hartford Symphony since 1954, has won a nationwide contest to become a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Gelbloom lived for several years at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Solomon of the Hartford Road, Colchester, with his wife, the former Mildred Solomon, and daughter, Mara. Mrs. Solomon was nursery school teacher and also had several violin pupils here.

Gelbloom auditioned recently at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony. He will travel with the orchestra throughout the year, playing the winter season at Symphony Hall, Boston, and the summer season at the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass.

While in Hartford, Gelbloom was on the staff of the Hartford School of Music, the Hartt School of Music of the University of Hartford, and Wesleyan University. For the last three summers he has been a member of the Casals Festival Orchestra in Puerto Rico which honors cellist Pablo Casals.

He has been guest soloist many times at functions throughout the state and has also done private teaching in the belief that performing and teaching can be combined.

He began his studies at the age of four and by 19 had become concert master of the New York City Ballet Theater. He has played with the Cleveland and Baltimore Symphony orchestras.

Gelbloom told the News-Citizen that he expects to begin his work in Boston in September and with his family plans to make his home in Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
AUG 27 1961

(Not Real Retirement For BSO's Richard Burgin

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the Orchesta's Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston symphony Orchestra for half of the Orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the Orchestra's Concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him Assistant Conductor in 1935 and invited him to become Associate Conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on October 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of eleven as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifitz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg.

In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

FORMED QUARTET

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra.

His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
AUG 27 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

In a leisurely auto trip to the Midwest, we were able to roam for a few hours the battlefield at Gettysburg, to watch an engagingly energetic production by the Ohio State University drama department of the Rodgers-Hart "A Connecticut Yankee," and to visit the Toledo, Ohio, Museum of Art.

Since our frequent jaunts to Europe have made us museum-conscious we were particularly eager to view the Toledo Museum for it is generally ranked among the 10 best in our nation. We were amazed that a city of Toledo's size (300,000-400,000) has a museum of this caliber. However, the city is fortunate in that its basic collection and its charming building were the gift of the late Edward Drummond Libbey of the glass-manufacturing family.

EARL J. DIAS

As might be expected, the Museum boasts one of the most unusual collections of glass in the world. In addition, it houses a cloister with three colonnades brought over from Europe, of 12, 13th and 14th Century monasteries, and a representative collection of approximately 700 paintings.

These paintings range from the earliest religious subjects of 13th-Century Europe to the most abstract of modern times and include works by Rembrandt, El Greco, Rubens, Holbein, Goya, Turner, Manet, Van Gogh, Renoir, Winslow Homer, Andrew Wyeth and Picasso. Other works of art help recreate the civilizations of ancient Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Rome and the Orient. And one of the most charming exhibits of the Museum is an authentic 17th-Century Swiss room.

What most impressed us about the Museum is its vital role in Toledo's community life. For example, the Museum sponsors a "Gallery Program" in which elementary school children make frequent visits to the Museum each year. The Museum also houses an art and record library—the former containing 17,000 volumes and the latter about 3,000 disks. In addition, the museum offers each year art classes for adults, a concert series and frequent lectures. The University of Toledo, incidentally, grants academic credit for art courses taken at the Museum.

In short, the Toledo Museum is a striking illustration of the cultural value of a first-rate and progressive museum to an alert community. We are happy to have seen it.

Boston Symphony Concertmaster to Retire

A figure familiar to Boston Symphony concert-goers will be missing after the 1961-62 season ends. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin, the orchestra's concertmaster, will retire at that time, although he will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

A small man with wiry gray hair, Mr. Burgin has been a member of the Boston Symphony for half of the orchestra's lifetime, having been engaged as the orchestra's concertmaster by Pierre Monteux in 1920.

Born in Warsaw on Oct. 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as violin soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908-1912, he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912, Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra and in 1916, concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony.

In the past, Mr. Burgin has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and the Harvard University Orchestra. At present, he teaches violin and conducting at Boston University, is chairman of the string department at the New England Conservatory, and head of the chamber music department at the Berkshire Music Center.

In 1940, Mr. Burgin married the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, who is well-known locally for her several recitals here. In 1955, France made him a chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

We have always admired Mr. Burgin's talents as a musician and among our most pleasant memories of Boston Symphony concerts are the many passages of solo work which Mr. Burgin has always performed so competently and so sensitively.

Will

Burgin Retirement

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 26 1961

Music

Concertmaster to Retire at Season's End

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — It has been announced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra's trustees, that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

Richard Burgin

A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra concertmaster by Pierre Monteux. Serge Kousevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on Oct. 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony orchestra from 1916 until his appointment at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory orchestra and of the Harvard University orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston university, to the New England Conservatory of Music where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

THE 14TH SEASON of the Arundel Opera theater in Kennebunkport, Me., will conclude with four performances of Johann Strauss' "M'sieur Fledermaus." The performances will be given from Aug. 30 to Saturday, Sept. 2.

The unusual feature of this operetta will be in the second act ballroom scene where 'Hi-Lites' of the current season will be presented. One of the masqueraders will be Madam Butterfly singing her famous aria "One Fine Day," and following, some of the other masqueraders will appear in the roles in which they successfully performed during the season. These latter moments will be in an "Around the World" theme.

Wesley Boynton will appear as Eisenstein, a role in which he has enjoyed many stage successes. Morse Haithwaite will be the musical director and the stage production will be directed by Thomas Picard.

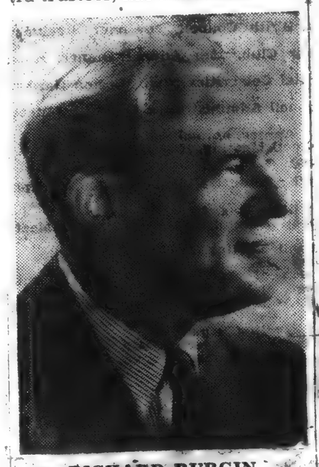
It would be a most unfortunate loss in the realm of American culture if the Metropolitan Opera season finally fails to materialize. This country needs everything that the world of music can provide if our artistic standards are to be continually recognized abroad.

From the everyday discussion, there are certain things that could change the operatic picture on the New England scene. Boston would be badly penalized in the fact that a Met season is not only a great musical event, but a means of carrying on one of America's oldest musical traditions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
AUG 24 1961

Burgin to Retire From BSO Post

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced that



RICHARD BURGIN

Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzsky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw in 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of eleven as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the String Department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the Chamber Music Department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
AUG 24 1961

Burgin Will Retire As Concertmaster

In Boston Symphony Post Since 1920

Was Appointed To Position By Pierre Monteux.— Will Continue as Associate Conductor After Close of 1961-62 Season.—Was Soloist At Age 11 In Warsaw.

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orcestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on October 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Mr. Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
AUG 26 1961

Burgin to Retire After Season's Close

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1920, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season of the orchestra, according to an announcement made by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees. Burgin will however, continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

* * *

A MEMBER OF the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Burgin was engaged as its concertmaster by Pierre Monteaux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on Oct. 11, 1892, Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joseph Joachim and from 1908 to 1912 was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

RICHARD BURGIN
Boston Concertmaster

* * *

ACTIVE IN CHAMBER music and as a teacher, Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm in his first year of residence in this country he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and the Harvard University Orchestra.

His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt.

10

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

Richard Burgin's Future Plans

Concertmaster to Retire

Richard Burgin, who has been a member of the Boston Symphony for half the orchestra's lifetime, will retire as its concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. He will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

Mr. Burgin was engaged as concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

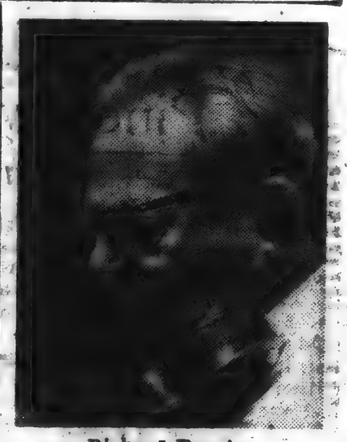
A native of Warsaw, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his Boston appointment.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department, and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

Entertainment Timetable: Page 4



Richard Burgin

6-6

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
KINGSTON FREEMAN
Wednesday, August 23, 1961

Burgin to Retire As Boston Symphony Concertmaster

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on October 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the String Department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the Chamber Music Department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 26 1961

Burgin, BSO Concertmaster Will Retire Next Season

BOSTON — Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

Started with Monteux

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the Orchestra's lifetime, Mr. Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw Oct. 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Mr. Burgin a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist Ruth Posselt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
AUG 26 1961

Burgin to Retire as Symphony Concertmaster at Season's End

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Cabot added.

BURGIN

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Burgin was engaged to be concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw in 1892, Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department, and to the Berkshire Music Center, where he heads the chamber music department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
AUG 26 1961

Burgin To Quit Post With Symphony

Richard Burgin will retire as Boston Symphony Orchestra Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 19671-62 season, it was announced today.

Henry B. Cabot, president of trustees, said Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

Burgin, 68, a native of Warsaw, was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzsky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935. He became associate conductor in 1943.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
SUN. 202,215
AUG 27 1961

Concertmaster Burgin to Retire

Richard Burgin, concertmaster for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retires at the conclusion of the coming season.

Burgin, a member of the symphony for half its lifetime, became concertmaster in 1920 at the request of Pierre Monteux. He became assistant conductor 15 years later and associate conductor in 1943.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,493
AUG 28 1961

Boston Concertmaster To Retire Next Year

BOSTON, (UPI) — Richard Burgin, who was a child violin prodigy at 11, will retire next year as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held more than 40 years.

A native of Warsaw, Burgin was named concertmaster in 1920 and later became assistant conductor and associate conductor. He will continue in the latter role after the 1961-1962 season, the orchestra said yesterday.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 98,806
SEP 2 1961

Mountain Pride

By Irving Kolodin

Music Editor, The Saturday Review

Moore, and many others, the contribution of this little corner of New Hampshire soil to the well-being of all of us becomes a little more evident. And the long-range influence of Edward MacDowell and his devoted widow loom like twin lights identifying another, more humane A. S. P. C. A.—American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Artists.

Rounding Out Career

As anticipated some months ago, Richard Burgin has elected to retire, along with conductor Charles Munch, from his post as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will, however, continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, as second in command to the orchestra's conductor-elect Erich Leinsdorf. Burgin thus rounds out a career unrivaled among fellow concertmasters of American orchestras, for he has served under every conductor over a 40-year span, having been appointed by Pierre Monteux in 1920.

An Active 87

Longevity in music took on a new significance lately with the announcement from London that Pierre Monteux, who will be 87 next April, has been appointed principal conductor of the London Symphony. This is not as arduous a post as the equivalent with an American orchestra, for the English group spaces its concerts over wider intervals, and uses frequent guest conductors. It is, nevertheless, an exceptional tribute to the continuing vigor and ability of the French veteran, who is "Papa" to all the conductors now active as well as to his musician friends.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Thursday, August 24, 1961

RICHARD BURGIN
Plans to retire.

Symphony Executive To Retire

Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season, but he will continue as associate conductor.

A member of the Boston Symphony for half of its lifetime, Mr. Burgin was engaged as concertmaster by Pierre Monteux in 1920. Serge Koussevitsky appointed him assistant conductor in 1936 and associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw in 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance when he was 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. In 1912, he was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 to 1920.

He has been conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 26 1961

Richard Burgin Retires as BSO Concertmaster

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, announced today that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw Oct. 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married, in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
AUG 26 1961

Regional Roundup

Boston Symphony to Lose Burgin as Concertmaster

He Will Retire at End of 1961-62 Season, Continue as Associate Conductor

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, announced Friday that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Cabot added.

Engaged By Monteux

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of its lifetime, Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on Oct. 11, 1892, Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stockholm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he has held appointments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is chairman of the string department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the chamber music department.

Cited By France

In 1955 France made Burgin chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
AUG 26 1961

Burgin, Long Concertmaster, Is Retiring

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the Orchestra's Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the Orchestra's Associate Conductor.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the Orchestra's lifetime, Burgin was engaged to be the Orchestra's Concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitsky appointed him Assistant Conductor in 1935 and invited him to become Associate Conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw Ot. 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of eleven as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Leopold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Active in chamber music and as a teacher, Mr. Burgin formed the Burgin String Quartet in Stock holm and in his first year of United States residence he organized the Burgin String Quartet of Boston. In the past, he held appintments as conductor of the New England Conservatory Orchestra and of the Harvard University Orchestra. His teaching is now generally limited to violin and conducting pupils at Boston University, to the New England Conservatory where he is Chairman of the String Department and to the Berkshire Music Center where he heads the Chamber Music Department.

In 1955 France made Richard Burgin Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. Burgin was married in 1940 to the American violinist, Ruth Posselt, with whom he has collaborated in many performances of unusual works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 191,456
AUG 27 1961

Concertmaster Plans To Retire

BOSTON (UPI) — Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than 40 years, will retire from the post next year.

He will continue as assistant conductor and associate conductor after the 1961-1962 season, the orchestra announced.

Burgin, a native of Warsaw, was named concertmaster in 1920. He studied under Joachim and Leopold Auer, and made his concert debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at 11. He formerly was concertmaster of the Helsinki and Oslo symphony orchestras.

His retirement will coincide with that of Charles Munch, conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony.

12

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

AUG 26 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Jacob's Pillow. For the final week of the Jacob's Pillow nine week Dance Festival, Ted Shawn will present Ruth Ann Koesun and Ivan Allen from American Ballet Theatre, Hadassah in Hindu and Hebraic dances, and the Jacob's Pillow Dancers in two world premieres of Nel Roos' works and Jess Mecker's music.

The four performance week, Thursday and Saturday matinees and Friday and Saturday evenings, will bring to close the 29th year of the Festval and the 20th year of the Ted Shawn Theatre.

Tickets may be obtained at the Ted Shawn Theatre box office, by mail Box 87, Lee, Mass., and by telephone, Lee 745.

●

Tanglewood. Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the Orchestra's Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

●

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161

AUG 23 1961

MUSIC NOTES

Leopold Stokowski will open the 1961-'62 season of the Chicago Symphony as guest conductor, in place of the orchestra's regular conductor, Fritz Reiner, who has been advised by his physicians not to resume his activities until January.

* * *

Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony at the end of this season after forty-one years in that capacity. He will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

The New York City Opera's fall season will introduce two new conductors: Franco Patane, a native of Sicily, who is well known throughout Europe, and Walter Susskind, a native of Prague and now a British subject, who has been conductor of the Toronto Symphony since 1956.

* * *

The new German Opera House in West Berlin will open on Sept. 24 with a performance of "Don Giovanni," staged by Carl Ebert, as part of the annual Berlin Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860

AUG 26 1961

Burgin Will Retire As Concertmaster

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 40 years, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season, according to announcement of the orchestra's trustees.

A member of the orchestra for half of the orchestras lifetime, Burgin was engaged by Pierre Monteux to be concertmaster when he was 27 years old. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor in 1943.

Burgin was born in Warsaw in 1892. He made his first public appearance at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society.

Besides his orchestral duties, he teaches at Boston University, the New England Conservatory, where he is chairman of the string department, and the Berkshire Music Center, where he heads the chamber music department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973

AUG 28 1961

BURGIN TO RETIRE AS CONCERTMASTER

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393

AUG 30 1961

BURGIN IN LAST SEASON

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the Orchestra's Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-'62 season. Burgin will continue as the Orchestra's Associate Conductor, Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on October 11, 1892, Mr. Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of eleven as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322

AUG 27 1961

Concertmaster Plans To Retire Next Year

BOSTON (UPI) — Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than 40 years, will retire from the post next year.

He will continue as assistant conductor and associate conductor after the 1961-1962 season, the orchestra announced.

Burgin, a native of Warsaw, was named concertmaster in 1920.

He studied under Joachim and Leopold Auer and made his concert debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at 11. He formerly was concertmaster of the Helsinki and Oslo Symphony Orchestras.

His retirement will coincide with that of Charles Munch, conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

AUG 27 1961

Burgin to Retire in '62 as Concertmaster

Boston —(UPI) —Richard Burgin, who was a violin prodigy at 11, will retire next year as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he has held more than 40 years.

A native of Warsaw, Mr. Burgin was named concertmaster in 1920 and later became assistant conductor and associate conductor. He will continue in the latter role after the 1961-1962 season.

Mr. Burgin, who studied under Joachim and Leopold Auer, made his concert debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at 11. He formerly was concertmaster of the Helsinki and Oslo symphony orchestras.

Mr. Burgin heads the string department of the New England Conservatory and the chamber music department of the Berkshire Music Center.

His retirement next season will coincide with that of Charles Munch, present musical director of the Boston symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,754

SEP 2 1961

Richard Burgin Concertmaster Plans to Retire

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, has announced that Richard Burgin will retire as the orchestra's Concertmaster at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Mr. Burgin will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor, Mr. Cabot added.

A member of the Boston Symphony orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime, Richard Burgin was engaged to be the Orchestra's concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteaux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

Born in Warsaw on Oct. 11, 1892, Bur Burgin made his first public appearance at the age of eleven as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He studied in Berlin with Joachim, and from 1908 to 1912 he was a fellow pupil with Toscha Seidel and the young Jascha Heifetz of Lepold Auer in St. Petersburg. In 1912 Mr. Burgin was appointed concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra. He was concertmaster of the Oslo Symphony from 1916 until his appointment, at the age of 27, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Pre-Season. New York

13

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
D. 9,200

OCT 6 1961

Boston Symphony To Play Academy Series

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1961, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

Dr. Munch, who has endeared himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists as soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

Dr. Munch's opening program in Brooklyn on Friday evening, November 17 will include Howard Manson's "Elegie," Claude Debussy's "Iberia," and Peter Tchaikovsky "Six Symphony" (Pathetique)

Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50, 14.50; Box Seats, 11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting with the 1962-63 season, will be presented on Thursday nights instead of Fridays. Beginning in the fall of 1962, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will transfer its Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, where it will perform on Wednesday and Friday evenings. In recent years, many residents in Brooklyn have requested a change from the Friday night schedule, and it is hoped that Thursday night concerts will be popular with the orchestra's large and loyal Brooklyn audience since the coming of the Lincoln Center requires the new schedule anyway.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39,650

OCT 5 1961

Charles Munch Conducts Four Concerts At Brooklyn Academy In His Last Season

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1962, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn,

Dr. Munch, who has endearded himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston. have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists as soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50, $14.50. Box Seats, $11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

OCT 1 1961

Symphony Concerts In New York City

This season will be the last for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's series of New York City appearances in Carnegie Hall. Beginning in the 1962-63 season, the orchestra will play five Wednesday and five Friday evening concerts in the Philharmonic Auditorium at Lincoln Center. The five concerts in the Brooklyn Academy of Music accordingly will be changed to Thursday evenings.

165 Church Street – New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691

SEP 11 1961

Academy of Music Slates More Than 330 Programs

Orchestra, Met Star Highlight '61-'62 Season

By ARTHUR ALPERT,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

The Brooklyn Academy of Music today announced a 1961-'62 season of more than 330 membership and special programs that will bring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Roberto Iglesias Spanish Ballet, Anthony Wedgewood Benn, Max Lerner, Nathan Milstein and Frank Guarrera of the Metropolitan Opera to this borough.

Charles Munch's last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the Boston Symphony is the highlight of 30 special programs. Dr. Munch, who retires at the conclusion of the season, will conduct the orchestra in four concerts. Ernest Ansermet, founder of the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, will lead the orchestra in a fifth program.

CHARLES MUNCH.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861

SUN OCT 1 1961

Munch to Lead At 4 Concerts

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct four concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music starting Nov. 17. The opening program will include Howard Hanson's "Elegie," Claude Debussy's "Iberia," and Peter Tschaikowsky's Six Symphony (Pathetique). Munch will also conduct Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and April 6.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618 802 S. 812,836

FRI SEP 29 1961

Munch Returning To the Academy

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians.

The Boston orchestra, a feature of the Academy concert season since 1888, will give five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program on Nov. 17. Subsequent dates are Dec. 15, Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and April 6.

The Dec. 15 concert will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be guest conductor on this occasion.

MUNCH TO RETIRE

Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings.

Dr. Munch opening program will include Howard Hanson's "Elegie," Claude Debussy's "Iberia," and Peter Tchaikovsky's "Sixth Symphony (Pathetique).

Dr. Munch has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a progressive repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers.

He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists as soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Feb. 17 this year.

14

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
TUE OCT 3 1961

Lincoln Center Plans to Open Philharmonic Hall as First Unit

Philharmonic Hall, the first Lincoln Center building to be completed, is scheduled to open its doors on Sunday, Sept. 23, 1962.

Although the final Carnegie Hall season of the New York Philharmonic is being disrupted by labor difficulties, the orchestra has laid its plans for the opening of its new hall. It will give the first performance there under Leonard Bernstein.

The program will be part of a week of benefit performances for the Center. The Philharmonic will be followed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf on Sept. 24, and the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy the following evening.

The Philharmonic will appear again on Thursday evening, and Saturday night will be devoted to a Metropolitan Opera program. The Philharmonic's regular subscription season is expected to get under way the following week.

It was also announced yesterday that Philharmonic Hall is now accepting booking dates. The Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra have already reserved 154 dates for the 1962-63 season.

The basic rental charge for prime evening and week-end time will be $1,185. This compares with Carnegie Hall's charge of $825. Both of these figures are bare rental rates exclusive of additional service and labor costs.

These announcements were made at a tour of the hall and reception for 250 guests in the concert management field. The hall is estimated to be at the halfway mark in construction.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON OCT 2 1961

Lincoln Center Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will move its ten Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center for the 1962-'63 season. The Wednesday evening series will continue as usual, but the present Saturday afternoon series will be transferred to Friday evenings. The Bostonians' five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be moved from Friday to Thursday evenings next season.

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050
OCT 5 1961

CONDUCTOR

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 237,590
FRI SEP 29 1961

Munch Programs in Brooklyn

Charles Munch will conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra four times at the Brooklyn Academy of Music this season, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 26 and Feb. 23. The fifth concert of the Bostonians will be held Dec. 15 and will mark the debut in Brooklyn of conductor Ernest Ansermet. Dr. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN OCT 8 1961

Musigrams

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will move its ten Manhattan concerts to the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center for the 1962-'63 season. The present Wednesday night series will continue while the Saturday afternoon series will be shifted to Friday evenings. The orchestra's five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be shifted next season from Friday to Thursday evenings. . . . Lily Pons will not return to the Metropolitan Opera this season. . . . Pablo Casals will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by the American-Israel Cultural Foundation at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday, Oct. 10.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL
JUN 1961
1960

Boston Symphony

Beginning with the 1961-62 season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will extend its activities to a 50-week season in which 221 concerts will be given. The winter season in Symphony Hall (Boston) will include 70 concerts, instead of 63 as last year. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which is to be lengthened from six to seven weeks this summer, will be extended to eight weeks the summer of 1962. The Orchestra will continue its 10 rehearsals opened to the public as a benefit for the Orchestra's Pension Fund, the annual Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops Pension Fund concert, the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and the regular series given each year in Cambridge (6), Providence (5), Brooklyn (5), Manhattan (10) plus approximately 20 tour concerts. The Orchestra also presents the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler conducting each spring in Symphony Hall (9 weeks) and the free Esplanade concerts under Mr. Fiedler (3 weeks) given at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River in Boston.

The Boston Symphony gave its 700th concert in New York when it closed its Carnegie Hall series, April 8. This also concluded the 75th consecutive New York season by the Orchestra. The Orchestra's New York debut was originally scheduled for Dec. 1886. But Wilhelm Gericke, their fastidious conductor, was reluctant to give the performance without more preparation. The Boston Symphony appeared in New York, at last, on Feb. 14, 1887, and emerged in triumph. A number of New York premieres were given over the years by the Bostonians: Brahms' Violin Concerto, 1889; Debussy's "La Mer," 1906; Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," 1920; Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," 1931; and a host of others like Strauss' "Till Eulenspiel" and "Thus Spake Zarathustra," Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini," Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," and MacDowell's "Indian Suite." It is pleasant to read the records of things past, but even more pleasant to look forward to another season by the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 12 1961

Symphony Still Needs Money

'62 Budget Deficit To Be $350,000

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $350,000 next year to make ends meet. Henry B. Cabot, president, announced this to about 900 subscribers and contributors at the annual meeting and tea in Symphony Hall yesterday.

Cabot said the $350,000 is needed despite the accomplishment of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra, an informal association of supporters in surpassing a $250,000 goal."

"I had hoped that this amount would meet the orchestra's deficit," Cabot declared, "but although we raised more than $258,000—a remarkable achievement—we find ourselves in the red for the first time in several years."

"This situation arises from a substantial drop in record royalties," he said, "and salary increases which are necessary if we are to secure and keep the foremost musicians in the country."

Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, asserted the Boston Symphony with its $2,100,000 annual budget is "the most self-supporting" of the country's major orchestras, but nevertheless must "fill in" $350,000 next year to keep its operations "in the black."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

FRIENDS OF THE SYMPHONY—Mrs. Allan Forbes (left) and Miss Elizabeth Leland are greeted by Henry B. Cabot, president of Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees, at recent annual tea in Symphony Hall.

PRAISEWORTHY

The Boston Symphony will have a fifty-week season in which 221 concerts will be given. As Henry B. Cabot, President of the Orchestra's Trustees, states, "The Trustees believe the Orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards. At the same time the Trustees feel a responsibility for the welfare of the orchestra members. By steady employment through most of the year, the ladies and gentlemen who make up the Boston Symphony Orchestra can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families." The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the 14.

For Season - New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
TUE OCT 3 1961

Lincoln Center Plans to Open Philharmonic Hall as First Unit

Philharmonic Hall, the first Lincoln Center building to be completed, is scheduled to open its doors on Sunday, Sept. 23, 1962.

Although the final Carnegie Hall season of the New York Philharmonic is being disrupted by labor difficulties, the orchestra has laid its plans for the opening of its new hall. It will give the first performance there under Leonard Bernstein.

The program will be part of a week of benefit performances for the Center. The Philharmonic will be followed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf on Sept. 24, and the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy the following evening.

The Philharmonic will appear again on Thursday evening, and Saturday night will be devoted to a Metropolitan Opera program. The Philharmonic's regular subscription season is expected to get under way the following week.

It was also announced yesterday that Philharmonic Hall is now accepting booking dates. The Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra have already reserved 154 dates for the 1962-63 season.

The basic rental charge for prime evening and week-end time will be $1,185. This compares with Carnegie Hall's charge of $825. Both of these figures are bare rental rates exclusive of additional service and labor costs.

These announcements were made at a tour of the hall and reception for 250 guests in the concert management field. The hall is estimated to be at the halfway mark in construction.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON OCT 2 1961

Lincoln Center Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will move its ten Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center for the 1962-'63 season. The Wednesday evening series will continue as usual, but the present Saturday afternoon series will be transferred to Friday evenings. The Bostonians' five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be moved from Friday to Thursday evenings next season.

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050
OCT 5 1961

CONDUCTOR

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 237,590
FRI SEP 29 1961

Munch Programs in Brooklyn

Charles Munch will conduct his Boston Symphony Orchestra four times at the Brooklyn Academy of Music this season, Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 26 and Feb. 23. The fifth concert of the Bostonians will be held Dec. 15 and will mark the debut in Brooklyn of conductor Ernest Ansermet. Dr. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN OCT 8 1961

Musigrams

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will move its ten Manhattan concerts to the new Philharmonic Hall in Lincoln Center for the 1962-'63 season. The present Wednesday night series will continue while the Saturday afternoon series will be shifted to Friday evenings. The orchestra's five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be shifted next season from Friday to Thursday evenings. . . . Lily Pons will not return to the Metropolitan Opera this season. . . . Pablo Casals will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by the American-Israel Cultural Foundation at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday, Oct. 10.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUN 1961
1960

Boston Symphony

Beginning with the 1961-62 season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will extend its activities to a 50-week season in which 221 concerts will be given. The winter season in Symphony Hall (Boston) will include 70 concerts, instead of 63 as last year. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, which is to be lengthened from six to seven weeks this summer, will be extended to eight weeks the summer of 1962. The Orchestra will continue its 10 rehearsals opened to the public as a benefit for the Orchestra's Pension Fund, the annual Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops Pension Fund concert, the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and the regular series given each year in Cambridge (6), Providence (5), Brooklyn (5), Manhattan (10) plus approximately 20 tour concerts. The Orchestra also presents the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler conducting each spring in Symphony Hall (9 weeks) and the free Esplanade concerts under Mr. Fiedler (3 weeks) given at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River in Boston.

The Boston Symphony gave its 700th concert in New York when it closed its Carnegie Hall series, April 8. This also concluded the 75th consecutive New York season by the Orchestra. The Orchestra's New York debut was originally scheduled for Dec. 1886. But Wilhelm Gericke, their fastidious conductor, was reluctant to give the performance without more preparation. The Boston Symphony appeared in New York, at last, on Feb. 14, 1887, and emerged in triumph. A number of New York premieres were given over the years by the Bostonians: Brahms' Violin Concerto, 1889; Debussy's "La Mer," 1906; Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," 1920; Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," 1931; and a host of others like Strauss' "Till Eulenspiel" and "Thus Spake Zarathustra," Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini," Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," and MacDowell's "Indian Suite." It is pleasant to read the records of things past, but even more pleasant to look forward to another season by the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4209
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 12 1961

Symphony Still Needs Money

'62 Budget Deficit To Be $350,000

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $350,000 next year to make ends meet, Henry B. Cabot, president, announced this to about 200 subscribers and contributors at the annual meeting and tea in Symphony Hall yesterday.

Cabot said the $350,000 is needed despite the accomplishment of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra, an informal association of supporters in surpassing a $250,000 goal."

"I had hoped that this amount would meet the orchestra's deficit," Cabot declared, "but although we raised more than $250,000—a remarkable achievement—we find ourselves in the red for the first time in several years."

"This situation arises from a substantial drop in record royalties," he said, "and salary increases which are necessary if we are to secure and keep the foremost musicians in the country."

Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, asserted the Boston Symphony with its $2,100,000 annual budget is "the most self-supporting" of the country's major orchestras, but nevertheless must "fill-in" $350,000 next year to keep its operations "in the black."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4209
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

FRIENDS OF THE SYMPHONY—Mrs. Allan Forbes (left) and Miss Elizabeth Leland are greeted by Henry B. Cabot, president of Boston Symphony Orchestra board of trustees, at recent annual tea in Symphony Hall.

PRAISEWORTHY

The Boston Symphony will have [illegible] season in which 221 concerts will be given. As Henry B. Cabot, President of the Orchestra's Trustees, states, "The Trustees believe the Orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards. At the same time the Trustees feel a responsibility for the welfare of the orchestra members. By steady employment through most of the year, the ladies and gentlemen who make up the Boston Symphony Orchestra can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families." The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the 15

Deficit

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400

NOV 5 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

When Cy Coleman wrote the music and Carolyn Leigh the lyrics for "Hey, Look Me Over," the hit tune from "Wildcat," which starred Lucille Ball, they little knew the boon they were conferring on the nation's politicians. Office-seekers ranging from Republican mayoralty candidate Louis J. Lefkowitz in New York City to aspirants for aldermen's seats in small towns have written to Edward H. Morris and Company, Inc., publishers of the song, for permission to incorporate the tune into their campaign efforts.

E. J. Dias

Permission has usually been granted free of charge as a public service. In each instance, however, the user has been required to submit proposed lyrics for approval. As a result, the employes of the music publishing firm have received a thorough indoctrination in the claims and counter-claims being sounded in this year's political campaigns.

Say the Nassau County Democrats in New York:

For whenever Republicans get you down,
The only way is Democratic-bound!

Republicans in Syracuse Fire Salvo

But a salvo from Republicans in Syracuse, N. Y., proclaims:

Bill Walsh is the man
Who'll give our town renown!

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, mayoralty candidate Bob Johnson has titilized "Hey, Look Me Over" to declare that:

He's up with the facts, folks; he's up with the time.
Don't miss your chance, folks, Bob will be just fine.

The name Louis Lefkowitz presented a formidable challenge to the Republican lyricist. He solved the problem by beginning with:

Look Louie over, he is the man.
Can Louis do it? Bet your life he can.

In the final line, the inspired lyricist used Louie's full name:

Louie Lefkowitz all the way.

And the "Hey, Look Me Over" fever has spread into areas other than politics. The Explorer Scouts division of the Boy Scouts of America, for example, asked permission to parody the song, as did the sponsors of the Miss West Virginia Pageant in the Miss America competition. Up in North Bay, Ontario, the Chippewa Secondary School retitled the song "We're the Raiders" and announced:

Hey, look us over, we'll make it clear—
We are the students in search of a career.

As you can see, the lively tune has inspired plenty of bad poetry with false rhymes and faulty rhythm rearing their unpoetical heads. But it's all good, clean fun.

Some Facts About the Boston Symphony Orchestra

At a recent luncheon at Symphony Hall, Boston, with Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as host to a group of "friends" of the great orchestra, Mr. Cabot reported on the present financial and artistic status of the orchestra.

During the course of his remarks, Mr. Cabot offered some interesting statistics. For example, the Boston Symphony remains unique among the nation's major orchestras in that it sells substantially all its concert tickets in advance on subscription. Furthermore, the orchestra employs its players for a longer season than that of any other orchestra. During the present season, the Boston Symphony will be making music for 47 of the 52 weeks.

In addition, Boston Symphony players receive a better annual compensation than those of any other orchestra, the long season more than compensating for the somewhat smaller weekly pay scale in Boston. The lowest annual salary of a player in the Boston Symphony is almost on a par with the salary of an associate professor at Harvard. Mr. Cabot notes, "This is as it should be, for our players are at the top of their profession, are loyal, and work very hard."

However, it is no secret that all the nation's major orchestras operate with a substantial annual deficit; the Boston Symphony is no exception to this unfortunate rule. Last season, for example, the trustees of the orchestra had to ask for $250,000 from interested friends; the response was good, for $258,000 was raised.

This season, Mr. Cabot estimates that the deficit will be about $350,000; thus it will be necessary to raise $82,000 more than was collected last year. If interested readers want to help the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they can write to Mr. Cabot at Symphony Hall, Boston. He will be happy to send material stating how one can become a Friend of the Boston Symphony.

And, incidentally, while we are speaking of orchestras, our own New Bedford Symphony is still conducting its annual subscription campaign. The season opens on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19. Music-lovers who have not already done so should subscribe in an effort to help a worthwhile community project.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

OCT 12 1961

Friends of Symphony Asked To Give $350,000 This Year

The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was asked, at its annual meeting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, to give $350,000 to cover the deficit which the orchestra will have incurred in the two seasons of 1960-61 and 1961-62.

The plea was made to the Friends by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, in his annual report on the orchestra's financial condition.

"We spent $150,000 more than we had planned, last year, due to increases in the salaries of the players and the drop in royalties from record sales.

"Ever since Maj Higginson transferred the operations of the orchestra to the board of trustees, it has been the policy to lengthen the season, when possible, to provide more work, and consequently higher pay, for the musicians.

"Our overall season now extends to 50 weeks in the year, and the average player's salary approximates that of an associate professor at Harvard. That is as it should be—the orchestra works damn hard.

"On the basis of weeks of operation, the Boston Symphony overhead is less than that of the Philadelphia Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic.

"Last year the Friends were requested to contribute $250,000, but you responded with $258,000. This year we must ask for $350,000, and that will require more solicitation of funds and personal effort.

Cabot paid warm personal tribute to music director Charles Munch, who will end his 13 years in Boston next Spring. "I cannot overstate Dr. Munch's devotion to me personally, and to the orchestra. He has come to me in the past, concerned with some issue or another, and has asked: 'What is best for the institution?'"

Cabot also spoke of the impending retirement, at season's end, of Richard Burgin as concertmaster, after 40 years in that post, adding that Burgin would continue as associate conductor. "Pierre Montetux accomplished many fine things in his years as conductor of the Boston Symphony, and among the finest was his bringing Mr. Burgin as concertmaster."

Rising to bow, Burgin received a hearty ovation.

After the meeting, Dr. Munch conducted the orchestra in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. . Suite No. 2. —C.W.D.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

OCT 12 1961

Hub Symphony Needs $350,000 To Beat Deficit

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $350,000 next year to make ends meet. Henry B. Cabot, president, announced this to about 800 subscribers and contributors at the annual meeting and tea in Symphony Hall yesterday.

Cabot said the $350,000 is needed despite the accomplishment of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra, an informal association of supporters in surpassing a $250,000 goal."

"I had hoped that this amount would meet the orchestra's deficit," Cabot declared, "but although we raised more than $258,000—a remarkable achievement—we find ourselves in the red for the first time in several years."

"This situation arises from a substantial drop in record royalties," he said, "and salary increases which are necessary if we are to secure and keep the foremost musicians in the country."

Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, asserted the Boston Symphony with its $2,100,000 annual budget is "the most self-supporting" of the country's major orchestras, but nevertheless must "fill in" $350,000 next year to keep its operations "in the black."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

OCT 12 1961

Friends of Symphony Asked To Give $350,000 This Year

The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was asked, at its annual meeting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, to give $350,000 to cover the deficit which the orchestra will have incurred in the two seasons of 1960-61 and 1961-62.

The plea was made to the Friends by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, in his annual report on the orchestra's financial condition.

"We spent $150,000 more than we had planned, last year, due to increases in the salaries of the players and the drop in royalties from record sales.

"Ever since Maj Higginson transferred the operations of the orchestra to the board of trustees, it has been the policy to lengthen the season, when possible, to provide more work, and consequently higher pay, for the musicians.

"Our overall season now extends to 50 weeks in the year, and the average player's salary approximates that of an associate professor at Harvard. That is as it should be—the orchestra works damn hard.

"On the basis of weeks of operation, the Boston Symphony overhead is less than that of the Philadelphia Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic.

"Last year the Friends were requested to contribute $250,000, but you responded with $258,000. This year we must ask for $350,000, and that will require more solicitation of funds and personal effort.

Cabot paid warm personal tribute to music director Charles Munch, who will end his 13 years in Boston next Spring. "I cannot overstate Dr. Munch's devotion to me personally, and to the orchestra. He has come to me in the past, concerned with some issue or another, and has asked: 'What is best for the institution?'"

Cabot also spoke of the impending retirement, at season's end, of Richard Burgin as concertmaster, after 40 years in that post, adding that Burgin would continue as associate conductor. "Pierre Montetux accomplished many fine things in his years as conductor of the Boston Symphony, and among the finest was his bringing Mr. Burgin as concertmaster."

Rising to bow, Burgin received a hearty ovation.

After the meeting, Dr. Munch conducted the orchestra in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. . Suite No. 2. —C.W.D.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000

1961 Annual

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the United States orchestra having the longest season, will extend its activities to a 50 week season of 221 concerts beginning with the 1961-2 season.

Deficit

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 52,400
NOV 5 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

When Cy Coleman wrote the music and Carolyn Leigh the lyrics for "Hey, Look Me Over," the hit tune from "Wildcat," which starred Lucille Ball, they little knew the boon they were conferring on the nation's politicians. Office-seekers ranging from Republican mayoralty candidate Louis J. Lefkowitz in New York City to aspirants for aldermen's seats in small towns have written to Edward H. Morris and Company, Inc., publishers of the song, for permission to incorporate the tune into their campaign efforts.

E. J. Dias

Permission has usually been granted free of charge as a public service. In each instance, however, the user has been required to submit proposed lyrics for approval. As a result, the employes of the music publishing firm have received a thorough indoctrination in the claims and counter-claims being sounded in this year's political campaigns.

Say the Nassau County Democrats in New York:

For whenever Republicans get you down,
The only way is Democratic-bound!

Republicans in Syracuse Fire Salvo

But a salvo from Republicans in Syracuse, N. Y., proclaims:

Bill Walsh is the man
Who'll give our town renown!

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, mayoralty candidate Bob Johnson has titilized "Hey, Look Me Over" to declare that:

He's up with the facts, folks; he's up with the time.
Don't miss your chance, folks, Bob will be just fine.

The name Louis Lefkowitz presented a formidable challenge to the Republican lyricist. He solved the problem by beginning with:

Look Louie over, he is the man.
Can Louis do it? Bet your life he can.

In the final line, the inspired lyricist used Louie's full name:

Louie Lefkowitz all the way.

And the "Hey, Look Me Over" fever has spread into areas other than politics. The Explorer Scouts division of the Boy Scouts of America, for example, asked permission to parody the song, as did the sponsors of the Miss West Virginia Pageant in the Miss America competition. Up in North Bay, Ontario, the Chippewa Secondary School retitled the song "We're the Raiders" and announced:

Hey, look us over, we'll make it clear—
We are the students in search of a career.

As you can see, the lively tune has inspired plenty of bad poetry with false rhymes and faulty rhythm rearing their unpoetical heads. But it's all good, clean fun.

Some Facts About the Boston Symphony Orchestra

At a recent luncheon at Symphony Hall, Boston, with Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as host to a group of "friends" of the great orchestra, Mr. Cabot reported on the present financial and artistic status of the orchestra.

During the course of his remarks, Mr. Cabot offered some interesting statistics. For example, the Boston Symphony remains unique among the nation's major orchestras in that it sells substantially all its concert tickets in advance on subscription. Furthermore, the orchestra employs its players for a longer season than that of any other orchestra. During the present season, the Boston Symphony will be making music for 47 of the 52 weeks.

In addition, Boston Symphony players receive a better annual compensation than those of any other orchestra, the long season more than compensating for the somewhat smaller weekly pay scale in Boston. The lowest annual salary of a player in the Boston Symphony is almost on a par with the salary of an associate professor at Harvard, Mr. Cabot notes, "This is as it should be, for our players are at the top of their profession, are loyal, and work very hard."

However, it is no secret that all the nation's major orchestras operate with a substantial annual deficit; the Boston Symphony is no exception to this unfortunate rule. Last season, for example, the trustees of the orchestra had to ask for $250,000 from interested friends; the response was good, for $258,000 was raised.

This season, Mr. Cabot estimates that the deficit will be about $350,000; thus it will be necessary to raise $82,000 more than was collected last year. If interested readers want to help the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they can write to Mr. Cabot at Symphony Hall, Boston. He will be happy to send material stating how one can become a Friend of the Boston Symphony.

And, incidentally, while we are speaking of orchestras, our own New Bedford Symphony is still conducting its annual subscription campaign. The season opens on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19. Music-lovers who have not already done so should subscribe in an effort to help a worthwhile community project.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
OCT 12 1961

Friends of Symphony Asked To Give $350,000 This Year

The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was asked, at its annual meeting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, to give $350,000 to cover the deficit which the orchestra will have incurred in the two seasons of 1960-61 and 1961-62.

The plea was made to the Friends by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, in his annual report on the orchestra's financial condition.

"We spent $150,000 more than we had planned, last year, due to increases in the salaries of the players and the drop in royalties from record sales.

"Ever since Maj Higginson transferred the operations of the orchestra to the board of trustees, it has been the policy to lengthen the season, when possible, to provide more work, and consequently higher pay, for the musicians.

"Our overall season now extends to 50 weeks in the year, and the average player's salary approximates that of an associate professor at Harvard. That is as it should be—the orchestra works damn hard.

"On the basis of weeks of operation, the Boston Symphony overhead is less than that of the Philadelphia Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic.

"Last year the Friends were requested to contribute $250,000, but you responded with $258,000. This year we must ask for $350,000, and that will require more solicitation of funds and personal effort.

Cabot paid warm personal tribute to music director Charles Munch, who will end his 13 years in Boston next Spring. "I cannot overstate Dr. Munch's devotion to me personally, and to the orchestra. He has come to me in the past, concerned with some issue or another, and has asked: 'What is best for the institution?'"

Cabot also spoke of the impending retirement, at season's end, of Richard Burgin as concertmaster, after 40 years in that post, adding that Burgin would continue as associate conductor. "Pierre Montetux accomplished many fine things in his years as conductor of the Boston Symphony, and among the finest was his bringing Mr. Burgin as concertmaster."

Rising to bow, Burgin received a hearty ovation.

After the meeting, Dr. Munch conducted the orchestra in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2.

—C.W.D.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
OCT 12 1961

Hub Symphony Needs $350,000 To Beat Deficit

The Boston Symphony Orchestra must raise $350,000 next year to make ends meet. Henry B. Cabot, president, announced this to about 800 subscribers and contributors at the annual meeting and tea in Symphony Hall yesterday.

Cabot said the $350,000 is needed despite the "accomplishment" of the Friends of the Symphony Orchestra, an informal association of supporters in surpassing a $250,000 goal."

"I had hoped that this amount would meet the orchestra's deficit," Cabot declared, "but although we raised more than $258,000—a remarkable achievement—we find ourselves in the red for the first time in several years."

"This situation arises from a substantial drop in record royalties," he said, "and salary increases which are necessary if we are to secure and keep the foremost musicians in the country."

Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, asserted the Boston Symphony with its $2,100,000 annual budget is "the most self-supporting" of the country's major orchestras, but nevertheless must "fill in" $350,000 next year to keep its operations "in the black."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 12 1961

Friends of Symphony Asked To Give $350,000 This Year

The Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was asked, at its annual meeting in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, to give $350,000 to cover the deficit which the orchestra will have incurred in the two seasons of 1960-61 and 1961-62.

The plea was made to the Friends by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, in his annual report on the orchestra's financial condition.

"We spent $150,000 more than we had planned, last year, due to increases in the salaries of the players and the drop in royalties from record sales.

"Ever since Maj Higginson transferred the operations of the orchestra to the board of trustees, it has been the policy to lengthen the season, when possible, to provide more work, and consequently higher pay, for the musicians.

"Our overall season now extends to 50 weeks in the year, and the average player's salary approximates that of an associate professor at Harvard. That is as it should be—the orchestra works damn hard.

"On the basis of weeks of operation, the Boston Symphony overhead is less than that of the Philadelphia Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic.

"Last year the Friends were requested to contribute $250,000, but you responded with $258,000. This year we must ask for $350,000, and that will require more solicitation of funds and personal effort.

Cabot paid warm personal tribute to music director Charles Munch, who will end his 13 years in Boston next Spring. "I cannot overstate Dr. Munch's devotion to me personally, and to the orchestra. He has come to me in the past, concerned with some issue or another, and has asked: 'What is best for the institution?'"

Cabot also spoke of the impending retirement, at season's end, of Richard Burgin as concertmaster, after 40 years in that post, adding that Burgin would continue as associate conductor. "Pierre Montetux accomplished many fine things in his years as conductor of the Boston Symphony, and among the finest was his bringing Mr. Burgin as concertmaster."

Rising to bow, Burgin received a hearty ovation.

After the meeting, Dr. Munch conducted the orchestra in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2.

—C.W.D.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
1961 Annual

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the United States orchestra having the longest season, will extend its activities to a 50 week season of 22½ concerts beginning with the 1961-2 season.

16

Organ Recitals - Open Rehearsals -

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
NOV 30 1961

Biggs Leads Off Organ Recital Series Dec. 17th at Symphony

E. Power Biggs has invited members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to join him in the organ concert which he will give at Symphony Hall Sunday, December 17th. Mr. Biggs is the first of four recitalists to be heard this season in the annual organ concert series sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His program, announced today, will include Noels with Variations by Marcel Dupre and Louis Claude Daquin, Telemann's "Air for Trumpets and Organ, "Variations on America" by Charles Ives, the "Piece Heroique" by Cesar Franck and Johann Sebastian Bach's Concerto in A minor and his Toccata and Fugue in D minor.

The four Symphony Hall organ concerts are scheduled for Sundays at 6 p.m. Each recital will last an hour and there will be no intermission.

In addition to Mr. Biggs, the participants in this series will include Ray Ferguson, January 7; Pierre Cochereau, February 18; and Catherine Crozier, March 25.

Tickets for the Symphony Hall organ concerts, all seats unreserved, are available at Symphony Hall Subscription Office at $3.00 for the series of four programs.

Guest conductor Ernest Ansermet and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present four concerts plus an Open Rehearsal this week.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be Mr. Ansermet's guest at the Symphony Hall concerts on Sunday, Dec. 3 at 3 p.m. and Tuesday evening Dec. 5, 8:30). The program at these concerts will consist of Bach's Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The Open Rehearsal, at Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. will be in preparation for the Orchestra's weekend concerts. The program for the Friday-Saturday concerts will include Brahms' Symphony No. 2, Four Etudes for String Orchestra by Frank Martin, and Fall's Suite from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat".

Complete programs:

Sunday, Dec. 3, 3:00 p.m., Symphony Hall; Tuesday, Dec. 5, 8:30 p.m., Symphony Hall; Ernest Ansermet conducting:

Bach, Suite No. 2, in B minor, for Flute and Strings. Soloist: Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Stravinsky, Symphony in Three Movements. Debussy, "Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun". Moussorgsky - Ravel, "Picture at an Exhibition".

Thursday, Dec. 7, 7:30 p.m., Symphony Hall: Ernest Ansermet conducting: Open Rehearsal.

Friday, Dec. 8, 2:15; Saturday, Dec. 9. 8:30; Symphony Hall: Ernest Ansermet conducting:

Brahms, Symphony No. 2, in D Major, Op. 73. Frank Martin, Four Etudes for String Orchestra. Falla, Suite from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat."

FOR RESULTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,620
NOV 30 1961

ORGANIST

Berj. Zamkochian, organist for Boston Symphony Orchestra to give concert December 10, at 7:30 p.m. at St. Frances Xavier Cabrini Church, Hood Road.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

NOV 9 1961

2nd Season of Organ Recitals Slated For Symphony Hall

Biggs, Ferguson, Cochereau & Crozier Featured Organists

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced the Orchestra will again sponsor four organ recitals at Symphony Hall this season. The Symphony Hall Organ Recitals were inaugurated last year on Mr. Cabot's initiative because "the Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

E. Power Biggs, assisted by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give the first recital on December 17. Ray Ferguson, faculty member at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, will be heard on January 7. On February 18 Pierre Cochereau, organist at the Cathedal de Notre Dame, Paris, will give a recital and the series will close on March 25 with a recital by Catherine Crozier, Professor of Organ at Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida.

The concerts will be held on Sundays at 6 p.m. Each program will last approximately one hour. There will be no intermission. All seats are unreserved.

Tickets for the Symphony Hall organ concerts, available beginning November 13th at the Symphony Hall subscription ticket office, are $3.00 for the series of four programs. Tickets for individual concerts will be available at $1.00 per concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

DEC 17 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Programs for the four Symphony Hall organ concerts of the 1961-62 season have been announced by Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and sponsor of the annual series.

E. Power Biggs will open the series with a recital today at 6 p.m. His one-hour program will include Bach's Concerto in a minor and the Toccata and Dugue in D minor, "Piece heroique" by Franck, Georg Philipp Telemann's "Air for Trumpets and Organ" and "Heldenmusik (Hero Music) for Trumpets and Organ," "Three Noels with Variations" by Daquin and Variations on "America" by CCharles Ives.

The second organ concert will be given on Sunday, Jan. 7 by Ray Ferfuson who has scheduled a program of German Organ Music by Bach, Distler, Bruhns, Ammerbach and Liszt.

Pierre Cochereau will give the third program on Sunday, Feb. 18. It will consist of compositions by Bach, Mozart, Franck, Messian and anonymous "Ancient Dances."

Works by CCouperin, Daquin, Bach, Berlinski, Roger - Ducasse and Jean Langlais will be performed by Catharine CCrozier at the final organ concert on Sunday, March 25.

Series tickets for the four Symphony Hall Organ Concerts are $3.00 (all seats unreserved) and available at Symphony Hall. Tickets to single concerts are $1.00 per concert.

Ernest Ansermet concludes his engagement at Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor at a Symphony Hall concert Monday evening — the second concert of the orchestra's new series. The program for this concert will consist of Bach's Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings, with soloist Doriot Anthony Dwyer; Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy; and Moussorgsky - Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The orchestra will be on vacation from Dec. 20 through 26. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be Dec. 29 and 30 when Charles Munch will conduct a concert of music by Bach and Mozart. Pianist Evelyne Crochet will be his guest at these concerts.

Biggs Organ Recital Short and Cheerful

E. Power Biggs gave a short and cheerful organ recital yesterday, the first of four, by different organists, to be given in Symphony Hall.

There were two Christmas pieces, by Daquin and Dupres, Noels and variations on Noels.

VERY AGREEABLE

There were two pieces on the subject of heroism, Franck's "Piece heroique" and Telemann's "Hero Music for Trumpets and Organ," a gallant bit of character music, in which Mr. Biggs at the organ was flanked by two trumpeters, cataloguing a hero's virtues, one by one, from honor and charm to hope and joy.

And there were Charles Ives' variations on "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," written when he was sixteen, entertaining and unpatriotic Fourth of July music.

It was a very agreeable hour and a quarter. A large and delighted audience included a number of the young and at least one fellow organist, who from time to time accompanied Mr. Biggs with his hands and feet until, in the Dupre variations, he held his head in despair.

G.B.

The Program

Yesterday in Symphony Hall E. Power Biggs gave an organ recital of Concerto in A minor and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Piece heroique, Franck; Air for Trumpets and Organ from the Overture to "Getreuen Musikmeister" and Heldenmusik for Trumpets and Organ, Telemann; Three Noels with Variations, Daquin; Variations on "America," Ives; and Variations on Noel, Dupre.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

DEC 14 1961

Organ Concert Program Planned

Programs for the four Symphony Hall organ concerts of the 1961-62 season have been announced by Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and sponsor of the annual series.

E. Power Biggs will open the series with a recital this Sunday at 6 p.m. His one-hour program will include Bach's Concerto in A minor and the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, "Piece heroique" by Franck, Georg Philipp Telemann's "Air for Trumpets and Organ" and "Heldenmusik (Hero Music) for Trumpets and Organ", "Three Noels with Variations" by Daquin and Variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

The second organ concert will be given on Jan. 7 by Ray Ferguson who has scheduled a program of German Organ Music by Bach, Distler, Bruhns, Ammerbach and Liszt.

Pierre Cochereau will give the third program on Sunday, Feb. 18. It will consist of compositions by Bach, Mozart, Franck, Messian and anonymous "Ancient Dances."

Works by Couperin, Daquin, Bach, Berlinski, Roger-Ducasse and Jean Langlais will be performed by Catharine Crozier at the final organ concert on Sunday, March 25.

Series tickets for the four Symphony Hall organ concerts are $3 (all seats unreserved) and available at Symphony Hall. Tickets to single concerts are $1 per concert.

Ernest Ansermet concludes his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor at a Symphony Hall concert Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:30, the second concert of the orchestra's new series. The program for this concert will consist of Bach's Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings, with soloist Doriot Anthony Dwyer; Stravinsky's Symphony In Three Movements; "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy, and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition".

The orchestra will be on vacation from Dec. 20 through 26. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be Dec. 29 and 30 when Charles Munch will conduct a concert of music by Bach and Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

DEC 15 1961

On the Concert Horizon

Tickets are on sale for the second season of Symphony Hall organ recitals, the first of which will be given December 17 by E. Power Biggs. Each of the four will be on a Sunday at 6, and will last approximately an hour.

The series was inaugurated last year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees in order to allow for greater use and enjoyment of the Symphony Hall organ. Other recitalists, following Mr. Biggs, will be Ray Ferguson of the University of Michigan (Jan. 7), Pierre Cochereau of Notre Dame, Paris (Feb. 18), and Catherine Crozier of Rollins College (March 25).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211

DEC 17 1961

Two Rectitals On Organ Sponsored

"Three Noels with Variations" by Daquin will be featured in today's opening recital of four Symphony Hall organ concerts. Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and sponsor of the annual series, has announced the programs.

E. Power Biggs begins the series with a one-hour program at 6 o'clock. Bach's Concerto in A Minor and the Toccata and Fugue in D Minor have been chosen as have "Piece Heroique" by Franck, "Air for Trumpets and Organ" and "Heldenmusik for Trumpets and Organ" by George Philip Telemann, and variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

The second organ concert will be given on January 7 by Ray Ferguson who has scheduled a program of German organ music by Bach, Distler, Bruhns, Amerbach and Lizt.

Pierre Cochereau will give the third program on Sunday, Eebruary 18, and Catharine Crozier the final one on March 25. Series tickets for the four are $3 (all seats unreserved) and available at Symphony Hall. Tickets to single concerts are $1.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 21 000

DEC 1961

BURRELLE'S PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPONSOR OF SECOND ORGAN SERIES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will again sponsor a series of four organ recitals at Symphony Hall this season. The recitals were inaugurated last year because "the Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which is heard but a few times each season."

E. Power Biggs assisted by members of the orchestra will give the first program Dec. 17. Ray Ferguson, University of Michigan, will be heard Jan. 7. Pierre Cochereau, Cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris will play Feb. 18 and Catharine Crozier, Rollins College, will close the series March 25. The recitals are held Sundays at 6 p.m. The series price is $3; individual programs will be $1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175

OCT 3 1961

Open Rehearsals

Boston—(UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 1961-1962 series of 10 open rehearsals on Oct. 12. Each open rehearsal will be on a Thursday. The open rehearsals were started in 1950 as a means of providing seats for students unable to hear the orchestra because the regular concert series was sold out by subscription.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

SEP 21 1961

Hub Symphony Plans 10 Open Rehearsals

Charles Munch has announced that ten of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season. Doctor Munch inaugurated the popular series of rehearsals in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to hear the Orchestra in person during their years of study in Boston. The Open Rehearsals not only provide this opportunity but they also give the public and students an opportunity to observe the Orchestra in final preparation for its regular week-end concerts.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Open Rehearsal on Thursday, October 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held on November 2, December 7, January 4, January 11, February 8, February 15, March 8 March 29 and April 26.

Season tickets for the ten Open Rehearsals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are $15.00. Seats are unreserved and any seat in Symphony Hall is available to ticket-holders on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the 7:30 rehearsal. Season tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall box office. The series sale will close Thursday, October 5th.

Biggs Organ Recital Short and Cheerful

E. Power Biggs gave a short and cheerful organ recital yesterday, the first of four, by different organists, to be given in Symphony Hall.

There were two Christmas pieces, by Daquin and Dupres, Noels and variations on Noels.

VERY AGREEABLE

There were two pieces on the subject of heroism, Franck's "Piece heroique" and Telemann's "Hero Music for Trumpets and Organ," a gallant bit of character music, in which Mr. Biggs at the organ was flanked by two trumpeters, cataloguing a hero's virtues, one by one, from honor and charm to hope and joy.

And there were Charles Ives' variations on "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," written when he was sixteen, entertaining and unpatriotic Fourth of July music.

It was a very agreeable hour and a quarter. A large and delighted audience included a number of the young and at least one fellow organist, who from time to time accompanied Mr. Biggs with his hands and feet until, in the Dupre variations, he held his head in despair.

G.B.

The Program

Yesterday in Symphony Hall E. Power Biggs gave an organ recital of Concerto in A minor and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Piece heroique, Franck; Air for Trumpets and Organ from the Overture to "Getreuen Musikmeister" and Heldenmusik for Trumpets and Organ, Telemann; Three Noels with Variations, Daquin; Variations on "America," Ives; and Variations on Noel, Dupre.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
DEC 14 1961

Organ Concert Program Planned

Programs for the four Symphony Hall organ concerts of the 1961-62 season have been announced by Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and sponsor of the annual series.

E. Power Biggs will open the series with a recital this Sunday at 6 p.m. His one-hour program will include Bach's Concerto in A minor and the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, "Piece heroique" by Franck, Georg Philipp Telemann's "Air for Trumpets and Organ" and "Heldenmusik (Hero Music) for Trumpets and Organ", "Three Noels with Variations" by Daquin and Variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

The second organ concert will be given on Jan. 7 by Ray Ferguson who has scheduled a program of German Organ Music by Bach, Distler, Bruhns, Amerbach and Liszt.

Pierre Cochereau will give the third program on Sunday, Feb. 18. It will consist of compositions by Bach, Mozart, Franck, Messian and anonymous "Ancient Dances."

Works by Couperin, Daquin, Bach, Berlinski, Roger-Ducasse and Jean Langlais will be performed by Catharine Crozier at the final organ concert on Sunday, March 25.

Series tickets for the four Symphony Hall organ concerts are $3 (all seats unreserved) and available at Symphony Hall. Tickets to single concerts are $1 per concert.

Ernest Ansermet concludes his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor at a Symphony Hall concert Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:30, the second concert of the orchestra's new series. The program for this concert will consist of Bach's Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings, with soloist Doriot Anthony Dwyer; Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy, and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition".

The orchestra will be on vacation from Dec. 20 through 26. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be Dec. 28 and 30 when Charles Munch will conduct a concert of music by Bach and Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 15 1961

On the Concert Horizon

Tickets are on sale for the second season of Symphony Hall organ recitals, the first of which will be given December 17 by E. Power Biggs. Each of the four will be on a Sunday at 6, and will last approximately an hour.

The series was inaugurated last year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees in order to allow for greater use and enjoyment of the Symphony Hall organ. Other recitalists following Mr. Biggs will be Ray Ferguson of the University of Michigan (Jan. 7), Pierre Cochereau of Notre Dame, Paris (Feb. 18), and Catherine Crozier of Rollins College (March 25).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
DEC 17 1961

Two Rectitals On Organ Sponsored

"Three Noels with Variations" by Daquin will be featured in today's opening recital of four Symphony Hall organ concerts, Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and sponsor of the annual series, has announced the programs.

E. Power Biggs begins the series with a one-hour program at 6 o'clock. Bach's Concerto in A Minor and the Toccata and Fugue in D Minor have been chosen as have "Piece Heroique" by Franck, "Air for Trumpets and Organ" and "Heldenmusik for Trumpets and Organ" by George Philip Telemann, and variations on "America" by Charles Ives.

The second organ concert will be given on January 7 by Ray Ferguson who has scheduled a program of German organ music by Bach, Distler, Bruhns, Amerbach and Liszt.

Pierre Cochereau will give the third program on Sunday, Eebruary 18, and Catharine Crozier the final one on March 25. Series tickets for the four are $3 (all seats unreserved) and available at Symphony Hall. Tickets to single concerts are $1.

DIAPASON
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY 21,000
DEC 1961
BURRELLE'S PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPONSOR OF SECOND ORGAN SERIES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will again sponsor a series of four organ recitals at Symphony Hall this season. The recitals were inaugurated last year because "the Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which is heard but a few times each season."

E. Power Biggs assisted by members of the orchestra will give the first program Dec. 17. Ray Ferguson, University of Michigan, will be heard Jan. 7. Pierre Cochereau, Cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris will play Feb. 18 and Catharine Crozier, Rollins College, will close the series March 25. The recitals are held Sundays at 6 p.m. The series price is $3; individual programs will be $1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
SEP 21 1961

Hub Symphony Plans 10 Open Rehearsals

Charles Munch has announced that ten of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season. Doctor Munch inaugurated the popular series of rehearsals in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra. With most of the Orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to hear the Orchestra in person during their years of study in Boston. The Open Rehearsals not only provide this opportunity but they also give the public and students an opportunity to observe the Orchestra in final preparation for its regular week-end concerts.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Open Rehearsal on Thursday, October 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held on November 2, December 7, January 4, January 11, February 8, February 15, March 8 March 29 and April 26.

Season tickets for the ten Open Rehearsals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are $15.00. Seats are unreserved and any seat in Symphony Hall is available to ticket-holders on hand when the doors are opened at 5:45 p.m. for the 7:30 rehearsal. Season tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall box office. The series sale will close Thursday, October 5th.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
OCT 3 1961

Open Rehearsals

Boston—(UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 1961-1962 series of 10 open rehearsals on Oct. 12. Each open rehearsal will be on a Thursday. The open rehearsals were started in 1950 as a means of providing seats for students unable to hear the orchestra because the regular concert series was sold out by subscription.

18

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
SEP 9 1961

Music

Rosalind Elias to Sing In Community Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—With the announcement of the date of campaign week for the Lowell-Lawrence Community Concert membership drive Sept. 25, comes the added news that Lowell's Rosalind Elias will appear in the series in Manchester, N. H., during the 1961-62 season.

Rosalind Elias

This, plus a star-studded array of talent for the local series promises both old and new membership holders the opportunity of realizing one of the finest seasons yet enjoyed in this area. The local series even hopes to add an extra concert to the agenda, making the season one of four attractions.

In Lowell, the highlight is expected to be provided by the Met's sensational singing star, Robert Merrill. Mr. Merrill, who is known to millions for his singing in opera, concert, recordings, radio and TV, enjoyed his best season to date during 1960-61. He will return to the met this season and will also be heard from coast to coast in concerts.

A second concert that could provide another seasonal highlight will be the appearance of the famed Italian chamber orchestra, I Musici. This truly tremendous organization has achieved a place in music today that is best described as the tops in its field.

Two excellent musical events are listed for the coming season of Moses Greeley Parker programs. Hugh F. Downey, executive secretary, has announced that the first program in the music list will be presented by the Tamburitzans of Duquesne university of Pittsburgh, Pa., and the second will feature the brilliant young soprano of the San Francisco Opera company, Mary Costa. Miss Costa is also a recording and TV star.

The talented young Boston violinist, Charles Petremont, will present a recital tomorrow afternon at 3 o'clock, in the Gardner Museum, Boston. Mr. Petremont, who made his debut about three seasons ago, has been heard in Carnegie Hall in New York and this past season appeared with the St. Louis Symphony orchestra. As a local viewpoint of interest he played in nearby Wilmington two seasons ago in a concert for the educational club's scholarship fund. The public is invited to attend and no tickets are necessary.

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra has announced that 10 of the orchestra's rehearsals for this season will be open to the public. Dr. Munch inaugurated the popular series of rehearsals in 1951-52, his second season as the orchestra's music director, primarily to give college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the orchestra. With most of the orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to hear the orchestra in person during their years of study in Boston.

The director will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first open rehearsal on Thursday, Oct. 12. Subsequent open rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held on Nov. 2, Dec. 7, Jan. 4, Jan. 11, Feb. 8, Feb. 15, March 29 and April 26.

The Metropolitan Opera company's 1961-62 season will open on Oct. 23, with a performance of Puccini's "Girl of the Golden West." This opera which has been omitted in the repertoire for many, many seasons, brings back memories of the immortal Enrico Caruso, who in his final performance in Boston, was heard in the tenor lead. On the coming occasion the internationally famous tenor, Richard Tucker, will essay the same role. Leontyne Price, who created such a sensation last season, is scheduled to sing the title role.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
SEP 10 1961

Open BSO Rehearsals To Resume

Charles Munch has announced that 10 of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season.

OPEN OCT. 12

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Oct. 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held on Nov. 2, Dec. 7, Jan. 4, Jan. 11, Feb. 8, Feb. 15, Mar. 8, March 29 and April 26.

Season tickets for the 10 Open Rehearsals are $15.00. Seats are unreserved and any seat in Symphony Hall is available to ticket-holders on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the 7:30 rehearsal.

Season tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall box office. The series sale will close Thursday, Oct. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
SEP 10 1961

Symphony Will Continue Its Open Rehearsals

Charles Munch has announced that 10 of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season. Dr. Munch inaugurated the series in 1951-52, his second season as the Orchestra's music director, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the Orchestra.

He will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first, on Thursday, Oct. 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursday, will be Nov. 2, Dec. 7, Jan. 4 and 11, Feb. 8 and 15, Mar. 8 and 29, and Apr. 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
SEP 7 1961

BSO Rehearsal Series Listed

Charles Munch has announced that ten of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season.

Dr. Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Oct. 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held Nov. 2, Dec. 7, Jan. 4, Jan. 11, Feb. 8, Feb. 15, March 8, March 29 and April 26.

Season tickets for the ten Open Rehearsals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are $15.00. Seats are unreserved and any seat in Symphony Hall is available to ticket-holders on hand when the doors are opened at 6:45 p.m. for the 7:30 rehearsal. Season tickets are available through some colleges and at the Symphony Hall box office. The series sale will close Thursday, Oct. 5th.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
SEP 20 1961

Open Rehearsals

A student problem solved by Charles Munch resulted in one of the most popular annual activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — the Open Rehearsals. Dr. Munch will open their 12th season on Thursday evening, Oct. 12, at 7:30 in Symphony Hall. There will be a total of 10, all on Thursday: Oct. 12, Nov. 2, Dec. 7, Jan. 4 and 11, Feb. 8 and 15, March 8 and 15, and April 26.

Series tickets for the Open Rehearsals are now available at the box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 2 19—

SYMPHONIC REHEARSALS

A student problem solved by Charles Munch resulted in one of the most popular annual activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—the Open Rehearsals. Dr. Munch will open their 12th season on Thursday evening (Oct. 12) at 7:30 in Symphony Hall. There will be a total of 10, all on Thursdays:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
SEP 11 1961

SYMPHONY TO GIVE 10 OPEN REHEARSALS

Charles Munch announces that ten of the Boston Symphony orchestra's rehearsals will be opened to the public this season. Doctor Munch inaugurated the popular series of rehearsals in 1951-52, primarily to give the college students of the area a greater opportunity to hear the orchestra. With most of the orchestra's regular concerts sold out by season subscription, he felt many students were unable to hear the orchestra in person during their years of study in Boston. The open rehearsals not only provide this opportunity but they also give the public and students an opportunity to observe the orchestra in final preparation for its regular week-end concerts.

Doctor Munch will conduct a majority of the rehearsals including the first Open Rehearsal on Thursday, Oct. 12. Subsequent Open Rehearsals, all on Thursdays, will be held on November 2, December 7, January 4, January 11, February 8, February 15, March 8, March 29 and April 26.

Motel Luncheons

19

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 19 1961

BC Public Affairs Meeting Tomorrow

Lt. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, a leading authority on conventional and space-age weapons, will describe the Army's research and development program at a Boston College Public Affairs Forum at 4 p.m. tomorrow.

He will be introduced by Cong. John W. McCormack. The Rev. Robert J. McEwen, S. J., chairman of the Forum, will speak

AT THE PAN AMERICAN LUNCHEON at the Midtown Motor Inn before the Symphony concert were (left to right) Mrs. Harris Nelson, Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck, Dr. Alfredo Trinchieri, Consul General of Italy, and Mrs. Ralph Bradley. On the table are flags of the Pan American countries.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
DEC 8 1961

★ ★ ★

Today's (Friday) distinguished guest at the pre-Symphony Luncheon at Midtown Motor Inn will be Boris Goldovsky, artistic director of the New England Opera Theater and the executive committee of the board of directors. Harris Ellis Dickson, who offers a 20-minute program entitled, "Inside the Boston Symphony," after the luncheon, will offer some interesting anecdotes.

Invited at the head table are Mrs. John S. Drabik, Earl W. Eames, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. Ehrlich, John Henry Funk, Mrs. Albert B. Hunt, Thomas J. Scott, Mrs. Richard H. Thompson and Mrs. Henry Wheeler III.

LUNCHEON GUESTS at the pre-Symphony luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn included (left to right) Mrs. Allan Forbes, former Gov. Christopher Del Sesto of Rhode Island, Mrs. John M. Bullard and Chief Justice Raymond S. Wilkins.

AT THE RECEPTION before the pre-Symphony luncheon Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb samples one of the hors d'oeuvres, and Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Marcien Jenckes and Mrs. Roland Teiner seem much amused.

Herald Attends A Luncheon

Seldom-seen Proper Bostonians have mingled with distinguished guests from every circle at the first series of Friday afternoon pre-Symphony luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn this fall. They listened to Nicolas Slonimsky discuss the Symphony concert and then went across the street to Symphony Hall. These luncheons have been a pleasant innovation in Boston's social life.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
NOV 29 1961

THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY TRUSTEES have accepted invitations to be honor guests at the second Pre-Symphony Luncheon Lecture by Harry Ellis Dickson on Friday, Dec. 1, at the Midtown Motor Inn. Invited to sit at the head table with Henry B. Cabot, president of the B.S.O. Trustees, and Mrs. Cabot are Mr. and Mrs. Talcott M. Banks, Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Hatch, Mr. and Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Morton Jennings Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Laughlin, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Noonan, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Paine, Dr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney R. Rabb, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Stockton, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Thorndike, Raymond S. Wilkins, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott and Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Perry.

20

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 8 1961

Social Chatter by Alison Arnold

Coming-Out Party on Nov. 24 For Miss Lily Barret Rice

PINK COATS will be plentiful at the coming-out party for Lily Barret Rice, Friday evening, Nov. 24, for her father, Charles G. Rice, is M.F.H. at the Myopia Hunt Club. The dance was to have taken place there, but Lily changed her mind and has decided to have it at their house in Hamilton.

Lily, who is named for her mother, the former Lily Barret Brown, is as accomplished in horsemanship as her parents. She was graduated from Foxcroft last June, is at Bradford Junior College, and is a provisional member of the Vincent Club.

Head usher at her dance, for which Ruby Newman will furnish the music, will be Frederick Pryor. Among those assisting him will be Frederick Ayer, 3rd, David DeGive, Galen Brewster, John J. Slocum, William G. Brooks, Michael Totten, Gordon Cranmer and Edward Woll.

Before the dance, Mrs. James W. Totten will give a large party at Myopia, and among others entertaining at dinner are the Neil Ayers, the Louis Cabots, the Samuel Batchelders, and the Thomas E. Proctors, who will give a dinner party for Mr. Proctor's debutante niece, Elizabeth Case.

Still other dinners will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Jr., Iris Winthrop, the Edward Osgoods, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott, Jr., and the William Lorings.

* * *

Pan American Flavor for Luncheon

DISTINGUISHED NAMES in Boston's World of Pan America—Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck, Bergen Rapalyea, president of the Pan American Society, Adm. and Mrs. Samuel Eliot Morison and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock—predominate in the list of those to be at the sixth pre-Symphony luncheon, Friday, at the Midtown Motor Inn.

This event will honor the countries South of our Border and their consuls will enjoy the Pan American menu along with Bostonians. Among the consuls will be Claudio Tourinho of Brazil, Jose Antonio Godoy of Peru, Juan Ignacio Varela of Venezuela, Jorge Perez Jimeno of Colombia, Alexander Rock, representing Haiti, and Ibarra Garcia of Argentina.

The Pan American cuisine featured in the menu written by the Pan American Society offers as the piece de resistance a chicken dish cooked with noodles. Heladao, we hear, is ice-cream in Pan American, and of course, the ensaladas will make you feel as if you were eating in Rio, Quito or Lima.

Although Friday's luncheon will be Nicolas Slonimsky's final bow for 1961 at the luncheons, he'll make one more appearance at the first pre-Symphony supper, Dec. 5.

Harry Ellis Dickson, Pops assistant conductor and first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the star at the Nov. 24 pre-Symphony luncheon. He's a cousin of the late Eddie Duchin, pianist. They grew up together in their native Cambridge before one followed jazz and the other, the Symphony.

Nicolas Slonimsky announces that at this last luncheon he'll make a really important "divagation" and will sit down at the piano and play one whole piece by a leading South American composer, born in Brazil.

Among those planning to go to the luncheon are Mme. Serge Koussevitzky, The Duchess Anna von Leuchtenburg de Beauharnais, Mrs. George Mumford, Mrs. Ralph Bradley, Mrs. Leighton Brewer, Mrs. Jasper Whiting, Miss Mabel Daniels, Mrs. W. Lloyd Allen, Mrs. V. Cabot Burgevin, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. John States, Mrs. John Eliot, Mrs. William Endicott, Mrs. Charles P. Howard, Mrs. William A. Bacon, Mrs. M. Williams Straub, Mrs. Howard W. Davis, and Mrs. John A. Volpe, wife of the Governor.

* * *

Museum to Dedicate Skyline Room

THE BITTERSWEET COLORS of fall will decorate the beautiful Skyline Room overlooking the Charles River, at tonight's annual dinner of the Museum of Science Board of Trustees and Corporation.

The Skyline Room tops the Museum's newest unit, the Central Building, which will be dedicated at formal ceremonies just before the dinner. It is named in memory of the late Francis A. Countway of Brookline, through the generosity of his sister, Miss Sandra Countway, a Museum trustee.

Given in memory of Richard Ely Danielson, the Skyline Room also will be dedicated today, as well as the adjacent galleries, the Riverview Gallery, given by R. Perry Collins and Marjorie C. Collins; the West Gallery, given in memory of Henry William Giese, and the North Gallery, given by Mr. and Mrs. Everett L. Cuneo.

Dean Henry B. Washburn will give the blessing at the dinner. Frederick H. Lovejoy, Museum president, and Bradford Washburn, director, will welcome the guests. During the evening there'll be an opportunity to see the Museum's major new photographic exhibit, "Africa."

Among those at the dinner will be the Thomas D. Cabots, William A. Coolidge, the Byron K. Elliotts, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Forbes, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Curtis, the George Willard Smiths, the David B. Stones, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Hall, Jr., and Miss Amelia Peabody.

* * *

Happy Birthday to a Debutante

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS to Paula Rae Sweeney, who is celebrating her 18th birthday today. She's the debutante daughter of the Francis E. Sweeneys of Milton. A graduate of Fontbonne Academy, Milton, she's taking a pre-medical course at Stonehill College, North Easton.

Musical Club Meets Friday

The Open Meeting of the Cambridge Musical Club will be held Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock, at the Bush-Reisinger Museum (Germanic), on Kirkland street, Cambridge. The program will be given by the Low Madrigal, Edward Low, director.

Refreshments will be served following the concert. The hostesses will be: Charles S. Bolster, president; Miss Elizabeth B. Cushman, vice president and program chairman; Mrs. Louise H. Langenberg, Mrs. Horace H. Lester and Mrs. Clifford M. Holland. The pourers will be Mrs. Howland Walter and Mrs. George Albert Lewis.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
NOV 22 1961

More Music And Drama For The Insatiables

By BARBARA MASORO

Bostonians' cultural appetites seem to be well nigh insatiable. Season tickets for all five of the Symphony series are sold out. Ducats for hit plays are in a class with collectors' items.

Hub socialites have even added a musical note to their long-standing tradition of luncheons before the symphony on Friday.

This season a series of six pre-symphony luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn featured distinguished composer and pianist Nicolas Slonimsky as guest speaker—his topic, music.

SECOND SERIES STARTS FRIDAY

So successful was the series tha ta new group of four is planned with Harry Ellis Dickson at the helm.

"Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra" is the title chosen by Mr. Dickson an dit seems an appropriate one for he is not only a member of that esteemed group but assistant Pops conductor as well.

His first talk will be this Friday at a luncheon honoring—yes, music critics. At the next three, slated for Dec. 1, 8 and 29, the committee plans to invite different musical groups as honored guests.

"ROMEO AND JULIET" FOR SCHOLARSHIP

Turning to the realm of the theater, we find that the Boston Wheaton Club will sponsor London's Old Vic Company production of "Romeo and Juliet" for its annual benefit night this year.

Emily Hood of Winchester and Mrs. Richard C. O'Brien of Boston are co-chairmen of the benefit evening, Jan. 20 at Donnelly Memorial Theater. Proceeds will go toward the Wheaton College Regional Scholarship Fund.

AWARD FOR MR. EVANS

Maurice Evans was the topic of conversation yesterday at the Back Bay home of Mrs. Isabella Grandin. Several members of the Cambridge Drama Festival Ladies Committee met to discuss plans for an award for the famed actor.

He'll be guest speaker at the second Mornings of the Theatre presentation at 11 o'clock at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel a week from today.

Socially Speaking

The award will be in the form ofa citation for Mr. Evans' contribution to the English-speaking stage. William Morris Hunt, executive producer of the Cambridge Drama Festival which sponsors the theater mornings, will present the citation.

WINE TESTING TO BENEFIT PEN PALS

The world of letters—pen pals' letters—will benefit from a palate-tempting wine tasting party Wednesday, Nov. 29, from 5 to 7.

A benefit for the International Friendship League, headquarters for round-the-globe student pen friendship, the party will be held at the League's home in the old Hemenway mansion, 40 Mt. Vernon St. on Beacon Hill.

The fine dinner wines of 10 nations, including a new import from Yugoslavia, will provide guests with a delightful selection for discerning comparisons.

Former Secretary of State Christian A. Herter and Mrs. Herter of Millis and Washington, D. C. and the Harvey H. Bundys of Back Bay are among the benefit committee members.

Also, former Ambassador to Italy William Phillips and Mrs. phillips and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Mahony of Beacon Hill. Mr. Mahony, League chairman of the board, heads the planning group.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ——
OCT 0 1961

SMART SET . . . . . By ROSE WALSH

Symphony Quips Delightful

Fashionably-attired pre-Symphony Concert luncheoners drifted out of the Midtown Motor Inn Friday afternoon still chuckling over composer, author, pianist Nicolas Slonimsky's clever comments on the three B's (Brahms, Beethoven and Bach.) The ladies were on their way to hear Dr. Charles Munch conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert of Brahms, Beethoven "and an American C", Aaron Copland music.

CHATTING TOGETHER at the recent pre-Symphony luncheon at Midtown Motor Inn are (l. to r.) Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Marcien Jenckes and Mrs. A. Roland Teiner.
(Record American, Greg Kelley)

Mr. Slonimsky who is giving a series of "Impressions of a Symphony" at Friday luncheons at the Midtown has great charm, sharp wit and dearly loves music. While he is describing some "gimmick" (one of his favorite words) in a composition, he runs over the notes, (often with one hand) on the piano.

At the previous week's luncheon someone (not on this paper) had misquoted his commentary about the composer Brahms. He said, "I was surprised to read that I presented Brahms as a gay blade. Actually he was a very shy person."

Still talking about Brahms, Mr. Slonimsky said, "The noted composer is usually pictured with a beard. I don't know that there is any connection between beards and symphonies, but Brahms did not acquire a beard until after he wrote his first symphony when he was 43 years old."

Before the luncheon, Dr. Philippe Schmidt-Schlegel, Consul General of the Federal Republic of Germany for New England, and his lovely wife were given a reception in one of the suites of Midtown Motor Inn.

Among those attending the noon event were Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Maxim Karolik, Mr. and Mrs. A. Roland Teiner, Mrs. Sidney Rabb with Mrs. Nehemiah H. Whitman; Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson (wearing a dashing gray velvet beret and a flared-skirted blue suit); Mrs. Stephen Randolph Casey, Mrs. Frank J. Ludwig, Mrs. John Sargent, Mrs. William Endicott.

Others noted were Mrs. Hans Kroto, Fernando Ibarra (new Argentine Consul); Hans Eiff (new addition to the German consular service); Mrs. Gregory Connolly, Mrs. Bertram Druker, Mrs. Marcien Jenckes, Mrs. Gustave B. Fred and Mrs. Cecil Rose.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
NOV 25 1961

Society: U.S. Has Arrived Culturally, Hub Symphony-Goers Told

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

"We have arrived in this country in a cultural way," Harry Ellis Dickson yesterday told close to 100 symphony-goers at the first of a series of four lectures he is giving before Friday afternoon concerts. American training and standards in music have been raised to the best in the world, he added, pointing out that the Boston Symphony Orchestra now is 75 percent native born and trained, whereas the exact opposite was true some 32 years ago.

Boston Symphony subscribers, who have faithfully followed the Friday concert ritual for generations, heard a gracious salute to the orchestra's past and future as they lunched on veal, shrimp or omelettes in the Mid-Town Motor Inn, across the street from Symphony Hall free from parking problems in the afternoon downpour.

The late beloved Serge Koussevitsky, Richard Burgin in his last year as concert master, and retiring conductor Charles Munch have shaped musical taste according to the code of the orchestra "to play the best music possible in the best manner possible, with the best conductor possible," said Mr. Dickson.

Boston Symphony trustees, (represented unofficially yesterday by Henry Cabot) have made no mistakes in 81 years in choosing conductors, Dickson told guests at the luncheon planned by Mrs. J. Greene Carter and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten.

Sharing the good food and talk were Mr. and Mrs. Byron Elliot, Mrs. A. Clement Titcomb, Cambridge Drama Festival chairman William M. Hunt and Mrs. Hunt, and members of Boston's French colony including Mrs. William R. Kitchel, Mrs. Edward Counihan 3d, Mrs. William Van Lennep, Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham, who gathered for a reception honoring Mr. Dickson before luncheon.

Others enjoying the luncheon party included Mrs. John T. Nightingale, Mrs. Charles Rheault, Mrs. Vincent Greene, Mrs. David Yates, Mrs. S. Sidney Stoneman, the Marquesa de Santa Cruz, Mrs. Alfred Sexton, Mrs. Frederick Shepard, Mrs. Richard Chapman, Miss Ethel Clark, Miss Fay Dabney, Mrs. Richard Ehrlich, Mrs. George F. Hall, Mrs. Stephen Harris, Mrs. John C. Vosoff, Mrs. John and Mrs. Lucius Thayer, Mrs. Howell Stevens, Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, Mrs. Russell Robb, Mrs. F. L. Purdon, Mrs. Harold Porter, Mrs. George Porter, Rev. and Mrs. Charles Peck, Mrs. Howard Kingsbury Jr., Mrs. William King, Mrs. Harold Keller, Mrs. Alfred Keeler, Mrs. Robert Montgomery and Mrs. Samuel Pillsbury.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
SEP 30 1961

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Winter Social Season Opens With First Symphony Concert

THE WINTER SEASON—socially speaking—began yesterday with the first Symphony Concert of the 81st season. From now on until spring, Friday afternoons will be reserved strictly for these traditional pilgrimages to Symphony Hall.

An innovation this year is the series of pre-Symphony luncheons at the Midtown Motor Inn across the street. Nicholas Slonimsky, musicologist, will give 20-minute talks on the current program each week. Since Iberia was included in yesterday's program, the Marquis de Santa Cruz, Spanish Consul General, and La Marquesa, were guests of honor at the luncheon. Other consuls will be similarly honored as their countries are represented in the Symphony programs.

The luncheon was served in the pleasant dining-room of the attractive motel and everyone had ample time to get to Symphony Hall before the concert began. The more Proper Bostonians enjoyed Mr. Slonimsky's humor immensely and laughed and guffawed uproariously at his witty comments. Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb was highly amused, as were the Charles Pengras, Claude R. Branch and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Powers. Some of the newcomers to Symphony were a bit shocked at Mr. Slonimsky's portrayal of Brahms, Tchaikowsky and Debussy as gay blades and prefer to think of them as austere and remote rather than frivolous.

Before the luncheon, the Marquis and La Marquesa gave a small reception for their luncheon guests. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Donald Dawson (Alona Massey). Slender and blonde, she was the cynosure of all eyes. Other guests were Mrs. Charles P. Howard and her daughter, Mrs. Howard Ball, Mrs. Stephen R. Casey, Mrs. Donald Davis, Mrs. William Davies Sohier, Jr., Mrs. Julian Rogers, Mrs. Lewis Kane, Mrs. Hayward Sanders, Mrs. Robert Morris and Mrs. Mortimer Stewart.

Reservations for the luncheon were completely sold out. Among others in the throng were Mr. and Mrs. Foster Trainer, Mrs. Stephen Paine, Mrs. Harold R. Keller, Mrs. S. Bruce Black and Mrs. George G. Crocker. Still others at the first concert of the season were Mrs. George Lewis, Jr., and her daughter, Mrs. Levin H. Campbell, 3rd, Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Earl Appleton, Mrs. Oliver Wolcott, Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Robert Steinert, Mrs. Marcien Jenckes, Mrs. Lawrence Hansel and Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
NOV 27 1961

SMART SET By Rose Walsh

Music Notes Delight

We certainly enjoyed hearing Boston Symphony Orchestra's Harry Ellis Dickson talk informally about "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra" at Friday's pre-Symphony luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. Now we know that the impressive group of musicians (101 men and 3 women) of whom we always stood a bit in awe, are just as human as "the fellow next door."

No question that Mr. Dickson, who is assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops" enjoys being a member of the world-famous orchestra. "Playing in the Symphony is not a job, it's a way of life," he told us.

Because many of the luncheoners were going on to the Friday afternoon concert, at which Richard Burgin conducted the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia," the guest speaker devoted part of his "Inside" talk to the "warm-hearted, loved and respected" (Mr. Dickson's words) concert master. Mr. Burgin is retiring from that position at the end of the season.

Mrs. J. Greene Carter and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten who have planned the series of four luncheons for all music-lovers, honored the Music Critics of Boston at Friday's affair.

Noted among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cabot, the Marquesa de Santa Cruz, wife of the Spanish Consul-General; Mrs. Jean Savelli, wife of the French Consul-General; Mrs. John T. Nightingale, Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer, Mrs. Harold R. Keller, Mrs. Walter Powers, Mrs. Byron K. Elliott, Mrs. Edward Counihan, III, Mr. and Mrs. William Morris Hunt, Mrs. Stephen F. Harris, Mrs. Ferdinand Brigham, Mrs. Russell Robb, Mrs. William Ketchel, Mrs. Robert Montgomery and Mrs. Alfred Keeler.

* * *

22

T. V. and Radio - Pre-season

NEW YORK, N.Y.
BACK STAGE
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 10 1961

20th Century Fund Makes Important Contributions To Cultural Projects

Although the Twentieth Century Fund is not a grant-giving foundation in the usual sense, it has nevertheless made important contributions to the performing arts.

The Twentieth Century Fund income is almost entirely devoted to its own program of research, publication and educational activities in the field of national and international economic and social problems.

In recent years, the Twentieth Century Fund has made grants-in-aid in the performing arts field for construction purposes.

The first, a grant of $250,000, was donated toward the construction of an educational TV station and the second was a contribution of $75,000 toward the building of a new theatre.

The issuance of a construction permit by the Federal Communications Commission cleared the way for the erection in Boston of an educational television station which will be a memorial to Edward A. Filene, founder of the

(Continued on Page 13)

20th Century Fund Aids the Arts

(Continued from Page 2)

Twentieth Century Fund and his brother, Lincoln Filene.

The Station, WGBH-TV, is operated by the Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council in Cambridge, Mass. This group is made up of educational and cultural institutions in the Boston Area, including Boston College, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston University, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Museum of Fine Arts, New England Conservatory of Music, Northeastern University, Tufts College and the Lowell Institute.

The Council operated a non-Commercial FM radio station, WGBH, drawing on the resources of its members to produce educational and cultural programs that have won a large audience in the area. The Council has adapted their material and worked out program ideas for WGBH-TV.

NEW D. C. THEATRE

Construction of the new home for the Arena Stage in Washington, D.C., which recently had an auspicious opening, was aided by a $50,000 grant in 1960 and another $25,000 in 1961, by the Twentieth Century Fund.

The grant was to pay part of the construction cost of the new theatre, which was built as part of Washington's new Southwest Redevelopment Area.

Arena Stage, a project of the non-profit Washington Drama Society, Inc., will continue its 10-year history as a leading cultural attraction of the nation's capital, and one which has attracted national attention.

Zelda Fichandler is producing director of Arena Stage and Harry Weese designed the theatre, which seats 650 persons.

The Washington Drama Society embarked upon a fund-raising campaign, which drew largely from local sources. Broadway director Alan Schneider has also had a big hand in the success and development of the Arena Stage.

Louise Field is research associate for the Twentieth Century Fund, one of the oldest foundations in the country. It is located at 41 East 70th Street, New York 21, N. Y.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
D. 119,538 S. 121,542
DEC 19 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR

. . . Charles Munch is caught by the camera in this scene from National Educational Television's presentation of a complete concert by the orchestra. This and other concerts can be seen Friday at 9 p.m. on WEDU, Channel 3.

WEDU To Present 6 Full-Length Concerts By Boston Orchestras

Five evenings of great music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a delightful concert by the renowned Boston Pops will be presented during the coming weeks over educational television station WEDU Channel 3, beginning Friday at 9 p.m.

During the videotaped series, which is part of National Educational Television's Friday night "Festival of the Arts," Boston Symphony Conductor Charles Munch, Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler, guest conductors, and guest artists not only perform but also take part in special intermission interviews. The musical selections for the six full-length concerts range from the works of Beethoven to songs from the Broadway hit "Camelot."

A few of the guest artists who will appear during the series are Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony; Lorin Maazel, guest conductor; Henryk Szeryng, guest violinist; and composer Walter Piston.

The "Festival of the Arts" which also includes two operas, two series of great dramas, and a program on contemporary art masterpieces — is one of NET's three weekly prime time presentations. On Monday evenings the "fourth network" of more than 55 stations offers "Television International," a group of distinguished documentaries and symposiums, and on Wednesday evenings it presents programs featuring "Significant Persons."

CHICAGO, ILL.
JEFFERSON PARK TIMES
W. 12,861
NOV 16 1961

Film Series Shows Studies Of Entertainers

"Stars of Tomorrow" will be the theme of the fourth evening of films in the current series at Hild Regional library, 4536 Lincoln. The movies will be shown this Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

"Ballet Girl" will present a picture of the life of a young dancer with the Royal Danish Ballet. Scenes of the classroom, practice at the barre, and rehearsals provide a view of the hard work as well as the glamor in a dancer's life.

The second film, "Tanglewood: Music School and Music Festival," presents the activities of the annual music school and festival held at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills of Massachusetts.

A variety of musical experiences will be included: a student conducting a performance of his own work, Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a premiere performance of Randall Thompson's "Last Words of David."

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 6 1961

BOSTON SYMPH SEGS INTO SYNDICATION

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is marketing for syndication 13 one-hour vidtaped concerts produced by WGBH-TV, Boston.

The shows feature symphonies and concert music by Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, Wagner, Schubert, Bach, Piston, Copland and Brahms. Conductors are Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin.

Rates for individual markets range from $26,000 to $4,000.

DES MOINES, IOWA
REGISTER
D. 224,991 S 513,057
NOV 28 1961

On Television

By Ogden Dwight

Network TV pasted together another alleged jazz extravaganza and ran it off as Sunday night's chapter of NBC's "Show of the Week" series.

The tape-and-film hour was called "Chicago and All That Jazz," and as a semi-documentary on the so-called "Chicago style" or "school," the program's faults and virtues were about par—although differing in kind—for this type of production.

Boo-Boos

Principal mistake was the mere presence of two-a-day vaudeville trouper Blossom Seeley in the over-large cast; her performance was stark evidence that her talent or career never embraced jazz—Chicago or any other brand. Aficionados know what the other boo-boos were; the mass public wouldn't care.

Principal star bits were the pianists—Meade Lux Lewis, Lil Armstrong and Johnny Guarnieri. A half-hour with them and a few of the old Chicago campaigners would have been terrific.

MUSIC SERIES

Music lovers should patronize these series: "Great Music from Chicago," hour-long programs by the Chicago Symphony, WHO-TV at 10:30 p. m. Sundays; two-hour tapes of formal Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, KDPS-TV (educational channel 11) at 8 p. m. Fridays beginning Dec. 22; and a rerun of the rollicking "Ragtime Era" half-hours with Max Morath, KDPS-TV at 8:30 p. m. Tuesdays beginning Dec. 12.

A distinct "plus" for the hour was that whoever chose the repertoire knows jazz, because of the more than 40 pieces played or struck glancing blows, only two or three were square.

The Minns-James dances provided a diverting visual interlude; gangster and cabaret film clips were not successful. Neither the old Bessie Smith and Louis Armstrong movie-short footage nor a brief Bix Beiderbecke sequence faithfully emphasized those artists' musical worth.

Rewarding Glimpses

Glimpses of the Chicagoans in their sunset were rewarding, as cameras panned in the customary medley finale on Bud Freeman, Dennis Patrick Terence Joseph O'Sullivan, Kid Ory, Jack Teagarden, Pee Wee Russell, Johnny St. Cyr, Eddie Condon, Zutty Singleton and Jimmy McPartland.

The best video treatment of jazz (any variety) has been done by educational television—not commercial show-biz programmers, who still seem not to know that in music, superficiality and excellence simply cannot coexist.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD LEADER
SUN. 60,746
SEP 24 1961

MOSTLY MUSIC

Semantics And Sundry

By Lew Horton

Musicians frequently are asked for the definition of terms in the specialized vocabulary, particularly to differentiate between pairs of terms.

One of these takes the form of the following: "What is the difference between a symphony orchestra and a philharmonic orchestra?"

While the terms "symphony" and "philharmonic" are not synonymous, names of orchestras modified by these terms are merely names, and have no difference in category. This is somewhat like the difference between first and second violins which, as instruments, are identical; the difference being in the part of the orchestral score assigned them, and, as a wag once said, "About $25 per month."

The City of New York once had a great orchestra called the New York Symphony Society. Another was organized and called itself the New York Philharmonic Society. These were ultimately consolidated to form what is now known as the New York Symphony Orchestra — which is going strong, for this year its deficit was only a million dollars, the annual anticipated deficit being made up by philanthropic guarantors.

Horton

The term "symphony" applies to some form of instrumental music, originally referring to purely instrumental sections or passages in an opera. In our time it is accepted to refer to a form of musical composition which is the standard or most frequent form of composition composed for a full concert orchestra.

"Philharmonic" is an adjective derived from old Greek. The first syllable, as in philosophy, philology, and even Philadelphia signifying "love", while the rest refers to harmony, accord, and, by extension, to music. During the 19th Century, it was a term used to designate some music society, vocal and/or instrumental. That magnificent orchestra composed of Hungarian refugees from oppression behind the "Iron Curtain" has chosen to be called the "Philharmonic Hungarica," a bi-lingual (Greek and Latin) term denoting a Hungarian group of lovers of harmony in general, and of music in particular.

Lexington, "city of orchestras," adds a new one to its historical and contemporary list this season. Since there already was a Lexington Symphony Orchestra, this new group has been called the Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra. We bespeak, for both orchestras and for the Lexington music-loving public, a serious and generous interest and support of both and hope and pray all involved, as well as all lovers of symphonic music will be imbued with a "philharmonic" spirit.

Both orchestras will perform in the Henry Clay High School auditorium, a detail that is altogether fitting and appropriate, as the great statesman was a lover of music. Both orchestras have a standard season-ticket membership fee of $5, other details will be found in their respective newspaper announcements and literature. Both will give concerts on Monday nights: the LSO opens on Monday, Oct. 23, and the LPO on the following Monday, Oct. 30.

By concidence, both will feature Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, since the soloists for each happen to have been working intensively on that opus during the past season. Besides, it's one of the best of the five of Beethoven's piano concerti, but not nearly frequently played as, say, the fifth, or "Emperor" Concerto. Soloist for the LSO will be Ludwig Olshansky, one of the recent crop of young pianists earning notable kudos (See page 47 of last Sunday's Herald-Leader). The Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra will feature Howard Karp, UK's "king of the klavier," who is just back from a year's study in Vienna on a Fulbright scholarship. (See article and picture elsewhere in this paper.)

Speaking of Beethoven leads us to the Central Kentucky Concert-Lecture, whose annual sale of season tickets also is currently on. This series has the largest subscription audience in the world, which is the only reason that one can purchase a ticket for four lectures and eight concerts for about what one might pay for any one or at most two, under other auspices. First concert is to be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the greatest in the world, on Wednesday, Oct. 18. They will include the famous Beethoven Third, or "Eroica" Symphony in this program. The line-up of artists was on page 57 last Sunday.

Also, speaking of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lexington's Radio Station WBLG informs us that, starting this Sunday, Sept. 24, the station will present concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on high fidelity tape recordings of actual concerts during the current season. Weekly broadcast time is 1 p.m. on Sundays, and concerts will last about 90 minutes. Today's concert gives us a part of the Berkshire Festival concert in which Beethoven's overture to "Coriolanus" and Brahms' First Symphony precede the intermission. Poulenc's remarkable "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra will follow. The Berkshire Festival Chorus and the stellar soprano, Adele Addison, will be heard with the orchestra.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D 208,595 S. 276,407
OCT 1 1961

University Television Directs Shows to Off Campus Audience

Already begun and continuing throughout the 1961-1962 television season, WOSU-TV will broadcast three exceptional program packages during the prime evening hours — 8:00-10:30 p.m. — on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings.

Under the plan, Ch. 34 will be presenting some of the best and most significan cultural and informational programs ever produced, at times when the greatest number of people are sitting in front of their television sets.

An unprecedented combination of documentaries and symposiums, produced both here and abroad, will be presented on Monday nights. Two one-hour series, Intertel and Prospects of Mankind, form the basis of the Monday "Public Affairs" schedule.

The Intertel series is provided by the International Television Federation, which consists of five broadcasters representing four nations: Great Britian, Australia, Canada, and the United States.

Some of the world's most highly gifted and influential people—their personalities, their aspirations, their habits, and methods of work—are the subject of the Wednesday night, "Significant Persons," portion of Ch. 34's Prime Time programming. The evening is developed around the award-winning Heritage series — usually featuring one guest in four half-hour programs. Already scheduled to excite the mind and imagination during this Heritage season are composers Walter Piston and Richard Rodgers, and photographer Edward Steichen.

"Significant Persons" will also include ten-program series, Playwright at Work, an introduction to the work and guiding principles of young dramatists like Lorraine Hansberry, who wrote "A Raisin in the Sun," and Edward Albee, author of "The Sandbox."

Another series, Writers of Today, will present authors like Kingsley Amis, Nadine Gordimer, and Isaak Dinesen. Face to Face presents living portraits of Henry Moore, Dr. Carl Jung, and Dame Edith Sitwell, among others.

The "Festival of the Arts" is the Friday evening Prime Time programming presentation. It is developed around An Age of Kings, fifteen superb presentations of eight Shakespeare plays that recreate eighty-six years of turbulent and fascinating British history.

Dr. Frank Baxter, well-known television personality and Shakespeare scholar, will make introductory and concluding remarks for each of these BBC produced programs. Friday evenings will also include complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops. Jean Anouilh's "Antigone," Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and Ben Jonson's "The Alchemist," are

PRIVATE WELFARE

"Changing Times," is to be moved from its previously announced Ch. 10 September starting date to Sunday, Oct. 1, at 4 p.m.

The television version of the Kiplinger magazine radio series, "Changing Times" looks at happenings on local, national and international levels on a basis of how they will affect the average person's pocket book.

"Changing Times" will be presented on WBNS-TV via video tape.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,657
SEP 23 1961

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Set

Albany—The Boston Symphony Orchestra begins a new season of concerts Friday, Sept. 29, at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, carried live from Symphony Hall, Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

For his initial concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique").

On Thursday, Sept. 28, at 7 p.m. and Friday, Sept. 29, at 9 p.m., G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the orchestra's concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Prof. Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM carries no commercials and is owned and operated by Albany Medical College.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
OCT 1961

Boston Symphony

The broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which will begin Oct. 7, will be heard on Saturday evenings this year (last year they were heard on Sunday afternoon.) The series will be broadcast over WQXR-FM in FM stereo. During the coming year, Charles Munch is serving as conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony for the last season before his retirement. One of the highlights during the coming month will be the complete Berlioz "Romeo and Juliet" (Oct. 28) featuring the Festival Chorus with soloists Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,279 S. 648,179
DEC 20 1961

WFMT To Air Christmas Music Taped At Festivals

Traditional Christmas music, performed during 1961 music festivals, will be broadcast on a delayed tape basis this week on FM Station WFMT (98.7).

Bach's magnificat from the Berkshire Festival will be broadcast at 8 p.m. Wednesday. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," from the Vienna Festival, comes at 1 p.m. Saturday. Bach's Mass in b, performed at the Salzburg Festival with soloists Leontyne Price, Christa Ludwig, Nicolai Gedda, Gerard Souzay and Walter Berry, is a 10:10 Christmas night broadcast.

WFMT also has programed several BBC-produced Christmas programs. Included are two Christmas carol concerts by the Welsh Llandaff Cathedral Choir on Thursday and Friday mornings at 8:40.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727
SEP 18 1961

Phila., Boston Orks In WQXR Concerts

Weekly two-hour concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented on WQXR, starting the first week of October.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will be heard Thursday nights, sponsored by the Magnetic Tape Division of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Corp.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be presented Saturday nights, with Charles Munch conducting most of its performances—the last before his retirement. Sharing sponsorship will be Air-India and Harman-Kardon, electronic manufacturer. They will also be aired in stereo on WQXR-FM.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD LEADER
SUN. 60,748
SEP 24 1961

MOSTLY MUSIC

Semantics And Sundry

By Lew Horton

Musicians frequently are asked for the definition of terms in the specialized vocabulary, particularly to differentiate between pairs of terms.

One of these takes the form of the following: "What is the difference between a symphony orchestra and a philharmonic orchestra?"

While the terms "symphony" and "philharmonic" are not synonymous, names of orchestras modified by these terms are merely names, and have no difference in category. This is somewhat like the difference between first and second violins which, as instruments, are identical; the difference being in the part of the orchestral score assigned them, and, as a wag once said, "About $25 per month."

The City of New York once had a great orchestra called the New York Symphony Society. Another was organized and called itself the New York Philharmonic Society. These were ultimately consolidated to form what is now known as the New York Symphony Orchestra — which is going strong, for this year its deficit was only a million dollars, the annual anticipated deficit being made up by philanthropic guarantors.

Horton

The term "symphony" applies to some form of instrumental music, originally referring to purely instrumental sections or passages in an opera. In our time it is accepted to refer to a form of musical composition which is the standard or most frequent form of composition composed for a full concert orchestra.

"Philharmonic" is an adjective derived from old Greek. The first syllable, as in philosophy, philology, and even Philadelphia signifying "love", while the rest refers to harmony, accord, and, by extension, to music. During the 19th Century, it was a term used to designate some music society, vocal and/or instrumental. That magnificent orchestra composed of Hungarian refugees from oppression behind the "Iron Curtain" has chosen to be called the "Philharmonic Hungarica," a bi-lingual (Greek and Latin) term denoting a Hungarian group of lovers of harmony in general, and of music in particular.

Lexington, "city of orchestras," adds a new one to its historical and contemporary list this season. Since there already was a Lexington Symphony Orchestra, this new group has been called the Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra. We bespeak, for both orchestras and for the Lexington music-loving public, a serious and generous interest and support of both and hope and pray all involved, as well as all lovers of symphonic music will be imbued with a "philharmonic" spirit.

Both orchestras will perform in the Henry Clay High School auditorium, a detail that is altogether fitting and appropriate, as the great statesman was a lover of music. Both orchestras have a standard season-ticket membership fee of $5, other details will be found in their respective newspaper announcements and literature. Both will give concerts on Monday nights; the LSO opens on Monday, Oct. 23, and the LPO on the following Monday, Oct. 30.

By coincidence, both will feature Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, since the soloists for each happen to have been working intensively on that opus during the past season. Besides, it's one of the best of the five of Beethoven's piano concerti, but not nearly frequently played as say, the fifth, or "Emperor" Concerto. Soloist for the LSO will be Ludwig Olshansky, one of the recent crop of young pianists earning notable kudos (See page 47 of last Sunday's Herald-Leader). The Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra will feature Howard Karp, UK's "king of the klavier," who is just back from a year's study in Vienna on a Fulbright scholarship. (See article and picture elsewhere in this paper.)

Speaking of Beethoven leads us to the Central Kentucky Concert-Lecture, whose annual sale of season tickets also is currently on. This series has the largest subscription audience in the world, which is the only reason that anyone can purchase a ticket for four lectures and eight concerts for about what one might pay for any one or at most two, under other auspices. First concert is to be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the greatest in the world, on Wednesday, Oct. 18. They will include the famous Beethoven Third, or "Eroica" Symphony in this program. The line-up of artists was on page 57 last Sunday.

Also, speaking of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lexington's Radio Station WBLG informs us that, starting this Sunday, Sept. 24, the station will present concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on high fidelity tape recordings of actual concerts during the current season. Weekly broadcast time is 1 p.m. on Sundays, and concerts will last about 90 minutes. Today's concert gives us a part of the Berkshire Festival concert in which Beethoven's overture to "Coriolanus" and Brahms' First Symphony precede the intermission. Poulenc's remarkable "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra will follow. The Berkshire Festival Chorus and the stellar soprano, Adele Addison, will be heard with the orchestra.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D 208,585 S. 276,407
OCT 1 1961

University Television Directs Shows to Off Campus Audience

Already begun and continuing throughout the 1961-1962 television season, WOSU-TV will broadcast three exceptional program packages during the prime evening hours — 8:00-10:30 p.m. — on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings.

Under the plan, Ch. 34 will be presenting some of the best and most significan cultural and informational programs ever produced, at times when the greatest number of people are sitting in front of their television sets.

An unprecedented combination of documentaries and symposiums, produced both here and abroad, will be presented on Monday nights. Two one-hour series, Intertel and Prospects of Mankind, form the basis of the Monday "Public Affairs" schedule.

The Intertel series is provided by the International Television Federation, which consists of five broadcasters representing four nations: Great Britian, Australia, Canada, and the United States.

Some of the world's most highly gifted and influential people—their personalities, their aspirations, their habits, and methods of work—are the subject of the Wednesday night, "Significant Persons," portion of Ch. 34's Prime Time programming. The evening is developed around the award-winning Heritage series — usually featuring one guest in four half-hour programs. Already scheduled to excite the mind and imagination during this Heritage season are composers Walter Piston and Richard Rodgers, and photographer Edward Steichen.

"Significant Persons" will also include ten-program series, Playwright at Work, an introduction to the work and guiding principles of young dramatists like Lorraine Hansberry, who wrote "A Raisin in the Sun," and Edward Albee, author of "The Sandbox."

Another series, Writers of Today, will present authors like Kingsley Amis, Nadine Gordimer, and Isaak Dinesen. Face to Face presents living portraits of Henry Moore, Dr. Carl Jung, and Dame Edith Sitwell, among others.

The "Festival of the Arts" is the Friday evening Prime Time programming presentation. It is developed around An Age of Kings, fifteen superb presentations of eight Shakespeare plays that recreate eighty-six years of turbulent and fascinating British history.

Dr. Frank Baxter, well-known television personality and Shakespeare scholar, will make introductory and concluding remarks for each of these BBC produced programs. Friday evenings will also include complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops. Jean Anouilh's "Antigone," Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and Ben Jonson's "The Alchemist," are

PRIVATE WELFARE

"Changing Times," is to be moved from its previously announced Ch. 10 September starting date to Sunday, Oct. 1, at 4 p.m.

The television version of the Kiplinger magazine radio series, "Changing Times" looks at happenings on local, national and international levels on a basis of how they will affect the average person's pocket book.

"Changing Times" will be presented on WBNS-TV via video tape.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y.
SARATOGIAN
D. 11,657
SEP 23 1961

Boston Symphony Broadcasts Set

Albany—The Boston Symphony Orchestra begins a new season of concerts Friday, Sept. 29, at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, carried live from Symphony Hall, Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

For his initial concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique").

On Thursday, Sept. 28, at 7 p.m. and Friday, Sept. 29, at 9 p.m. G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the orchestra's concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Prof. Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM carries no commercials and is owned and operated by Albany Medical College.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
OCT 1961

Boston Symphony

The broadcasts of the Boston Symphony, which will begin Oct. 7, will be heard on Saturday evenings this year (last year they were heard on Sunday afternoon.) The series will be broadcast over WQXR-FM in FM stereo. During the coming year, Charles Munch is serving as conductor and music director of the Boston Symphony for the last season before his retirement. One of the highlights during the coming month will be the complete Berlioz "Romeo and Juliet" (Oct. 28) featuring the Festival Chorus with soloists Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and Donald Gramm, baritone.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727
SEP 18 1961

Phila., Boston Orks In WQXR Concerts

Weekly two-hour concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented on WQXR, starting the first week of October.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will be heard Thursday nights, sponsored by the Magnetic Tape Division of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be presented Saturday nights, with Charles Munch conducting most of its performances—the last before his retirement. Sharing sponsorship will be Air-India and Harman-Kardon, electronic manufacturer. They will also be aired in stereo on WQXR-FM.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,219 S. 648,179
DEC 20 1961

WFMT To Air Christmas Music Taped At Festivals

Traditional Christmas music, performed during 1961 music festivals, will be broadcast on a delayed tape basis this week on FM Station WFMT (98.7).

Bach's magnificat from the Berkshire Festival will be broadcast at 8 p.m. Wednesday. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," from the Vienna Festival, comes at 1 p.m. Saturday. Bach's Mass in b, performed at the Salzburg Festival with soloists Leontyne Price, Christa Ludwig, Nicolai Gedda, Gerard Souzay and Walter Berry, is at 10:10 Christmas night broadcast.

WFMT also has programed several BBC-produced Christmas programs. Included are two Christmas carol concerts by the Welsh Llandaff Cathedral Choir on Thursday and Friday mornings at 8:40.

24

OZONE PARK, N.Y.
QUEENS CO, POST
W: 7,000
SEP 27 1961

RADIO CloseUp TV

BY JOHNNY LOMBARDI

"THE SING ALONG GANG" - RETURNS SEPT. 28

Sing Along With Mitch—Mitch Miller and the "Sing Along Gang" return for a second season with songs the viewing audience can join in singing. The theme of this night's show is air travel and features guest stars Diana Trask, Leslie Uggams and Louise O'Brien. (Season Premiere) Sept. 28 at 10 P.M. over WNBC-TV, in color.

BELAFONTE - CLOONEY FOR BELL HOUR (NBC)

The Bell Telephone Hour—returns for another season of bi-weekly musicals in color. Stars are Harry Belafonte, Rosemary Clooney and piano team of Ferrante and Teicher. Donald Voorhees conducts Bell Telephone Orchestra. (Season Premiere) Friday Sept. 29 at 9:30 P.M. NBC

"CANDID CAMERA" 2ND SEASON OCT. 1

"Candid Camera," which launches its second season Sunday, Oct. 1 (10 - 10:30 P.M. EDT- on CBS Television Network, has lined up an impressive array of stars for the coming months. Dorothy Collins, the scourge of filling station attendants last season, will appear on 20 shows. Allen Funt, creator of the program, has signed also Mickey Rooney, Jayne Mansfield, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Paul Winchell, Wally Cox, Betty White, Jimmy Dean and Vivian Vance for guest appearances.

"WONDERFUL WORLD OF COLOR" - OCT. 1st NBC

Walt Disney's Wonderful World Of Color a new program of true-to-life nature stories, animated cartoons and dramas of adventure and space travel. "The Horsemasters," two-part adventure story about a group of teenagers attending an English riding academy, starring Annette Funicello, Tommy Kirk, John Fraser, Janet Munro, Tony Britton and Donald Pleasence. In part one, subtitled "Follow Your Heart," the academy's instructress (Miss Munro) subjects new students to harsh discipline by dividing them into two highly competitive teams as they prepare to earn instructor's permits from the British Horse Society. Sunday, Oct. 1st. over NBC - TV. in color 7:30 p.m.

"U. S. STEEL HOUR" WEDNESDAY, OCT. 4

"Brandenburg Gate," a drama of unforgettable bravery set against the background of the current Berlin crisis, will be presented on "The United States Steel Hour" Wednesday, Oct. 4 (10 - 11 P.M. EDT) on the CBS Television Network. Richard Kiley and Dina Merrill will co-star, with Kiley playing two roles, those of Scott Malone, cynical American newsman, and Kurt Bauman, a freedom fighter in the East German underground.

BOSTON and PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRAS on WQXR

The weekly concerts of two great symphony orchestras—the Boston and the Philadelphia—will be heard over WQXR Thursday and Saturday nights beginning in October. The Philadelphia Orchestra, new to the WQXR schedule, will be heard Thursdays from 8:05 to 10 P.M. beginning Oct. 5. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in most of its appearances and the programs will feature solo performances by many great artists of the concert world. Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch which have been an exclusive feature of WQXR since 1957, will return to the air on Saturday, Oct. 7, when they will be heard from 8:05 to 10 P.M.Last season the programs were broadcast on Sunday afternoons, The 1961-62 season will be heard on Saturday evenings,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 113,846
NOV 2 1961

Educational Programs For Ch. 24 Described

A varied bill of educational and entertaining television was unveiled as the tentative program schedule of Connecticut Educational Television Corp's Channel 24 Wednesday.

Speaking at a meeting of the Coordinating Council of the Arts at Trinity College, Ben A. Hudelson, general manager of CETV, described the proposed programming as something that "might turn on a few more television sets" owned by persons who want "an alternative to what is normally seen on commercial television stations."

To Operate Soon

CETV will activate Channel 24, the state's first educational TV station, within a few months. Shortly thereafter it will activate similar stations in the Bridgeport and Norwich areas.

As described by Hudelson, the CETV programming will have a high percentage of locally-produced shows, many of them directed at elementary, secondary and college students and the rest towards home viewers.

Needs FCC Approval

The tentative schedule will have to be submitted to the Federal Communications Commission for study and approval, but, as it was described Wednesday, the ETV station will be on the air about 55 hours a week, Mondays through Fridays.

Mondays through Thursdays the station will go on the air at 10 a.m. The next four to five hours will be directed towards elementary and secondary school classrooms—lalthough the programs can be viewed in the home also through most standard television sets.

Among the classroom offerings will be courses in conversational French, American government, science, mathematics and the humanities, including special programs on the orchestra and literature.

Late afternoon programming, Hudelson said, will be directed largely towards the young mother who is perhaps a college graduate and wants a chance to keep up with a changing world, and with subjects which have always been of interest to her.

Adult Entertainment

A few college-level courses will be shown during the evening, but the bulk of the programming between 6:30 and signoff at 10:30 p.m. will be informational or adult entertainment. Among the features during this viewing periond will be a one and a half hour period every Friday night devoted to such features as Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, the "Age of Kings," Shakespear's history plays as televised by the BBC, or presentation of other dramatic works.

On an average day, as many as a dozen programs will be of local origin. Such programs will include interviews with interesting Connecticut citizens, explorations of little known aspects of Connecticut and objective analyses of Connecticut news events.

Hudelson also told the meeting attended by representatives of Greater Hartford cultural organizations who belong to the Coordinating Council of the Arts that CETV "wants the community to tell us what they want us to televise." He said that as much as possible, the needs and wants of the community will determine the final CETV program schedules.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D. 159,741 S. 301 966
NOV 12 1961

Modern Sounds

Tuner, Antenna Extend Reach Of Stereo FM Radio

By DAVID EISENMAN

TIMELY REPORT—Stereo FM radio has been with us about two months and a progress report is due. Good reception is possible in the city and its immediate suburbs with the use of a small dipole antenna. Some locations report fine reception without any outside antenna.

The distance between Buffalo and Toronto, where our sources of multiplex signal are located, is rather great for good multiplex reception.

Other areas which have multiplex are lucky to pick up a good signal as close as 30 miles from the source. The exceptional power of CHFI in particular is making this long distance reception possible.

WORTH HAVING—There is no doubt, however, that a good antenna will be valuable if you are planning to use stereo FM to any degree.

Outside antennas run anywhere from $10 to $200. The more elaborate include directional masts that must be rotated for best reception.

A highly sensitive tuner, combined with a good antenna, adds to the enjoyment of stereo FM.

THEY REACH OUT—Three-hundred-mile reception is not nearly so uncommon as it was a few years ago, and, while the average set can't quite hit this mark, the variety of good stations within practical distance of Buffalo is quite startling.

What we need more than anything else, though, is to get some of our local stations to convert to stereo.

GET CONCERTS—In Boston, WCRB broadcasts live from the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts each week, in excellent stereo.

Demonstrations of consumer demand seem to be the only way to push our stations into action. We again urge you to let your interest in this matter be known.

Multiplex adapters are still in short supply. Reports indicate that fewer "bugs" than were expected have turned up. Multiplex stereo FM should be solidly established nationally by Christmas.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
DEC 24 1961

BSO Christmas Night Concert

Ch 2 travels with the Boston Symphony Orchestra to far off Japan Christmas night. At 7:45, two of the most popular works in the concert repertoire, under the leadership of conductor Charles Munch, will be heard.

Ravel's lovely "Daphnis and Chloe," together with the stirring Eroica Symphony of Beethoven make up the program. During intermission the New England composer Aaron Copland is interviewed by correspondents of the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

This special 75 minutes telecast was recorded when the Boston Symphony toured Japan, winning tumultuous applause from critics and audiences everywhere.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
DEC 31 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard on WXHR this (Sunday) afternoon at 3 with Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in Bb, Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 in A, Piston's Three New England Sketches; and Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 in Eb.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Valley News (e)
LEBANON, N. H.
Circ. 5,896
JAN 4 1962

Concert Series To Be Given On WDCR

HANOVER — Tonight at 6:30, WDCR presents the first of its series of Boston Symphony concert broadcasts. Recorded on tape in Symphony Hall, these concert programs are being made possible by a grant given to the station by a Dartmouth College Fund.

In the first program Richard Burgin will conduct the Symphony in works by Bartok, Karl Amadeus Hartmann and Dimitri Shostakovitch.

The Boston Symphony Series will continue on WDCR throughout the winter and spring terms. The concerts will be conducted by Charles Munch, Richard Burgin and several guest conductors, among them Ernest Ansermet and William Steinberg.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727

OCT 9 1961

Boston Outlet Begins Stereo-FM Schedule With 'Live' Demos.

Boston—WCRB-AM & FM is demonstrating its new stereo-FM multiplex broadcasting today for advertising, news media and trade people. The showing features monitored off-the-air Stereo-FM programs and a "live" action demonstration of the station's role in stereo since bringing regular broadcasts in the medium to New England in 1954.

Station president Theodore Jones said WCRB-FM, in addition to main-channel concert music programs, feeds programs to CRB Network affiliate WMTW-FM in Northern New England, supplies background music to stores, offices and restaurants in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and now the two sub-signals required for stereo-FM broadcasts.

Carries 30 Hours Weekly

The station carries 30 hours of stereo-FM broadcasting weekly and will continue its nearly 45 hours weekly of conventional AM-FM stereo broadcasting. A feature of the stereo-FM programming will be "live" concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direct from Symphony Hall, every Saturday night.

Equipment from H. H. Scott, in whose Maynard, Mass., laboratories the WCRB stereo-FM equipment was built, and from Fisher Radio is being used at the demonstration.

Good Reaction Reported

WCRB sales manager Leonard V. Corwin reports enthusiastic industry response, as well as public response to the stereo-FM broadcasts, with H. H. Scott, Fisher Radio, General Electric and Bogen, nationally having purchased time, including large blocks of program time within stereo-FM broadcasts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

NOV 19 1961

Munch Directs 'Gloria' Today

The "Gloria" in G, for soprano, chorus and orchestra, by Francis Poulenc, will be featured in tonight's (Sunday) concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:05 on WCRB. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the concert which will also feature the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

The Poulenc "Gloria" was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation and given its world premiere here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Jan. 20 of this year. Tonight's performance, from the 1961 Berkshire Festival, will feature soprano Adele Addison, with the Festival Chorus.

The concert will be in stereophonic sound, both the new FM stereo multiplex and AM-FM stereo broadcast by WCRB.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

DEC 3 1961

Symphony Mozart Program Offered

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program tonight (Sunday) at 8:05 on WCRB. The concert, in both AM/FM stereo and the new FM stereo multiplex medium, is from the 1961 Berkshire Music Festival.

The program will open with the Symphony in A, No. 29, K. 201, followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K. 466, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

The featured work will be the Cantata "Davidde Penitente," K. 469, with sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, tenor Howard Fried and the Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D.

SEP 26 1961

New Concert Season to Open on FM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a new season of concerts Friday at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, which are carried live from Symphony hall in Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

* * *

FOR HIS INITIAL concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's sixth Symphony ("Pathetique").

On Thursday at 7 p.m. and Friday at 9 p.m., G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Professor Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his delightful sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM, which carries no commercials, is owned and operated by Albany Medical College.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

"PAGE ONE" CERTIFIED

OCT 25 1961

How Hi the Fi?

Don Gabor is out-deluxing the deluxe disk market with a package that will be peddled for $1,007.50 (including tax). The package will be a platinum-finished disk, boxed in a custom-made silversmith's case, containing the only recorded performance of George Enesco conducting his own compositions.

Gabor, who is now prexying Continental Records, said that the proceeds from the sale of 1,000 limited copies of the album will be contributed to the International Foundation for Music Appreciation, a nonprofit organization chairmanned by conductor Charles Munch.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Valley News (e)
LEBANON, N. H.
Circ. 5,896
NOV 8 1961

WDCR Announces Concert Series

HANOVER — WDCR announced today that it will present concerts by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops during the winter and spring terms. The programs are being made available to the station by the Boston Symphony on recording tape.

The programs will be recorded by the Symphony on Saturday nights and sent to the station for broadcast the following week. The broadcasts are being made possible by a grant made to WDCR by a private fund for student activities.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
SEP 26 1961

BSO Concerts To Be Broadcast By WAMC-FM

ALBANY, N.Y.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra begins a new season of concerts Friday at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, which are carried live from Symphony Hall in Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

For his initial concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique".)

On Thursday, at 7 p.m. and Friday, at 9 p.m., G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Professor Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM, which carries no commercials, is owned and operated by the Albany Medical College.

Orchestra Men

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D, 47,136

NOV 21 1961

Symphony To Be on Air Over WAMC

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast direct from Symphony Hall, Boston, on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc.) Friday afternoon at 2:10.

* * *

HIGHLIGHTS of the program will be the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia." Burgin also will conduct the Prelude to "Khovantschina" by Moussorgsky, the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff. Pianist Gary Graffman will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Concerto.

Leon Kirchner was recently appointed to succeed Walter Piston as professor of music at Harvard University. He was awarded the 1949-50 New York Music Critics Circle award for his String Quartet No. 1 and he received the Naumberg recording award for his piano concerto which Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic introduced in 1958.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727

NOV 15 1961

WDCR in 'Classical' Role

Hanover, N. H.—WDCR will present concerts by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops during the Winter and Spring terms. The programs are being made available by the Boston Symphony on recording tape, and the broadcasts are being made possible by a grant to WDCR by a private fund for student activities at Dartmouth College.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090

OCT 14 1961

SATURDAY OCTOBER 14

HIGHLIGHTS

WQXR—BOSTON SYMPHONY (FM stereo). Charles Munch, conductor. Michele Boegner, piano soloist. Commentary by Martin Bookspan (to 10:00)
Quiet City — COPLAND
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G — BEETHOVEN
Symphony No. 1 in c — BRAHMS

8:30 WCBS—NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC (Live). From Carnegie Hall. Leonard Bernstein, conductor. Soloists are pianist Seymour Lipkin, soprano Irene Jordan, and baritone McHenry Boatwright. Vera Zorina is narrator with the Schola Cantorum. Commentary by James Fassett (to conclusion)
Symphony No. 83 in G — HAYDN
Capriccio for Piano and Orch. — STRAVINSKY
Les Choephores — MILHAUD

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727

OCT 9 1961

Boston Outlet Begins Stereo-FM Schedule With 'Live' Demos.

Boston—WCRB-AM & FM is demonstrating its new stereo-FM multiplex broadcasting today for advertising, news media and trade people. The showing features monitored off-the-air Stereo-FM programs and a "live" action demonstration of the station's role in stereo since bringing regular broadcasts in the medium to New England in 1954.

Station president Theodore Jones said WCRB-FM, in addition to main-channel concert music programs, feeds programs to CRB Network affiliate WMTW-FM in Northern New England, supplies background music to stores, offices and restaurants in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and now the two sub-signals required for stereo-FM broadcasts.

Carries 30 Hours Weekly

The station carries 30 hours of stereo-FM broadcasting weekly and will continue its nearly 45 hours weekly of conventional AM-FM stereo broadcasting. A feature of the stereo-FM programming will be "live" concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direct from Symphony Hall, every Saturday night.

Equipment from H. H. Scott, in whose Maynard, Mass., laboratories the WCRB stereo-FM equipment was built, and from Fisher Radio is being used at the demonstration.

Good Reaction Reported

WCRB sales manager Leonard V. Corwin reports enthusiastic industry response, as well as public response to the stereo-FM broadcasts, with H. H. Scott, Fisher Radio, General Electric and Bogen, nationally having purchased time, including large blocks of program time within stereo-FM broadcasts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

NOV 19 1961

Munch Directs 'Gloria' Today

The "Gloria" in G, for soprano, chorus and orchestra, by Francis Poulenc, will be featured in tonight's (Sunday) concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:05 on WCRB. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the concert which will also feature the "Coriolan" Overture by Beethoven and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

The Poulenc "Gloria" was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Foundation and given its world premiere here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Jan. 25 of this year. Tonight's performance, from the 1961 Berkshire Festival, will feature soprano Adele Addison, with the Festival Chorus.

The concert will be in stereophonic sound, both the new FM stereo multiplex and AM-FM stereo broadcast by WCRB.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

DEC 3 1961

Symphony Mozart Program Offered

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Mozart program tonight (Sunday) at 8:05 on WCRB. The concert, in both AM/FM stereo and the new FM stereo multiplex medium, is from the 1961 Berkshire Music Festival.

The program will open with the Symphony in A, No. 29, K. 201, followed by Mozart's Flute Concerto in D minor, No. 20, K. 466, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

The featured work will be the Cantata "Davidde Penitente," K. 469, with sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciriello, tenor Howard Fried and the Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D 47,136

SEP 26 1961

New Concert Season to Open on FM

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin a new season of concerts Friday at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, which are carried live from Symphony hall in Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

* * *

FOR HIS INITIAL concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's sixth Symphony ("Pathetique").

On Thursday at 7 p.m. and Friday at 9 p.m., G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Professor Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his delightful sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM, which carries no commercials, is owned and operated by Albany Medical College.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

OCT 25 1961

How Hi the Fi?

Don Gabor is out-deluxing the deluxe disk market with a package that will be peddled for $1,007.50 (including tax). The package will be a platinum-finished disk, boxed in a custom-made silversmith's case, containing the only recorded performance of George Enesco conducting his own compositions.

Gabor, who is now prexying Continental Records, said that the proceeds from the sale of 1,000 limited copies of the album will be contributed to the International Foundation for Music Appreciation, a nonprofit organization chairmanned by conductor Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Valley News (e)
LEBANON, N. H.
Circ. 5,896

NOV 8 1961

WDCR Announces Concert Series

HANOVER — WDCR announced today that it will present concerts by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops during the winter and spring terms. The programs are being made available to the station by the Boston Symphony on recording tape.

The programs will be recorded by the Symphony on Saturday nights and sent to the station for broadcast the following week. The broadcasts are being made possible by a grant made to WDCR by a private fund for student activities.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

SEP 26 1961

BSO Concerts To Be Broadcast By WAMC-FM

ALBANY, N.Y.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra begins a new season of concerts Friday at 2:10 p.m. on FM radio station WAMC, 90.3 mc. The concerts, which are carried live from Symphony Hall in Boston, will be heard every Friday afternoon through next April.

For his initial concert, conductor Charles Munch has chosen a program consisting of Brahms' "Haydn Variations," Debussy's "Iberia," and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique".)

On Thursday, at 7 p.m. and Friday, at 9 p.m., G. Wallace Woodworth, professor of music at Harvard University, will present "Tomorrow's Symphony," his own enthusiastic preview of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

One of the most popular personalities on WAMC-FM, Professor Woodworth has delighted listeners for years with his sense of humor, vast musical knowledge and remarkable ability to make the music of every century live again in the imagination of his audience.

WAMC-FM, which carries no commercials, is owned and operated by the Albany Medical College.

Orchestra Man...

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D, 47,136

NOV 21 1961

Symphony To Be on Air Over WAMC

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert broadcast direct from Symphony Hall, Boston, on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc.) Friday afternoon at 2:10.

* * *

HIGHLIGHTS of the program will be the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia." Burgin also will conduct the Prelude to "Khovantschina" by Moussorgsky, the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff. Pianist Gary Graffman will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Concerto.

Leon Kirchner was recently appointed to succeed Walter Piston as professor of music at Harvard University. He was awarded the 1949-50 New York Music Critics Circle award for his String Quartet No. 1 and he received the Naumberg recording award for his piano concerto which Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic introduced in 1956.

RADIO-TELEVISION DAILY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
D. 10,727

NOV 15 1961

WDCR in 'Classical' Role

Hanover, N. H.—WDCR will present concerts by the Boston Symphony and Boston Pops during the Winter and Spring terms. The programs are being made available by the Boston Symphony on recording tape, and the broadcasts are being made possible by a grant to WDCR by a private fund for student activities at Dartmouth College.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090

OCT 14 1961

SATURDAY OCTOBER 14

HIGHLIGHTS

WQXR—BOSTON SYMPHONY (FM stereo). Charles Munch, conductor. Michele Boegner, piano soloist. Commentary by Martin Bookspan (to 10:00)
Quiet City COPLAND
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G BEETHOVEN
Symphony No. 1 in C BRAHMS

8:30 WCBS—NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC (Live). From Carnegie Hall, Leonard Bernstein, conductor. Soloists are pianist Seymour Lipkin, soprano Irene Jordan, and baritone McHenry Boatwright. Vera Zorina is narrator with the Schola Cantorum. Commentary by James Fassett (to conclusion)
Symphony No. 83 in G HAYDN
Capriccio for Piano and Orch. STRAVINSKY
Les Choephores MILHAUD

26 Miscellaneous

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D. 501,115 S. 522,202
OCT 29 1961

MUSIC IN DETROIT

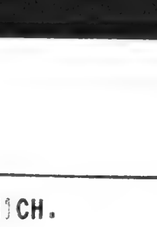
2 Unanswered Questions Worry Our Symphony

BY COLLINS GEORGE
Free Press Music Writer

The late American composer, Charles Ives, has a short, provocative work entitled, "The Unanswered Question."

The players of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra have two "unanswered" questions nagging them.

The men are very often their own severest critics, knowing full well when they have and when they haven't performed well.



George

In Worcester, Mass., where last week they were again the official orchestra at that city's 102nd annual Music Festival, the men were buoyant at the thought of the exciting concert they had just given in Boston.

* * *

"I DON'T KNOW whether it was just the thought of being in Boston's old Symphony Hall that inspired us, or whether we just clicked, but we played like we never played before," one player said.

Every member of the orchestra agreed with him.

The general manager of the orchestra, Howard Harrington, gave some of the praise to the hall.

"The men are enthusiastic," he said, "because, for the first time, they could hear what the other players were doing as well as themselves."

* * *

THE BOSTON critics were unanimous in their praise of the orchestra, though, quite naturally, they insisted their own Boston Symphony was better.

In fact, it was a comment of one critic which led to the first unanswered question.

The critic for the Boston Herald said the strings were "less opulent" than the boston orchestra's.

"Of course we sounded less opulent," one player said. "We are not at full strength. You can't expect 10 first violins to give out the sound of 14."

And he might have added that an orchestra of 90-odd players won't sound like an orchestra of 110. The Detroit Symphony personnel is down almost to the former figure from its full strength.

* * *

WHEN Danny Kaye came to Detroit, recently, to lead the orchestra in a benefit performance, he asked first of all how many men were in the orchestra.

He was told 88.

"Oh, I never direct less than 100 men," Kaye said.

There was general laughter, but the humor struck a sore spot.

"Is the orchestra to remain at this level?" is the question the men raise.

There is the question of economy, which is especially vital in the management of any group which depends upon private sources for its financing.

But is the sacrificing of tonal textures by reducing the size of the orchestra a true economy? Can Detroit afford to stint where its symphony is concerned?

* * *

THE SECOND unanswered question facing the players is the same that faces management and the music lovers of Detroit.

It is "after Paray, who?

"The players must get used to a conductor, must know his tastes, his eccentricities, must establish a rapport with him," one player commented. "You can't do that, having a guest conductor for one or two concerts.

"I hope that when Paray shortens his time with us, they will get guests conductors to stay with us long enough for us to know them.

"In fact, I hope they'll continue the arrangement whereby Paray will be with us for a few weeks each season until we do find someone satisfactory.

"We're at such a pitch now, I'd hate to see us lose it by bringing in someone who wouldn't hold us together."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
OCT 30 1961

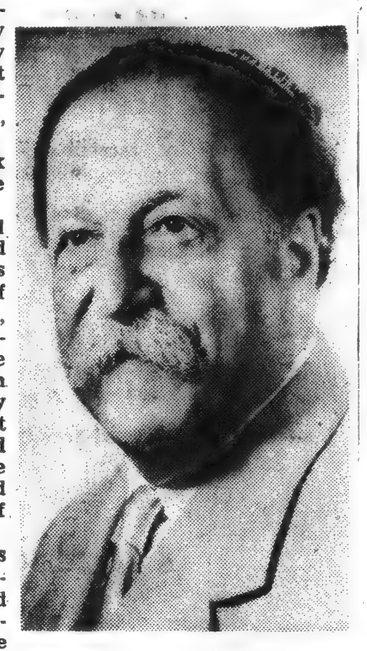
Pierre Monteux Stricken In Concert at Stockholm

Pierre Monteux, 86-year-old conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, a post he assumed only a few weeks ago, suffered a heart attack last night during the intermission of a concert in Stockholm, Sweden.

It was the first serious setback in his long, healthy life, close friends recalled today.

Mr. Monteux, who has appeared as guest conductor at Tanglewood every summer since Dr. Charles Munch became music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was appearing last night in Stockholm as a guest conductor. He was seized in his dressing room with a heart attack, described by physicians as mild. He fainted but was revived quickly and wanted to continue the second half of the program. But his doctors ordered him to bed and the remainder of the concert was canceled.

Mr. Monteux's appointment as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra was announced during the Berkshire Festival season last summer, a week before he made his first appearance with the BSO at the 1961 Tanglewood concerts.



Pierre Monteux
First major illness at age 86

BUFFALO, N.Y.
NEWS
D. 284 276 SAT. 290 527
DEC 1 1961

Slee Professor Of Music at UB

ALEXEI HAIEFF, Siberian-born composer of three symphonies is the new Slee professor of music at the University of Buffalo.

Mr. Haieff earlier this year completed his third symphony on commission from the New Haven Symphony Orchestra.

His appointment was announced to the audience at Thursday's concert of Jennie Tourel, mezzo soprano, by Allen Sapp, Music Department chairman.

Mr. Haieff moved from his native Siberia to Manchuria as a child. He came to the U. S. when he was 17. He has studied at the Juillard School of Music and has received the American Academy of Arts and Letters Award. He also was a Guggenheim Fellowship winner.

His second symphony was recorded by the Boston Symphony for the RCA Company.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 11 1961

THESE DAYS

By GEORGE SOKOLSKY

3d Symphony Periled

THE FOLLOWING advertisement appeared in a New York newspaper:

"New York Philharmonic announces with regret that there will be no concerts until further notice. Notification regarding refunds or exchanges will be made at a later date."

The Philadelphia Orchestra has had its troubles. Now it is the Philharmonic. Only a few weeks ago it was the Metropolitan Opera House. Perhaps these musicians need someone to remind them that it is possible to kill the market for musicians.

THE THREE LEADING orchestras in the United States are the Boston, the Philharmonic and the Philadelphia. Granted that the company is suffering from inflation, the musicians must realize that no musical organization in the United States operates at a profit. Maybe the musicians are bored with Beethoven, Bach and Brahms and would prefer to organize combos to play in honky-tonks. After all, some of the new music they play is no better than progressive jazz and they may be bored. Of course, they can relieve their boredom by doing some hard physical work. There is no reason to strike.

When some time ago I wrote about the strike at the Metropolitan Opera House, I received some very nasty letters, particularly from women who might have been musicians' wives. The tone of the letters was generally identical and was designed to prove that I am an ignoramus who hates musicians. The fact is that I know many musicians and usually find them interesting and charming but they do not understand the economics of their trade. a virtuoso gets an enormous reward for his efforts because he is good box office. Zino Francescatti or Isaac Stern is well paid because audiences pay to hear them. Maybe the 15th violinist of the Boston is as good a fiddler as one of these great ones, but not enough customers are willing to pay to prove that it is so. That is the very cold economics of the business.

SIMILARLY CROWDS will come to see Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy or Leonard Bernstein conduct an orchestra. There may be superior conductors but they do not draw the crowd or have great standing among other musicians. I used to hear musicians say that Serge Koussevitsky was a better showman than a conductor, but there was a year at Tanglewood when the cars stood several miles long to get into the grounds. It was a demonstration of respect and affection. There were similar demonstrations several times this year, particularly on the Sunday afternoon when Munch conducted Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette." The huge audience applauded until the lights went on out of sheer joy for the great maestro. It was an acknowledgement of supreme achievement.

Maybe there are hidden men of brilliance who can outdo the great men to whom I refer, but too few are willing to buy a ticket for the chance of applauding them. This has nothing to do with democracy or giving the underdog a chance. It has to do with taste and with a sense of perfection. I have listened to the same orchestra for 20 years play under different conductors and what a difference! It may be true that some of the fiddlers in the Philharmonic are greater musicologists than Toscanini was but their fame is not known and they have not been accepted either by the general public or by other musicians.

SO THE STRIKERS may strike each year, and it is even possible that they will put the orchestras out of existence and they themselves will be without jobs. They can fiddle at home and curse a world that does not appreciate them. But of this they can be sure: if the world does not appreciate them, their own opinion of themselves has little weight. It is too bad that few men are taken at their own valuation even if they have excellent press agents.

This many a writer has had to learn very early in life. One may have a high opinion of himself, he may be right, but if he wants to be published someone else must have an equally high opinion of his work. Self-appreciation may be very encouraging but it does not create a large enough market for one's wares to be attractive. It is, after all, the market that counts even in the arts.

Copyright, 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
DEC 11 1961

SMART SET
By Rose Walsh

Concerts Outdraw Baseball in U.S.

More people attended Symphony Concerts in the United States last year than went to baseball games. The budget of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is $2,500,000 a year. When the world-famous orchestra goes off traveling here and abroad, they are accompanied by nine tons of baggage which requires three baggage men to take care of it.

Oh, we're not trying to flaunt our knowledge about the Symphony, but these are some of the facts that guest speaker Harry Ellis Dickson (assistant conductor of the Boston "Pops") discussed at Friday's Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn. He is a delightful talker and his audience, (those who go on to the Friday Symphony and those who go off shopping) love his anecdotes about "Inside the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Boris Goldovsky, artistic director of the New England Opera Theater, was the honored guest last week. His little message to the luncheoners was, "I wish you would love the opera as much as you do symphony. I do, so why can't you."

Dublin virtuoso Michael MacLiammoir, who had opened his three-night presentation of "The Importance of Being Oscar" the previous evening at John Hancock Hall, was an added attraction on Friday. Mrs. J. Greene Carter, co-chairman with Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of the luncheons, presented the guests.

Chatting with Mr. Dickson and Mr. MacLiammoir after were Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Mr. Kutten, the John C. Vosoffs, Mrs. Richard H. Thompson, president of the New England Opera Theatre Guild; the Norman Smiths, Mrs. Edward Counihan III, Mrs. James C. Roy, Mrs. Richard Ehrlich and several others.

★ ★ ★

BOOK BROWSERS looking for the unusual and Christmas shoppers with "book friends" on their list may find just what they want at the Associates' Book Shop of the North Shore Children's Friend Society in Salem. Located in the historic Woodbridge House, 2 March st., the shop is a year-round project of the ten associate groups representing over 1000 members of the North Shore area.

The committee works constantly to keep the shelves filled with used books (donated by friends of the agency). Proceeds benefit the work of the society, which has been serving children in need of help for 123 years.

MR. AND MRS. A. ROLAND TEINER, Wellesley, guests at recent Winter Holiday Party at Sheraton-Plaza, benefiting American Cancer Fund, ask Tyrolean musician to play one of their favorite dance tunes.
(Record American, Frank V. Mahoney)

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,800
OCT 24 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY:

Perry Cites Leadership, Personality of Conductor

By MARTHA MacNEAL

"There is no technique to leadership, it springs from personality," said Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra speaking about Dr. Charles Munch, conductor, and his work with the orchestra.

"Some conductors are autocratic, and maintain their control by goading the musicians. But Munch's control is almost unconscious. He has a deep respect for his fellows, and leads them by having confidence in what they will do, and by responding to them in very subtle ways," Perry continued.

Detailing the rehearsal process, he noted that some conductors explain verbally exactly what should be done. "But when a conductor has been identified with one orchestra for a long time, he does not have to say what he wants in so many words. A mutual understanding exists, such as that between personal friends."

Direct Rehearsal

A rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is direct, with many technical repetitions but few words. "The musicians just know when it didn't go so well. Rehearsal is a mysterious process through which the musicians refamiliarize themselves with the music in each other's presence. Almost nothing is said," Perry explained.

An orchestral performance often differs from rehearsal when finally presented in the concert hall. "Some conductors repeat a rehearsal exactly when the music is performed publicly. But for others, such as Munch, the rehearsal is a refamiliarizing process, and the concert presentation may change greatly depending upon how people feel.

Recreating Process

In this latter way, the concert is a process of creating rather than repeating. Therefore, there may be many accidents, but there is also a definite vitality which does not exist otherwise. "A good performance often just happens," Perry emphasized. A performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tends to vary from day to day and year to year.

"One of the main glories of music is that it must be constantly recreated," Perry said. "Any performer puts part of himself into it. Any act of re-creation is, within limits, a subjective matter." Music is especially vulnerable to the personal influence because pitch, tempo, and phrasing notation is very inexact. Thus, every performance is bound to differ from every other, he explained.

Stimulates Appreciation

Munch has had a great effect in stimulating public appreciation for the music of Berlioz, which is now considered more meaningful than had been thought previously. "As with enthusiasm in many fields, a great rush of interest can aroused for a certain person or work because some one person in the public eye popularizes his own enthusiasm. This is especially true in the performing arts," Perry noted.

Munch will continue to conduct occasionally after his retirement at the end of this season. Born in Strasbourg, France, in 1891, Munch founded the Orchestra Symphonique of Paris in 1932. He appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in 1946. He has conducted 19 concerts in Ann Arbor.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
NOV 12 1961

MUSIC WORLD: 1-2-3 SPLASH FOR NEW HALL

By ROSS PARMENTER

WHEN Philharmonic Hall opens at Lincoln Center next fall it will do so with a 1-2-3 splash. The New York Philharmonic, under Leonard Bernstein, will give the first concert on Sept. 23, the Boston Symphony will play the next night and the Philadelphia Orchestra the night after. And each of the concerts by America's orchestral prides will be doubly special.

They will be special because they will be in advance of, and in addition to, the orchestras' regular subscription concerts. And they will be special because of the nature of the programs. Each orchestra plans to bring something big out of its sleeve. The Boston, for instance, plans to present the world premiere of the piano concerto that Samuel Barber is working on now.

This is Barber's first major piano work since his Piano Sonata of 1949. In view of the success of the sonata, there will be considerable advance excitement over the concerto, especially since it is Barber's first concerto for this particular instrument. John Browning is the pianist the composer has selected to introduce the work. The concert will be Erich Leinsdorf's first New York appearance in his new role as the Boston Symphony's music director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
NOV 19 1961

The Music Beat

Leontyne Price has been advised to forego her West Coast appearances with the San Francisco Opera in order to continue recovery from the vocal malaise that afflicted her recently in a Metropolitan performance of "La Fanciulla del West." She will not perform again until at least the last week of November.

How many performances of works by Aaron Copland would you suppose the Boston Symphony has given in 35 years since the first hearing of his Symphony for Organ and Orchestra in 1925? 75? 60? 100? 150? Saturday evening when the "Quiet City" music was directed by Charles Munch in Carnegie Hall, it marked the 184th Boston Symphony performance of a work by Copland.

DRUBECK CROUP

25

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
GAZETTE TELEGRAPH
D. 29,406 S. 29,581
DEC 18 1961

Americans Spend More For Music Than on Sports

By PRESTON McGRAW
United Press International

Americans are spending more for music—and that includes high fidelity equipment, records and tapes—than they are for sports. A major part of the expenditures is for classical music.

Last year, Americans spent $1.5 billion on music—one third more than they spent on all sports combined.

These figures were given in New York recently by H. T. Harwood of Shure Brothers, Inc., Evanston, Ill. Shure, which makes high fidelity pickup arms, cartridges and microphones, held its second annual symposium in New York and Harwood introduced the panel.

The panelists whom Harwood, director of public relations for Shure, introduced were Opera Star Rise Stevens; George R. Marek, vice president general manager RCA Victor Record Co.; Dr. Raymond Kendall, dean of the school of music of the University of Southern California, and Congressman Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Select Subcommittee on Education.

Harwood set the stage for speeches by the panelists with these facts:

—Americans supported nearly 1,200 symphony orchestras in 1960, more than the rest of the world combined. The American Symphony Orchestra League in 1960 reported more sold-out houses and high ticket sales than ever before, about $150 million.

—More than 25 million Americans owned phonographs or more sophisticated music reproducing equipment and spent $100 million on classical records. This contrasted with $50 million for baseball.

—More than 32 million Americans were amateur musicians. This compared with 19 million a decade before.

—Citizens across the country performed in more than 1,000 amateur symphony orchestras. A third of these were in cities of 50,000 population or less, and 10 per cent in cities of less than 10,000 people.

And yet, the speakers warned, music in the United States is in trouble.

"Only three orchestras in Europe equal symphony orchestras in Boston, New York and Philadelphia," Miss Stevens said. "We have approximately 30 of the world's great living pianists — more than ever in history. We have facilities such as television that could provide the widest exposure for the arts ever conceived."

But unless something is done, Miss Stevens said:

—"Orchestras will continue to play at the mercy of charity."

—"Only 10 of these 30 pianists will make a living at it and only three or four will make a living they deserve."

"—Television may continue to worship . . . only ratings."

—"Our global image will fail to reflect our true cultural growth."

"How can we hope to give luster to that image when Budapest supports three opera companies, Vienna supports two and New York struggles to keep its one company from perishing," she asked.

Miss Stevens said she thinks the government, "out of necessity," will step in and support the arts within a very short time. She believes that the United States will have the equivalent of a minister of culture within five years.

"Of all the arts, I believe music is most ready to move in and fill the immense vacuum in time and thought which increased leisure has thrust upon us," Dr. Kendall said.

The paramount problem, the panelists agreed, is rising costs. Miss Stevens said raising ticket prices is not the answer.

the village VOICE, November 23, 1961

music

MONUMENTS L. AND R.

The 10th anniversary of the deaths of Arnold Schoenberg and Serge Koussevitzky was marked officially by four New York concerts and unofficially by two more during the past week, all but one of the six taking place during a crowded week-end.

It all had the aspect of a meeting at the summit between two ghosts—Schoenberg, the creator of the 12-tone Left Wing of modern music, and Koussevitzky, who commissioned, publicized, and performed almost everything in the Stravinsky-Prokofieff-Copland Right Wing. (Come to think of it, the shades of "Koussie" and the late Prokofieff are probably muttering some awful deprecations over their glasses of nectar tea at Igor and Aaron, who posted with such dexterity to the incestuous music sheets of dodecaphony.)

Mostly Magnificent

At any rate, most of the music performed by way of memorial was magnificent. This includes all of the Schoenberg concert at the New School last Friday, sponsored by the International Society for Contemporary Music. Here Edward Steuermann masterfully played the three early piano pieces of Op. 11 and the Suite, Op. 25, and showed emphatically how music of beauty and sense and feeling can evolve from a compositional system so often degraded by no-talent hangers-on. On the same program, violinist Matthew Raimondi and pianist Yehudi Wyner did beautifully by the Fantasy, Op. 47, a piece quite lyrical and often giving off an effect of tonality. The evening came to a shimmering, impressionistic close with the setting of Stefan George's "15 Poems from the Book of the Hanging Gardens" (Op. 15), sung and sometimes, rightly, almost whispered by mezzo soprano Shirley Sudock, with Ward Davenny at the piano.

The Op. 11 piano pieces also turned up at the late-afternoon recital given at Town Hall by Paul Jacobs, who, in between explorations of the most avant of the musical garde, is pianist in the New York Philharmonic. Both this set of pieces and a later set of five (Op. 23 of 1923) Mr. Jacobs played with impressive musicality, even if not quite with the knack of his older colleague (Mr. Steuermann) of shaping a number of parts into an inevitable whole. And with the Variations, Op. 27, of Webern, Mr. Jacobs was entirely successful.

Men and Boys

As for interspersing his Schoenberg and Webern with two Klavierstuecke of Karlheinz Stockhausen, the pianist probably had some good reason, but I couldn't fathom any purpose. The second was a sort of "Eine Kleine Chance Musik," with sections of the composed music displayed before the performer on a big chart. The pianist starts with whatever sections he chooses and at whatever tempo and dynamic level he wishes. At the end of the section, the composer has indicated a definite tempo and dynamics, which the pianist uses in playing the next section. The hitch is that the next section is to be the first one the player happens to see at the moment. In other words, just about anything can happen. It's a wonderful opportunity for composers who can't compose to convince everyone that the fault lies with the performers or with the Fates, and at least, for once, the critics are let off the hook.

But enough of the Left Wing; sounds of impatience in that Great Russian Tea Room Up Yonder tell me it's time to mention the Koussevitzky Memorial Concerts which Tanglewood's Lenox Quartet gave at the New School on Sunday afternoon and evening. Listed as having its first New York performance was Easley Blackwood's Second String Quartet. Tardiness prevented me from hearing the first of three movements, for which I am deeply sorry, because the other two—an engaging Prestissimo and a final, slow movement which speaks eloquently to the listener—indicated that this was a truly important work. For the rest of the concert there were Billy Jim Layton's Quartet in Two Movements, which is interesting for its rhythmic audacity but dogs the heels of Stravinsky's "Soldat" a little too slavishly, and Irving Fine's absorbing Quartet (1952). The [illegible] and [illegible] Fine were Koussevitzky Foundation commissions.

His Specialty

Le Beau Serge was also remembered Wednesday of last week at the first concert of its New York season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in front of which he had stormed, raged, and created glory for 25 years. His successor, Charles Munch, whose last season as musical director this is, led off with Howard Hanson's old-fashioned but sincere "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky." On Saturday, there was an S. K. specialty, Copland's "Quiet City," which came off marvelously, and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" which the Bostonians, expecially under Munch, have come to own and which they articulate like a great actor reading a favorite, somewhat corny role. This time around, the lines were a little blurred here and there, but not enough to disguise the imaginativeness of Munch's interpretation.

—Leighton Kerner

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
NOV 30 1961

Boston Symphony Orchestra Adopts Asiatic Boy, Girl

The music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would sound strange to two young Asiatics. But Na Gwi La, a 7-year old South Korean girl, and Fong Kam Po, a Chinese boy, also 7, who lives in Hong Kong, will long have reason to applaud Boston's famed orchestra. It has adopted them.

NAM GWI LA

FONG KAM PO

Through the international relief agency, Foster Parents' Plan, Kam Po has just become the foster child of the members' association of the orchestra, and Gwi La has Maestro Charles Munch, the members and managers of the Symphony as her foster parents.

The children have parents, but they live in dire poverty. The help they will receive from their foster parents will make their futures brighter.

The orchestra first heard of the plan from one of their colleagues, William Moyer, who has been a "foster parent" for some time.

The organization has been engaged for close to 25 years in the work of rehabilitating disaster-stricken children in Europe and the Far East.

Americans untertake the financial "adoption" of a child with a monthly contribution of $15. They also correspond, via translated letters, with the child.

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
OCT 1961

Six on the State of Music

Six distinguished musical personalities discussed the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians on a recent program over the CBS Radio Network. Opera did not enter their discussions. However, what they said fits in this issue because of the similarity of problems.

MR. COPLAND: I suppose we have the right to consider the whole problem of the future of the symphony orchestra. We have many of them. We have some of the finest in the world and we want to keep them that way. But the question is is everything hunky dory?

MR. FIEDLER: It is not hunky dory at all. I find we have to worry about the growth of the young musician that will make a career as an orchestral player. I find that the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man or to lead him in the direction of becoming a professional musician because the future is too insecure for him, the seasons are too short.

MR. BURGIN: I think that the problem goes much deeper than simply solving the problem of young musicians. I think a symphony orchestra, of course, depends on the audience. I think that as things stand now, we have a very limited audience. We appeal to a certain small class of people mostly belonging to the middle or upper middle class. To secure the future of serious symphonic music, we should make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with music . . . Now, of course, I realize it's as Mr. Fiedler said an economic question in order to spread serious music to people who can't afford the price of expensive tickets, we would have to charge a very nominal amount of money and perhaps even go further than that . . . you've got to give them the right surroundings. If it is a white collar worker or a laborer, he may not go or want to go to a hall where he would be all dressed up, and perhaps we would have to have special concerts where he would feel at ease to participate as one of the audience. I also think that if we reach this point, we should keep in mind the necessity of keeping the standard that's presented in very high level. I think that this audience can stand very serious and important music because it has a direct appeal to them.

MR. GRAFFMAN: One thing that hasn't been mentioned yet is that . . . most orchestras have deficits, and if you increase the seasons . . . which is a very good thing . . . or lower the prices . . . which is also a good thing . . . we'll have larger deficits. So the solution perhaps would lie somewhere else.

MR. COPLAND: Would you like to suggest where the solution . . .

MR. GRAFFMAN: Well it is solved in most other countries by some sort of support on the government level.

MR. COPLAND: Mr. Leonard Bernstein . . . have you thought about the future of the symphony orchestra?

MR. BERNSTEIN: I think about it night and day . . . There are two problems, it seems to me, about the symphony orchestra. One is money and the other is music . . . Everything that has been said so far here tonight is about money. And it is true that half the battle has to be fought in terms of money. Almost any problem that you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously the money has to come, as Mr. Graffman said, from the government, and this is only a matter of time. It will. We are by nature not predisposed to such support for public service organizations like private institutions. Although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me, but still we persist in calling them private, and any mention of government support on a state, municipal, or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism or communism or whatever it happens to be. I think this is very unjust and unfair, and some of our favorite capitalist allies indulge in this very pink department of government support of the arts to an extraordinary extent. However, there is an area of symphonic ills which does not involve money, particularly, but music, and by music I mean new music, the kind of music that is now being written. There is a very strong tendency

RADIO PANEL of musical celebrities discussing "The Direction of Music in America" over CBS Radio: Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Erich Leinsdorf, Metropolitan Opera conductor; composer Aaron Copland; Leonard Bernstein, musical director of the New York Philharmonic, and pianist Gary Graffman.

GREENVILLE, S.C.
NEWS
D. 80 524 S. 84 660
SEP 21 19

Orchestra To Be Here In March

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be in Greenville March 26, instead of the Boston Opera Company as previously announced.

The orchestra will be sponsored by the Greenville Community Concerts Association.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SAT SEP 30 1961

ORCHESTRA PLANS SHIFT

Boston Symphony to Play Fridays at Lincoln Center

When the Boston Symphony moves its New York concerts to the new Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center for the 1962-63 season, it will change the pattern of its schedule.

Concerts will be given there on Wednesday and Friday nights, instead of Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon as they are now given in Carnegie Hall.

Concerts in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, now on Friday nights, will be given on Thursday nights in 1962-63.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI SEP 29 1961

Music Notes

Walter Piston's Violin Concerto No. 2 will have its first performances here in the New York Philharmonic's concerts under Leonard Bernstein's direction at Carnegie Hall on Oct. 5, 6, 7 and 8, with Joseph Fuchs as the soloist. Mr. Fuchs commissioned this work in connection with the Ford Foundation's program in humanities and the arts.

* * *

The New York City Opera will tour fo rfour weeks after the close of its home season at the City Center on Nov. 12. Three weeks of the tour will be devoted to cities in this state under the auspices of the New York State Arts Council, and the fourth will be spent in Mid-Western cities.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of five Friday evening concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and April 6. Ernest Ansermet will make his Brooklyn debut as guest conductor on Dec. 15, and Charles Munch, now in his last season as the Bostonians' regular leader, will conduct on the other four dates. His opening program includes Howard Hanson's "Elegie," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

* * *

The Orchestral Society of Westchester will present the Symphony of the Air in five evening concerts at the County Center in White Plains this season with Glenn Gould, pianist, as soloist in the opening program on Sunday, Oct. 8. Simon Asen will conduct. The other dates are Dec. 10, with Roberta Peters and Robert Merrill, singers; Jan. 14, with Jose Greco and his Spanish Ballet; Feb. 13, with Isaac Stern, violinist; March 16, when Handel's "Messiah" will be performed, and April 25, with Leonard Rose, cellist.

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
OCT 1961

Six on the State of Music

Six distinguished musical personalities discussed the future of the symphony orchestra and symphony musicians on a recent program over the CBS Radio Network. Opera did not enter their discussions. However, what they said fits in this issue because of the similarity of problems.

MR. COPLAND: I suppose we have the right to consider the whole problem of the future of the symphony orchestra. We have many of them. We have some of the finest in the world and we want to keep them that way. But the question is is everything hunky dory?

MR. FIEDLER: It is not hunky dory at all. I find we have to worry about the growth of the young musician that will make a career as an orchestral player. I find that the main trouble is that the orchestral-symphonic seasons are too short to maintain a young man or to lead him in the direction of becoming a professional musician because the future is too insecure for him, the seasons are too short.

MR. BURGIN: I think that the problem goes much deeper than simply solving the problem of young musicians. I think a symphony orchestra, of course, depends on the audience. I think that as things stand now, we have a very limited audience. We appeal to a certain small class of people mostly belonging to the middle or upper middle class. To secure the future of serious symphonic music, we should make it possible for broader masses to acquaint themselves with music . . . Now, of course, I realize it's as Mr. Fiedler said an economic question in order to spread serious music to people who can't afford the price of expensive tickets, we would have to charge a very nominal amount of money and perhaps even go further than that . . . you've got to give them the right surroundings. If it is a white collar worker or a laborer, he may not go or want to go to a hall where he would be all dressed up, and perhaps we would have to have special concerts where he would feel at ease to participate as one of the audience. I also think that if we reach this point, we should keep in mind the necessity of keeping the standard that's presented in very high level. I think that this audience can stand very serious and important music because it has a direct appeal to them.

MR. GRAFFMAN: One thing that hasn't been mentioned yet is that . . . most orchestras have deficits, and if you increase the seasons . . . which is a very good thing . . . or lower the prices . . . which is also a good thing . . . we'll have larger deficits. So the solution perhaps would lie somewhere else.

MR. COPLAND: Would you like to suggest where the solution . . .

MR. GRAFFMAN: Well it is solved in most other countries by some sort of support on the government level.

MR. COPLAND: Mr. Leonard Bernstein . . . have you thought about the future of the symphony orchestra?

MR. BERNSTEIN: I think about it night and day . . . There are two problems, it seems to me, about the symphony orchestra. One is money and the other is music . . . Everything that has been said so far here tonight is about money. And it is true that half the battle has to be fought in terms of money. Almost any problem that you can single out in the domain of symphony orchestras is a financial problem ultimately. Obviously the money has to come, as Mr. Graffman said, from the government, and this is only a matter of time. It will. We are by nature not predisposed to such support for public service organizations like private institutions. Although what's so private about museums and orchestras and opera companies beats me, but still we persist in calling them private, and any mention of government support on a state, municipal, or federal level always meets with shrieks of socialism or communism or whatever it happens to be. I think this is very unjust and unfair, and some of our favorite capitalist allies indulge in this very pink department of government support of the arts to an extraordinary extent. However, there is an area of symphonic ills which does not involve money, particularly, but music, and by music I mean new music, the kind of music that is now being written. There is a very strong tendency

RADIO PANEL of musical celebrities discussing "The Direction of Music in America" over CBS Radio: Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony; Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops; Erich Leinsdorf, Metropolitan Opera conductor; composer Aaron Copland; Leonard Bernstein, musical director of the New York Philharmonic, and pianist Gary Graffman.

GREENVILLE, S.C.
NEWS
D. 60,524 S. 84,660
SEP 21 1961

Orchestra To Be Here In March

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be in Greenville March 26, instead of the Boston Opera Company as previously announced.

The orchestra will be sponsored by the Greenville Community Concerts Association.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SAT SEP 30 1961

ORCHESTRA PLANS SHIFT

Boston Symphony to Play Fridays at Lincoln Center

When the Boston Symphony moves its New York concerts to the new Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center for the 1962-63 season, it will change the pattern of its schedule.

Concerts will be given there on Wednesday and Friday nights, instead of Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon as they are now given in Carnegie Hall.

Concerts in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, now on Friday nights, will be given on Thursday nights in 1962-63.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI SEP 29 1961

Music Notes

Walter Piston's Violin Concerto No. 2 will have its first performances here in the New York Philharmonic's concerts under Leonard Bernstein's direction at Carnegie Hall on Oct. 5, 6, 7 and 8, with Joseph Fuchs as the soloist. Mr. Fuchs commissioned this work in connection with the Ford Foundation's program in humanities and the arts.

* * *

The New York City Opera will tour for four weeks after the close of its home season at the City Center on Nov. 12. Three weeks of the tour will be devoted to cities in this state under the auspices of the New York State Arts Council, and the fourth will be spent in Mid-Western cities.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of five Friday evening concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and April 6. Ernest Ansermet will make his Brooklyn debut as guest conductor on Dec. 15, and Charles Munch, now in his last season as the Bostonians' regular leader, will conduct on the other four dates. His opening program includes Howard Hanson's "Elegie," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

* * *

The Orchestral Society of Westchester will present the Symphony of the Air in five evening concerts at the County Center in White Plains this season with Glenn Gould, pianist, as soloist in the opening program on Sunday, Oct. 8. Simon Asen will conduct. The other dates are Dec. 10, with Roberta Peters and Robert Merrill, singers; Jan. 14, with Jose Greco and his Spanish Ballet; Feb. 13, with Isaac Stern, violinist; March 16, when Handel's "Messiah" will be performed, and April 25, with Leonard Rose, cellist.

among the brighter talents in the younger composers away from the symphony orchestra, which I'm sure you may have noticed . . . I get dozens and hundreds of scores a year which I look through most painstakingly, even with a certain amount of guilt, because I'm a composer myself and I feel very responsible for the person who sends me his scores. I imagine 50 per cent of the scores I get are not really for symphony orchestra at all. They're for odd combinations which certainly can be played on symphony programs, but all I'm remarking is the tendency away from the symphonic approach, the symphonic sound, which as far as the hippist new young composer is concerned went out with early Schönberg, Mahler, and so on. Now this is either a good or bad thing. It doesn't mean the end of symphony orchestras. But I'm afraid they're going to become, if this tendency continues, more and more in the nature of museums.

MR. LEINSDORF: I don't think your pessimism is quite justified by the situation. We do have a lot of very vital orchestra compositions. Men like Prokofiev have written magnificently for the orchestra way into their late years . . . We have a great diversity of styles and manners of composition today, and among them there are several styles that go right for the orchestra in an orchestral texture.

MR. COPLAND: I, too, think that Mr. Bernstein is a little pessimistic this evening because it seems to me that if what he says is true . . . that is that the younger composers are not thinking in terms of the symphony orchestra . . . the cure is very simple. All that has to happen is that orchestras . . . start thinking about the young composer . . . and they're certain to think about the symphony orchestra in return . . . The young composer who writes a work and has very little hope of hearing it played by a major orchestra is a young composer who would normally turn to other forms of musical expression.

MR. BURGIN: I don't think it is quite fair when we compare the plight of the modern composer with the established repertoire of the classical period . . . It is not fair to compare them because those works have gone through a test of time and they finally emerged as great works . . . because in all those times there were many other composers who considered themselves modern . . . Those composers are not played. I think perhaps we expect too much if we think that everybody who writes a very good work is necessarily good enough to be performed. We have too many geniuses.

MR. BERNSTEIN: That's very true . . . that's well said. I don't agree that a good modern piece should not be played. These people have to be played in our time because there is no other way of making this sifting. You'll never find out who's great unless you play all the good ones.

MR. COPLAND: Suppose your laymen say, "That's a little hard on us."

MR. BERNSTEIN: Then comes the point that I said was good, which is that you must be sure the piece is good before you play it. Even though you're not convinced it's great, it has to be good enough to be performed. One of the great mistakes that have been made in recent decades in the field of modern music is the performance of modern music tastelessly.

MR COPLAND: I still haven't really gotten an answer, however, to the problem of the normal concert audience sitting in on a typical contemporary piece. What can we do to get them to take the same attitude about that piece as they take toward the standard repertoire?

MR. FIEDLER: By exposure . . . by hearing it frequently . . .

MR. GRAFFMAN: What do you mean by the same attitude? I find if I play a posthumous Schubert sonata or if I were to give a recital of the last three Schubert sonatas, I would run into the same problem that I would if I gave an all contemporary program . . . I don't think that all contemporary music makes the audience run away. After all, they will come to hear Prokofiev and Stravinsky and Bartók, and just because they're successful does not mean they're not contemporary. In the so-called standard repertoire . . . there are many works by Beethoven and Schubert and Mozart that are not standard in that they're not performed very much.

MR. COPLAND: I do think that there's an attitude of mind on the part of the everyday music lover who, when he or she goes to a concert, get's a little concerned that he's going to have to wait for the piece that comes later to justify his being at the concert. If we could just get that out of the way so the mere look of the thing wouldn't frighten people away.

MR. BURGIN: Isn't a new work by a contemporary composer an unknown quantity as far as the audience is concerned?

MR. COPLAND: That wouldn't necessarily mean they wouldn't like it. In the theatre everybody wants to go to see the unknown quantity.

MR. BERNSTEIN: I must say in spite of my gloominess I'm not really gloomy underneath. I must say that my conducting career hasn't been very long, but when I began, it seemed that a great portion of the mail I received was concerned with, "Don't play that awful stuff." In proportion I would say it is fractional now . . . such mail.

MR. GRAFFMAN: Nobody has brought up the question of audience rejection of music, and how do you train an audience in this, well, education . . . There are no compulsory courses in the fine arts as far as I know in the United States. Nobody is exposed to it until perhaps they've belonged to some club in their town, and it's the chic thing to do.

MR. BERNSTEIN: There's a great deal in what you say. It's left to chance a great deal. I grew up, of course, under the influence of Koussevitsky . . . and the fight he had in Boston was enormous. As many letters as he got and as much abuse as he got in the newspapers, if he played a work that was roundly condemned by all and he really believed in it . . . and he had a way in believing in pieces with an intensity I've never seen matched . . . he simply played it again the next week or the next month or included it the next year, and once even in the same concert. I did that last year, but I warned everybody that I was going to do it in advance, and I said that everybody who didn't want to hear it again could leave. About 400 people stayed, which I thought was pretty good out of 3,000 . . . You certainly remember, Aaron, what the responses were like when your pieces of the '20s were played by Koussevitsky . . . the hisses and boos . . . You must admit this doesn't happen now.

MR. COPLAND: Well, that wouldn't necessarily mean the acceptance was any more enthusiastic. Maybe the opposition is more quiet.

MR. BERNSTEIN: I think the acceptance is greater.

MR. FIEDLER: I think that audiences have become much more understanding also. ●

GREENVILLE, S.C.
NEWS
D. 80,524 S. 84,660
SEP 21 1961

Orchestra To Be Here In March

The Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be in Greenville March 26, instead of the Boston Opera Company as previously announced. The orchestra will be sponsored by the Greenville Community Concerts Association.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SAT SEP 30 1961

ORCHESTRA PLANS SHIFT

Boston Symphony to Play Fridays at Lincoln Center

When the Boston Symphony moves its New York concerts to the new Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center for the 1962-63 season, it will change the pattern of its schedule.

Concerts will be given there on Wednesday and Friday nights, instead of Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon as they are now given in Carnegie Hall.

Concerts in the Brooklyn Academy of Music, now on Friday nights, will be given on Thursday nights in 1962-63.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI SEP 29 1961

Music Notes

Walter Piston's Violin Concerto No. 2 will have its first performances here in the New York Philharmonic's concerts under Leonard Bernstein's direction at Carnegie Hall on Oct. 5, 6, 7 and 8, with Joseph Fuchs as the soloist. Mr. Fuchs commissioned this work in connection with the Ford Foundation's program in humanities and the arts.

• • •

The New York City Opera will tour for four weeks after the close of its home season at the City Center on Nov. 12. Three weeks of the tour will be devoted to cities in this state under the auspices of the New York State Arts Council, and the fourth will be spent in Mid-Western cities.

• • •

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual series of five Friday evening concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Nov. 17, Dec. 15, Jan. 26, Feb. 23 and April 6. Ernest Ansermet will make his Brooklyn debut as guest conductor on Dec. 15, and Charles Munch, now in his last season as the Bostonians' regular leader, will conduct on the other four dates. His opening program includes Howard Hanson's "Elegie," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.

• • •

The Orchestral Society of Westchester will present the Symphony of the Air in five evening concerts at the County Center in White Plains this season with Glenn Gould, pianist, as soloist in the opening program on Sunday, Oct. 8. Simon Asen will conduct. The other dates are Dec. 10, with Roberta Peters and Robert Merrill, singers; Jan. 14, with Jose Greco and his Spanish Ballet; Feb. 13, with Isaac Stern, violinist; March 16, when Handel's "Messiah" will be performed, and April 25, with Leonard Rose, cellist.

30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,881
NOV 14 1961

Casals' White House Concert Has Tanglewood Atmosphere

World-famed musicians well known to Berkshire audiences were among both the performers and guests at the White House last night for a state dinner and chamber-music program.

In Williamstown Tonight

The great Spanish cellist, Pablo Casals, performed with violinist Alexander Schneider and pianist Mieczyslaw Horszowski. Schneider is playing tonight in Williamstown with the Budapest String Quartet, of which he is a member.

Casals, a Berkshire visitor in his youth, in recent summers has taught and played in near-by Vermont at Marlboro, where his friend Rudolf Serkin has a summer school.

In the White House audience were such Berkshire summer residents as Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and composer Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, along with many musicians who have appeared at Tanglewood or whose music is performed there.

Tanglewood's No. 1 music man, Dr. Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was among those who were invited to the White House but couldn't make it. He was with the BSO on tour, conducting last night for a University of Connecticut concert at Storrs.

Munch Invited

Dr. Munch had conducted the BSO at one of the 84-year-old Casals' most recent major appearances, a United Nations concert in 1958.

Like Dr. Munch, Alexander Schneider also is on tour, and with a tight schedule. Schneider traveled to Washington after a Monday night concert with the Budapesters in Boston, and was in Pittsfield today preparing for tonight's performance.

The Williamstown concert tonight at 8:30 is a free one offered by the Thompson Concert Committee of Williams College. The quartet has performed regularly at Williamstown and at Tanglewood. With them tonight will be violinist Walter Trampler.

Bernstein Attends

Other Tanglewood musical figures at the White House last night, most of them with their wives, included Leonard Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and former member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty; composers Samuel Barber and Elliott C. Carter Jr., both of whom have taught at the BMC, and composers Howard Hanson, Walter Piston, William Schuman and Roger Sessions, who have worked under commissions from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

Composer Roy E. Harris, who has been at Tanglewood while the BSO performed his music, also was in the large White House audience, as were Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, former Berkshire residents, columnist Walter Lippmann and conductor Leopold Stokowski.

Northeastern NEWS, Oct. 27, 1961

BSO; From Vienna To Hub

By NAT GREEN

"Music is the art of expressing the inexpressible." It rises far above what words can mean or the intelligence define. Its domain is the imponderable and the unconscious. Man's right to speak this language is for me the most precious gift that heaven has bestowed upon us. And we have no right to misuse it."

These are the words of Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They exemplify the attitude toward the musical discipline that has characterized the inspiring history of Symphony Hall.

ACOUSTIC PERFECTION

More than 80 years ago, an investment banker and student of music, Major Henry Lee Higginson, returned from Vienna determined to expose Americans to the greatness of classical music.

A man whose arm injury ended his ability to play the piano, Higginson was responsible for making available the first permanent orchestra in this country.

The highest standards were to be maintained. The best conductors and musicians were to play for the widest possible audience at the lowest possible prices. The initial charge for "rush-line" patrons was 25 cents.

The Boston Music Hall, presently the location of Loew's Orpheum, was soon found to be inadequate. Plans were therefore laid for the present structure on Massachusetts Avenue, which opened in 1900.

Symphony Hall, recognized as one of the most acoustically perfected concert halls in the world, was "the first to be built in known conformity with acoustical laws." The man who worked with the architects for this accomplishment was Professor Wallace C. Sabine of Harvard.

The niches on the wall above the second, and uppermost, balcony were made for scientific purposes. The statues — Apollo, Athena, Sophocles, Demosthenes and 14 others — not only serve as artistic representations but also allow building materials too rough for exposure to be concealed in back of the niches.

While one is in the hall, he can hear someone else at any location with perfect clarity. Both the number of seats and the amount of overhang of the balconies conform to the needs of acoustical perfection.

The golden Aeolian-Skinner organ, considered one of the best in America, serves both for solo concerts, baroque performances and for the special needs of the orchestra. Its original gold leaf has never been renewed.

POPS CONCERTS

During the winter, the hall seats 2631, but in May and June, when the Pops concerts are held, a flat floor is used for tables and chairs. The hall then seats 2345.

To accomplish this, elevators come up with the tables and chairs after the main floor platforms have been unbolted and removed. The usual seats are then lowered on the elevator to the basement.

10—The Berkshire Eagle, Monday, Dec. 11, 1961

50th Birthday of Girl Scouts To Be Observed at Tanglewood

Plans for Girl Scouts on Parade at Tanglewood, on May 26, 1962, were announced today by Mrs. Melvin E. Shalett, president of the Berkshire Hills Girl Scout Council. The Tanglewood board of directors has given the Girl Scouts permission to use all of the Tanglewood facilities for a day-long celebration of the Girl Scouts' 50th birthday.

High light of the program will be individual troop demonstrations of Scouting skills. Each troop has chosen a skill to demonstrate, a dance to learn, a country to tell about or some special way of showing a Girl Scouts' interest in many different types of activities. Each troop will have its own area at Tanglewood, where families, friends, and other scouts will visit and observe the troop's demonstration.

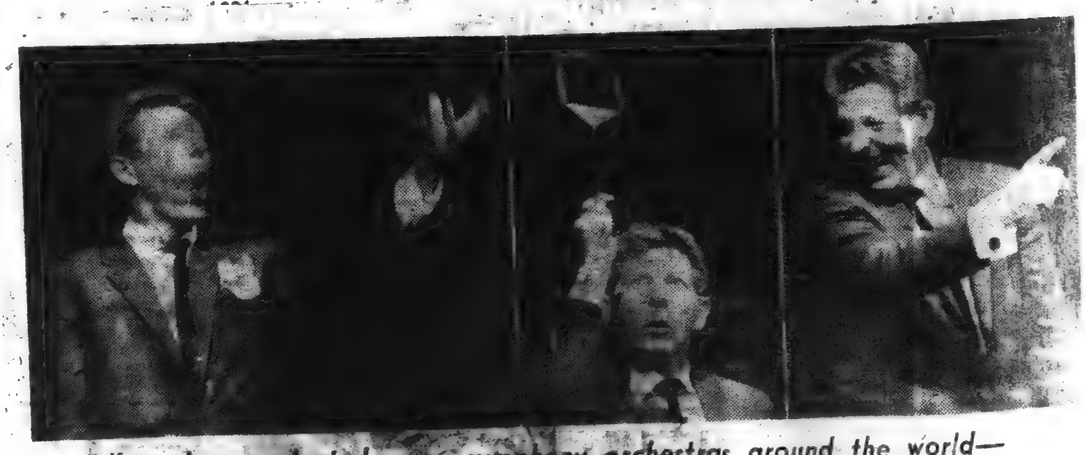
2,000 To Participate

Plans for the day also call for a colorful opening flag ceremony. Individual scouts will participate in a "Sew Your Own Fashion Show" and hobby show. Art works will be entered in the "Picture Your Home Frontier" competition. The best works submitted will be sent to Roundup at Button Bay State Park in Vermont in July, ultimately to become part of a traveling art show. A pageant will climax the day.

There are approximately 2,000 scouts in 91 troops in the council, which covers the towns of Lansboro south to Sheffield. It is expected that each scout will participate in this celebration of 50 years of Girl Scouting.

A special committee has been set by the Council's program committee to make and carry out the plans for Tanglewood. On this committee are: Mrs. Donald E. Campbell, Mrs. Richard W. Moody and Mrs. Eugene E. Trunnell of Stockbridge; Mrs. Stuart C. Miller of Lee, Mrs. Bernard H. Flood and Mrs. Richard G. Ceeley of Lenox, and Mrs. Abbott C. Combes III of Pittsfield.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS
D: 94,608 S: 188,043
NOV 5 1961



Kaye has conducted many symphony orchestras around the world—for pleasure and charity. Here the camera caught him as he conducted The Boston Symphony orchestra. In the left photo, he implores the orchestra to make the music "sing!" Next, he conducts Flight of the Bumblebee, with a flyswatter. Then he breaks up as a soloist flubs a note.

Pre-Season- Springfield

31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
OCT 1 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Many Fine Performances On Inexpensive Recordings

Musical Stars of Yesteryear, Exceptional Orchestral Works Are Heard

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Among recordings in the $1.98 category are to be found many fine performances. There are, for example, fine performances by Richard Crooks, a tenor of yesteryear who was one of the finest American artists at the Metropolitan; Lawrence Tibbett, perhaps the finest baritone of his time and certainly one of the greatest actors; Galli-Curci, greatest coloratura of all time, now practically forgotten.

Orchestral Field

In the field of orchestral music one can get just about everything and by the finest orchestras and most brilliant conductors. It is often profitable to hear such interpretations as those of Koussevitzky, Furtwangler and others. True, sound on these records is not as fine as we expect from present-day records, but it will do.

One of the finest performances at Tanglewood last summer was that of the Mozart Concerto in B Flat for Bassoon and Orchestra. We ran across an exceptional performance of this work by one Karel Bidlo, first bassoonist of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra for the past decade. He is supported by that orchestra conducted by Vacil Talich. This Parliment recording sounds well and the soloist is a real virtuoso. The other side of the record contains a smooth performance of Mozart's Concerto No. 4 in D Major for Violin and Orchestra. This concerto is one of five Mozart wrote when 19 years of age. It is the best of the five. Jiri Novak is the soloist and Talich directs the Czech Philharmonic.

Another interesting recording provided a recital by the famous tenor of former years, Helge Roswaene. The Danish tenor was extremely popular and sang in virtually all European opera houses. He did not visit the Metropolitan Opera House. He sings on this recording a varied repertoire ranging from the Coachman's Song from "Le Postillon de Longjumeau" with its soaring high Ds, really sung, to the vocal pyrotechnics of Sobin's aria from Glinka's "Life for the Czar." There are also arias from Verdi's "Vespri Siciliami," "Aida," "Traviata" and "Trovatore" and from Puccini's "Turandot" and "Butterfly," along with arias from "Carmen," "Don Giovanni" and "Les Huguenots" by Meyerbeer. It's pretty fine singing, well recorded and with adequate orchestra accompaniment.

New Interpretation

Everest Records now brings us a new interpretation of the music of Irving Berlin. Conducting his orchestra and chorale, Raoul Poliakin provides brilliant and thoughtful performances of favorite Berlin selections. Like all Everest recordings, the sound is superb. Poliakin's musical resources are adequate and his knowledge of this medium is admirable. The record opens with "Easter Parade" and includes such lovelies as "With You," "Let's Face the Music and Dance," "I've Got My Love to Keep Me Warm," "Say It Isn't So" and others. The record is good listening.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its annual appearance in the Auditorium Monday night, sponsored by the Junior League of Springfield. This will be the first concert on the league's excellent concert series. Charles Munch will conduct and it may well be his last appearance in this city as he relinquishes leadership of the Boston orchestra after Tanglewood in 1962. Munch will be missed for in the dozen years he has led the Boston orchestra, he has grown in stature and provided many memorable performances.

Among the October concerts in which we are particularly interested is the opening concert of the Springfield Symphony on the 17th. Byron Janis will be guest pianist; the Detroit Symphony, Paul Paray conductor, which opens the Chicopee Community Concerts in Veritas Auditorium of the College of Our Lady of the Elms on the 18th and the concert by the splendid Nieuw Amsterdam Trio in the Museum of Fine Arts, sponsored by the Tuesday Morning Music Club.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
OCT 2 1961

Boston Symphony Program Explained

Springfield Mass., Daily News

Members of the Junior League were treated to a lecture today on the Boston Symphony Orchestra program the orchestra will perform tonight at the Municipal Auditorium under the league's auspices. Mrs. James Guion, seated, director of the Junior League Concert Series, is shown explaining several of the movements to Mrs. Brewster Sturtevant, a member of the concert committee, and Mrs. Richard Taft, adult program director at the YWCA.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
OCT 1 1961

Munch, Boston Symphony At Auditorium Tomorrow

Tomorrow night at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium, Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the opening of the 1961-62 Junior League Concert Series. This might be Dr. Munch's final concert in Springfield prior to his retirement which has been announced for next summer.

Many Honors

Dr. Munch, who will be 71 next September, was appointed music director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor with the exception of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Dr. Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony. Five New York Music Critics Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony Grand Prix du Disques and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2. Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of DeBussy's Images which he will be performing for local audiences tomorrow night. During his tenure, the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Ddisques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Dr Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Charles Munch's book "I Am a Conductor" was published in Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New York 1955; London, 1956; Zurich 1957; Moscow, 1960.

He was responsible for the inauguration of the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 per winter season. It was recently announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in this country, will in 1961-62, extend its season to 50 weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
SEP 24 1961

CONCERT SERIES TICKET DRIVE

Junior Leaguers Conducting Fall Campaign

Members of the Junior League of Springfield, Mass., Inc., concert committee are now engaged in the fall campaign for subscription renewals and for new subscriptions to the Junior League Concert Series 1961-1962 season. Tickets will be on sale at Forbes & Wallace box office tomorrow for one week until the first concert, Oct. 2. Ticket sales are under the direction of Mrs. Evelyn Macaulay.

There has been such an enthusiastic response for the 28th annual series which will open with the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Charles Munch conducting on Monday night, Oct. 2. This will be the last appearance of Dr. Munch conducting the orchestra prior to his proposed retirement next year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
OCT 2 1961

Dr. Munch, Symphony Appear Here Tonight

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear tonight at the Municipal Auditorium, for the opening concert of the Junior League Concert Series 1961-62 season. Tickets are available prior to the 8.30 performance at the Municipal Auditorium. The program for tonight's concert is as follows:—

Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 562

Debussy Iberia (Images," No. 2.

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)

II. Les Parfume de la nuit (The Perfume of the Night)

III. Le Matin d'un jour de fete (Holiday Morning)

Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6 in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique"

I. Adagio; allegro non troppo

II. Allegro con grazia

III. Allegro molto vivace

IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

FADED TEXT

32

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

SEP 24 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Yugoslav Chorus Opens Concert Season Saturday

80-Voice Internationally Famous Group at Municipal Auditorium Under Auspices of New Enterprise

By WILLARD CLARK

In less than a week Springfield's music season will open. It will be launched by a new enterprise, the Springfield Institute of Music, which will present the internationally acclaimed Branko Krsmanovich Chorus of Yugoslavia Saturday night in the Municipal Auditorium, at 8.30.

First of Tour

The 80-voice chorus will be singing the first concert of its 1961 tour of the United States. The tour last season was a spectaculuar success. Native spectacular success. Native costumes will be used in the latter part of the program. The first portion will be sung in formal attire.

This chorus is a continuation of the famous Obilich Choir formed in 1884 which, except for the war years of World War II, has been active ever since. Following the war, it was rechristened to honor a Yugoslavian hero, a young Belgrade University student who died fighting the Fascists. The chorus today is made up of undergraduate students of the university. The chorus has been a prize winner in such music competitions as the World Festival in Vienna, 1959; World Festival in Moscow, 1957; International Eistedfod Music Festival, 1956; and the three first prizes in the International Polyphonic Contest in Arezzo, Italy, 1955.

This should be a concert of singular interest for devotees of choral music.

Concerts to Come

As usual the smaller community concerts courses in Holyoke and Chicopee are coming up with exceptionally interesting concerts. The Holyoke series, held in the War Memorial, opens Nov. 18 with a recital by pianist Richard Cass. On Dec. 13, baritone Meredith Morley gives a recital. This will be followed on Jan. 13 by a recital by the remarkable young violinist Michael Rabin. High light of the season will be a concert by the Buffalo Symphony Orchestra March 25.

The Chicopee concerts held in Veritas Auditorium of the College of Our Lady of the Elms opens Oct. 18 with a concert by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Paul Paray conductor. Soprano Camilla Williams sings Jan. 15 to be followed on Feb. 13 by the Tuscon, Ariz. Boys Choir. The final concert will be given by the Medley's, a piano duo. To us, these concerts sound extremely interesting. We have learned long since to anticipate concerts by those of whom we have not heard. These young people are climbing the ladder and they may be counted on to give their best. It is pretty safe to assume that they do not come under management unless they have considerable to offer. Incidently, Holyoke and Chicopee tickets are interchangeable.

We have not received detailed information on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here Oct. 2. It will probably not be world shattering but it will be a good concert perhaps even an exciting one if conductor Charles Munch is in the groove. Information as to the Mount Holyoke series and University of Mass. series is expected very soon. What we do know, adds up to a fine season and there are always extra concerts added here and there to whet the curiosity.

UConn Series

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

SEP 24 196[illegible]

JUNIOR LEAGUE CONCERT SERIES TO BEGIN OCT. 2

[illegible] Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program

Tickets will go on sale tomorrow at the Forbes and Wallace box office for the 1961-62 Junior League concert series. The series started in 1933.

15th Appearance

The season opens Oct. 2, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch. This will be their 15th appearance since the series started 28 years ago, and they have always been numbered among the favorites of local concert goers. This might be the last appearance of Dr. Munch conducting the orchestra in Springfield prior to his retirement next year.

The second concert will be presented Dec. 12 at the Municipal Auditorium when Dr. Boris Goldovsky will come to Springfield with his opera company to present Rossini's comic opera "The Barber of Seville." This will mark the seventh tour of the New England Grand Opera Theater, Inc., throughout the United States and their first appearance here. It should prove to be one of the high lights of the present series.

On Jan. 25 the world renowned pianist Gina Bachauer will give a recital during her tour of the North American continent. The Greek pianist, Mme. Bachauer is one of the fine women pianists, well known for her technique and attack.

To conclude the 1961-62 concert series will be George London, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, March 26. Mr. London has appeared at most of the major European festivals in the past several years and he has made many world tours.

The proceeds from the ticket sale will help to maintain the Junior Workshop, Inc., a preschool for physically handicapped children between the ages of three and six-and-a-half. These children are residents of the Greater Springfield area. The school was established in 1955 by the Junior League of Springfield, Inc., to better prepare the physically handicapped for adjustment to handicaps and to life within the community.

The workshop is staffed by volunteers and by a professional director during the school year. It provides a specialized preschoop program that enables its "graduates" to make a smooth transition into elementary school. In 1955, the United Cerebral Palsy Award was presented to the Junior League of Springfield in recognition for the founding of the Junior Workshop.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

SEP 30 1961

PERFORMANCE BY SYMPHONY UNDER MUNCH

Conductor, Concertmaster in Farewell to Local Audience Monday

Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at the Municipal Auditorium Monday night for Dr. Munch's final concert with the orchestra for local audiences. He has announced he will retire next year. Another loss to the orchestra will be Richard Burgin, concertmaster.

Dr. Munch will have been with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as musical director for 13 years when he retires.

Burgin has been a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half of the orchestra's lifetime; he was engaged to be concertmaster in 1920 by Pierre Monteux. Serge Koussevitzky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and invited him to become associate conductor in 1943.

RICHARD BURGIN

The Junior League Concert Series will bring the orchestra to the Auditorium. Single tickets are available at the Forbes & Wallace box office, and they also will be available the night of the concert at the Auditorium.

The program for Monday follows:

Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a.
Debussy Iberia ("Images," No. 2)
I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Perfumed of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (Holiday Morning)
Tchaikovsky Symphony No. [illegible] minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique"
I. Adagio; allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

[illegible] Davis

First Week

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS — Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a

DEBUSSY — *Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Perfumes of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (Holiday Morning)

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY — *Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathétique"

I. Adagio; allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

These concerts will end at about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
SEP 30 1961

Symphony Opens 81st Season

Initial Program Brilliant Under Munch's Baton

By Harold Rogers

Charles Munch, in finer fettle than ever, launched the eighty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon with a program offering little in excitement when seen on paper but generating much in the playing of it. The Symphony Hall audience gave its customary rising tribute to the conductor at the season's first concert: this greeting in particular being tinged with the unhappy realization that Dr. Munch will remain but one more year in Boston.

The program? Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Debussy's "Ibéria," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6—works that would better remain unplayed unless guided by the hand of a master. But the master's hand was indeed present, and Dr. Munch conducted with a command that enabled him to do surprising things—to leave the orchestra on its own from time to time, as it were, while he stood with knees bent slightly and hands hanging at his sides, yet controlling with a fervent, almost imperceptible rhythm of the head.

At other times his baton flashed in a frenzy that whipped the music into those familiar Munchian whirlpools of sound — a little muddy at times, perhaps, but exciting in a way that mill ponds are not exciting.

Say what you will about Munch; argue with his tempos, complain about his French Beethoven or his French Tchaikovsky, castigate him for driving his musicians faster than they can play the notes, and what do you have? A performance that is seldom less than brilliant and exciting.

This covers a multitude of musical sins, and may his successor not err on this point.

Two new men took their places in the orchestra yesterday — Gerald Gelbloom, violinist, and Matthew Ruggiero, bassoonist, who replace retiring members, Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
SEP 30 1961

Munch Opens Final Season With BSO

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday opened its 81st season and the last under the directorship of Charles Munch.

Munch, now beginning his 13th year with the orchestra, will be succeeded next September by Erich Leinsdorf.

The orchestra also will begin a new Monday night series this season with the first of six concerts scheduled Nov. 6.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
SEP 30 1961

Symphony Opens In Best Tradition

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had a Van Winkle of 50 years ago stirred from an enchanted trance to awaken at the 81st opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, he might have stretched blissfully, cocked an ear, found the music to his liking, and returned to sleep in this best of all possible worlds.

For, by tradition, it is ordained that the opening concert of an American symphony season shoud be an exercise in nostalgia. The audience is not assembled to be shaken up, but to be shaken down, as it were, and prepared for the weeks ahead. The program affords a chance to meet old friends and relax.

Criticism ought to heed the truce, too. The opening concert is only partly a musical experience; but, rather, a rite. And reunion yesterday meant Mr. Charles Munch starting his 13th and last year here meant the regrouping of cultivated musical Boston, meant the traditional virtues and the sense of the past renewed in the present—meant even the tremendous trifles like the discreet gray typeface of the notes and the chime of the warning bell.

Early Opening

Most of all it meant, at this earliest opening of the season of recent vintage (the Orchestra's Friday-Saturday series has been expanded to 24 concerts) the sound of the orchestra itself. One can seldom return to the Boston Symphony without astonishment — chiefly at the fickleness of aural memory.

Did the orchestra always play with such polish and luminosity? With such balanced tone? Why should an instrument not unfamiliar, so often supply sheer revelation? The men, as a matter of fact, responded with mid-season animation. As a matter of emotion, they sounded angelic.

This, too, is a part of the initial experience, augmenting the old-fashioned program and its determined lack of imagination. The coherence of the musical design rested in nationality: German, French, Russian. In a way, the architecture was curious, since Debussy excels in the shorter forms, and the "Pathetique" at an opening concert does not accord with the feelings of the occasion. But here unconventionality ceases.

The interpretations by Dr. Munch proved solidly satisfactory. First, the Brahams, with each of the thematic variations of the title tune—attributed to Haydn but very probably by Pleyel—clearly and succinctly outlined. Then the Debussy. Impressionistic color. Intoxicating sonority of Andulusian gypsy dances. Chatter of castanets. Dazzle of festival rhythms. Chromatic woodwind runs in the hushed night. Last sensuous blare of brilliant intensities.

Despite the narrative predictability of "Iberia," it made an exhilarating show; and the ultimate "Pathetique" was competently treatd, Dr. Munch strove to wring every teardrop from the towel, but most conductors do, and fortunately his melodramatic gloom is not as bathetic as some of his contemporaries.

The long Tchaikowskian melodic line received ample, limpid grace, and though the conductor chose to translate "molto vivace" in the third movement as "presto," the overall reading benefitted from a generally dry, clear Gallic proportion.

Two new members Gerald Gelbloom, violinist, who was former concertmaster of the Hartford Symphony, and Matthew Ruggerio, bassonist, from the New York City ballet orchestra, succeeded the retiring Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster at this concert. Finally, the clean, crisp appearance of the new black-on-white program cover of heavy paper stock seems to testify that the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, who took her case to the Editor's Mailbags of the local press, made a point with the Trustees.

Next week Michele Boegner, 20-year-old French prodigy, will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4, in G, Op. 58. The Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 58, and the Copland "Quiet City," featuring Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, are also scheduled by Charles Munch.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the first program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:
Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a ... Brahms
Iberia ("Images," No. 2) ... Debussy
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, Pathetique" ... Tchaikowsky

First Week

First Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, SEPTEMBER 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a

DEBUSSY ..... *Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Perfumes of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (Holiday Morning)

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... *Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathétique"

I. Adagio; allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

These concerts will end at about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
SEP 30 1961

Symphony Opens In Best Tradition

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had a Van Winkle of 50 years ago stirred from an enchanted trance to awaken at the 81st opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, he might have stretched blissfully, cocked an ear, found the music to his liking, and returned to sleep in this best of all possible worlds.

For, by tradition, it is ordained that the opening concert of an American symphony season should be an exercise in nostalgia. The audience is not assembled to be shaken up, but to be shaken down, as it were, and prepared for the weeks ahead. The program affords a chance to meet old friends and relax.

Criticism ought to heed the truce, too. The opening concert is only partly a musical experience; but, rather, a rite. And reunion yesterday meant Mr. Charles Munch starting his 13th and last year here meant the regrouping of cultivated musical Boston, meant the traditional virtues and the sense of the past renewed in the present—meant even the tremendous trifles like the discreet gray typeface of the notes and the chime of the warning bell.

Early Opening

Most of all it meant, at this earliest opening of the season of recent vintage (the Orchestra's Friday-Saturday series has been expanded to 24 concerts) the sound of the orchestra itself. One can seldom return to the Boston Symphony without astonishment — chiefly at the fickleness of aural memory.

Did the orchestra always play with such polish and luminosity? With such balanced tone? Why should an instrument not unfamiliar, so often supply sheer revelation? The men, as a matter of fact, responded with mid-season animation. As a matter of emotion, they sounded angelic.

This, too, is a part of the initial experience, augmenting the old-fashioned program and its determined lack of imagination. The coherence of the musical design rested in nationality: German, French, Russian. In a way, the architecture was curious, since Debussy excels in the shorter forms, and the "Pathetique" at an opening concert does not accord with the feelings of the occasion. But here unconventionality ceases.

The interpretations by Dr. Munch proved solidly satisfactory. First, the Brahams, with each of the thematic variations of the title tune—attributed to Haydn but very probably by Pleyel—clearly and succinctly outlined. Then the Debussy. Impressionistic color. Intoxicating sonority of Andulusian gypsy dances. Chatter of castanets. Dazzle of festival rhythms. Chromatic woodwind runs in the hushed night. Last sensuous blare of brilliant intensities.

Despite the narrative predictability of "Iberia," it made an exhilarating show; and the ultimate "Pathetique" was competently treatd. Dr. Munch strove to wring every teardrop from the towel, but most conductors do; and fortunately his melodramatic gloom is not as bathetic as some of his contemporaries.

The long Tchaikowskian melodic line received ample, limpid grace, and though the conductor chose to translate "molto vivace" in the third movement as "presto," the overall reading benefitted from a generally dry, clear Gallic proportion.

Two new members Gerald Gelbloom, violinist, who was former concertmaster of the Hartford Symphony, and Matthew Ruggerio, bassonist, from the New York City ballet orchestra, succeeded the retiring Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster at this concert. Finally, the clean, crisp appearance of the new black-on-white program cover of heavy paper stock seems to testify that the Boston composer, Mabel Daniels, who took her case to the Editor's Mailbags of the local press, made a point with the Trustees.

Next week Michele Boegner, 20-year-old French prodigy, will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4, in G, Op. 58. The Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68, and the Copland "Quiet City," featuring Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, are also scheduled by Charles Munch.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the first program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56a ..... Brahms
Iberia ("Images," No. 2) ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, Pathetique" ..... Tchaikowsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
SEP 30 1961

Symphony Opens 81st Season

Initial Program Brilliant Under Munch's Baton

By Harold Rogers

Charles Munch, in finer fettle than ever, launched the eighty-first season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon with a program offering little in excitement when seen on paper but generating much in the playing of it. The Symphony Hall audience gave its customary rising tribute to the conductor at the season's first concert: this greeting in particular being tinged with the unhappy realization that Dr. Munch will remain but one more year in Boston.

The program? Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Debussy's "Ibéria," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6—works that would better remain unplayed unless guided by the hand of a master. But the master's hand was indeed present, and Dr. Munch conducted with a command that enabled him to do surprising things—to leave the orchestra on its own from time to time, as it were, while he stood with knees bent slightly and hands hanging at his sides, yet controlling with a fervent, almost imperceptible rhythm of the head.

At other times his baton flashed in a frenzy that whipped the music into those familiar Munchian whirlpools of sound — a little muddy at times, perhaps, but exciting in a way that mill ponds are not exciting.

Say what you will about Munch; argue with his tempos, complain about his French Beethoven or his French Tchaikovsky, castigate him for driving his musicians faster than they can play the notes, and what do you have? A performance that is seldom less than brilliant and exciting.

This covers a multitude of musical sins, and may his successor not err on this point.

Two new men took their places in the orchestra yesterday — Gerald Gelbloom, violinist, and Matthew Ruggiero, bassoonist, who replace retiring members, Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
SEP 30 1961

Munch Opens Final Season With BSO

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday opened its 81st season and the last under the directorship of Charles Munch.

Munch, now beginning his 13th year with the orchestra, will be succeeded next September by Erich Leinsdorf.

The orchestra also will begin a new Monday night series this season with the first of six concerts scheduled Nov. 6.

34

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

SEP 30 1961

Munch Begins His Last Season With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA yesterday afternoon began at Symphony Hall its 81st season, and the 13th and last season as music director, of Dr. Charles Munch. The program, which will be repeated tonight at 8:30: Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; "Iberia" by Debussy, and the "Pathetic" Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

By CYRUS DURGIN

When Dr. Charles Munch strode out upon the stage of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the audience rose in greeting, as they have done for a dozen years past.

But this time they stood applauding a little longer than usual, and Dr. Munch stood bowing and smiling a little longer, because all knew this is to be his 13th and last season as music director. The custom of a rising salute to the artistic head of the Orchestra is more than formality. There is a degree of affection involved, and yesterday that seemed intensified.

But perception, not affection, was what governed my analytical ears, and that found yesterday's concert a marvel of sheer sound and instrumental virtuosity. Not always is even the Boston Symphnoy this great, or Dr. Munch either.

To be sure, his cool, detached way with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn did not vitalize a score inherently a bit stodgy. These technically are excellent variations, but they show something of the North-German, square-cut aspect of Brahms which Vienna never quite eliminated. Propriety was Munch's keynote here, propriety and slow tempi. It became evident there are new members of the Friday audience this year, when a flutter of applause came from balcony and floor, as a few persons mistakenly thought the broad cadence of the seventh variation was the end of the piece.

Debussy's "Iberia," that lush and elegant masterpiece of French Impressionism, with an overlay of Spanish rhythmic and melodic facets, has become a specialty of Munch. This performance of it was the best yet from him. It was full of controlled passion and it was a model of orchestral clarity. The capricious turns of speed and nuance were all in place as details of a large tonal canvas. Even the final cadence was broadened a little.

For Debussy, as for the Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" which followed, Dr. Munch insisted upon richness and sweetness of tone to an extent greater than he has shown many a time in his 12 years with us. The result was true splendor.

Tchaikovsky's life - cycle "Pathetic," which seems to emerge from the darkness of non-being and end in that of the grave after an existence of lamentation punctuated with gaiety and grim battle, received one of the most coherent and consistent performances I ever have heard.

It was a wonder, and especially in the fact that Munch, who often is fired to rush the tempo, never yielded to that temptation even in the march movement. The speed there was even all the way, and there was no coarseness, no clouding of instrumental timbres, no shrill hysteria.

But there was infinite polish and beauty, and in this respect the solo playing of Messrs. Cioffi, clarinet; Walt, bassoon, and Mayes, cello, was superlative.

We have heard the season superbly begun, and may look forward to more of the same, in Dr. Munch's valedictory year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

SEP 30 1961

Two Newcomers In Symphony

The opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 81st season yesterday found two newcomers in the ranks.

They are Gerald Gelbloom, who comes to Boston from the post of concertmaster in the Hartford Symphony, and Matthew Ruggiero, bassoon. Ruggiero has been a member of the New York Opera orchestra and the Philadelphia Little Symphony.

Gelbloom and Ruggiero succeed, respectively, Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster, who have retired.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly - Circ. 27,809

OCT 5 1961

At Symphony Hall

Dr. Munch Opens B S O Season

By ALLAN SLY

Symphony Hall last Saturday evening was dominated by thoughts set in motion as we listened to and watched Dr. Munch open his last season among us. We shall observe this regime, this era, slowly draw to its close; one cannot but grow reflective.

As though mirroring our mood Dr. Munch evoked from the Brahms Haydn Variations an unfamiliar gentleness, a leisurely re-exploring of its subjective nature, as though there were more to be found there than we had yet realized. The orchestra, drawing on its own vast experience, met Dr. Munch more than half way, so that what we saw was the edifying and inspiring demonstration of an elder sharing his experience, his insights, with those most qualified to receive them.

There can be many different sorts of orchestral performance, according to the occasion. Our portion for this season is evidently to become a very treasured memory in the future.

This is not to say that the Brahms entirely lent itself to this treatment. Three years ago it had stronger impulsion and no less clarity. But if Dr. Munch wants to show us a new aspect of a work there is virtue to be had in sharing his confidence; only the inflexible listener will balk and who wants to be inflexible?

The Debussy Iberia had its own and entirely different transports. Here the BSO's inexhaustible resources of color and nuance brought out from its conductor his most exalted sense of tone wizardry, of characterization, of insinuation, suggestion, persuasion. Debussy soared high above our earth-bound tonal "systems," the refuge of frustrated talent, of prostrate genius. There was none of that modern malady in the Iberia. In passing let it be asserted that no percussion department ever played so well as did the BSO's in this work.

The Tchaikowsky sixth was played with utter devotion to the integrity of a great composer, spokesman for a great composer, spokesman for a great people. What sombre hues, what foreboding, and yet what songlike release and joie de vivre, what heroics, what submission! In fact the whole program drew deep draughts of the humanities, the music seeming more than ever like a ritual undertaken to reveal greater wisdom yet.

Of the concert as a whole one must admit to noticing a minor infelicity here and there in the execution, but no great organism should be equated with a perfect machine, and let us not pretend that a perfect performance is necessarily a great one. Saturday's performance carried far beyond the confines of the Back Bay or of the new season's opening.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

NOV 1961

Changing Faces

One proper Bostonian in the audience at the first concert of the Boston Symphony's 81st season, at Symphony Hall, Sept. 29, was reported to have observed: "Everything is the same; only the faces have changed a little."

A year hence, two faces exceedingly important to these concerts will have changed altogether. Charles Munch will have retired as music director, to be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf; and Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster, but will continue as associate conductor.

Accordingly, when Mr. Munch strode out on the stage to begin his 13th and last season in Boston, the Orchestra and audience rose in greeting as usual. But this time they stood applauding a little longer than usual, and Mr. Munch stood bowing and smiling a little longer. These courtesies at season's beginning and end in Boston are not only pleasant formality—they also manifest genuine affection.

Mr. Munch kept to the standard repertory for this concert and its repetition on Sept. 30—Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Debussy's Iberia and Tchaikovsky's Pathetique Symphony. But the performance of both conductor and Orchestra reached an extraordinary peak of finesse and tonal richness that not even the Boston Symphony and Charles Munch always manage to attain.

To be sure, Mr. Munch did not vitalize a score inherently a bit stodgy —for Brahms's Variations, while technically excellent, do represent that north German, square-cut aspect of the composer that Vienna never was quite able to eliminate—and propriety and slow tempos reigned.

With Debussy's Iberia, matters changed abruptly. This lush and elegant masterpiece of impressionism, with its overlay of Spanish piquancy, has become a Munch speciality, and the performance was gorgeous and exceedingly clear.

The Pathetique was the high point, both for its own emotional voltage and for the extraordinary reading Munch gave it. Here, again, were utmost clarity, both of orchestral sound and instrumental detail. Mr. Munch often tends during a performance to speed up tempos, but in the March-Scherzo the pace was steady from first to last. The solo playing of Messrs. Cioffi, clarinet; Walt, bassoon; and Mayes, cello, was superlative. —Cyrus Durgin

34

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
SEP 30 1961

Munch Begins His Last Season With Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA yesterday afternoon began at Symphony Hall its 81st season, and the 13th and last season as music director of Dr. Charles Munch. The program, which will be repeated tonight at 8:30: Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; "Iberia" by Debussy, and the "Pathetic" Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

By CYRUS DURGIN

When Dr. Charles Munch strode out upon the stage of Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the audience rose in greeting, as they have done for a dozen years past.

But this time they stood applauding a little longer than usual, and Dr. Munch stood bowing and smiling a little longer, because all knew this is to be his 13th and last season as music director. The custom of a rising salute to the artistic head of the Orchestra is more than formality. There is a degree of affection involved, and yesterday that seemed intensified.

But perception, not affection, was what governed my analytical ears, and that found yesterday's concert a marvel of sheer sound and instrumental virtuosity. Not always is even the Boston Symphnoy this great, or Dr. Munch either.

To be sure, his cool, detached way with Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn did not vitalize a score inherently a bit stodgy. These technically are excellent variations, but they show something of the North-German, square-cut aspect of Brahms which Vienna never quite eliminated. Propriety was Munch's keynote here, propriety and slow tempi. It became evident there are new members of the Friday audience this year, when a flutter of applause came from balcony and floor, as a few persons mistakenly thought the broad cadence of the seventh variation was the end of the piece.

Debussy's "Iberia," that lush and elegant masterpiece of French Impressionism, with an overlay of Spanish rhythmic and melodic facets, has become a specialty of Munch. This performance of it was the best yet from him. It was full of controlled passion and it was a model of orchestral clarity. The capricious turns of speed and nuance were all in place as details of a large tonal canvas. Even the final cadence was broadened a little.

For Debussy, as for the Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" which followed, Dr. Munch insisted upon richness and sweetness of tone to an extent greater than he has shown many a time in his 12 years with us. The result was true splendor.

Tchaikovsky's life cycle "Pathetic," which seems to emerge from the darkness of non-being and end in that of the grave after an existence of lamentation punctuated with gaiety and grim battle, received one of the most coherent and consistent performances I ever have heard.

It was a wonder, and especially in the fact that Munch, who often is fired to rush the tempo, never yielded to that temptation even in the march movement. The speed there was even all the way, and there was no coarseness, no clouding of instrumental timbres, no shrill hysteria.

But there was infinite polish and beauty, and in this respect the solo playing of Messrs. Cioffi, clarinet; Walt, bassoon, and Mayes, cello, was superlative.

We have heard the season superbly begun, and may look forward to more of the same, in Dr. Munch's valedictory year.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly - Circ. 27,809
OCT 5 1961

At Symphony Hall

Dr. Munch Opens B S O Season

By ALLAN SLY

Symphony Hall last Saturday evening was dominated by thoughts set in motion as we listened to and watched Dr. Munch open his last season among us. We shall observe this regime, this era, slowly draw to its close; one cannot but grow reflective.

As though mirroring our mood Dr. Munch evoked from the Brahms Haydn Variations an unfamiliar gentleness, a leisurely re-exploring of its subjective nature, as though there were more to be found there than we had yet realized. The orchestra, drawing on its own vast experience, met Dr. Munch more than half way, so that what we saw was the edifying and inspiring demonstration of an elder sharing his experience, his insights, with those most qualified to receive them.

There can be many different sorts of orchestral performance, according to the occasion. Our portion for this season is evidently to become a very treasured memory in the future.

This is not to say that the Brahms entirely lent itself to this treatment. Three years ago it had stronger impulsion and no less clarity. But if Dr. Muhch wants to show us a new aspect of a work there is virtue to be had in sharing his confidence; only the inflexible listener will balk and who wants to be inflexible?

The Debussy Iberia had its own and entirely different transports. Here the BSO's inexhaustible resources of color and nuance brought out from its conductor his most exalted sense of tone wizardry, of characterization, of insinuation, suggestion, persuasion. Debussy soared high above our earth-bound tonal "systems," the refuge of frustrated talent, of prostrate genius. There was none of that modern malady in the Iberia. In passing let it be asserted that no percussion department ever played so well as did the BSO's in this work.

The Tchaikowsky sixth was played with utter devotion to the integrity of a great composer, spokesman for a great composer, spokesman for a great people. What sombre hues, what foreboding, and yet what songlike release and joie de vivre, what heroics; what submission! In fact the whole program drew deep draughts of the humanities, the music seeming more than ever like a ritual undertaken to reveal greater wisdom yet.

Of the concert as a whole one must admit to noticing a minor infelicity here and there in the execution, but no great organism should be equated with a perfect machine, and let us not pretend that a perfect performance is necessarily a great one. Saturday's performance carried far beyond the confines of the Back Bay or of the new season's opening.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1961

Changing Faces

One proper Bostonian in the audience at the first concert of the Boston Symphony's 81st season, at Symphony Hall, Sept. 29, was reported to have observed: "Everything is the same; only the faces have changed a little."

A year hence, two faces exceedingly important to these concerts will have changed altogether. Charles Munch will have retired as music director, to be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf; and Richard Burgin will retire as concertmaster, but will continue as associate conductor.

Accordingly, when Mr. Munch strode out on the stage to begin his 13th and last season in Boston, the Orchestra and audience rose in greeting as usual. But this time they stood applauding a little longer than usual, and Mr. Munch stood bowing and smiling a little longer. These courtesies at season's beginning and end in Boston are not only pleasant formality—they also manifest genuine affection.

Mr. Munch kept to the standard repertory for this concert and its repetition on Sept. 30—Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Debussy's Iberia and Tchaikovsky's Pathetique Symphony. But the performance of both conductor and Orchestra reached an extraordinary peak of finesse and tonal richness that not even the Boston Symphony and Charles Munch always manage to attain.

To be sure, Mr. Munch did not vitalize a score inherently a bit stodgy —for Brahms's Variations, while technically excellent, do represent that north German, square-cut aspect of the composer that Vienna never was quite able to eliminate—and propriety and slow tempos reigned.

With Debussy's Iberia, matters changed abruptly. This lush and elegant masterpiece of impressionism, with its overlay of Spanish piquancy, has become a Munch speciality, and the performance was gorgeous and exceedingly clear.

The Pathetique was the high point, both for its own emotional voltage and for the extraordinary reading Munch gave it. Here, again, were utmost clarity, both of orchestral sound and instrumental detail. Mr. Munch often tends during a performance to speed up tempos, but in the March-Scherzo the pace was steady from first to last. The solo playing of Messrs. Cioffi, clarinet; Walt, bassoon; and Mayes, cello, was superlative. —Cyrus Durgin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
SEP 30 1961

Two Newcomers In Symphony

The opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 81st season yesterday found two newcomers in the ranks.

They are Gerald Gelbloom, who comes to Boston from the post of concertmaster in the Hartford Symphony, and Matthew Ruggiero, bassoon. Ruggiero has been a member of the New York Opera orchestra and the Philadelphia Little Symphony.

Gelbloom and Ruggiero succeed, respectively, Emil Kornsand and Theodore Brewster, who have retired.

Second Week

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 6, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

COPLAND ..... Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn
Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN English Horn: LOUIS SPEYER

BEETHOVEN ..... Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, Op. 58

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
III. Rondo: Vivace

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 58

I. Un poco sostenuto; allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; allegro non troppo, ma con brio

SOLOIST
MICHÈLE BOEGNER
Miss BOEGNER uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 7 1961

Photo Maywald

Michèle Boegner, French pianist, is making her American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the weekend concerts in Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 2 1961

French Pianist To Make Debut With Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Michèle Boegner to make her North American debut with the Boston Symphony at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (Oct. 6, 2:15) and Saturday (Oct. 7, 8:30) at Symphony Hall. Miss Boegner will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven: the remainder of Dr. Munch's program consists of "Quiet City" for Trumphet, English Horn, and Strings by Aaron Copland, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Born at Lyons (France) 1941, Miss Boegner began her musical studies at the age of five.. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Rose Lejour, Miss Boegner—at the age of 17 and in competition with 52 contestants from 19 nations— was awarded the Second Grand Prize at the Concours Georges Enesco in Bucharest. At 18 she made her Paris orchestral debut in a concert with the Orchestre Lamoureux conducted by Igor Markevitch (December 6, 1959).

Dr. Munch will conduct the first of ten Tuesday evening concerts at Symphony Hall Oct. 3. His program will include Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, "Ibéria" by Debussy, and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

The first concert of the annual Sunday afternoon series will be given next Sunday (Oct. 8) and the first of the Providence concerts will be given Oct. 10.

Nikita Magaloff will make his Boston Symphony debut at the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday-Saturday, Oct. 13-14, in a performance of the Piano Concerto in F minor by Chopin. The program, to be conducted by Dr. Munch, will also include Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 7 1961

-Boegner in Symphony Debut

French Pianist Plays Beethoven's No.4

By Harold Rogers

Perhaps it is too early in the season to say, but it looks as if Charles Munch intends to trot out the standards during his final season and enjoy himself in the playing of them. Last week it was the Tchaikovsky Sixth, this week it is the Brahms First, and next week it will be the "Eroica" of Beethoven. The pattern is forming.

Along with the Brahms First at the concert yesterday afternoon Dr. Munch programed Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, in which Michèle Boegner made her United States debut. Publicists who deal in 20-year-old pianists are eager to give prospective listeners the impression that anyone of this tender age who appears with the Boston Symphony is indeed worth hearing, and Mlle Boegner, true enough, is a musician of talent.

But some of us find it dispiriting to contemplate what a 20-year-old will do with Beethoven's No. 4: it would be difficult to name a work that would depend more upon an artist's interior forces. In this subjective area of music one does not get excited over the prospect of hearing a youngster at the keyboard; one gets excited over the announcement of a Backhaus, a Richter, a Serkin, or even a Rubinstein.

Young musicians, however talented, seldom have lived long enough, thought long enough, or prayed long enough to plunge beneath the surface of Beethoven's No. 4 and come up with the rich ore to be mined there. That Mlle Boegner played it as gracefully as she did, and at times as poetically as she did, is indeed to her credit. She is gifted with a fluent technique, with an appealingly warm tone, though the fullness of power may still be wanting. She essayed the long cadenza of the first movement with a great deal of command; the final Rondo, too, was equally well done.

But it is in the middle Andante con moto that a masterful projection of poetry is required, and here Mlle Boegner has much growing to do. Outwardly she played it beautifully — considered, warm, and just. But she did not enter deeply enough into the substance of the music to take us along. With the right artist the heavens can open.

* * *

This movement is especially interesting in its structure. The orchestra is demanding, even willful in its aggressive monologue. This mood is ignored by the piano; it goes its quiet and serene way as if engaged in prayer. As the movement proceeds, the willful orchestra retires while the contemplative piano comes to the fore. At the conclusion the piano—or the prayer—is triumphant; and the orchestra—or the aggression—has been conquered.

Mlle Boegner was acclaimed by her Symphony Hall listeners. She has a fresh, appealing personality and the prospects of a successful career before her.

Dr. Munch opened with Aaron Copland's short tone poem called "Quiet City," in which Roger Voisin's trumpet and Louis Speyer's English horn were featured. These solo voices sang eloquently as Mr. Copland's orchestra spread itself out in its open, moody chords. Beautifully constructed, it is one of Mr. Copland's more amiable efforts. The soloists were duly applauded for their excellent work.

As stated above, the pièce de résistance this week is the Brahms First, and yesterday it was filled with all the sweep and grandeur that Dr. Munch could muster.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 15 1961

From the Aisle

THEATER—Frederick Knott's "Write Me a Murder" at the Wilbur was highly praised for plot, writing, acting and directing. The Musical "Bye-Bye Birdie" at the Colonial was well received. "The reat God Brown" at the Charles found the audience "genuinely enthusiastic."

★ ★ ★

SCREEN—The Astor's "Splendor In the Grass" was given the nod as "likely to be among the honors candidates." At the Paramount "Greyfriars Bobby" was cited as "the bestthing thus far from the Walt Disney Studios." At Loew's Orpheum "Bridge to the Sun" was marred by a miscast lead.

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was a "triumph" for Charles Munch with Michele Boegner showing "big talent" in her piano soloist appearance. At Sanders Theater the New York Pro Musica showed intelligence and great musicality.

Second Week

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 6, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

COPLAND . . . . . Quiet City, for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn
Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN English Horn: LOUIS SPEYER

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, Op. 58
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto
III. Rondo: Vivace

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 58
I. Un poco sostenuto; allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; allegro non troppo, ma con brio

SOLOIST
MICHÈLE BOEGNER
Miss BOEGNER uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 7 1961

Photo Maywald
Michèle Boegner, French pianist, is making her American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the weekend concerts in Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 2 1961

French Pianist To Make Debut With Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Michèle Boegner to make her North American debut with the Boston Symphony at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (Oct. 6, 2:15) and Saturday (Oct. 7, 8:30) at Symphony Hall. Miss Boegner will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven: the remainder of Dr. Munch's program consists of "Quiet City" for Trumphet, English Horn, and Strings by Aaron Copland, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Born at Lyons (France) 1941, Miss Boegner began her musical studies at the age of five. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Rose Lejour, Miss Boegner—at the age of 17 and in competition with 52 contestants from 19 nations— was awarded the Second Grand Prize at the Concours Georges Enesco in Bucharest. At 18 she made her Paris orchestral debut in a concert with the Orchestre Lamoureux conducted by Igor Markevitch (December 6, 1959).

Dr. Munch will conduct the first of ten Tuesday evening concerts at Symphony Hall Oct. 3. His program will include Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, "Ibéria" by Debussy, and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

The first concert of the annual Sunday afternoon series will be given next Sunday (Oct. 8) and the first of the Providence concerts will be given Oct. 10.

Nikita Magaloff will make his Boston Symphony debut at the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday-Saturday, Oct. 13-14, in a performance of the Piano Concerto in F minor by Chopin. The program, to be conducted by Dr. Munch, will also include Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 7 1961

Boegner in Symphony Debut

French Pianist Plays Beethoven's No.4

By Harold Rogers

Perhaps it is too early in the season to say, but it looks as if Charles Munch intends to trot out the standards during his final season and enjoy himself in the playing of them. Last week it was the Tchaikovsky Sixth, this week it is the Brahms First, and next week it will be the "Eröica" of Beethoven. The pattern is forming.

Along with the Brahms First at the concert yesterday afternoon Dr. Munch programed Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto, in which Michèle Boegner made her United States debut. Publicists who deal in 20-year-old pianists are eager to give prospective listeners the impression that anyone of this tender age who appears with the Boston Symphony is indeed worth hearing, and Mlle Boegner, true enough, is a musician of talent.

But some of us find it dispiriting to contemplate what a 20-year-old will do with Beethoven's No. 4: it would be difficult to name a work that would depend more upon an artist's interior forces. In this subjective area of music one does not get excited over the prospect of hearing a youngster at the keyboard; one gets excited over the announcement of a Backhaus, a Richter, a Serkin, or even a Rubinstein.

Young musicians, however talented, seldom have lived long enough, thought long enough, or prayed long enough to plunge beneath the surface of Beethoven's No. 4 and come up with the rich ore to be mined there. That Mlle Boegner played it as gracefully as she did, and at times as poetically as she did, is indeed to her credit. She is gifted with a fluent technique, with an appealingly warm tone, though the fullness of power may still be wanting. She essayed the long cadenza of the first movement with a great deal of command; the final Rondo, too, was equally well done.

But it is in the middle Andante con moto that a masterful projection of poetry is required, and here Mlle Boegner has much growing to do. Outwardly she played it beautifully — considered, warm, and just. But she did not enter deeply enough into the substance of the music to take us along. With the right artist the heavens can open.

♪ ♪ ♪

This movement is especially interesting in its structure. The orchestra is demanding, even willful in its aggressive monologue. This mood is ignored by the piano; it goes its quiet and serene way as if engaged in prayer. As the movement proceeds, the willful orchestra retires while the contemplative piano comes to the fore. At the conclusion the piano—or the prayer—is triumphant; and the orchestra—or the aggression—has been conquered.

Mlle Boegner was acclaimed by her Symphony Hall listeners. She has a fresh, appealing personality and the prospects of a successful career before her.

Dr. Munch opened with Aaron Copland's short tone poem called "Quiet City," in which Roger Voisin's trumpet and Louis Speyer's English horn were featured. These solo voices sang eloquently as Mr. Copland's orchestra spread itself out in its open, moody chords. Beautifully constructed, it is one of Mr. Copland's more amiable efforts. The soloists were duly applauded for their excellent work.

As stated above, the pièce de résistance this week is the Brahms First, and yesterday it was filled with all the sweep and grandeur that Dr. Munch could muster.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 15 1961

From the Aisle

THEATER—Frederick Knott's "Write Me a Murder" at the Wilbur was highly praised for plot, writing, acting and directing. The Musical "Bye-Bye Birdie" at the Colonial was well received. "The rest God Brown" at the Charles found the audience "genuinely enthusiastic."

★ ★ ★

SCREEN—The Astor's "Splendor In the Grass" was given the nod as "likely to be among the honors candidates." At the Paramount "Greyfriars Bobby" was cited as "the bestthing thus far from the Walt Disney Studios." At Loew's Orpheum "Bridge to the Sun" was marred by a miscast lead.

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was a "triumph" for Charles Munch with Michele Boegner showing "big talent" in her piano soloist appearance. At Sanders Theater the New York Pro Musica showed intelligence and great musicality.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 7 1961

The Symphony

Young French Pianist Displays Big Talent

By ROBERT TAYLOR

And if you are 20 and chestnut-haired and slim and tall and bursting with youth, like Michele Boegner, the French pianist who made her American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday, does the prospect of Beethoven's formidable Fourth Piano Concerto daunt you?

Not at all. Miss Boegner, wearing a short pale-green frock that somehow emphasized a coltish vulnerability, bowed with solemn composure to this strange audience in an alien country, then strode to the piano bench, took her time adjusting it, and finally beamed expectantly at Charles Munch, her senior by some 50 years.

She was sure about her talent; and, as matters turned out, her faith was justified. It is a big talent, indeed. The Fourth is not the easiest of Beethoven's five piano concertos. In fact, the qualities of the score demand the tact of maturity.

Gaudy Splash

That a young performer should select it, when other scores reveal more flash and dazzle and virtuosic boldness, all the elements of a gaudy debutante splash, seems in itself remarkable. The Concerto speaks so gently, and is so intermingled with the orchestral material that the solo performer does not appear in high relief.

Although less technically demanding than the "Emperor," the word "challenging" nevertheless applies to No. 4; the moods of poignance, of sweet melodic intimacy, require subtlety of a lofty order. From the delicate opening utterance, Miss Boegner's reasons of choice became plainer. The shape of her gift is lyric and romantic.

This was an exceedingly youthful interpretation, in the best sense: bouyant, fresh and high-spirited. The artist's phrasings, delicately-modelled, attained significance by their refinement and simplicity.

At times, in the heroic dialogue between the staccato piano octaves and the strings, for instance, she exhibited a scrupulous rhythmic feeling that was almost stiff, and her tone occasionally lacked depth, though containing an enamelled surface of color—but that was integral, too.

Work Precise

Miss Boegner commands volume when she needs to use it, and the most tender of pianissimos. The articulation of her work is precise and carefully proportioned; not an accent was unclear. She allowed the andante to melt into frail serenity, then the final rondo built into a smooth and inevitable pattern.

In short, a thoroughly musical reading from an admirable pianist. One would like to hear more from Michele Boegner, to assess her talent in various contexts: but she is definitely a prodigious technician and an artist whose development may be followed with interest.

The orchestral role—a major one here—offered close rapport under Charles Munch, who permitted the soloist a sprightly pace while retaining tight control over the thematic lines.

Bright Texture

Dr. Munch's triumph of the afternoon, however, came in the Brahms First. Seldom has he projected it with such directness and dramatic vigor. His tempi were not overly fast, though a nervous intensity of beat in the final movement gave one the impression that the pace had accelerated.

The structural and dynamic balances, the bright textures and emphatic climaxes made this one of the more emotional readings of the work. Yet Dr. Munch's desire to keep things moving did not stand in the way of a pervasive mellow warmth, and at the end he received a tumultous ovation, entirely merited.

Opening the program, Aaron Copeland's "Quiet City" demonstrated a plangent, muted suite of moods. The score is a minor one, but evocative and fetching thanks to the grace of a dreamy atmospheric dark style. The soloists, Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, acquitted themselves, as always, with glory.

Next week Nikita Magaloff will be the soloist in Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2, in F. minor, Op. 21. Charles Munch has also scheduled Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky," Op. 44, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the second program of the 81st season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Michele Boegner, piano; was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Quiet City ..... Copeland
Piano Concerto No. 4, in G major, Op. 58 ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op 58 ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
OCT 1 1961

Boston Symphony Concerts

Michele Boegner, French pianist just turned 20, will make her North American debut as soloist in Beethoven's G major Piano Concerto at the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Dr. Munch also will conduct Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and the C minor Symphony by Brahms.

Born at Lyons, France, Aug. 12, 1941, Miss Boegner began her musical studies at the age of 5. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Rose Lejour, Miss Boegner at the age of 17 and in competition with 52 contestants from 19 nations, was awarded the Second Grand Prize at the Concours Georges Enesco in Bucharest. At 18 she made her Paris orchestral debut with the Orchestre Lamoureux conducted by Igor Markevitch, Dec. 6, 1959.

The first of the 10 Tuesday evening concerts will be performed Oct. 3 at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Dr. Munch will conduct Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; "Iberia" by Debussy, and the "Pathetic" Symphony of Tchaikovsky.

The Sunday afternoon series at Symphony Hall will begin Oct. 8.

Pianist Nikita Magaloff will appear for the first times with this orchestra as soloist in the F minor Concerto of Chopin at the Symphony Hall concerts in the Friday-Saturday series, Oct. 13 and 14. Dr. Munch's program further will include Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 2 1961

OCT. 6 FIRST SYMPHONY

Charles Munch has invited Michele Boegner to make her North American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Orchestra's concerts on Friday, 2:15, and Saturday, 8:30, at Symphony Hall. Miss Boegner will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 1 1961

French Pianist in Debut With Symphony This Week

Charles Munch has invited Michele Boegner to make her North American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the concerts this Friday at 2:15 p.m., and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. at Symphony Hall. Miss Boegner will be heard in the Piano Concerto No. 4 by Beethoven; the remainder of Doctor Munch's program will consist of "Quiet City," for Trumpet, English Horn and Strings, by Aaron Copland and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Born at Lyons, France, on Aug. 12, 1941, Miss Boegner began her musical studies at the age of five. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Rose Lejour, Miss Boegner — at the age of seventeen and in competition with 52 contestants from 19 nations — was awarded the Second Grand Prize at the Concours Georges Enesco in Bucharest. At eighteen she made her Paris orchestral debut in a concert with the Orchestre Lamoureux conducted by Igor Markevitch.

Charles Munch will conduct the first of ten Tuesday evening concerts at Symphony Hall Oct. 3. His program will include Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, "Iberia" by Debussy and the Symphony No 6 by Tchaikovsky.

The first concert of the orchestra's annual Sunday afternoon series will be given next Sunday, Oct. 8, and the first of the orchestra's Providence concerts on Oct. 10.

Nikita Magaloff will make his Boston Symphony debut at the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday-Saturday, Oct. 13-14, in a performance of the Piano Concerto in F minor by chopin. The program, to be conducted by Charles Munch, will also include Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3.

Drive-In Bills

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
OCT 2 1961

Soloist With Symphony Pianist Michele Boegner

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, played at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the second program of the Friday—Saturday series. Michele Boegner, French pianist, made her American debut as soloist in the G major Concerto of Beethoven. Dr. Munch began with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," and concluded with the C minor Symphony of Brahms.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Beethoven's G major Piano Concerto is not for the quite young, but Michele Boegner performed the solo part of it with the Boston Symphony, yesterday afternoon, in a manner which did her credit. She is only 20, a musician born in Lyon, and she was making her American debut. That would be an occasion to unnerve the middle-aged and famous. Miss Boegner plainly was uneasy as she hitched about a little on the piano bench when first she sat down.

There was little trace of nervousness in what followed, for Miss Boegner is broadly and richly talented. She played fluently, with a bright, almost percussive tone, a good sense of rhythm. What was lacking here was the artistic maturity, the emotional depth to make the most of the subtleties in this great and endlessly demanding masterwork. One test of an experienced artist is the phrasing of the final sequence of notes in the slow movement; he who can do it just right inevitably is a master. Miss Boegner is not yet a master, though I suspect that after a few years she will become one.

The Friday audience received her with pleasing cordiality. She looked very appealing, bowing, smiling, seemingly a little shy, the skirt of her turquoise gown (as it appeared to a male glance) whirling as she walked in a forthright, athletic stride. I do wish, however, some other work had been selected for her debut.

Dr. Munch began the afternoon with a merited revival of Aaron Copland's admirable miniature, "Quiet City," a bit of mood music with fine structure and substance. "Quiet City" further served to give us the bravura trumpet playing of Roger Voisin, and Louis Speyer's exquisite mastery of the English horn. Both artists were singled out by Dr. Munch for bows of their own; each richly deserved the honor.

Brahms' First Symphony was pure eloquence from the first chord in C minor to the last unison C. This was a spacious reading, soulful, dramatic, revelatory of all the majesty in this grand peak among later 19th Century symphonies. Except for speeding up a little too soon, in the final movement, Dr. Munch's tempi were of that moderate order which serves Brahms best. The harmonizing inner voices he stressed a little more than he used to do, to excellent effect, and never too much. No wonder that applause broke in upon the final notes. People cannot contain themselves when they are stirred as was yesterday's audience.

Next week Nikita Magaloff will appear with the Boston Symphony for the first time, in the F minor Piano Concerto of Chopin. Dr. Munch will begin with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and will conclude with Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

• Tonight & Tomorrow

Springfield Concert

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2075, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
OCT 3 1961

HOUSE FILLED AS SYMPHONY OPENS SERIES

Dr. Munch in Final Appearance Here Before Retirement

The Junior League Concert Series for 1961-62 was opened on Monday night in Municipal Auditorium with a performance by the Boston Symphony under the conductorship of Dr. Charles Munch.

Retires Next Summer

Several things were significant about the concert—it was Dr. Munch's final appearance in Springfield before his retirement next summer, and the well-known orchestra was heard on the heels of a successful season at Tanglewood.

With this latter thought in mind, it was wondered just what size audience would appear. Would music lovers wait for some other type of concert?

The answer must have been reassuring to all concerned. A well-filled house and a warm response made the evening successful.

Solid Program

Perhaps sentiment both for the retirement of Dr. Munch and his orchestral selections influenced those in attendance. It was a solid program built around Brahms, Debussy and Tschaikowsky.

It would be almost unfair to point an accusing finger at the rendition of any opening number on a concert program. The symphony prefaced its major playing with the Brahms "Variations On a Theme by Haydn." The reading was academic and somewhat arid in texture.

"Iberia" (Images, No. 2), written by Debussy — the connoisseur in sensitivity — proved many things. "Par les Rues et Par les Chemins" (Through the Highways and Byways) began firmly and the brass section showed itself to be as brilliant as a burning sun. "Les Parfums de la Nuit" (The Perfumes of the Night) made all the more shadowy with the use of muted strings and poignant passages for English horn, mirrored the same mystical quality of the composer. In sharp contrast, the orchestra held a strong grip on the closing section, "Le Matin d'un Jour de Fete" (Holiday Morning).

Debussy Enjoyed

It was sensed that Dr. Munch really enjoyed conducting the Debussy—he knew it displayed his orchestra at its most artistic and persuasive being.

Tschaikowsky's gigantic "Pathetique" symphony closed the program. Dr. Munch was not paralyzed by any past performances of this work, as is often the case when the familiar themes can—and do—become sticky under less capable direction. The symphony, aptly titled, has all the habiliments of melancholy stressed in the minor mood. Its stupendous developments were kept in proportion by a central mind, Dr. Munch.

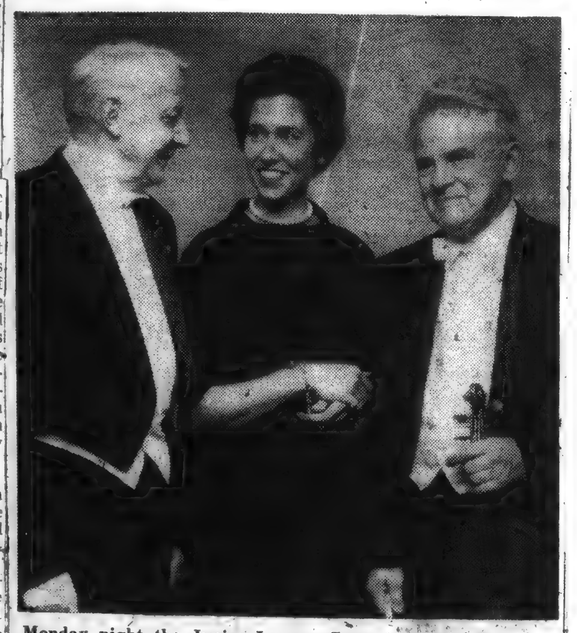
The next concert will be Dec. 12 when Boris Goldovsky's Grand Opera Theater will perform "The Barber of Seville."

M. H.

Boston Symphony Impresses Concert Goers

Intermission time at the Junior League Concert Series, which opened last night at Municipal Auditorium with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Dr. Charles Munch, saw opening night patrons chatting about the musical presentation given by the famed Hub orchestral aggregation.

First in Concert Series



Monday night the Junior League Concert series began in Springfield Municipal Auditorium. The Junior League, through the Concert Association of Greater Springfield, presented the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of conductor Charles Munch. Left to right are, Dr. Munch, Mrs. Edward F. Bridgman, chairman of the Artist Committe for the 1962-63 season, and Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
OCT 8 1961

Boston Symphony Gives Memorable Concert Here

Famed Orchestra, Under Baton of Dr. Charles Munch, Opens Junior League Series

With an instantaneous and instinctive communication between orchestra and conductor, Dr. Charles Munch, distinguished and renowned conductor of the Boston Symhony Orchestra, once again, produced a memorable concert last night in Springfield's Municipal Auditorium to open the Junior League Concert Series for 1961-1962.

With the exception of the gray hair and the slight stoop, Dr. Munch betrays none of his 70-plus years. His vibrant approach to the work of the evening and uninterrupted rapport with the members of the orchestra was never so evident as in the moving interpretation of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, Op. 74, better known as "Pathetique." A master of melody, Tchaikovsky's melancholic nature forms the basic weave to most of his works. In "Pathetique" there is a repeated stressing of this minor mood which is heightened by the depths to which he is able to plunge the spirit of the music. A moment's break, the slightest inattention and the all important, all obvious mood is lost. Dr. Munch, the master, is in control at all times.

Although the Auditorium was not filled to the capacity such a performance should command and despite some lapses on the part of the audience concerning their punctuality and demeanor the occasion was memorable. In all probability this was the last appearance of Dr. Munch with the orchestra in this city prior to his retirement which has been announced for next summer.

The orchestra opened its program with Brahms Variation on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56, a fine piece and done well; but it remained for their performance of Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2) to really show their spirit and form. It is a bright, dramatic piece depicting in sound the Iberian character with some melodic landscape work. Through the sensuous swellings of rhythm and vitality which give way to calm expanses of musical peace the orchestra led by the celebrated Dr. Munch played with the excitement of a first attempt but the confidence of long experience.

In the performance of "Pathetique" the symphony was able to draw to perfection the musical sketch complete with its shadings. The crashing roar of the exuberant Tchaikovsky and the abysmal depths of his mood were well portrayed by the orchestra. Their musical victory and professional competence was nowhere proved better than in the absolute silence they commanded at the end of the piece. Truly the Boston Symphony was able, once again, to capture another city's hearts.

J. E. K.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
OCT 6 1961

A Student Idea

'Night School' At Symphony In 10th Year

By GAIL KREDENSER

The Boston Symphony's "night school" will begin its 10th year Oct. 12 when the first of 10 open rehearsals is held at Symphony Hall.

The series could well be called the Symphony's "night school." Among its "graduates" are Russell Stanger, recently appointed assistant to New York Philharmonic conductor Leonard Bernstein, and many other musicians and music teachers.

In fact, students actually were responsible for the creation of the series, founded in 1951 by Symphony director Charles Munch.

In 1950, a Harvard Crimson editorial pointed out that, although the orchestra was listed in college catalogues as one of Boston's chief cultural attractions, tickets were scarce and few students could afford regular concert prices.

In response, Munch decided to open several rehearsals to the students, charging reduced prices compatible with their budgets.

If they are students, Munch reasoned, why not let them study? Attending the rehearsals might serve as a sort of "music laboratory" where they could watch one of the world's best orchestras in action.

Since the series began, thousands have flocked to some 85 rehearsals. The majority of the audience remains college students.

Like the rush line for the Friday afternoon concerts, the Wednesday and Thursday evening rehearsals have their own ritual.

Doors open promptly at 6:45, and fleet-footed students, many carrying school books or scores, scramble for their favorite seats. Rehearsal audiences may sit anywhere in the hall, and everyone has his own opinion of where the best spot is.

Those who are studying instruments generally sit as close to their instrument section as possible in order to watch fingering, breathing and other techniques.

Some listeners prefer sitting in the center, floor, while others prefer the balconies because they have a theory that the "music floats up."

Some second balcony-ites just wouldn't be comfortable anywhere else.

The orchestra, like the audience, is garbed informally. But, if the atmosphere is informal, it is also a working atmosphere. The silver-haired conductor—who is due to retire at the end of this season—brooks no nonsense from the audience.

When an occasional musical mishap generates a snicker, a stamp of the Munch foot, a "sh!" or an eloquent glare and the audience meekly settles into silence.

Rehearsal goers sometimes get treats which regular concert buffs miss: composer Aaron Copland, in a stint as guest conductor, explaining his own works; Leonard Bernstein, acting as soloist, conductor and lecturer for a Mozart piano concerto.

Munch, sniffing at two daffodils left on his music stand, climbing from the podium to offer them to first flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer—those are a few of the memories rehearsal fans collect as other people collect stamps.

Rehearsal audiences have heard soloists such as Leonid Kogan, the Russian violinist; Greek contralto Elena Nikolaidi, violinist Isaac Stern and pianist Robert Casadesus.

Watching is very much a part of the rehearsal tradition, and among conductors the audiences have intently observed are Pierre Monteux; BSO Associate Conductor, Richard Burgin, the late Guido Cantelli, Ernest Ansermet and Aaron Copland.

Music runs the gamut from classical and modern works for orchestra and/or soloists to great choral - orchestral masterpieces such as Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" and Verdi's "Requiem."

The first rehearsal will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Columbus Day—which has nothing to do with the phone number of Symphony Hall: CO 6-1492.

THE SYMPHONY REHEARSES WITH COMBINED HARVARD AND RADCLIFFE GLEE CLUBS

Third Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
OCT 14 1961

Music

Dr. Munch Honored At First Rehearsal

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — A capacity audience was in attendance at the initial open rehearsal program of the season last evening in Symphony hall, Boston, to shower greetings on Dr. Charles Munch, his guest artist, Nikita Magaloff, pianist, and the talented membership that makes up the roster of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Dr. Charles Munch

Among those in attendance were a group of musical educators representing 18 states, and the members of the celebrated Russian Ballet company who will be seen on tour in this country.

No doubt, the ballet group were desirous to not only see the famous orchestra in performance, but also to see how a fellow countryman is received here. They were amazed by the orchestra's tremendous capacity for superb playing, and thrilled by the reception accorded the talented artist from their native land.

Turning to Mr. Magaloff everyone present was completely satisfied that he is a fine pianist. He possesses the basic requirements for both technical execution as well as the ability to become a part of the overall picture while performing with an orchestra. However, his performance on the Chopin Concerto No. 2 in F major, though quite acceptable failed to produce the full scope of what the music can provide.

We are ready to admit that this work is not a giant Chopin or a blazing example of orchestral creation, but it does however, contain the means of producing many moments of pianistic style that can hold the listener in a vice of artistic steel

Somewhere along the line the pianist provided moments when his runs and scales were bright and beautifully balanced, but at no time were there passages that vibrated with life and dazzling color

It is possible that some other composition might have done more for the visiting artist and it is also possible that he was endeavoring to find his musical platform which would assure his security. It would be worth waiting for if Mr Magaloof were to return next season with the orchestra, in an entirely different type of music and also with the poise and assurance that the "second time around" provides

Opening with Dr. Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," the orchestra responded to Dr Munch's creative ideas with a brilliance and styling that was the final word in artistry. This does not mean that the conductor was completely satisfied, because he stopped the orchestra time and again to explain and rehearse a group of passages that somehow failed to unfold

BUT HERE AGAIN, the orchestra rallied and went forth to prove to everyone that it really is the finest of musical ensembles. How true, where could any other orchestra in the world provide such perfect tonal effects and with such color of interpretative purity

Not to be forgotten by those present was the reading and rhythmitical pace as that displayed last evening? We of Beethoven's "Eroica." Is any string section in the musical world capable of such dynamic force, tonal progression think not, and the almost wild response on the part of the Russian group more than supported this opinion

The program that Rosalind Elias will sing in her Andover Celebrity series recital in George Washington hall, Andover, on Friday evening, Oct 27, has been announced and is as follows: Almighty Gods of Night from "Alcester," Gluck; Non so liu cosa son, Mozart; Io mi levai, Santoliquido; Fiocca la neve, Cimara; La Ermita de San Simon, Castelnuovo-Tedesco; Aria, Stride la Vampa, "Il Travatore," Verdi; L'aio de Rotso, Canteloube; Dos Cantares populares and El Vito, Obradors; Velvet Shoes, Thompson; followed by Samba, Berger; Visions, Sjoberg and "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands, Forrest.

It has been announced by Mrs. Bernice R. Bigelow, director, that the soloists for the annual presentation of the Messiah by the combined choirs of the Pelham, N. H., Congregation and First Congregational churches of Lowell have been selected. Included will be Lois Penn, soprano; Anne Sousa, contralto; Wesley Copplestone, tenor and Ray Fennelle, bass. Richard Chadwick, organist-choir director of the Lowell church will be the organist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
OCT 13 1961

Hub Symphony, Russian Ballet Ignore Cold War

In Boston last night two groups—miles apart in political ideology—gave evidence that on the artistic front, at least, there is harmony and friendship.

It was the visit of the Leningrad Kirov Ballet members that turned the first annual open rehearsal of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into a pleasant turmoil.

The Russian dancers pranced into the practice session with the exuberant anticipation of hearing the famed orchestra renowned throughout the world.

Many of the Russian dancers had seen the group when they toured the Soviet Union. Others had looked forward to their Boston visit and the chance to hear the Boston orchestra for the first time.

There was an excited reunion between the orchestra members and the interpreter for the ballet group. She is Helen Konstantinovskaya who had been with the Symphony Orchestra throughout its entire tour of Russia, including Leningrad and Moscow.

Among the Russian group were Olga Zabotkena, a star and soloist in the ballet, the artistic director, Constantine Sergeieff and ballet conductors Dubovsoi and Kalentiev.

At the end of the rehearsal the group, with a show of enthusiastic approval, paid their respects to conductor Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,181
OCT 13 1961

Russians, Dr. Munch Swap Talk

BOSTON Oct. 13 (UPI)—Members of the Russian Kirov Ballet and the Boston Symphony Orchestra met last night in an impromptu cultural exchange.

The informal exchange took place when Helen Konstantinovskaya, the ballet's official interpreter, who has served as interpreter for the Boston Symphony when it toured Russia five years ago arrived at Symphony Hall last night with six Kirov Ballerinas, the ballet's artistic director, Konstantin Sergeiev, and ballet conductors Dubovskoi and Kalentiev.

Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony and members of the orchestra met with the visitors and carried on a conversation in English, Russian and French.

The Kirov Ballet, on tour in this country, will perform tonight and Saturday afternoon at Boston Garden.

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 14, at 8:30 o'clock

HANSON ..... Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44

CHOPIN ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor, Op. 21

I. Maestoso
II. Larghetto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN .....*Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica"

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

SOLOIST
NIKITA MAGALOFF
Mr. Magaloff uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 12 1961

First Symphony Appearance Slated Here for Magaloff

Orchestra to Hold First of Ten Open Rehearsals Tonight

Charles Munch has invited Nikita Magaloff to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Magaloff will be guest at the Friday and Saturday concerts this week in a performance of Chopin's Piano Concerto no. 2, in F minor. Doctor Munch will open these concerts with Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and conclude with the Symphony no. 3, "Eroica", by Beethoven. An open rehearsal of this program, the first of ten to be given this year, will be held at 7:30 this evening in Symphony Hall.

Although born in Russia, Nikita Magaloff and his family soon fled to Finland to escape the Russian Revolution. Encouraged by Serge Prokofiev, a family friend, Nikita Magaloff first studied with A. Siloti, pupil of Franz Liszt, and later with Isidore Philipp at the Paris Conservatoire.

The orchestra and Doctor Munch will be on tour the week of October 16 to perform in Rochester, Cincinnati, Lexington, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

The orchestra will be heard in a special concert for the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO at Symphony Hall on October 24. Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra's concerts on October 27 and 28 and Charles Munch has invited Lukas Foss and Adele Addison to be his guests at the Symphony Hall concerts on November 3 and 4

Third Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
OCT 14 1961

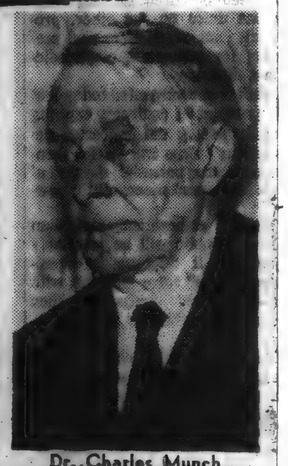
Music

Dr. Munch Honored At First Rehearsal

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — A capacity audience was in attendance at the initial open rehearsal program of the season last evening in Symphony hall, Boston, to shower greetings on Dr. Charles Munch, his guest artist, Nikita Magaloff, pianist, and the talented membership that makes up the roster of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Among those in attendance were a group of musical educators representing 18 states, and the members of the celebrated Russian Ballet company who will be seen on tour in this country.



Dr. Charles Munch

No doubt, the ballet group were desirous to not only see the famous orchestra in performance, but also to see how a fellow countryman is received here. They were amazed by the orchestra's tremendous capacity for superb playing, and thrilled by the reception accorded the talented artist from their native land.

Turning to Mr. Magaloff everyone present was completely satisfied that he is a fine pianist. He possesses the basic requirements for both technical execution as well as the ability to become a part of the overall picture while performing with an orchestra. However, his performance on the Chopin Concerto No. 2 in F major, though quite acceptable failed to produce the full scope of what the music can provide.

We are ready to admit that this work is not a giant Chopin or a blazing example of orchestral creation, but it does however, contain the means of producing many moments of pianistic style that can hold the listener in a vice of artistic steel

Somewhere along the line the pianist provided moments when his runs and scales were bright and beautifully balanced, but at no time were there passages that vibrated with life and dazzling color

It is possible that some other composition might have done more for the visiting artist and it is also possible that he was endeavoring to find his musical platform which would assure his security. It would be worth waiting for if Mr Magaloof were to return next season with the orchestra, in an entirely different type of music and also with the poise and assurance that the "second time around" provides

Opening with Dr. Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," the orchestra responded to Dr Munch's creative ideas with a brilliance and styling that was the final word in artistry. This does not mean that the conductor was completely satisfied, because he stopped the orchestra time and again to explain and rehearse a group of passages that somehow failed to unfold

BUT HERE AGAIN, the orchestra rallied and went forth to prove to everyone that it really is the finest of musical ensembles. How true, where could any other orchestra in the world provide such perfect tonal effects and with such color of interpretative purity

Not to be forgotten by those present was the reading and rhythmitical pace as that displayed last evening? We of Beethoven's "Eroica." Is any string section in the musical world capable of such dynamic force, tonal progression think not, and the almost wild response on the part of the Russian group more than supported this opinion

The program that Rosalind Elias will sing in her Andover Celebrity series recital in George Washington hall, Andover, on Friday evening, Oct 27, has been announced and is as follows: Almighty Gods of Night from "Alcester," Gluck; Non so liu cosa son, Mozart; Io mi levai, Santoliquido; Fiocca la neve, Cimara; La Ermita de San Simon, Castelnuovo-Tedesco; Aria, Stride la Vampa, "Il Travatore," Verdi; L'alo de Rotso, Canteloube; Dos Cantares populares and El Vito, Obradors; Velvet Shoes, Thompson; followed by Samba, Berger; Visions, Sjoberg and "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands, Forrest.

It has been announced by Mrs. Bernice R. Bigelow, director, that the soloists for the annual presentation of the Messiah by the combined choirs of the Pelham, N. H., Congregation and First Congregational churches of Lowell have been selected. Included will be Lois Penn, soprano; Anne Sousa, contralto; Wesley Copplestone, tenor and Ray Fennelle, bass. Richard Chadwick, organist-choir director of the Lowell church will be the organist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
OCT 13 1961

Hub Symphony, Russian Ballet Ignore Cold War

In Boston last night two groups—miles apart in political ideology—gave evidence that on the artistic front, at least, there is harmony and friendship.

It was the visit of the Leningrad Kirov Ballet members that turned the first annual open rehearsal of the season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra into a pleasant turmoil.

The Russian dancers pranced into the practice session with the exuberant anticipation of hearing the famed orchestra renowned throughout the world.

Many of the Russian dancers had seen the group when they toured the Soviet Union. Others had looked forward to their Boston visit and the chance to hear the Boston orchestra for the first time.

There was an excited reunion between the orchestra members and the interpreter for the ballet group. She is Helen Konstantinovskaya who had been with the Symphony Orchestra throughout its entire tour of Russia, including Leningrad and Moscow.

Among the Russian group were Olga Zabotkena, a star and soloist in the ballet, the artistic director, Constantine Sergeieff and ballet conductors Dubovsoi and Kalentiev.

At the end of the rehearsal the group, with a show of enthusiastic approval, paid their respects to conductor Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,181
OCT 13 1961

Russians, Dr. Munch Swap Talk

BOSTON Oct. 13 (UPI)—Members of the Russian Kirov Ballet and the Boston Symphony Orchestra met last night in an impromptu cultural exchange.

The informal exchange took place when Helen Konstantinovskaya, the ballet's official interpreter, who has served as interpreter for the Boston Symphony when it toured Russia five years ago arrived at Symphony Hall last night with six Kirov Ballerinas, the ballet's artistic director, Konstantin Sergeiev, and ballet conductors Dubovskoi and Kalentiev.

Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony and members of the orchestra met with the visitors and carried on a conversation in English, Russian and French.

The Kirov Ballet, on tour in this country, will perform tonight and Saturday afternoon at Boston Garden.

Third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 14, at 8:30 o'clock

HANSON ..... Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44

CHOPIN ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor, Op. 21

I. Maestoso
II. Larghetto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica"

I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

SOLOIST
NIKITA MAGALOFF
Mr. MAGALOFF uses the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 12 1961

First Symphony Appearance Slated Here for Magaloff

Orchestra to Hold First of Ten Open Rehearsals Tonight

Charles Munch has invited Nikita Magaloff to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Magaloff will be guest at the Friday and Saturday concerts this week in a performance of Chopin's Piano Concerto no. 2, in F minor. Doctor Munch will open these concerts with Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and conclude with the Symphony no. 3, "Eroica", by Beethoven. An open rehearsal of this program, the first of ten to be given this year, will be held at 7:30 this evening in Symphony Hall.

Although born in Russia, Nikita Magaloff and his family soon fled to Finland to escape the Russian Revolution. Encouraged by Serge Prokofiev, a family friend, Nikita Magaloff first studied with A. Siloti, pupil of Fyang Liszt, and later with Isidore Philipp at the Paris Conservatoire.

The orchestra and Doctor Munch will be on tour the week of October 16 to perform in Rochester, Cincinnati, Lexington, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

The orchestra will be heard in a special concert for the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO at Symphony Hall on October 24. Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra's concerts on October 27 and 28 and Charles Munch has invited Lukas Foss and Adele Addison to be his guests at the Symphony Hall concerts on November 3 and 4

40
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 14 1961

Nikita Magaloff Debut With Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, played in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday–Saturday series. Howard Hanson: Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky; Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor—Nikita Magaloff soloist (his first appearance with the Boston Symphony); Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon ran the gamut, if not from A to Z, from A to M—that is to say, from admirable to mediocre. In between came excellence in the form of a pianist almost new to Boston, Nikita Magaloff, and eloquence, which dwelled in Howard Hanson's Elegy and in parts of the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony.

Magaloff is almost new in this city because until yesterday he had been heard here but once, in a small hall in 1949. This first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the F minor Concerto of Chopin, was a most happy occasion. While the music is hardly more than glorified salon stuff —Chopin wore the symphonic style uneasily, and his concerti are nearly the least of his work — the performance was superb.

Magaloff has a technic of notable evenness and polish. Under his fingers all the notes are beautifully articulated and they sing. His rhythm is unfailingly steady, rubato always taken within the measure and never straddling the principal beat. He got along splendidly with the Orchestra.

Beyond technic is a shining gift of tone-poetry, lyrical and lovely, not common even in a day of numerous fine pianists. The Chopin style was genuine, rich and broad, the phrases arched gracefully, and feeling never crystallized into sugar. No wonder that the audience burst in with applause before the final chord was over, and recalled Magaloff to bow several times.

Howard Hanson must have designed the string voices of his Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, to sound with the vibrating intensity and the blaze of color which characterized the Boston Symphony strings when Koussevitzky reigned. The entire piece may be no more than a tasteful tribute, but it is music of emotion and entirely suited to its purpose. Dr. Munch's conducting of it, and the work of the musicians, left nothing to be desired.

The mediocrity of the afternoon, together with part of the eloquence, inhabited the "Eroica." This was a peculiar reading, characterized by ups and downs. Just after the initial two E-flat chords, it seemed that Dr. Munch immediately slowed the tempo, as if to avoid a beginning that might prove too fast. There were strange moments of orchestral unbalance, inner and lower voices now and again too prominent, less than the passion one would like in this movement.

The first theme of the funeral march, sounded in the first violins, was run together, with none of that fine distinction between dotted notes and the shorter ones which follow, that you expect of this section. The fault surely must lie with Dr. Munch. The horns were not quite square on the pitch in the trio of the scherzo, which, further, was a hair too slow. The finale emerged rather better, but taken all in all, the Symphony has been done better by Dr. Munch.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Oct. 27 and 28, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. He will present Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 (first time in Boston); the Symphony No. 6 by Karl Amadeus Hartmann (first time in Boston), and Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston

Symphony Fare

Nikita Magaloff is not a stranger to Boston, having given a concert here in 1949. On Oct. 13 and 14, he made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, as soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto.

Mr. Magaloff is a virtuoso with superb technique and the taste and mind of a first-rate musician. Under his fingers, the Concerto sang, and his rhythm was unfailingly steady. The audience burst in with applause before the final chord had sounded, and recalled him several times.

Mr. Munch began with an eloquent performance of Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and concluded with Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, which was eloquent in spots but surprisingly slipshod in some details.

The week before, Michele Boegner, from Lyon, France, made her American debut with Mr. Munch and the Orchestra. She is a pretty 20-year-old pianist with an athletic stride and a fluent technique. The work chosen for these concerts was Beethoven's G major Concerto. That huge and inward masterwork is not for the young, who may play all its notes but cannot encompass it musically.

Mr. Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's Quiet City, with superb playing by Roger Voisin (trumpet) and Louis Speyer (English horn). The concerts ended with a rich performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony.

The New York Pro Musica opened the season for the Mason Music Foundation at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Oct. 8. The program conducted by Noah Greenberg was extraordinary: a realization of music from various sources, on the text of the Missa Beatae Virginis Mariae. The voices were augmented by a boys choir from New York's Church of the Transfiguration, and the instruments used were the shawm, sackbutts and cornetto. The portions of the Mass were drawn from Isaac, Des Prés, Verdelot, Schlick and others.

Carlos Montoya, Flamenco guitarist, presented his noble art in Jordan Hall, Oct. 12. Among the pieces by Monterde, Lecuona and others was a new Montoya transcription of Turina's Sacromonte, which sounded superb.

—Cyrus Durgin

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 13 1961

Nikita Magaloff will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at its weekend concerts in Symphony Hall today and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 11 1961

Amusements

Open Rehearsals

The popular Open Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, originated by conductor Charles Munch, will be launched by him on their 12th season Thursday evening at 7:30.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 14 1961

The Symphony

Dr. Munch's Beethoven Is Singularly His Own

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had the standard of performance not been so high, yesterday's Symphony might have ranked among the least attractive of the season.

Patently, there was nothing wrong with the music. Howard Hanson's elegaic tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, touched by a dark and meditative nobility, exhibits poignant grandeur; the Chopin F minor Piano Concerto contains numerous melodic felicities and inventive ideas, even if it is a trifle frail and inhibited in comparison with Chopin's shorter forms; and the Beethoven "Eroica" may be accounted among the classical staples.

Yet in sequence this program does not mirror or enhance the relationships of the scores. The somber opulence of Hanson's stately reverie casts a long shadow over the delicate subtleties of the Concerto. As for the "Eroica" was it not Beethoven's express wish that the symphony should always occur first on any evening of music on which it was performed? It is a wish honored today but seldom.

Scant Space

These objections aside, however, the admirable state of the interpretations left scant space for reservation. The program introduced the Russian-born pianist, Nikita Magaloff, who, though he has successfully toured America and Europe, made his Boston debut in a glittering performance. The balance and quality of sound in the moving Koussevitzky homage disclosed the Orchestra in its vintage estate. And Dr. Munch's reading of the "Eroica" proved one of his best, and testimony that as a Beethoven conductor he has evolved each year and attained superb control and authority.

Mr. Magaloff, now a Swiss citizen, brought to the F minor concerto grace of ornamentation, brilliance of passagework and the proper rubato. His Chopin style combines both dramatic power and the slender cantabile symmetry so characteristic of the composer.

This was an exceedingly musical and intelligent performance. In common with Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, which Michele Boegner offered last week, the F minor imposes difficulties that do not permit the soloist opportunity to display splashy virtuosity. The scale is refined, the lack of spectacular dimension permits the cultivation of nuance.

Span of Hands

As Mr. Magaloff firmly demonstrated, however, in the central recitative which demands the span of hands an octave apart, the technical requirements are high and lie within his compass. Nevertheless I was more impressed by the sensitivity of his tone than by his vigor, rhythmic imagination and generally judicious accuracy—qualities he has in abundance, and needed to give coherence to the themes of a poetic but occasionally wandering score.

It is a tone adroitly articulated and crystalline in character. Mr. Magaloff did not let the bravura element betray him into the high contrasts that can translate the F minor as fustian. Rather, the clarity of his tone contributed to a flowing cumulative effect of phrasing that moulded the concerto into fine-grained, expressive statement. Here was not Chopin playing that stressed sentimentality, the tuberoses, Beardsley-like line and all the rest of it; but quietly-stated emotion that avoided lingering over the obvious, and serenely passed on to the next idea. The accompaniment of Charles Munch, which must have seemed an ungrateful task, even with the Klindworth emendation, was equally idiomatic.

Inner Voices

The Beethoven Third, though, presented Dr. Munch with a chance to project an eloquent command. His reading was spacious and heroic and affecting. A wealth of detail marked the inner voices, while the outline of the symphony unfolded in a relaxed and graphic sweep.

The tempos were far from metronomic and revealed concise force; in fact, the conductor seemed to allow the broad melodic finale to take its own way, and his refusal to overinterpret the score resulted in astonishing vigor and freshness. Dr. Munch's Beethoven is not "French": but, instead, singularly his own, gracious and Promethean. As for the Hanson opening the program, this too, received ample outline and depth of texture, a fitting tribute to a great man.

Next week the Orchestra will be on tour in the Midwest. On Oct. 27-28 Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performances of Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the third program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Nikita Magaloff, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 ..... Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor, Op. 21 ..... Chopin
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven

40

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 14 1961

Nikita Magaloff Debut With Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, played in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday–Saturday series. Howard Hanson: Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky; Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor—Nikita Magaloff soloist (his first appearance with the Boston Symphony); Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony concert—yesterday afternoon ran the gamut, if not from A to Z, from A to M—that is to say, from admirable to mediocre. In between came excellence in the form of a pianist almost new to Boston, Nikita Magaloff, and eloquence, which dwelled in Howard Hanson's Elegy and in parts of the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony.

Magaloff is almost new in this city because until yesterday he had been heard here but once, in a small hall in 1949. This first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the F minor Concerto of Chopin, was a most happy occasion. While the music is hardly more than glorified salon stuff —Chopin wore the symphonic style uneasily, and his concerti are nearly the least of his work — the performance was superb.

Magaloff has a technic of notable evenness and polish. Under his fingers all the notes are beautifully articulated and they sing. His rhythm is unfailingly steady, rubato always taken within the measure and never straddling the principal beat. He got along splendidly with the Orchestra.

Beyond technic is a shining gift of tone-poetry, lyrical and lovely, not common even in a day of numerous fine pianists. The Chopin style was genuine, rich and broad, the phrases arched gracefully, and feeling never crystallized into sugar. No wonder that the audience burst in with applause before the final chord was over, and recalled Magaloff to bow several times.

Howard Hanson must have designed the string voices of his Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, to sound with the vibrating intensity and the blaze of color which characterized the Boston Symphony strings when Koussevitzky reigned. The entire piece may be no more than a tasteful tribute, but it is music of emotion and entirely suited to its purpose. Dr. Munch's conducting of it, and the work of the musicians, left nothing to be desired.

The mediocrity of the afternoon, together with part of the eloquence, inhabited the "Eroica." This was a peculiar reading, characterized by ups and downs. Just after the initial two E-flat chords, it seemed that Dr. Munch immediately slowed the tempo, as if to avoid a beginning that might prove too fast. There were strange moments of orchestral unbalance, inner and lower voices now and again too prominent, less than the passion one would like in this movement.

The first theme of the funeral march, sounded in the first violins, was run together, with none of that fine distinction between dotted notes and the shorter ones which follow, that you expect of this section. The fault surely must lie with Dr. Munch. The horns were not quite square on the pitch in the trio of the scherzo, which, further, was a hair too slow. The finale emerged rather better, but taken all in all, the Symphony has been done better by Dr. Munch.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Oct. 27 and 28, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. He will present Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 (first time in Boston); the Symphony No. 6 by Karl Amadeus Hartmann (first time in Boston), and Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 14 1961

The Symphony

Dr. Munch's Beethoven Is Singularly His Own

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had the standard of performance not been so high, yesterday's Symphony might have ranked among the least attractive of the season.

Patently, there was nothing wrong with the music. Howard Hanson's elegaic tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, touched by a dark and meditative nobility, exhibits poignant grandeur; the Chopin F minor Piano Concerto contains numerous melodic felicities and inventive ideas, even if it is a trifle frail and inhibited in comparison with Chopin's shorter forms; and the Beethoven "Eroica" may be accounted among the classical staples.

Yet in sequence this program does not mirror or enhance the relationships of the scores. The somber opulence of Hanson's stately reverie casts a long shadow over the delicate subtleties of the Concerto. As for the "Eroica" was it not Beethoven's express wish that the symphony should always occur first on any evening of music on which it was performed? It is a wish honored today but seldom.

Scant Space

These objections aside, however, the admirable state of the interpretations left scant space for reservation. The program introduced the Russian-born pianist, Nikita Magaloff, who, though he has successfully toured America and Europe, made his Boston debut in a glittering performance. The balance and quality of sound in the moving Koussevitzky homage disclosed the Orchestra in its vintage estate. And Dr. Munch's reading of the "Eroica" proved one of his best, and testimony that as a Beethoven conductor he has evolved each year and attained superb control and authority.

Mr. Magaloff, now a Swiss citizen, brought to the F minor concerto grace of ornamentation, brilliance of passagework and the proper rubato. His Chopin style combines both dramatic power and the slender cantabile symmetry so characteristic of the composer.

This was an exceedingly musical and intelligent performance. In common with Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, which Michele Boegner offered last week, the F minor imposes difficulties that do not permit the soloist opportunity to display splashy virtuosity. The scale is refined, the lack of spectacular dimension permits the cultivation of nuance.

Span of Hands

As Mr. Magaloff firmly demonstrated, however, in the central recitative which demands the span of hands an octave apart, the technical requirements are high and lie within his compass. Nevertheless I was more impressed by the sensitivity of his tone than by his vigor, rhythmic imagination and generally judicious accuracy—qualities he has in abundance, and needed to give coherence to the themes of a poetic but occasionally wandering score.

It is a tone adroitly articulated and crystalline in character. Mr. Magaloff did not let the bravura element betray him into the high contrasts that can translate the F minor as fustian. Rather, the clarity of his tone contributed to a flowing cumulative effect of phrasing that moulded the concerto into fine-grained, expressive statement. Here was not Chopin playing that stressed sentimentality, the tuberoses, Beardsley-like line and all the rest of it; but quietly-stated emotion that avoided lingering over the obvious, and serenely passed on to the next idea. The accompaniment of Charles Munch, which must have seemed an ungrateful task, even with the Klindworth emendation, was equally idiomatic.

Inner Voices

The Beethoven Third, though, presented Dr. Munch with a chance to project an eloquent command. His reading was spacious and heroic and affecting. A wealth of detail marked the inner voices, while the outline of the symphony unfolded in a relaxed and graphic sweep.

The tempos were far from metronomic and revealed concise force; in fact, the conductor seemed to allow the broad melodic finale to take its own way, and his refusal to over-interpret the score resulted in astonishing vigor and freshness. Dr. Munch's Beethoven is no "French"; but, instead, singularly his own, gracious and Promethean. As for the Hanson opening the program, this too, received ample outline and depth of texture, a fitting tribute to a great man.

Next week the Orchestra will be on tour in the Midwest. On Oct. 27-28 Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performances of Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston

Symphony Fare

Nikita Magaloff is not a stranger to Boston, having given a concert here in 1949. On Oct. 13 and 14, he made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, as soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto.

Mr. Magaloff is a virtuoso with superb technique and the taste and mind of a first-rate musician. Under his fingers, the Concerto sang, and his rhythm was unfailingly steady. The audience burst in with applause before the final chord had sounded, and recalled him several times.

Mr. Munch began with an eloquent performance of Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and concluded with Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, which was eloquent in spots but surprisingly slipshod in some details.

The week before, Michele Boegner, from Lyon, France, made her American debut with Mr. Munch and the Orchestra. She is a pretty 20-year-old pianist with an athletic stride and a fluent technique. The work chosen for these concerts was Beethoven's G major Concerto. That huge and inward masterwork is not for the young, who may play all its notes but cannot encompass it musically.

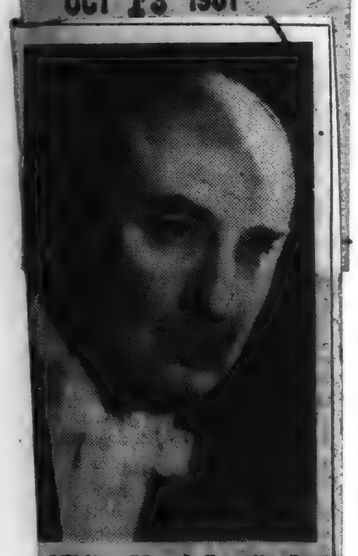
Mr. Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's Quiet City, with superb playing by Roger Voisin (trumpet) and Louis Speyer (English horn). The concerts ended with a rich performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony.

The New York Pro Musica opened the season for the Mason Music Foundation at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Oct. 8. The program conducted by Noah Greenberg was extraordinary: a realization of music from various sources, on the text of the Missa Beatae Virginis Mariae. The voices were augmented by a boys choir from New York's Church of the Transfiguration, and the instruments used were the shawm, sackbutts and cornetto. The portions of the Mass were drawn from Isaac, Des Prés, Verdelot, Schlick and others.

Carlos Montoya, Flamenco guitarist, presented his noble art in Jordan Hall, Oct. 12. Among the pieces by Monterde, Lecuona and others was a new Montoya transcription of Turina's Sacromonte, which sounded superb.

—Cyrus Durgin

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 13 1961



Nikita Magaloff will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at its weekend concerts in Symphony Hall today and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 11 1961

Amusements

Open Rehearsals

The popular Open Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, originated by conductor Charles Munch, will be launched by him on their 12th season Thursday evening at 7:30.

40

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 14 1961

Nikita Magaloff Debut With Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, played in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday–Saturday series. Howard Hanson: Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky; Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor—Nikita Magaloff soloist (his first appearance with the Boston Symphony); Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon ran the gamut, if not from A to Z, from A to M—that is to say, from admirable to mediocre. In between came excellence in the form of a pianist almost new to Boston, Nikita Magaloff, and eloquence, which dwelled in Howard Hanson's Elegy and in parts of the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony.

Magaloff is almost new in this city because until yesterday he had been heard here but once, in a small hall in 1949. This first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the F minor Concerto of Chopin, was a most happy occasion. While the music is hardly more than glorified salon stuff —Chopin wore the symphonic style uneasily, and his concerti are nearly the least of his work — the performance was superb.

Magaloff has a technic of notable evenness and polish. Under his fingers all the notes are beautifully articulated and they sing. His rhythm is unfailingly steady, rubato always taken within the measure and never straddling the principal beat. He got along splendidly with the Orchestra.

Beyond technic is a shining gift of tone-poetry, lyrical and lovely, not common even in a day of numerous fine pianists. The Chopin style was genuine, rich and broad, the phrases arched gracefully, and feeling never crystallized into sugar. No wonder that the audience burst in with applause before the final chord was over, and recalled Magaloff to bow several times.

Howard Hanson must have designed the string voices of his Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, to sound with the vibrating intensity and the blaze of color which characterized the Boston Symphony strings when Koussevitzky reigned. The entire piece may be no more than a tasteful tribute, but it is music of emotion and entirely suited to its purpose. Dr. Munch's conducting of it, and the work of the musicians, left nothing to be desired.

The mediocrity of the afternoon, together with part of the eloquence, inhabited the "Eroica." This was a peculiar reading, characterized by ups and downs. Just after the initial two E-flat chords, it seemed that Dr. Munch immediately slowed the tempo, as if to avoid a beginning that might prove too fast. There were strange moments of orchestral unbalance, inner and lower voices now and again too prominent, less than the passion one would like in this movement.

The first theme of the funeral march, sounded in the first violins, was run together, with none of that fine distinction between dotted notes and the shorter ones which follow, that you expect of this section. The fault surely must lie with Dr. Munch. The horns were not quite square on the pitch in the trio of the scherzo, which, further, was a hair too slow. The finale emerged rather better, but taken all in all, the Symphony has been done better by Dr. Munch.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Oct. 27 and 28, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. He will present Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 (first time in Boston); the Symphony No. 6 by Karl Amadeus Hartmann (first time in Boston), and Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston

Symphony Fare

Nikita Magaloff is not a stranger to Boston, having given a concert here in 1949. On Oct. 13 and 14, he made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, as soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto.

Mr. Magaloff is a virtuoso with superb technique and the taste and mind of a first-rate musician. Under his fingers, the Concerto sang, and his rhythm was unfailingly steady. The audience burst in with applause before the final chord had sounded, and recalled him several times.

Mr. Munch began with an eloquent performance of Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and concluded with Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, which was eloquent in spots but surprisingly slipshod in some details.

The week before, Michele Boegner, from Lyon, France, made her American debut with Mr. Munch and the Orchestra. She is a pretty 20-year-old pianist with an athletic stride and a fluent technique. The work chosen for these concerts was Beethoven's G major Concerto. That huge and inward masterwork is not for the young, who may play all its notes but cannot encompass it musically.

Mr. Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's Quiet City, with superb playing by Roger Voisin (trumpet) and Louis Speyer (English horn). The concerts ended with a rich performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony.

The New York Pro Musica opened the season for the Mason Music Foundation at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Oct. 8. The program conducted by Noah Greenberg was extraordinary: a realization of music from various sources, on the text of the Missa Beatae Virginis Mariae. The voices were augmented by a boys choir from New York's Church of the Transfiguration, and the instruments used were the shawm, sackbutts and cornetto. The portions of the Mass were drawn from Isaac, Des Prés, Verdelot, Schlick and others.

Carlos Montoya, Flamenco guitarist, presented his noble art in Jordan Hall, Oct. 12. Among the pieces by Monterde, Lecuona and others was a new Montoya transcription of Turina's Sacromonte, which sounded superb.

—Cyrus Durgin

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 13 1961

Nikita Magaloff will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at its weekend concerts in Symphony Hall today and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 11 1961

Amusements

Open Rehearsals

The popular Open Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, originated by conductor Charles Munch, will be launched by him on their 12th season Thursday evening at 7:30.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 14 1961

The Symphony

Dr. Munch's Beethoven Is Singularly His Own

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had the standard of performance not been so high, yesterday's Symphony might have ranked among the least attractive of the season.

Patently, there was nothing wrong with the music. Howard Hanson's elegaic tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, touched by a dark and meditative nobility, exhibits poignant grandeur; the Chopin F minor Piano Concerto contains numerous melodic felicities and inventive ideas, even if it is a trifle frail and inhibited in comparison with Chopin's shorter forms; and the Beethoven "Eroica" may be accounted among the classical staples.

Yet in sequence this program does not mirror or enhance the relationships of the scores. The somber opulence of Hanson's stately reverie casts a long shadow over the delicate subtleties of the Concerto. As for the "Eroica" was it not Beethoven's express wish that the symphony should always occur first on any evening of music on which it was performed? It is a wish honored today but seldom.

Scant Space

These objections aside, however, the admirable state of the interpretations left scant space for reservation. The program introduced the Russian-born pianist, Nikita Magaloff, who, though he has successfully toured America and Europe, made his Boston debut in a glittering performance. The balance and quality of sound in the moving Koussevitzky homage disclosed the Orchestra in its vintage estate. And Dr. Munch's reading of the "Eroica" proved one of his best, and testimony that as a Beethoven conductor he has evolved each year and attained superb control and authority.

Mr. Magaloff, now a Swiss citizen, brought to the F minor concerto grace of ornamentation, brilliance of passagework and the proper rubato. His Chopin style combines both dramatic power and the slender cantabile symmetry so characteristic of the composer.

This was an exceedingly musical and intelligent performance. In common with Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, which Michele Boegner offered last week, the F minor imposes difficulties that do not permit the soloist opportunity to display splashy virtuosity. The scale is refined, the lack of spectacular dimension permits the cultivation of nuance.

Span of Hands

As Mr. Magaloff firmly demonstrated, however, in the central recitative which demands the span of hands an octave apart, the technical requirements are high and lie within his compass. Nevertheless I was more impressed by the sensitivity of his tone than by his vigor, rhythmic imagination and generally judicious accuracy—qualities he has in abundance, and needed to give coherence to the themes of a poetic but occasionally wandering score.

It is a tone adroitly articulated and crystalline in character. Mr. Magaloff did not let the bravura element betray him into the high contrasts that can translate the F minor as fustian. Rather, the clarity of his tone contributed to a flowing cumulative effect of phrasing that moulded the concerto into fine-grained, expressive statement. Here was not Chopin playing that stressed sentimentality, the tuberoses, Beardsley-like line and all the rest of it; but quietly-stated emotion that avoided lingering over the obvious, and serenely passed on to the next idea. The accompaniment of Charles Munch, which must have seemed an ungrateful task, even with the Klindworth emendation, was equally idiomatic.

Inner Voices

The Beethoven Third, though, presented Dr. Munch with a chance to project an eloquent command. His reading was spacious and heroic and affecting. A wealth of detail marked the inner voices, while the outline of the symphony unfolded in a relaxed and graphic sweep.

The tempos were far from metronomic and revealed concise force; in fact, the conductor seemed to allow the broad melodic finale to take its own way, and his refusal to overinterpret the score resulted in astonishing vigor and freshness. Dr. Munch's Beethoven is not "French"; but, instead, singularly his own, gracious and Promethean. As for the Hanson opening the program, this too, received ample outline and depth of texture, a fitting tribute to a great man.

Next week the Orchestra will be on tour in the Midwest. On Oct. 27-28 Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performances of Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the third program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Nikita Magaloff, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 ..... Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor, Op. 21 ..... Chopin
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven

40

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 14 1961

Nikita Magaloff Debut With Boston Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, played in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the third program of the Friday-Saturday series. Howard Hanson: Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky; Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor—Nikita Magaloff soloist (his first appearance with the Boston Symphony); Beethoven: Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, "Eroica."

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon ran the gamut, if not from A to Z, from A to M—that is to say, from admirable to mediocre. In between came excellence in the form of a pianist almost new to Boston, Nikita Magaloff, and eloquence, which dwelled in Howard Hanson's Elegy and in parts of the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony.

Magaloff is almost new in this city because until yesterday he had been heard here but once, in a small hall in 1949. This first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the F minor Concerto of Chopin, was a most happy occasion. While the music is hardly more than glorified salon stuff —Chopin wore the symphonic style uneasily, and his concerti are nearly the least of his work — the performance was superb.

Magaloff has a technic of notable evenness and polish. Under his fingers all the notes are beautifully articulated and they sing. His rhythm is unfailingly steady, rubato always taken within the measure and never straddling the principal beat. He got along splendidly with the Orchestra.

Beyond technic is a shining gift of tone-poetry, lyrical and lovely, not common even in a day of numerous fine pianists. The Chopin style was genuine, rich and broad, the phrases arched gracefully, and feeling never crystallized into sugar. No wonder that the audience burst in with applause before the final chord was over, and recalled Magaloff to bow several times.

Howard Hanson must have designed the string voices of his Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, to sound with the vibrating intensity and the blaze of color which characterized the Boston Symphony strings when Koussevitzky reigned. The entire piece may be no more than a tasteful tribute, but it is music of emotion and entirely suited to its purpose. Dr. Munch's conducting of it, and the work of the musicians, left nothing to be desired.

The mediocrity of the afternoon, together with part of the eloquence, inhabited the "Eroica." This was a peculiar reading, characterized by ups and downs. Just after the initial two E-flat chords, it seemed that Dr. Munch immediately slowed the tempo, as if to avoid a beginning that might prove too fast. There were strange moments of orchestral unbalance, inner and lower voices now and again too prominent, less than the passion one would like in this movement.

The first theme of the funeral march, sounded in the first violins, was run together, with none of that fine distinction between dotted notes and the shorter ones which follow, that you expect of this section. The fault surely must lie with Dr. Munch. The horns were not quite square on the pitch in the trio of the scherzo, which, further, was a hair too slow. The finale emerged rather better, but taken all in all, the Symphony has been done better by Dr. Munch.

Next week the Orchestra goes on tour. The next Symphony Hall concerts, Oct. 27 and 28, will be conducted by Richard Burgin. He will present Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 (first time in Boston); the Symphony No. 6 by Karl Amadeus Hartmann (first time in Boston), and Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 14 1961

The Symphony

Dr. Munch's Beethoven Is Singularly His Own

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Had the standard of performance not been so high, yesterday's Symphony might have ranked among the least attractive of the season.

Patently, there was nothing wrong with the music. Howard Hanson's elegiac tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, touched by a dark and meditative nobility, exhibits poignant grandeur; the Chopin F minor Piano Concerto contains numerous melodic felicities and inventive ideas, even if it is a trifle frail and inhibited in comparison with Chopin's shorter forms; and the Beethoven "Eroica" may be accounted among the classical staples.

Yet in sequence this program does not mirror or enhance the relationships of the scores. The somber opulence of Hanson's stately reverie casts a long shadow over the delicate subtleties of the Concerto. As for the "Eroica" was it not Beethoven's express wish that the symphony should always occur first on any evening of music on which it was performed? It is a wish honored today but seldom.

Scant Space

These objections aside, however, the admirable state of the interpretations left scant space for reservation. The program introduced the Russian-born pianist, Nikita Magaloff, who, though he has successfully toured America and Europe, made his Boston debut in a glittering performance. The balance and quality of sound in the moving Koussevitzky homage disclosed the Orchestra in its vintage estate. And Dr. Munch's reading of the "Eroica" proved one of his best, and testimony that as a Beethoven conductor he has evolved each year and attained superb control and authority.

Mr. Magaloff, now a Swiss citizen, brought to the F minor concerto grace of ornamentation, brilliance of passagework and the proper rubato. His Chopin style combines both dramatic power and the slender cantabile symmetry so characteristic of the composer.

This was an exceedingly musical and intelligent performance. In common with Beethoven's Fourth Concerto, which Michele Boegner offered last week, the F minor imposes difficulties that do not permit the soloist opportunity to display splashy virtuosity. The scale is refined, the lack of spectacular dimension permits the cultivation of nuance.

Span of Hands

As Mr. Magaloff firmly demonstrated, however, in the central recitative which demands the span of hands an octave apart, the technical requirements are high and lie within his compass. Nevertheless I was more impressed by the sensitivity of his tone than by his vigor, rhythmic imagination and generally judicious accuracy—qualities he has in abundance, and needed to give coherence to the themes of a poetic but occasionally wandering score.

It is a tone adroitly articulated and crystalline in character. Mr. Magaloff did not let the bravura element betray him into the high contrasts that can translate the F minor as fustian. Rather, the clarity of his tone contributed to a flowing cumulative effect of phrasing that moulded the concerto into fine-grained, expressive statement. Here was not Chopin playing that stressed sentimentality, the tuberoses, Beardsley-like line and all the rest of it; but quietly-stated emotion that avoided lingering over the obvious, and serenely passed on to the next idea. The accompaniment of Charles Munch, which must have

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, assembled the third program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Nikita Magaloff, pianist, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 ..... Hanson
Piano Concerto No. 2, in F minor, Op. 21 ..... Chopin
Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica" ..... Beethoven seemed an ungrateful task, even with the Klindworth emendation, was equally idiomatic.

Inner Voices

The Beethoven Third, though, presented Dr. Munch with a chance to project an eloquent command. His reading was spacious and heroic and affecting. A wealth of detail marked the inner voices, while the outline of the symphony unfolded in a relaxed and graphic sweep.

The tempos were far from metronomic and revealed concise force; in fact, the conductor seemed to allow the broad melodic finale to take its own way, and his refusal to overinterpret the score resulted in astonishing vigor and freshness. Dr. Munch's Beethoven is no "French"; but, instead, singularly his own, gracious and Promethean. As for the Hanson opening the program, this too, received ample outline and depth of texture, a fitting tribute to a great man.

Next week the Orchestra will be on tour in the Midwest. On Oct. 27-28 Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performances of Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston

Symphony Fare

Nikita Magaloff is not a stranger to Boston, having given a concert here in 1949. On Oct. 13 and 14, he made his first appearance with the Boston Symphony, as soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto.

Mr. Magaloff is a virtuoso with superb technique and the taste and mind of a first-rate musician. Under his fingers, the Concerto sang, and his rhythm was unfailingly steady. The audience burst in with applause before the final chord had sounded, and recalled him several times.

Mr. Munch began with an eloquent performance of Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky, and concluded with Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, which was eloquent in spots but surprisingly slipshod in some details.

The week before, Michele Boegner, from Lyon, France, made her American debut with Mr. Munch and the Orchestra. She is a pretty 20-year-old pianist with an athletic stride and a fluent technique. The work chosen for these concerts was Beethoven's G major Concerto. That huge and inward masterwork is not for the young, who may play all its notes but cannot encompass it musically.

Mr. Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's Quiet City, with superb playing by Roger Voisin (trumpet) and Louis Speyer (English horn). The concerts ended with a rich performance of Brahms's C minor Symphony.

The New York Pro Musica opened the season for the Mason Music Foundation at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Oct. 8. The program conducted by Noah Greenberg was extraordinary: a realization of music from various sources, on the text of the Missa Beatae Virginis Mariae. The voices were augmented by a boys choir from New York's Church of the Transfiguration, and the instruments used were the shawm, sackbutts and cornetto. The portions of the Mass were drawn from Isaac, Des Prés, Verdelot, Schlick and others.

Carlos Montoya, Flamenco guitarist, presented his noble art in Jordan Hall, Oct. 12. Among the pieces by Monterde, Lecuona and others was a new Montoya transcription of Turina's Sacromonte, which sounded superb.

—Cyrus Durgin

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 18 1961

Nikita Magaloff will be piano soloist with the Boston Symphony at its weekend concerts in Symphony Hall today and Saturday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 11 1961

Amusements

Open Rehearsals

The popular Open Rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, originated by conductor Charles Munch, will be launched by him on their 12th season Thursday evening at 7:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 8 1961

Nikita Magaloff At Piano

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

TO PLAY CHOPIN WITH SYMPHONY

Charles Munch has invited Nikita Magaloff to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in performance of Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Doctor Munch will open these concerts with Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and conclude with the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven. An Open Rehearsal of this program, the first of 10 to be given this year, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Although born in St. Petersburg in 1912, Nikita Magaloff and his family soon fled to Finland to escape the Russian Revolution. Encouraged by Serge Prokofiev, a family friend, Nikita Magaloff first studied with A. Siloti—pupil of Franz Liszt—and later with Isidore Philipp at the Paris Conservatoire.

Since his first tour of the United States in 1947, Mr. Magaloff has performed in South America and South Africa in addition to his annual tours of Europe.

Doctor Munch will conduct the first concert of the annual Sunday Afternoon Series at 3 p.m. today in Symphony Hall. His program will include Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," "Iberia" by Debussy and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, will be soloist at the first concert of the annual Providence season on Tuesday evening in the Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, the Violoncello Concerto No. 1 by Saint-Saens and Tchaikovsky's 'Symphony No. 6.

Members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony and subscribers have been invited by the orchestra's trustees to the 28th annual meeting of the Friends in Symphony Hall at 4 p.m. on Wednesday. Doctor Munch and the orchestra will present a private rehearsal and tea will be served in the Gallery.

The orchestra will be on tour the week of Oct. 16 to perform in Rochester, Cincinnati, Lexington, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

The orchestra will be heard in a special concert for the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO at Symphony Hall on Oct. 24. Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts Oct. 27-28 and Lukas Foss and Adele Addison will be soloists Nov. 3-4.

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
NOV 1961

BOSTON

Munch, Bostonians Enjoy Last Round

From the beginning of the Boston Symphony programs this year it was plain that Charles Munch is going to have a loving round of his favorite pieces before his last year here is out. But his exuberant, affirmative way with them makes it equally clear that Bostonians will enjoy going right along with him.

His most interesting guest artist to date was Nikita Magaloff, a Swiss pianist of Russian descent who played Chopin's Concerto in F minor. His brand of piano playing is individual but pinpoints his cosmopolitanism, at least musically, to France. He belongs to the thinning ranks of pianists who understand what it means to "play" their instrument, even to coax it gently.

On the same program Charles Munch gave us Beethoven's "Eroica" in a spacious way that again bespoke his own pleasure in the epic work.

The Contemporary Music Society forecast other promised programs of electronic music when they packed in about every composer and critic in town to hear Bethany Beardslee singing electronically-produced music by Milton Babbitt (who was on hand for welcome explanations), followed by Schönberg's Pierrot Lunaire, which never seemed so homey by contrast. First on the rafter-rattling program was Electronic Music, Number One by the Turkish composer Arel made by laboriously cutting and splicing tapes of electronically produced sounds. Once those sounds lost their initial weirdness, they held a strong sequence, showed both pattern and climax, and sustained a single mood.

Milton Babbitt's piece, Vision and Prayer set to a text by Dylan Thomas, calls for a soprano accompanied by several speakers, which stood like lithic sentinels around the floor. Miss Beardslee came to her strange partnership radiantly coiffed, gowned, and jeweled, while the speakers waited in their boxes, noncommittal in an infinity of power to hurt or soothe. During their duet she produced a kind of Sprechstimme artistically a telling inch beyond expressionism; call it desperationism.

— ROBERT DUMM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 14 1961

Magaloff at Symphony—

Pianist Plays Chopin In His Boston Debut

By Harold Rogers

Conventional ears will relish Charles Munch's program this weekend in Symphony Hall. Yet if the intellect remains unchallenged, the emotions are bombarded by three works in the great romantic tradition, even if one of them was composed only five years ago.

The contemporary piece is Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky," composed on commission by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation on the occasion of the orchestra's 75th anniversary. On rehearing it yesterday afternoon my earlier impressions were confirmed that it is one of the three or four best works commissioned at that time.

Following the Hanson, which opened the program, came Nikita Magaloff — Russian by birth, Swiss by citizenship—in his Boston debut as piano soloist in the Chopin Concerto No. 2. And Dr. Munch closed with a thoughtfully profound, yet stunning traversal of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3.

♪ ♪ ♪

Hanson's Elegy is a songful sigh, extended and amplified into an elegant piece of musical architecture. Only a few poignant dissonances would indicate that it is music of our time. More appropriately, perhaps, it has a timeless quality that will enable it to find permanence in the repertoire, for such a place it truly deserves. Dr. Munch revived it last summer at Tanglewood for the annual program dedicated to Koussevitzky's memory; he is to be commended for bringing it again to Symphony Hall.

M. Magaloff proved himself a suave artist in the Chopin concerto. Not only does he manage the trills and the consecutive thirds with consummate grace, he evokes the true Chopin spirit. He is not a dazzling pianist — at least he did not dazzle yesterday—but this is to his credit. The Chopin should sing its soulful melodies without being forced to entertain in a way that it could be compelled to assume. M. Magaloff's listeners accorded him enthusiastic acclaim.

♪ ♪ ♪

Dr. Munch, too, won his share of ecstatic applause for his reading of the "Eroica." The Marcia funebre was a marvel of subjective interpretation as its moods of grief were contrasted with those of aspiration. And the Finale took fire as Dr. Munch spun the dancing rhythms till they took on a magnificent sheen.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 15 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are out of town this week to give concerts in Rochester, N.Y., Cincinnati, Ohio, Lexington, Ky., Columbus, Ohio, Detroit, Mich., and Ann Arbor, Mich. Samuel Mayes, the principal cellist will be soloist in Rochester and Ann Arbor.

Richard Burgin, who retires as the orchestra's concertmaster at the end of the season but who will continue as associate conductor, will conduct the symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Oct. 27 and Saturday, Oct. 28.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, by Bartok, Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch.

Lukas Foss has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first Boston performance of his "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" at the orchestra's concerts Nov. 3-4. Adele Addison will be soloist. At this concert Doctor Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel.

The second Open Rehearsal of the season a rehearsal of the Nov. 3-4 concert, will be held at Symphony Hall Thursday, Nov. 2. Other musical events in prospect:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 8 1961

Nikita Magaloff At Piano

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

TO PLAY CHOPIN WITH SYMPHONY

Charles Munch has invited Nikita Magaloff to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in performance of Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Doctor Munch will open these concerts with Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend Serge Koussevitzky" and conclude with the Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," by Beethoven. An Open Rehearsal of this program, the first of 10 to be given this year, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Although born in St. Petersburg in 1912, Nikita Magaloff and his family soon fled to Finland to escape the Russian Revolution. Encouraged by Serge Prokofiev, a family friend, Nikita Magaloff first studied with A. Siloti—pupil of Franz Liszt—and later with Isidore Philipp at the Paris Conservatoire.

Since his first tour of the United States in 1947, Mr. Magaloff has performed in South America and South Africa in addition to his annual tours of Europe.

Doctor Munch will conduct the first concert of the annual Sunday Afternoon Series at 3 p.m. today in Symphony Hall. His program will include Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," "Iberia" by Debussy and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Samuel Mayes, the orchestra's principal cellist, will be soloist at the first concert of the annual Providence season on Tuesday evening in the Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, the Violoncello Concerto No. 1 by Saint-Saens and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

Members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony and subscribers have been invited by the orchestra's trustees to the 28th annual meeting of the Friends in Symphony Hall at 4 p.m. on Wednesday. Doctor Munch and the orchestra will present a private rehearsal and tea will be served in the Gallery.

The orchestra will be on tour the week of Oct. 16 to perform in Rochester, Cincinnati, Lexington, Columbus, Detroit and Ann Arbor.

The orchestra will be heard in a special concert for the Eighth National Conference of the United States National Commission for UNESCO at Symphony Hall on Oct. 24. Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts Oct. 27-28 and Lukas Foss and Adele Addison will be soloists Nov. 3-4.

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
NOV 1961

BOSTON

Munch, Bostonians Enjoy Last Round

From the beginning of the Boston Symphony programs this year it was plain that Charles Munch is going to have a loving round of his favorite pieces before his last year here is out. But his exuberant, affirmative way with them makes it equally clear that Bostonians will enjoy going right along with him.

His most interesting guest artist to date was Nikita Magaloff, a Swiss pianist of Russian descent who played Chopin's Concerto in F minor. His brand of piano playing is individual but pinpoints his cosmopolitanism, at least musically, to France. He belongs to the thinning ranks of pianists who understand what it means to "play" their instrument, even to coax it gently.

On the same program Charles Munch gave us Beethoven's "Eroica" in a spacious way that again bespoke his own pleasure in the epic work.

The Contemporary Music Society forecast other promised programs of electronic music when they packed in about every composer and critic in town to hear Bethany Beardslee singing electronically-produced music by Milton Babbitt (who was on hand for welcome explanations), followed by Schönberg's Pierrot Lunaire, which never seemed so homey by contrast. First on the rafter-rattling program was Electronic Music, Number One by the Turkish composer Arel made by laboriously cutting and splicing tapes of electronically produced sounds. Once those sounds lost their initial weirdness, they held a strong sequence, showed both pattern and climax, and sustained a single mood.

Milton Babbitt's piece, Vision and Prayer set to a text by Dylan Thomas, calls for a soprano accompanied by several speakers, which stood like lithic sentinels around the floor. Miss Beardslee came to her strange partnership radiantly coiffed, gowned, and jeweled, while the speakers waited in their boxes, noncommittal in an infinity of power to hurt or soothe. During their duet she produced a kind of Sprechstimme artistically a telling inch beyond expressionism; call it desperationism.

– ROBERT DUMM

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 14 1961

Magaloff at Symphony—

Pianist Plays Chopin In His Boston Debut

By Harold Rogers

Conventional ears will relish Charles Munch's program this weekend in Symphony Hall. Yet if the intellect remains unchallenged, the emotions are bombarded by three works in the great romantic tradition, even if one of them was composed only five years ago.

The contemporary piece is Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky," composed on commission by the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitsky Music Foundation on the occasion of the orchestra's 75th anniversary. On rehearing it yesterday afternoon my earlier impressions were confirmed that it is one of the three or four best works commissioned at that time.

Following the Hanson, which opened the program, came Nikita Magaloff — Russian by birth, Swiss by citizenship—in his Boston debut as piano soloist in the Chopin Concerto No. 2. And Dr. Munch closed with a thoughtfully profound, yet stunning traversal of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3.

* * *

Hanson's Elegy is a songful sigh, extended and amplified into an elegant piece of musical architecture. Only a few poignant dissonances would indicate that it is music of our time. More appropriately, perhaps, it has a timeless quality that will enable it to find permanence in the repertoire, for such a place it truly deserves. Dr. Munch revived it last summer at Tanglewood for the annual program dedicated to Koussevitzky's memory; he is to be commended for bringing it again to Symphony Hall.

M. Magaloff proved himself a suave artist in the Chopin concerto. Not only does he manage the trills and the consecutive thirds with consummate grace, he evokes the true Chopin spirit. He is not a dazzling pianist — at least he did not dazzle yesterday—but this is to his credit. The Chopin should sing its soulful melodies without being forced to entertain in a way that it could be compelled to assume. M. Magaloff's listeners accorded him enthusiastic acclaim.

* * *

Dr. Munch, too, won his share of ecstatic applause for his reading of the "Eroica." The Marcia funebre was a marvel of subjective interpretation as its moods of grief were contrasted with those of aspiration. And the Finale took fire as Dr. Munch spun the dancing rhythms till they took on a magnificent sheen.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 15 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are out of town this week to give concerts in Rochester, N.Y., Cincinnati, Ohio, Lexington, Ky., Columbus, Ohio, Detroit, Mich., and Ann Arbor, Mich. Samuel Mayes, the principal cellist will be soloist in Rochester and Ann Arbor.

Richard Burgin, who retires as the orchestra's concertmaster at the end of the season but who will continue as associate conductor, will conduct the symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Oct. 27 and Saturday, Oct. 28.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, by Bartok, Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch.

Lukas Foss has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the first Boston performance of his "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" at the orchestra's concerts Nov. 3-4. Adele Addison will be soloist. At this concert Doctor Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel.

The second Open Rehearsal of the season a rehearsal of the Nov. 3-4 concert, will be held at Symphony Hall Thursday, Nov. 2. Other musical events in prospect:

42

Providence Concert

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
OCT 8 1961

Symphony Returns Tuesday

SAMUEL H. MAYES III will present cello solo Tuesday night when Boston Symphony appears in Providence.

WHEN THE Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 80th season in Providence at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium on Tuesday evening at 8:15, among the performers will be Samuel Houston Mayes III.

Mayes, who will present a cello solo, began his professional career at age eight with his native city's orchestra, the St. Louis Symphony.

A Cherokee Indian, he credits Will Rogers as the one person who watered his ambition to pursue a musical career.

Rogers, a cousin of the musician's father, presented young Mayes with a small model cello while on a visit to the latter's home.

At age 12, Mayes was accepted by Felix Salmond to study with him at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. He joined that city's symphony orchestra when he was 19 and three years later he was advanced to the first desk of his section. Since 1948 Mayes has been principal cellist of the Boston Symphony.

The cellist, who is 43, counts as one of the most honored moments of his career one of two years ago. He was soloist in the cello concerto of the Russian composer Dmitri Kabalevsky when the composer was conducting the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall. Pleased with the artistry shown by the cellist, Kabalevsky asked him to repeat his solo part in the concert. It was only the fourth time in the history of the orchestra that a member had played an encore at a symphony concert.

Tuesday's concert will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, who will be on the podium for his 13th and final season. He has announced that he plans to retire next spring.

The program:

Variations on a Theme of Haydn..Brahms
Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, Op. 33 ..... Saint-Saens
Soloist: Samuel Mayes
Symphony No. 6 ("Pathetique") .... Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
OCT 11 1961

MUSIC LAST NIGHT

Boston Symphony Opener Draws Capacity Audience

By RUTH TRIPP

The opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's eighty-first season here, attracted a capacity audience to Veteran's Memorial Auditorium last evening. In fact, many music lovers were turned away.

Charles Munch conducted. This will be his last year as music director. His retirement at the end of the season has been announced. He presided over a program of rich, romantic music by Brahms, Saint-Saens and Tchaikovsky and the orchestra responded to his expert direction with an amazing display of tonal magnificence.

An added attraction was the appearance of Samuel Mayes, principal cellist of the orchestra, as soloist in Saint-Saens Concerto No. 1.

The familiar Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn gave great dignity to the occasion. The opening theme was delivered with simple elegance. The fascinating variations followed with their endless variety of rhythms and figurations. Dr. Munch proved that while Brahms may have been skilled in the art of variation, an exposition of it in the superb fashion in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played this score requires a master hand also.

Samuel Mayes chose one of the best loved of the Concertos for cello. His tone was full and vibrant and his technique was sure. He and the orchestra exchanged the graceful themes with a fine sense of the French romantic style. Saint-Saens' orchestration is well knit and his writing, especially for the soloist, makes heavy demands. There were two harmonic tones in the highest register which were slightly less than perfect. They probably brought more discomfort to Mr. Mayes than to any non-cellist in the audience. It was wonderful to meet a young cellist in the lobby at intermission and find that he too, was annoyed at any mention of so slight a matter. The audience recalled conductor and soloist several times.

Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, the "Pathetique," was brought down for its biennial airing. Every heart-breaking note was there and the music seemed to slip along as if in a well worn groove in my mind. There will be few performances of this work with any more attention to the richness of orchestration and vitality of rhythm. My favorite moment is when the Cossacks seem to come riding over the steppes. The cellos and double-basses did this bit to perfection in the third movement.

The ending of the finale was truly dramatic. As Charles Munch drew it out, it seemed almost that he was showing us the end of an era in which rich melody and opulent orchestration had reached its peak. After last evening's concert there was very little left to say in the language of melody.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 28,133
OCT 11 1961

...AWTUCKET (Rhode Island) TIMES, W...

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Concert Rare, Spiritual Experience

Last night's performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Veterans Memorial Auditorium was a musical, emotional and spiritual experience; one of those rare occasions when composer, conductor and instrumentalists are in perfect agreement. And a capacity audience recalled Charles Munch to the footlights six times at the dramatic end of Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the "Pathetique."

Before the intermission, the audience was treated to equally delightful performance by Samuel Mayes, cello soloist, who played Saint Saens' technically brilliant and lyrically beautiful "Concerto for Violoncello in A Minor."

But it was after intermission that the orchestra proved its right to the claim of some experts that it is the foremost orchestra in the world. To say that its playing was superb is to understate its quality.

It was sublime, almost celestial in its tranquility, magnificent in its pathos. From the plaintive bassoon entry to the majestic choir of brasses in the finale, there was a sense of absolute, unbroken communication from the composer to the conductor to the musicians to the audience. Dr. Munch directed it without a score and played it not by rote but by heart.

In the hauntingly beautiful second movement, the serenely sad voice of the clarinet touche the heart and started the tears Dr. Munch seemed to enjoy it a much as the audience loved it And his musicians played a though they loved it and love him, too. They embraced every phrase lovingly and caresse every note.

At the close, the audience called and recalled Dr. Munch to the center stage and stood en masse while they applauded.

The opening work was Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn," a well-played but un exciting curtain raiser.

C. H. L.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
NOV 6 1961

For Ruth Tripp

John Pooler in a recent letter-to-the-editor in the Journal made uncalled-for criticism of Ruth Tripp's review of a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Since I came to Providence, I have attended many musical events; and while not seeing eye to eye with some of her reviews, I believe she calls her shots as she sees them, and I am all for her.

Mr. Pooler owes an apology (through the columns of the Journal) to Miss Tripp and the orchestra.

David E. Kilby
Providence

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
OCT 23 1961

Day's Mail

Music Reviews

After reading music reviews in The Providence Journal for four years now, I have become convinced that your reviewer, Ruth Tripp, does not meet the standards of the rest of the paper's staff.

Her comments do not reflect the viewpoint of either an intelligent listener or a performing musician. Stating the program of a concert, giving a general description of the mood of each composition, and saying that they are performed marvelously do not constitute perceptive critical analysis, yet this format appears almost every time Miss Tripp reviews a concert.

In particular, the recent review of the Boston Symphony concert was a gross misrepresentation of the performance. This listener has never heard the Boston orchestra in poorer form. In those parts of the Tschaikowsky where a theme is passed from section to section, there was a noticeable lack of constancy in time conception, resulting in an awkward break in mood each time a new section took up the theme. Except for the trombone soli chord passages, the brass section sounded outright blatant.

In the Brahms there were several bad entrances by the violins as well as a general lack of cohesive flow. (What a contrast to last year's string performance in the Beethoven Symphony No. 4.) Perhaps Miss Tripp's lack of perception showed up most clearly in her commentary regarding the cello solo. Judging by standards appropriate for a soloist with the Boston Symphony, this performance was just plain inadequate. In addition to the agonizingly embarrassing passage which was passed off in the review as "slightly less than perfect," the soloist made far too many mistakes to be simply ignored. Several times he shook his head in acknowledgment of his difficulties. And most important, the soloist and orchestra were not feeling the music together. There was one long passage where the cellist tried unsuccessfully to move the tempo, even after looking around to the concert master for help.

It is indeed a privilege for the citizens of Providence to be able to hear an orchestra of such quality that one can apply high standards of criticism to it, but this does not warrant waiving that criticism.

John Pooler
Providence

Mid-western Tour

Rochester, N.Y.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,025
OCT 17 1961

Munch, Boston Orchestra Heard

Capacity Audience in Eastman Theater Gives Retiring Conductor, Musicians Ovation

By GEORGE H. KIMBALL

While one generally knows what to expect from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its annual concerts in Eastman Theater are never "routine" in the final analysis.

Last night's concert, before the expected jam-packed house whose applause matched its size, was a case in point.

Charles Munch, who most likely was making his last Rochester appearance as the Boston's regular conductor (he's scheduled to relinquish the post to Erich Leinsdorf next season), didn't seem as one about to retire.

As commanding and energetic a figure as ever, he maintained his customary control of this finely disciplined group and struck fire as an interpreter, too.

• • •

FOR SOMETHING unusual, Munch and the orchestra did honor to a noted Rochesterian, Dr. Howard Hanson, by performing his "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" as the opening work. At the conclusion, Dr. Hanson was summoned to the stage by Munch to share the applause.

"Elegy", a brilliantly tone-colored tapestry of sound in mystical harmonies with a great, swelling climax, was performed with revealing eloquence.

This, if memory serves, was the second performance of a work that has been played many times by Munch and the Boston since that orchestra introduced it in 1956.

• • •

ONCE RARELY in its Rochester concerts has the Boston Symphony presented a soloist in a concerto as it did last night, with principal cellist Samuel Mayes performing the Saint-Saens Concerto in A minor.

Mayes gave this delightful example of 19th Century musical elegance a reading that, though ultra-reserved, had precision and crystal clarity in its favor.

• • •

FINALLY came one of the finest interpretations of the Brahms First Symphony in C minor that this reviewer can recall. While maintaining the restraint that most of this composer's major works require, Munch managed to make expressive use of it—a kind of musical tight-rope walking that was subtly exciting in soaring lyricism, brooding harmonies and tower climaxes.

It is difficult to say whether the standing ovation that followed was a farewell to Munch or a recognition of the power of the Brahms performance. Maybe it was both.

This concert opened the Civic Music Association's Artist Series. A note in the printed program informed that all of the seats were held by series subscribers plus the few CMA members who were lucky enough to obtain single admissions. No single tickets (except for standing room) were sold to the general public. All of which seems to portend well for at least a part of the CMA's current season.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126,055 S. 184,493
OCT 17 1961

BIG NIGHT AT EASTMAN

Boston Orchestra Acclaimed

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE

A PILLAR to be tied to in this day of shifting values is the Boston Symphony, which goes about its business of making great music as if this were the main and permanent concern of the human race. An audience that filled the Eastman to standing room last night seemed to agree that the idea is a good one. Music of this sort is the antidote to a lot of world problems.

Last night had its sentimental no less than its musical side. It was probably the last appearance of Charles Munch as conductor of the orchestra, which next year is to pass into the leadership of Erich Leinsdorf. And in playing a work of Dr. Howard Hanson to open the program, Dr. Munch paid a graceful tribute to Rochester. It was a reminder too that this month Dr. Hanson will reach the age of 65.

Above all was the overriding fact that this is a grand orchestra that never seems to do anything wrong. The way it brought out the soul of Dr. Hanson's fine work, "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," was a tipoff on the caliber of the musicians that compose it.

Dr. Hanson wrote the work as a tribute to the former conductor of the Boston orchestra and it is one of his most eloquent compositions. It has depth of feeling, movingly expressed, and the fine craftsmanship of which Dr. Hanson is master. Dr. Munch brought it to a shimmering soft ending and a final organ-like chord that faded into a gentle hush.

* * *

THEN THE PAGE turned to something different, a concerto for orchestra and 'cello by Saint-Saens, the No. 1 in A Minor, a work not much heard of late. The soloist was Charles Mayes, first 'cellist of the orchestra, an artist of virtuoso stature. His tone is silken and his ability to project it unfailingly accurate. Saint-Saens put some appealing lyric ideas into the work, and for the soloist some warm passages that alternate with brilliant technical display. One suspects, however, it needs a performance like that of last night to make it all worth while.

Presumably many in the audience had come to hear the Brahms First Symphony. They were repaid by a performance in the grand manner, shaped with the utmost care and devotion by Dr. Munch and his players. It was taken for the most part in the traditional way, at a moderate tempo, calculated to bring out every light and shade. It is a long work, containing what one sour early critic characterized as "a large quantity of mere surplusage." One hears it today as a work of rich and profound beauty, long but with no waste motions.

It was a joy to hear again the orchestra's enviable assets, the rich strings, the glowing flute of former Eastmanite Doriot Anthony, the impeccable horns and other brass. The audience rose at the end and gave orchestra and conductor an overwhelming tribute.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D, 274,878
OCT 18 1961

The Bostonians in Music Hall

BY ELEANOR BELL

The Artist Series' first call to arms occurred last night at Music Hall and a goodly crew of volunteer listeners marched in somewhat raggedly to observe on the stage the disciplined corps of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch.

Out here in the sticks we look forward to the coming of the great big major symphony orchestras from the east. We can even be breathless about such an event, but it takes some doing to remain breathless for very long over a program that starts out with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," an old-hat essay, proceeds to Saint-Saens' Cello Concerto played by the orchestra's first cellist, and ends with Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

ALL THREE of these pieces were rendered in top-notch fashion, of course. Mr. Copland's nightthoughts came in for expert musical interpretation by the orchestra and by Roger Voisin as solo trumpeter, and Louis Speyer on English horn. Both soloists are superior musicians and equal to much larger tasks than were required of them in "Quiet City."

The trumpet, as Mr. Voisin amply demonstrated, is a lovely instrument for making lonely sounds, but "Quiet City" itself is hardly intriguing and barely passes muster as typically American or even contemporary.

SAMUEL MAYES, who was soloist in the Saint-Saens Concerto is, as everyone knows, one of the ablest first-chair orchestra cellists in the business, but the accompaniment to this mild little exercise is hardly a glorious assignment for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In short, I thought this first half of the program, musically speaking, didn't amount to a hill of beans. It was a waste of Mr. Munch's time and mine.

And it also seemed to me that in playing this part of the program the orchestra merely went through the motions. They were on the stage and Mr. Munch was on the stage, and everybody looked dandy, for all the world as though a concert were going on.

After intermission came the only meat the program had to offer, the Brahms Symphony in C Minor, and here, of course, we heard the refinements, the brilliance, the faultless blending of tone and color for which this orchestra, one of the great ensembles of the world, is justifiably renowned.

ALL THE SECTIONS of the Boston orchestra are wonderfully matched and the sounds it produces are velvety and rich and full-bodied. Mr. Munch inherited a great orchestra and he has kept it that way.

'I see by the scrawls in my program margin that I was annoyed by Music Hall's acoustics last night. This is unheard of and must be attended to. There is no reason for the trumpets to bounce off the back wall and mess up the rhythm as they did last night in the first movement of the Brahms Symphony. The trumpets, of course, were not the offenders. It was the new acoustic screen behind the orchestra. It needs adjustment.

44

Cincinnati, Ohio

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D. 217,449 S. 274,296

OCT 18 1961

Boston Symphony Memorable In Munch Farewell Here

BY RONALD S. HURST
Enquirer Music Critic

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra played to a packed house at Music Hall last evening and received a standing ovation following the Brahms 1st Symphony. This is the first time such an ovation has been given an ensemble in Cincinnati in recent years.

Much has been said about the Boston Symphony's "new mellow sound" since Charles Munch became conductor. However, this writer was struck by the almost electric intensity with which the ensemble played. Munch is a dynamic conductor who is able to get optimum results with a minimum of theatrics.

The concert opened with a beautiful performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for strings, trumpet, and English horn. In this work the orchestra's string section showed itself at its best, playing with a clean, fine sound which was at once fullbodied yet subdued as the music demands.

I have not seen the score of "Quiet City" and do not know the dynamic markings in the trumpet part, but most of the passages without mute seemed entirely too loud. One can only assume that this resulted from the performers lack of familiarity with the acoustics of the hall

FOLLOWING the Copland was Saint-Saens 'Cello Concerto No. 1, with the orchestra's first 'cellist, Samuel Mayes, as soloist. Mr. Mayes is a 'cellist of exceptional ability. He played with taste, eloquence, and a thorough command of his instrument.

However, it was the Brahms Symphony which proved the most exciting work of the evening. When I first heard that the ensemble was to perform the Brahms 1st I was inclined to feel that something less familiar might have been a better choice. However, the performance was perhaps the finest I have ever heard of the work.

Dr. Munch's interpretation of the work is aggressive and powerful. The famous opening of the first movement was played with a precision and force which is often missed by many conductors. In Munch's hands the symphony seemed to grow in intensity by the minute.

Most remarkable was the ensemble's performance of the final movement. Munch turned the opening adagio into a section filled with drama and dignity. I was struck by the manner in which he kept the following allegro equally dramatic. Often the lyricism of the rest of the movement causes a drop in excitement, but Munch did not allow this to happen. The music mounted in strength and concluded the concert with an overpowering climax.

THE BOSTON Symphony is an ensemble with remarkably well balanced sections. The brass section proved to be in particularly fine form last evening. They are capable of playing with a fine pianissimo, yet are able to bring forth a fortissimo which is always rich and powerful, without ever being noisy.

Last evening's performance was the Boston Symphony's last in Cincinnati with Dr. Munch as conductor. He retires at the end of this present season. However, after such a superlative performance as Munch gave us last evening, concertgoers are unlikely to forget him. The concert was memorable in every way, a moving farewell performance of one of the world's greatest living conductors.

AMUSEMENTS

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D, 274,878

OCT 13 1961

The Social Scene

Wulsins Entertain For Dr. Charles Munch

BY MARGARET WEAVER

Opening the Artist Series season Tuesday night at Music Hall is the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Charles Munch, the director, is an old friend of Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin. "We have known him for about 20 years," said Mrs. Wulsin.

She and Mr. Wulsin are entertaining Dr. Munch, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ralph Corbett, Mr. and Mrs. Max Rudolf and "a few intimate friends" at a post-concert supper at their home on Madison road.

Mrs. Weaver

The orchestra's heavy schedule precludes a big party. Dr. Munch arrives in town Tuesday, takes the orchestra to Lexington, Wednesday, and Columbus, O., Thursday.

Saturday. Joseph Fuchs is the guest soloist, playing the William Schuman Concerto.

The new decorating committee of the Women's Symphony Committee is dedicated to beautifying the stage for every concert this year. Assisting Mrs. Robert Bigham and Mrs. Richard G. Arms are the town's leading florists and decorators, plus Mrs. Thomas Pogue, Mrs. Elliott Wentworth, Mrs. Hickok Moffatt, Mrs. Stanley Hooker Jr., Mrs. Eugene Kleiner, Mrs. Joseph Meek, Mrs. W. Leslie Harrison, Mrs. Albert D. Loring, Mrs. Francis Eustis, Miss Helen Huntington, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Crew, Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, Mrs. Roger Clark and Mrs. J. Michael McLellan.

To Minnesota

Mr. and Mrs. Wright C. Sampson III have sold their home on Dog Trot road in Cincinnati and are moving to 11357 Swallow Circle, Coon Rapids, Minn., in November. Their new home has six bedrooms, ample room for Cheri, Wright IV, Cindy, Carol and the new baby, Christel Leanne, born Monday at Christ Hospital.

Decorate Hall

The Garden Club of Cincinnati is this week's volunteer group to decorate Music Hall for the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra's pair of concerts Friday and

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D. 217,449 S. 274,296

OCT 13 1961

IN Society

MR. AND MRS. J. RALPH CORBETT arranged their vacation to end just before the opening of the Artist Series.

Mr. Corbett, Artist Series president, returned to the city from Honolulu late Wednesday and Mrs. Corbett will arrive on Sunday. Aside from recovering from the six hours time difference—Mr. Corbett lost coming back East and is still adjusting—he will be singing the praises of the islands for a long time. Among the highlights of their trip was flying to the different islands of Hawaii to see the country including the fantastic volcano and the island of craters with its popping steam.

With Mr. and Mrs. Corbett in their box for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday evening under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch will be Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Hamilton and Mr. and Mrs. Max Rudolf.

Because of a longtime family friendship with Dr. Munch, who will be making a farewell appearance in Cincinnati, Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin asked to be hosts for a small reception in the conductor's honor after the concert in Music Hall. It will be in their home for his intimate friends.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC.. NOT AVAIL.

DEC 1961

Cincinnati

Season Openers

Practically all of the established music series in Cincinnati are now under way. The only group still unheard from is the Chamber Music Society,. which opens its season in Taft Museum with the Quintetto Chigiano on Nov. 11.

The Cincinnati Symphony opened its 67th season in Music Hall with a pair of concerts on Oct. 6 and 7. The traditional program included Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

The orchestra's second program was enlivened by Joseph Fuchs's playing of William Schuman's Violin Concerto, an impressively vigorous work which owes a debt to Mr. Fuchs for fully exploiting its lyric traits. Also on the Oct. 13 and 14 concerts were Mozart's Prague Symphony and Elgar's Enigma Variations.

In contrast to the well-organized and workmanlike Schuman Concerto was the Menotti Piano Concerto on the next program. Anthony Di Bonaventura did his best to make something out of its weak and trite score.

This program, in honor of the Italian Centennial Celebrations, included Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in A minor, featuring concertmaster Sigmund Effron and the Orchestra's new assistant concertmaster, Max Rabinovitsj; Goffredo Petrassi's Concerto for Orchestra; Casella's Italia; and the Overture to Verdi's La Forza del Destino.

The Artist Series opened its season with a concert on Oct. 17 by the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch. The program for the most part did little to display this celebrated orchestra's unique blend of tonal finesse and virtuoso ability. Included were Copland's Quiet City, Saint-Saens' Cello Concerto (Samuel Mayes, soloist) and Brahms's Symphony No. 1.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,025

OCT 16 1961

Standing Room For Tonight's Boston Concert

The Standing Room Only sign will be hanging at the Eastman Theater boxoffice tonight for the concert of the Boston Symphony. The Civic Music Association said today that all seats have been sold. Standing room tickets will be available at concert time.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D, 274,878

OCT 17 1961

Boston Symphony Here Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will open the Artist Series in Music Hall tonight. The concert begins at 8 p. m.

The program:

COPLAND ..... "Quiet City"
For Strings, Trumpet and English Horn
SAINT-SAENS ..... Cello Concerto
In A Minor
Allegro non troppo.
Allegretto con moto.
Come prima.
SAMUEL MAYES
BRAHMS ..... Symphony No. 1
In C Minor
Un poco sostenuto; allegro.
Andante sostenuto.
Un poco allegretto e grazioso.
Adagio; allegro non troppo ma con brio.

44

Cincinnati, Ohio

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D. 217,449 S. 274,286
OCT 18 1961

Boston Symphony Memorable In Munch Farewell Here

BY RONALD S. HURST
Enquirer Music Critic

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra played to a packed house at Music Hall last evening and received a standing ovation following the Brahms 1st Symphony. This is the first time such an ovation has been given an ensemble in Cincinnati in recent years.

Much has been said about the Boston Symphony's "new mellow sound" since Charles Munch became conductor. However, this writer was struck by the almost electric intensity with which the ensemble played. Munch is a dynamic conductor who is able to get optimum results with a minimum of theatrics.

The concert opened with a beautiful performance of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," for strings, trumpet, and English horn. In this work the orchestra's string section showed itself at its best, playing with a clean, fine sound which was at once fullbodied yet subdued as the music demands.

I have not seen the score of "Quiet City" and do not know the dynamic markings in the trumpet part, but most of the passages without mute seemed entirely too loud. One can only assume that this resulted from the performers lack of familiarity with the acoustics of the hall.

FOLLOWING the Copland was Saint-Saens 'Cello Concerto No. 1, with the orchestra's first 'cellist, Samuel Mayes, as soloist. Mr. Mayes is a 'cellist of exceptional ability. He played with taste, eloquence, and a thorough command of his instrument.

However, it was the Brahms Symphony which proved the most exciting work of the evening. When I first heard that the ensemble was to perform the Brahms 1st I was inclined to feel that something less familiar might have been a better choice. However, the performance was perhaps the finest I have ever heard of the work.

Dr. Munch's interpretation of the work is aggressive and powerful. The famous opening of the first movement was played with a precision and force which is often missed by many conductors. In Munch's hands the symphony seemed to grow in intensity by the minute.

Most remarkable was the ensemble's performance of the final movement. Munch turned the opening adagio into a section filled with drama and dignity. I was struck by the manner in which he kept the following allegro equally dramatic. Often the lyricism of the rest of the movement causes a drop in excitement, but Munch did not allow this to happen. The music mounted in strength and concluded the concert with an overpowering climax.

THE BOSTON Symphony is an ensemble with remarkably well balanced sections. The brass section proved to be in particularly fine form last evening. They are capable of playing with a fine pianissimo, yet are able to bring forth a fortissimo which is always rich and powerful, without ever being noisy.

Last evening's performance was the Boston Symphony's last in Cincinnati with Dr. Munch as conductor. He retires at the end of this present season. However, after such a superlative performance as Munch gave us last evening, concertgoers are unlikely to forget him. The concert was memorable in every way, a moving farewell performance of one of the world's greatest living conductors.

AMUSEMENTS

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D, 274,878
OCT 13 1961

The Social Scene

Wulsins Entertain For Dr. Charles Munch

BY MARGARET WEAVER

Opening the Artist Series season Tuesday night at Music Hall is the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Charles Munch, the director, is an old friend of Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin. "We have known him for about 20 years," said Mrs. Wulsin.

She and Mr. Wulsin are entertaining Dr. Munch, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ralph Corbett, Mr. and Mrs. Max Rudolf and "a few intimate friends" at a post-concert supper at their home on Madison road.

Mrs. Weaver

The orchestra's heavy schedule precludes a big party. Dr. Munch arrives in town Tuesday, takes the orchestra to Lexington, Wednesday, and Columbus, O., Thursday.

Saturday, Joseph Fuchs is the guest soloist, playing the William Schuman Concerto.

The new decorating committee of the Women's Symphony Committee is dedicated to beautifying the stage for every concert this year. Assisting Mrs. Robert Bigham and Mrs. Richard G. Arms are the town's leading florists and decorators, plus Mrs. Thomas Pogue, Mrs. Elliott Wentworth, Mrs. Hickok Moffatt, Mrs. Stanley Hooker, Jr., Mrs. Eugene Kleiner, Mrs. Joseph Meek, Mrs. W. Leslie Harrison, Mrs. Albert D. Loring, Mrs. Francis Eustis, Miss Helen Huntington, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Crew, Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, Mrs. Roger Clark and Mrs. J. Michael McLellan.

To Minnesota

Mr. and Mrs. Wright C. Sampson III have sold their home on Dog Trot road in Cincinnati and are moving to 11357 Swallow Circle, Coon Rapids, Minn., in November. Their new home has six bedrooms, ample room for Cheri, Wright IV, Cindy, Carol and the new baby, Christel Leanne, born Monday at Christ Hospital.

Decorate Hall

The Garden Club of Cincinnati is this week's volunteer group to decorate Music Hall for the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra's pair of concerts Friday and

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D. 217,449 S. 274,286
OCT 13 1961

IN Society

MR. AND MRS. J. RALPH CORBETT arranged their vacation to end just before the opening of the Artist Series.

Mr. Corbett, Artist Series president, returned to the city from Honolulu late Wednesday and Mrs. Corbett will arrive on Sunday. Aside from recovering from the six hours time difference—Mr. Corbett lost coming back East and is still adjusting—he will be singing the praises of the islands for a long time. Among the highlights of their trip was flying to the different islands of Hawaii to see the country including the fantastic volcano and the island of craters with its popping steam.

With Mr. and Mrs. Corbett in their box for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday evening under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch will be Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Hamilton and Mr. and Mrs. Max Rudolf.

Because of a longtime family friendship with Dr. Munch, who will be making a farewell appearance in Cincinnati, Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin asked to be hosts for a small reception in the conductor's honor after the concert in Music Hall. It will be in their home for his intimate friends.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Cincinnati

Season Openers

Practically all of the established music series in Cincinnati are now under way. The only group still unheard from is the Chamber Music Society, which opens its season in Taft Museum with the Quintetto Chigiano on Nov. 11.

The Cincinnati Symphony opened its 67th season in Music Hall with a pair of concerts on Oct. 6 and 7. The traditional program included Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1, with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

The orchestra's second program was enlivened by Joseph Fuchs's playing of William Schuman's Violin Concerto, an impressively vigorous work which owes a debt to Mr. Fuchs for fully exploiting its lyric traits. Also on the Oct. 13 and 14 concerts were Mozart's Prague Symphony and Elgar's Enigma Variations.

In contrast to the well-organized and workmanlike Schuman Concerto was the Menotti Piano Concerto on the next program. Anthony Di Bonaventura did his best to make something out of its weak and trite score.

This program, in honor of the Italian Centennial Celebrations, included Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in A minor, featuring concertmaster Sigmund Effron and the Orchestra's new assistant concertmaster, Max Rabinovitsj; Goffredo Petrassi's Concerto for Orchestra; Casella's Italia; and the Overture to Verdi's La Forza del Destino.

The Artist Series opened its season with a concert on Oct. 17 by the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch. The program for the most part did little to display this celebrated orchestra's unique blend of tonal finesse and virtuoso ability. Included were Copland's Quiet City, Saint-Saens' Cello Concerto (Samuel Mayes, soloist) and Brahms's Symphony No. 1.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,025
OCT 16 1961

Standing Room For Tonight's Boston Concert

The Standing Room Only sign will be hanging at the Eastman Theater boxoffice tonight for the concert of the Boston Symphony. The Civic Music Association said today that all seats have been sold. Standing room tickets will be available at concert time.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D, 274,878
OCT 17 1961

Boston Symphony Here Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will open the Artist Series in Music Hall tonight. The concert begins at 8 p. m.

The program:

COPLAND ..... "Quiet City"
For Strings, Trumpet and English Horn
SAINT-SAENS ..... Cello Concerto
In A Minor
Allegro non troppo.
Allegretto con moto.
Come prima.
SAMUEL MAYES
BRAHMS ..... Symphony No. 1
In C Minor
Un poco sostenuto; allegro.
Andante sostenuto.
Un poco allegretto e grazioso.
Adagio; allegro non troppo ma con brio.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D. 217,449 S. 274,296
OCT 17 1961

Munch Conducts Local Farewell With Boston Symphony

By RONALD S. HURST
Enquirer Music Critic

TONIGHT AT Music Hall the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in the Artist Series' first presentation of the season, Charles Munch, conductor.

The concert will begin at 8 p. m. rather than the series' previous starting time of 8:30.

The Boston Symphony is one of this country's most respected and venerable ensembles. Organized in 1881, with Sir George Henschel as its first conductor, the orchestra came to world prominence under such men as Arthur Nikisch, Karl Muck and, particularly, Serge Koussevitsky, 1924-1948. Dr. Munch succeeded Koussevitsky in 1949.

TONIGHT'S performance will be Dr. Munch's last in Cincinnati. He retires at the end of the 1961-62 season.

Charles Munch first came to the attention of the music world as a violinist. Later, in 1933, he made his debut as a conductor in Paris with the Lamoureux and Paris Symphony Orchestras. Since then he has taught in Paris and appeared with major orchestras the world over.

The orchestra will play Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," the Saint-Saens First Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, and the Brahms 1st Symphony. Samuel Mayes, principal 'cellist with the orchestra, will be soloist fo rthe Saint-Saens concerto.

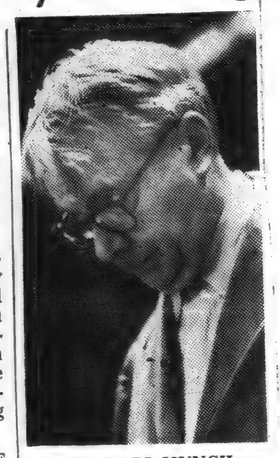
Mr. Mayes, from St. Louis, joined the Boston Symphony in 1948. He first appeared with the St. Louis Orchestra at the age of eight and later joined the Philadelphia Orchestra at 16.

Readers should find this year's Artist Series presentations particularly varied and interesting. Later programs will include "Mazowsze," Polish Song and Dance Company, "Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance," the San Francisco Ballet, David Barlllan, pianist, and a Festival of Song which ends the series in May.

Charles Munch
In Rehearsal

CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST-TIMES STAR
D. 274,878
OCT 16 1961

Mr. Munch Discusses Contemporary Llstening



CHARLES MUNCH
. . . sell-out for 50 years

All conductors of symphony orchestras receive complaints from concertgoers who object to contemporary music. A classic answer has been written by Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will give the opening concert in the Artist Series at Music Hall Tuesday.

Dr. Munch to one complainer: "Thank you very much for the warm and partisan interest that you take in our work. I am always pleased to hear from listeners, since they let me know what we have succeeded in communicating from the stage.

"YOU REPROACH ME for playing too much contemporary music, and I understand your point of view since you came to concerts for amuse ent or distraction or perhaps for consolation—surely for pleasure.

"But we are asking you to do something, to participate actively in an exchange between performer and public when we want you to listen to something new, something difficult to understand, even difficult to listen to, especially at first encounter.

"I consider it our duty to devote, let us say, one-quarter of a concert—which is truly the minimum—to the music written in our time. It is our duty to make live agin not just the masterpieces of the past.

"We must also make heard the music that represents the artistic expression of the time we live in, music that may at the same time prepare for the future.

"It is duty to the young to give them the opportunity to be heard. Music written on paper must be realized and considered. The painter's work or the sculptor's work, when completed, exists for all to see. Music to exist must be played, and who is to play it if we do not?

"I tell you frankly that it would be easier for us to play only older music just is it would be easier for you as a listener, but if we impose this restriction on ourselves, we should be abandoning our obligation to history"

FOR THE LAST 38 years, under Koussevitsky and Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has averaged three new works every two programs. Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's present manager, describes the reaction of Boston audiences:

"Though Bostonian, and some of them elderly, they have no misgivings about their ability to like new things. They've had many years of musical adventure and it's made them about as openlminded as audiences can be. Enduring evidence of this lies in the fact that for a full half-century, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has regulary and effortlessly sold out, in advance, its season concert series tickets."

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
D. 148,317 S. 182,446
OCT 8 1961

Munch, Bostonians Will Play Oct. 17 at Cincy

CINCINNATI, Oct. 7—Charles Munch, who will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the end of the season, will make his final appearance here with the orchestra Tuesday, Oct. 17.

The Boston orchestra will be presented in concert at Music hall for the opening concert of the season for the Artist series sponsored by the College-Conservatory of Music of Cincinnati.

The program, which will begin at 8 p.m., will open with Aaron Copland's Quiet City and include Saint-Saens' Concerto with Cello Soloist and the Brahms Symphony No. 1.

MUNCH has been at the helm of the orchestra since 1949, following the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky who had occupied the post for 25 years. When Munch went to Boston 13 years ago he was one of the foremost musicians in France and had been conductor of four orchestras in Paris.

During the 43 years before Koussevitzky, the orchestra was directed by Pierre Monteux, Henri Rabaud, Max Fiedler, Karl Muck, Emil Paur, Artur Nikisch and Wilhelm Gericke. The first director was George Henschel, a young German conductor brought to this country by Henry Lee Higginson who spent 37 years and his fortune in establishing the Boston Symphony.

After the First World War, the orchestra's owner bowed to inevitable change. The orchestra became what all orchestras had to be: a public trust, the property and responsibility of the community it served. The annual operating budget is $2,225,000. The orchestra earns 90 per cent of its expenses by ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees. The earned income is supplemented by private contributions from the Friends of the Boston Symphony. In the 1959-60 season, about 4,500 Friends contributed $255,000.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER (KENTUCKY ED.)
D 217,449 S. 274,296
OCT 12 1961

Farewell For Munch

DR. CHARLES MUNCH, the world-famous Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct his farewell concert at Music Hall on Tuesday evening, was recently honored before Congress by Representative Silvio Conte (R., Mass.).

In his remarks to the House of Representatives, Mr. Conte said: "It is with true sorrow and wonderful memories that I bring to the attention of the House the coming retirement of one of the greatest artists in the musical world. With the end of the 1962 season, at the age of 70, Dr. Charles Munch will leave Boston. It will be the end of an era, for conductors of the quality of Dr. Munch are individuals who bring their interpretations to music, just as literature produces genius of approach to a theme."

Tickets for Dr. Munch's farewell concert here are on sale now at the Community Ticket Office at Baldwin's, 415 Race Street. Telephone: Cherry 1-1038.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126,055 S. 184,493

OCT 1 1961

SCANNING THE SCORES

With HARVEY W. SOUTHGATE

Launching a Musical Career May Have Rocket Possibilities

LAUNCHING parties are not often within the province of the music department. Last week, however, we had the opportunity to watch a sendoff that was neither a ship, a rocket nor a political campaign. It was the launching of a musical career, which in terms of human values may be as exciting in its way as anything that happens at Cape Canaveral.

Dick Rogers

It was takeoff night for young Richard Tosti, Aquinas graduate who under the name of Dick Rogers has been knocking on the best sellers' door with his vocal recordings. Surrounded by friends and relations, brought together at Logan's restaurant by Dick's "discoverer," Ken Charles, Dick absorbed a lot of praise and some sound advice preparatory to starting on a night club, radio and television tour that will decide his future.

The final stop, according to Charles, will be Hollywood, where Dick hopes to get a trial for the movies.

If good wishes will do it, Dick is already in orbit. These were all good friends sincerely interested in seeing him get his big chance. There was almost no professionalism about the party. Dick's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Tosti of 43 Paddy Hill Road, were by his side, his grandfather was near by. Rev. Albert Shamon of St. Andrew's Seminary gave a good, practical talk. Sheriff Skinner was a guest.

Joe Christy and his Knights, an excellent ensemble of guitars, drums and sax, played a few numbers, and Dick sang a few songs.

Dick's dad, who was himself a successful band leader in the early forties, explained that the name Dick Rogers was selected "because you cannot make puns on Rogers." Certainly everybody present hoped also that it will be a name that many people will come to know, puns or no puns.

The launching, at least, was a big success. A talented, personable and determined youngster is now on his own in a difficult course where he will need heavy reserves of stamina, skill and luck.

A PIANO CAREER that was interrupted abruptly by arthritis apparently has blossomed out again in full flower. Roy Hamlin Johnson, one of the Eastman School's prize graduates, who is now back there studying for a doctor's degree, proved at a recital Friday afternoon that he has lost none of the classic distinction that he showed in his student days.

Last year he suffered a crippling attack of arthritis in his hands that compelled him to lay off the piano. This was soon after a triumphant appearance at a University of Rochester alumni concert in Strong Auditorium which in turn was followed by a recital in New York, that won impressive reviews.

Friday he played a taxing program including Bach's English Suite No. 2 in A Minor; a Mozart Adagio; Samuel Barber's Sonata for Piano, and 12 Chopin Etudes from Op. 10. Here was a program calling for strength, dexterity, musicianship of the highest order, touching both classic and modern schools. The whole was delivered with the authority and sensitivity of an exceptional artist. The audience was obviously delighted to find Mr. Johnson back at top form.

* * *

HOW DOES A conductor feel about the music that is set before him in concert after concert? Believe it or not, he has his likes and dislikes the same as anybody else.

Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has a particular liking for Dr. Hanson's work, "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussivitzky." He likes it so well that he included it in many of the programs he played in the Boston orchestra's European tour, and he is programming it for a number of his concerts this year.

"This is a beautiful work," he said to Dr. Hanson recently. Then in a whisper, "You know I have to play a lot of modern music that I don't like."

The work will be on the program presented by the Boston players at the Eastman Monday, Oct. 16. It was written by Dr. Hanson as a tribute to the eminent musician who was conductor of the Boston Symphony for 25 years and a close friend.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,800

OCT 2 2 1961

PROGRAM NOTES:

Dancers To Perform Classical Russian Ballet

The Leningrad Kirov Ballet will appear Oct. 27-29 at the Masonic Auditorium in Detroit. The first performance, at 8:15 p.m. Friday, will be a Gala Program opening with Bayaderka. The Cossack Scene from Taras Bulba, the Sabre Dance from Gayane, and the Nutcracker, Act II, will follow, with other shorter works. This program will be presented again at 2:15 Saturday. At 8:15 p.m. Saturday and 2:15 p.m. Sunday, the Leningrad troupe will give a full-length performance of Swan Lake.

Boston Symphony . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will present the third concert of the Choral Union series at 2:30 p.m. today at Hill Aud. The program will open with "The Quiet City," for trumpet, English horn and strings, by Aaron Copland, followed by "Iberia" by Claude Debussy. "Symphony No. 3 (Eroica)", by Beethoven, will close the concert.

Playbill Opening . . .

The University of Michigan Players' Playbill season will open with "The Trial" by Franz Kafka, at 8 p.m. Oct. 25-29 at Lydia Mendelssohn Theatre. A drama of guilt and the irrationality of man, "The Trial concerns a young bank executive who awakens one morning to find himself under arrest. For a year he struggles against a nameless Charge before a peculiarly prejudiced jury and an unknown Judge.

Tickets will be available beginning Monday at the Lydia Mendelssohn Theatre Box Office. The office will be open daily 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and until 8 p.m. performance nights.

Polish Dancers . . .

The Mazowsze Polish Song and Dance Company will present the first concert in the Extra Series at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday in Hill Aud. The program will consist of songs and dances from different areas of Poland.

Bill of Rights . . .

The University of Michigan Television Center will broadcast three programs of three current series this morning. "The Blessings of Liberty" series will present "The Bill of Rights" at 8:30 a.m. on station WXYZ, to be followed at 9 a.m. by "A City is Full of People," featuring the work of Philadelphia photographer Ed Wallowitch, in the series "Understanding Our World." "The Heart Wand," a survey of the uses of the cardiac catheter in the living human heart, will be presented at 12 noon on station WWJ in "The Seekers" series on modern medicine.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126,055 S. 184,493

SEP 29 1961

Hanson's Elegy to Koussivitzky On Boston Symphony Program

ONE OF THE numbers on the program of the Boston Symphony in the Eastman Theater on Monday, Oct. 16, will be Dr. Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussivitzky," written five years ago in memory of the distinguished conductor of the Boston orchestra, who held that post for 25 years.

The work was programmed by Dr. Charles Munch, who will conduct the concert here, in part as a tribute to Dr. Hanson's 65th birthday, which falls on Oct. 28. Dr. Munch is also including it in programs at Boston on Oct. 13 and 14; at Ann Arbor on Oct. 21; at Cambridge on Oct. 31; again at Boston on Nov. 6 and 7, and in New York on Nov. 18.

The Cambridge performance will be on local television stations and later distributed to the National Educational Television Network. At each performance attention will be directed to Dr. Hanson's birthday.

Dr. Hanson was a close friend of Koussivitzky. The Elegy was first played by the Boston Symphony and Dr. Munch included it in many of his programs when the orchestra toured Europe.

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO
JOURNAL
D. 22,200 S. 27,704

OCT 8 1961

Boston Symphony Performance Opens Artist Series Season

On Tuesday, Oct. 17, at Music Hall Cincinnati will say farewell to the noted Charles Munch as conductor of the world - famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Munch, the orchestra's music director since 1949, will retire at the end of this season.

When he came to Boston 13 years ago he was one of the foremost musicians in France and had been conductor of four orchestras in Paris. He was more than a French artist. Strasbourg, his native town, has two languages and lies beween two cultures. Dr. Munch's mother was French, his father was Alsatian. He grew up literally surrounded by the music of Bach, for his father, Ernest, in Strasbourg and his uncle, Eugene, in Mulhouse, were leaders of Bach's music in the churches of each city. Another Alsatian, Albert Schweitzer, who was once the pupil of Eugene, is a relative by marriage of Charles Munch.

Dr. Munch is not in the least concerned with describing his own attainments. He is essentially a modest man. In "I Am a Conductor," Leonard Burkat's introduction says: "He is a man of adventure and action rendered almost immobile, tied down to the demands of one of the most exacting of professions. He is a libertarian who has arrived at a point of achievement in the freedom-loving world of the arts where he must wield authoritarian powers that would be the envy of many a tyrant. In a world of complexity, sophistication, vanity and severity, he remains simple, gentle and warm."

The fame of Munch and his magnificent Boston Symphony Orchestra seem inseparable, but this was also true in 1948 when his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, announced his retirement. In 1924, Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor — 25 years. He brought with him the European repertoire plus an encouragement to the American composer which resulted in a new era for the Orchestra.

During the 43 years before Koussevitzky, the Boston Orchestra was directed by Pierre Monteux, a guest conductor of Cincinnal Symphony, Henri Rabaud, Max Fiedler, Karl Muck, Emil Paur, Artur Nikisch and Wilhelm Gericke. The first director was George Henschel, a young German conductor, brought to this country by Henry Lee Higginson, who spent 37 years and his fortune in establishing the Boston Orchestra. After the First World War, the Orchestra's owner bowed to inevitable, change. The Boston Orchestra became what all orchestras had to be: a public trust, the property and responsibility of the community it served. The approximate annual operating budget is $2,225,000. The Orchestra earns 90 percent of its expenses by ticket sales, revenue from recordings, radio, television and broadcasting fees, perhaps the highest of any major orchestra in the United States. The earned income is supplemented by private contributions from the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the 1959-60 season approximately 4300 Friends contributed $255,000.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance on October 17 are now on sale at the Community Ticket Office at Baldwin's 415 Race Street, Cincinnati 2, Ohio.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 217,449 S. 274,296
OCT 8 1961

Joseph Fuchs, Violinist, To Appear With Symphony

Joseph Fuchs, famous violinist, will be soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, under the direction of Max Rudolf.

Mr. Fuchs, who is making his third appearance with the CSO, will play William Schuman's Violin Concerto. This is in keeping with the versatility of the virtuoso. On his last appearance here he played Mozart, this time his choice is contemporary. He has none of the understandable reluctance of many concert artists to seek out, prepare and introduce works by contemporary composers.

In addition to the concerto, Max Rudolf and the orchestra will present Mozarts' Symphony in D major and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. In the audience of the Saturday evening concert will be members of the Music Critics Association, meeting in Cincinnati this weekend.

Tickets for the concerts are available at the new Symphony box office at Baldwin's, 415 Race St., CHerry 1-2538.

Munch Great Orchestra Leader

VIOLINIST AND CONDUCTOR—Joseph Fuchs, violinist, will be the soloist for the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday night. Dr. Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Artist Series concert at Music Hall Tuesday, October 17, at 8 p.m.

CHARLES MUNCH, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, coming to Music Hall, Tuesday evening, October 17, has remained modest, gentle and warm in a world of complexity, vanity and sophistication. As a conductor, Dr. Munch must wield authoritarian powers that would be the envy of many a tyrant. Yet he considers his work a priesthood, not a profession. He says, "Like all sacred callings, that of a conductor means total self-renunciation and a profound humility."

An example of this famed conductor's regard for himself occured last summer while he was listening to a report on foreign students expected to register at the Berkshire Music Center. He heard that there would be a "boy from Italy, a boy from Israel, a girl from Mexico," and so on. Dr. Munch added, "and one boy from Alsace." (He is an Alsacian.)

Although Dr. Munch is an artist of international affiliations and tastes, his early years bred in him traditions of two great musical countries, France and Germany. His father was a staunch Alsatian, with a name derived from the German word Monch, meaning "monk." His mother, Celestine Simon, was French, daughter of a Protestant minister in Paris.

To those who know Charles Munch personally, he is Gallic to his finger tips. His devotion to the music of Berlioz, Debussy, Roussel is well known. On the other hand, the music of Bach is his Bible, a natural result of a boyhood closely surrounded by the music of that master.

Young Munch was conscripted as technically a German citizen in World War I. During World War II he held his post as conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra with complete independence, secretly contributing to the underground resistance. His country house was an important way-station that helped Allied plane crews escape and return to England. He is known to have performed many dangerous deeds on behalf of French musicians of the Jewish faith, who were deprived of their livelihood and whose lives were often in danger during the occupation. He holds the rank of Commander in the French Legion of Honor.

Under Dr. Munch, the fame of the Boston Symphony has reached great heights. On its tour of Russia in 1956, a Moscow critic said, "Charles Munch is a great artist, whose mastery is as evident in old as in contemporary music. If I should try to define his mastery, I would say that it lies in his interpretative power, combining breadth of conception with delicacy of detail. More important than his technical mastery is Munch's human, sincere and deeply felt musical insight. He possesses the strong intellect of a wise man and the fresh approach of a young soul."

Tickets for this Artist Series concert are on sale at the Community Ticket Office, Baldwin's, 415 Race St.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D 208,595 S. 276,407
OCT 1 1961

Copland's 'Quiet City' Inspired by Shaw Play

The American work listed by Charles Munch for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Veterans' Memorial, Oct. 19, is not actually a novelty for Columbus listeners. That is not surprising, for Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" is a good 20 years old.

According to the composer's own story, "Quiet City" happened in this fashion:

"IN THE spring of 1939 I was asked by my friend Harold Clurman, director of the Group Theater, to supply the incidental music for a new play by Irwin Shaw. It was entitled "Quiet City," and was a kind of realistic fantasy concerning the night thoughts of many different kinds of people in a great city. It called for music evocative of the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity. The author's mouthpiece was a young trumpeter whose playing helped to arouse the conscience of his fellow-players and of the audience.

"The play was given two try-out performances in April, 1939, then withdrawn for revision.

"SEVERAL friends urged me to make use of the thematic material in my score as the basis for an orchestral piece. This I did the next summer, borrowing the name, the trumpet and some themes from the original play. I worked in a barn-studio two miles down the road from Tanglewood and completed the orchestration in September, 1940. The first performance was the following January in Town Hall, New York, by the Saidenberg Little Symphony, Daniel Saidenberg conducting."

Other items on the Boston program, first concert of the Symphony Club's season and farewell appearance here of the conductor, Mr. Munch, are Debussy's "Iberia" and the Beethoven Eroica Symphony. Although single tickets for this event go on sale this week, series tickets are available at Summers' for the four Symphony Club concerts, comprising in addition the great orchestras from Berlan, Minneapolis and Philadelphia.

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL HERALD
D. 85,026
OCT 14 1961

Columbus Club Sets Schedule

The 38th season of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio will open with a concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra on Thursday, at 8:30 p.m. at the Veteran's Memorial hall in Columbus.

The Boston orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch will present Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," Claude Debussy's "Iberia," and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica").

Other orchestras to be heard in the club's current season are the Berlin Philharmonic (Oct. 31), the Minneapolis Symphony (Feb. 8) with Byron Janis as piano soloist, and, as in previous years, the finale with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy (May 1).

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D 208,595 S. 276,407
SEP 24 1961

Symphony Club Details First Concert Program

For his farewell appearance before a Columbus audience as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch has designed a program of wide appeal.

The composers are a contemporary American, a turn-of-the-century Frenchman and the greatest of the German romantics:

Quiet City ..... Aaron Copland
Iberia ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 3 in E flat (Eroica) Beethoven

The concert at Veteran Memorial, Thursday evening, October 19, is the first of four by great visiting orchestras to be presented this season by the Symphony Club of Central Ohio.

IN ADDITION to the distinguished Bostonians, the series includes the Berlin Philharmonic under Herbert von Karajan on October 31, the Minneapolis Symphony, led by Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, on Feb. 8, and, again finishing the season on May 1, the Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy.

The Minneapolis concert in February will present as soloist the pianist, Byron Janis, heard and applauded here in previous seasons. This orchestra will also present the Symphony Club's annual Concert for Young People, Feb. 8 at 3:30 at Veterans Memorial.

Charles Munch has brought the Boston orchestra to these Symphony Club concerts seven times in his dozen years as conductor there. Last spring it was announced that the 1961-62 season would be his last, and that his successor would be Erich Leinsdorf, who will take up his duties a year from now.

48

CHILLICOTHE, OHIO
GAZETTE
D. 15,530

OCT 9 1961

Boston First On Symphony Schedule

Since 1923 the Symphony Club of Central Ohio has been bringing to music lovers within reach of Columbus opportunities to hear the world's greatest orchestras. Beginning modestly with an annual series by the Cleveland Orchestra, the Club expanded its activities to include virtually all the American and many European orchestras which were on tour.

The 38th season of the Symphony Club opens with the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday evening, Oct. 19, at 8:30 at Veterans' Memorial. Charles Munch will conduct a program embracing a contemporary American, a turn-of-the-century Frenchman and the greatest of the German Romantics:

"Quiet City" ... Aaron Copland
For trumpet, English horn and strings

"Iberia" ..... Debussy

Symphony No. 3, "Eroica".... Beethoven

This is a farewell Ohio appearance for the distinguished French conductor, who has just passed his 70th birthday and will retire at the end of this season.

Other orchestras to be heard in the Symphony Club's current season are the Berlin Philharmonic conducted by Herbert von Karajan (Oct. 31), the Minneapolis Symphony (Feb. 8) under its new maestro, Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, with Byron Janis as piano soloist, and on May 1 for finale as in many another season, the Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy. The Minneapolis engagement also includes the annual Young People's Matinee.

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 128,025

OCT 13 1961

Munch Tells Program for Boston Date

The Boston Symphony has programmed Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky"; the Saint - Saens Concerto fo rVioloncello in A Minor, and the Brahms First Symphony in C Minor for its Monday night appearance at the Eastman Theatre.

Charles Munch will make his final appearance in Rochester as conductor of the Boston at the 8:15 concert. There are no seats available for this event, the Civic Music Association reports.

The Hanson "Elegy' is being performed by the Boston orchestra in honor of Dr. Hanson's 65th birthday which the Eastman School director celebrates Oct. 28.

The Saint-Saens Concerto will be performed by the Boston Symphony's principal cellist, Samuel Mayes, who has been with the orchestra since 1948. Prior to joining the Boston Symphony he was first cellist with the Philadelphia Orchestra, a position he attained at the age of 21.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 217,449 S. 274,296

OCT 1 1961

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be the opening attraction of the Artist Series season, October 17 at Music Hall.

Munch, Boston Symphony In Artist Series

On Tuesday, October 17, at Music Hall, Cincinnati will say farewell to Charles Munch, conductor of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Munch, the orchestra's music director since 1949, will retire at the end of this season.

When he went to Boston 13 years ago he was one of the foremost musicians in France and had been conductor of four orchestras in Paris. He grew up literally surrounded by the music of Bach, for his father, Ernest, in Strasbourg and his uncle, Eugene, in Mulhouse, were leaders of Bach's music in the churches of each city. Another Alsatian, Albert Schweitzer, once a pupil of Eugene, is a relative by marriage of Charles Munch.

The fame of Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra appear to be inseparable, but this was also true in 1948 when his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, announced his retirement. In 1924, Mr. Koussevitzky, a magic figure in Europe, began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor—25 years. He had with him the European repertoire plus an encouragement to the American composer that resulted in a new era for the Orchestra.

During the 43 years before Koussevitzky, the Boston Orchestra was directed by Pierre Monteux, a beloved guest conductor of our Cincinnati Symphony, Henri Rabaud, Max Fiedler, Karl Muck, Emil Paur, Artur Nikisch and Wilhelm Gericke. The first director was George Henschel, a young German, brought to this country by Henry Lee Higginson, who spent 37 years and his fortune in establishing the Boston Orchestra.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance in the Artist Series are now on sale at the Community Ticket Office, Baldwin's, 415 Race Street. Telephone: CHerry 1-1038. Box office hours are from 9:30 to 4:30 daily.

Paul Newman and Louis Armstrong make with the music in "Paris Blues," next at Keith's Theater.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D 208,595 S. 276,407

OCT 8 1961

BOSTON'S FIRST TRUMPET

Roger Voisin, first trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has a featured role in Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," which is listed for the Symphony Club's first concert, Oct. 19, at Veterans Memorial.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278

OCT 10 196[illegible]

Featured Soon In Columbus

Among the many attractions on tap for Columbus theater-goers during the next few weeks are the faces pictured above. Left to right are Ramine, who plays Turia in the new Cinerama, "South Seas Adventure," which opens Wednesday at the RKO Grand; Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony in concert at Veterans Memorial Thursday, Oct. 19; Ray McKinley, who heads up the Glenn Miller Band at the Capital University homecoming dance Saturday, Oct. 21; and Edith Gordon, who will sing the role of Rosina in "The Barber of Seville," Saturday, Oct. 14, at Veterans Memorial.

LEXIN
HERAL
D. 44,2

OCT 1

Bos
Acc

What opening-
the Bos
in Mem brilliant
Central Series.

A s discern disting briskl baton strai
City
but
It w ture sele
Co ske fal
m pe an in o
d

la
a
"

Lexington, Kentucky

CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
D. 217,449 S. 274 296
SEP 24 1961

Munch In Finale With Artist Series

Charles Munch, great conductor of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, knows Cincinnatians' discriminating taste in music and has arranged a particularly noteworthy program for his concert at Music Hall on Tuesday evening, October 17, under auspices of the Artist Series. Included are the Brahms "Symphony No. 1," the "Concerto with Cello Soloist," by Saint-Saens, and "Quiet City," by Aaron Copland.

This will be the last time Dr. Munch will direct in Cincinnati. He has announced his retirement at the end of this season. He has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra during his 13-year tenure. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which he introduced.

The Orchestra has received two American International Music Fund Awards; Dr. Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording of Debussy's "Images." During his tenure the Boston Orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Dr. Munch has taken the Boston Orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952, and 1956, when the orchestra was the first Western orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union, and an eight-week tour of Japan, Taiwan, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand last year.

His book, "I Am a Conductor," was published in Paris in 1954 and in translation, in New York, 1955 Oxford University Press); London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has a 50-week season totaling 221 concerts before more than 700,000 persons. This is the longest concert season of any privately supported orchestra in the world.

It presents five different series in Boston's Symphony Hall during the 31-week winter season, plus five series in other cities and some 20 tour concerts, then the Boston Pops and the free open-air Esplanade Concerts with Arthur Fiedler, followed by the eight-week Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Mail orders for this Artist Series opening concert are being received at the Community Ticket Office, Baldwin's, 415 Race St.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD-LEADER
SUN. 60,746
OCT 15 1961

The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Symphony Will Open Music Series Wednesday Night In Memorial Coliseum

The Central Kentucky Concert and Lecture Series will present Wednesday night the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch as the opening attraction for the 1961-62 season. The orchestra this year is celebrating its 80th season.

In 1881, an orchestra of the highest European standards was a point of aspiration in the United States. As a music student in Vienna, Henry Lee Higginson, of Boston was exposed to the Viennese tradition and devotion to Beethoven, Mozart and Schubert. After his return from Europe and he acquired the means, he proceeded to build an organization that this country had never known—a permanent orchestra which would devote its sole energies toward the performances of symphonic music. He spent a fortune on this project and after 37 years he left a heritage far richer than a fortune.

Higginson assembled the best musicians available in the United States and Europe and engaged a young German conductor, George Henschel. The first concert was held in the Boston Music Hall on Oct. 22, 1881, just 80 years ago.

Charles Munch, the present conductor, who retires at the end of the current season, was born in Strasbourg, the son of Ernest Munch, a distinguished member of a musical family.

In 1946, Charles Munch visited the United States for the first time. He conducted the Boston Orchestra as a guest and a month later made the first of numerous appearances with the New York Philharmonic. He was engaged in the spring of 1948 to succeed Serge Koussevitzky as music director of the Boston Symphony to begin with the season of 1949-50.

For the Lexington concert the orchestra will perform "Quiet City," for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn, by Aaron Copland, with Roger Voison and Louis Speyer as soloists on these respective instruments.

Iberia ("Images", No. 2) for Orchestra by Claude Debussy.

Symphony No. 3, in E-flat Major, Opus 55, "Eroica", by Ludwig van Beethoven.

The concert management stresses again that no tickets will be sold for a single concert or lecture and there will be no ticket sales at the door of Memorial Coliseum.

The Coliseum is open at 7:15 and the program begins at 8:15. No children under school age will be admitted and after the 14th birthday the price of admission is $8. No seats will be reserved.

LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER
D. 25,723
OCT 18 1961
BURKE PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

Boston Symphony At The Coliseum

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Central Kentucky Concert-Lecture Series at 8:15 tonight with a concert in Memorial Coliseum.

One of the world's foremost musical organizations, the orchestra will be conducted by Charles Munch, who retires at the close of the current season.

In line with the policy of the association, no single tickets will be sold for the concert.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD
D. 44,258
OCT 19 1961

Boston Symphony's Concert Heard By Record Audience

By Lew Horton

An exquisite program was exquisitely played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its revered conductor, Charles Munch, last night in Memorial Coliseum. This was the opening event of the season for the Central Kentucky Concert-Lecture Series, and a more glorious opening concert can hardly be imagined. Appropriately, a record audience filled the Coliseum to the rafters.

Absolutely nothing may be said on the negative side of the ledger concerning this concert. Director Munch himself said that he would have programmed something "bigger" by Copland than the "Quiet City" music, if he had remembered the size of the auditorium, but it was a charming piece of music, admirably rendered. Originally written for a play by Irwin Shaw in which "the author's mouthpiece was a young trumpet player called David Mellnikoff, whose trumpet playing helped to arouse the conscience of his fellow-players and of the audience," and scored for clarinet, saxophone, and piano, "plus the trumpet of course, in the stage version," the rather brief, but wholly expressive work becomes important music when scored for "strings, English horn and trumpet." Soloists were Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, artists of superlative ability.

Charles Munch is the very personification of artistry and efficient, authoritative directing, which is always and continuously evident in the conducting of this master-conductor who, according to the orchestra's publicity, is making his farewell tour this season.

Debussy's suite "Iberia" came next. The composer had spent but a few hours in Spain (which, with Portugal, constitutes the Iberian peninsula, of course,) but it was none less than Manuel de Falla, the greatest of the Spanish composers of the 20th century, who said, "The echoes from the villages, a kind of sevillana'—the generic theme of the work—which seems to float in a clear atmosphere of scintillating light, the intoxicating spell of Andalusian nights, the festive gaiety of a people dancing to the joyous strains of guitars (and other instruments) . . . all this whirls in the air, approaches and recedes, and our imagination is continually kept awake and dazzled by the power of an intensely expressive and richly varied music."

Forgive this reviewer, please, for falling back on program notes for a description of a work too precious for his own description. This preciosity was completely realized by the orchestra, with thrilling solo work by the first oboe, and the rhythmic contribution of castanets and tambourine, plus, of course, Debussy's inevitable pair of harps.

The final work was the monumental "Eroica Symphony" of Beethoven. It was a huge delight to hear this great work admirably interpreted by one of world's greatest orchestras. Despite the great length of the second movement, which Beethoven labeled "funeral march," this milestone in the history of music emerged as a thrilling expression of various aspects of the human spirit, expressed in the traditional sonata form as modified and expanded by Beethoven.

Munch is one of the great artist-musicians of our time. As a conductor he is one who knows the score completely, comprehends completely the intent of the composer, derives that objective from his players and communicates it to his audience. There may be conductors who equal him, there may be orchestras who equal the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but they are not surpassed by any.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD
D. 44,258
OCT 19 1961

Boston Symphony And Mr. Munch Acclaimed For Brilliant Concert

What appeared to be a record opening-night audience greeted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Memorial Coliseum to give a brilliant start to the now famous Central Kentucky Concert-Lecture Series.

A sense of expectancy was discernible as Charles Munch, distinguished conductor, walked briskly to the podium, raised his baton and began the melancholy strains of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," strange music hereabouts, but the audience listened intently. It wasn't like the customary overture-type that many conductors select for a rousing introductory. Copland, however, managed to sketch a somber picture of nightfall in a city, large or small. The music features the trumpet, expertly played by Roger Voison, and the English horn, skillfully interpreted by Louis Speyer, both of whom won plaudits of conductor and listeners.

Copland's music is confined largely to the strings. The brasses and winds were not on stage for "Quiet City."

Claude Debussy's "Iberia" was something else again. The composer paints scenes of passing through "Highways and Byways," "Perfumes of the Night" and "Holiday Morning." The music was outstanding for impeccable playing, its delicacy, refinement and sheer glowing musicianship. The magnificent strings fairly glistened with spontaneous delight and subtle nuance, while the oboe and flute sang with lyric beauty. Mr. Munch, a thoroughly relaxed conductor, gracefully communicated with his players to obtain sensitive projection of every line.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica," is played over and over again by orchestras throughout the world, yet it remains one of the masterpieces of all time. Mr. Munch's interpretation was one of unfailing precision, finesse and natural ease. He employed but two trumpets and the French horns in the brass sections of "Eroica," a departure from standard practice. Perhaps Beethoven didn't have any trombones at hand. The work was magnificent throughout. Such gorgeous playing by the strings is seldom heard in our Coliseum. The Boston French horns, by the way, are models of perfection.

At the close, Mr. Munch was recalled repeatedly, the audience clamoring for an encore—something light, maybe. Boston patrons of their great orchestra are not accustomed to encores. It's considered blase. The encores are left to the famous Boston Pops orchestra.

Mr. Munch, who retires at the close of the current season, will go down in Boston's fine musical tradition as one of the greatest.

Charles Dickerson

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD
D. 44,258

OCT 23 1961

Program By String Group One Of Finest

By Lew Horton

It isn't the frequency of concerts this week that confounds me, it's the very superior quality. We heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra Wednesday night in one of the best such concerts we had ever heard. Yesterday afternoon we heard one of the finest University Musicales that we had heard. Finally, last night the New York String Sextet played one of the finest chamber music programs that we've ever heard, as the opening concert of the season's series of the Chamber Music Society of Central Kentucky.

This group of great artists—two violins, two violas and two cellos—is one of the most finely integrated ensembles in existence. We have heard Paul Doktor here twice before with the Rococo Ensemble. He is one of the outstanding violists of the day; but "so are they all honorable men." Violinists Renato Bonacini and Kees Kooper, violists Doktor and Clifford Richter, and cellists Janos Scholz and George Koutzen are superior artists, in my book, in every respect.

They opened with a most pleasant "Sextet in F major, Opus 24, No. 5" by Boccherini, consisting of a succinct "allegro moderato," a minuet and a short "grave" leading to the finale—and won the clamorous applause of the rather substantial (for a chamber music) audience immediately.

The high point, in my opinion, was the Mozart quintet which followed, the "Quintet in G minor, K. 516," a mature and altogether thrilling work, especially when so admirably interpreted. In this work, we had a chance to hear the players in twos and threes, in addition to fours and "tutti," so that the artistry of the individuals was quite apparent. Tone, unity of ensemble in balance and rhythm, and variety of tone color, overlaying the discerning musicianship of the players, made the hearing of this work a truly exciting experience. Only one cello is used in this quintet, but the genial gentelman who played that instrument made every tone count, whether bowed or pizzicato; and he, as did the rest of the ensemble, seemed to be enjoying himself as much as we were.

Perhaps the great superiority of this Mozart work accounts for my slightly negative reaction to the Brahms sextet which was last on the program, his "Sextet No. 1" in B flat major, Opus 18." Brahms, like Beethoven, wrote a lot of worthy music before he ever attempted a symphony. Judging from this relatively early sextet, it was wise to wait. Somehow, I felt the work ponderous, with occasional over-complexity of rhythms, and a kind of "sforzato ostinato" (to invent a term) that trod in wooden shoes, whereas the Mozart danced in ballet slippers. The "andante" movement, a theme and variation uses plenty of devices for variety but never gets off the ground. It was still a great work, magnificently played, but this particular Brahms work seemed to lose by its proximity to this particular Mozart work.

However, the audience was still enthusiastic, bless them, and an encore had to be played. We were given a chance to hear a glowing performance of the "finale: allegro" of a sextet by Quincey Porter, director of the Boston Conservatory, who has produced a considerable quantity of splendid chamber works, principally for string quartet. This movement was a gem, and we might have profited by having the entire work as second on the program with a Mozart work concluding.

Anyhow, the season was opened most auspiciously. Now anything can happen and we still can't complain.

LEXINGTON, KY.
HERALD-LEADER
SUN. 60,746

OCT 15 1961

MOSTLY MUSIC

Beethoven's Third Symphony

By Dew Horton

Beethoven's third symphony probably is better known for its legend than for the music itself. The second or slow movement, a funeral march, despite the magnificence of the Beethoven craftsmanship, is quite long, so the work is to rarely played.

The Youth Orchestra of Central Kentucky has played the work in its entirety under its present conductor, Robert King; but we understand that its performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Coliseum Wednesday night will be the first local performance of it by a major symphony orchestra.

The legend: Beethoven dedicated the symphony to Napoleon Bonaparte, but, on hearing that his hero had allowed himself to be declared emperor, the composer violently tore off the dedication, threw it to the floor and stamped on it. The violence of the scene is probably exaggerated, but it is a fact that he substituted for the original dedication a statement in Italian, which, in translation, reads, "Heroic symphony, composed to celebrate the memory of a great man." Hence the work is referred to as the "Eroica (heroic) Symphony" since that time, though Beethoven himself still referred to it as the "Bonaparte" in some correspondence.

Horton

The grandeur of the first and last movements, and the almost irreverent jocularity of the scherzo, which follows the funeral march, compensate for any strain made on one's span of attention by the slow movement.

The finale is a grand theme and variations in which the theme evolves into an accompaniment for a new theme, which in turn is varied and developed. In the majestic process of working out and accumulating, the movement finally explodes in a magnificent fugue.

* * *

Frequency modulation (FM) is the right medium for broadcasting fine music. It's out of the range of frequency of static—electrical interference, which is why the audio on your television set is free of static while your AM radio is subject to interference. All over the country, an "explosion of culture" is manifesting itself in one aspect by the increase of broadcasting of fine music by FM stations.

This is not to say that we don't appreciate the very worthy AM broadcasting of fine music, such as the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 1 p.m. on Sundays by Station WBLG (1300 KC,) the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at 8 p.m. on Sundays by Station WVLK (590 UC), and programs of similar nature and stature from WHAS, Louisville, and WLW, Cincinnati.

But now comes the announcement that about Nov. 1, WVLK-FM will start a daily schedule of 18 hours of the world's greatest music, according to Kenneth Hart and Charles Farmer, WVLK executives. Frequency is to be 92.9 megacycles; power 32,000 watts, enough to make it available to schools, college and homes in a radius of 60 miles from Lexington.

Classical and folk music, opera, and the best of jazz and Broadway shows will be included. The world's greatest artists, conductors and ensembles will be heard. The programs are from the famous "Heritage" series, of the sort that pioneering eastern station, WQXR, has been featuring in the New York City neighborhood for years.

Highlights of one day's program include works by Liszt, Wagner, Mozart, Rachmaninoff, Beethoven, Dvorak, Debussy and Schumann. Such orchestras as the Berlin Philharmonic, the RCA Symphony and the NBC Symphony are included. Conductors include Karajan, Toscanini, Wallenstein and all the other greats.

Also, don't forget the continuing fine broadcasts of the University of Kentucky's FM station, WBKY (91.2 megacycles.) The quarterly listing of programs for this station has reached this dest, and it look better than ever.

The continuous program, "Kaleidoscope" feature of the University's broadcasting must rely on private financial contributions for its continuance. Contributions should be sent to (and checks made out to) the University of Kentucky Research Foundation, earmarked for the perpetuation of "Kaleidoscope."

LEXINGTON, KY.
LEADER
D. 25,723
OCT 20 1961

BURKELLE'S PAGE ONE

Concert Crowd And Coliseum Acoustics Are Discussed

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Shlomo Shafir, writer of international affairs for Davar, one of Israel's largest newspapers, is on assignment to The Leader.)

By SHLOMO SHAFIR

The increasing interest of the American public in classical music and the growth of regular concert series had been pointed out to me at home before coming to Lexington.

But I realized this fact fully, only when I attended on Wednesday the opening of the season of the Central Kentucky Concert Series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The audience that filled the Memorial Coliseum made a great impact on me, although there was a special reason. The fame of the performing orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, whom I had heard twice conducting the Israeli Philharmonic Orchestra in Tel-Aviv, goes all over the world.

Shafir

The Concert and Lecture Series seem to have really been a great success here. The manifold crowd that flocked into the Coliseum showed that interest in serious music is in no way limited to a small group of concert-goers but covers a fairly wide range. And although I was told that UK students paid only a small fee included in their tuition, I was impressed by the great number among them attending the concert. I am sure that sporting events attract even greater numbers of people to the great hall. But I think that the audience which gathered on Wednesday cut a very impressive figure.

Frankly speaking, I would prefer a smaller number in a real Concert Hall, where performances are given in various series. Without entering the field of music criticism, for which I am not qualified, the Coliseum which has been built mainly for sports has some limitations in the field of acoustics. Those acoustic faults, the noise made by latecomers and early-leavers, the open doors and the ringing of the telephone detract somewhat from the magnificent performance. If Lexington really wants to become a musical center, it will have to make a decisive step and build a Concert Hall.

The Coliseum — not in its hugeness, but in its acoustics — reminded me of the trouble our own Philharmonic had in Tel-Aviv and in Jerusalem until the modern 3,000-capacity Mann Auditorium was completed in 1957. Although the orchestra had been established 25 years ago and had attracted a large number of first-class Jewish performers from all over Europe, it had to play for many years in an unsuitable hall in Tel-Aviv and in a movie theater in Jerusalem. Only four years ago it received its modern headquarters. In Jerusalem a hall of like capacity is nearing completion.

Making this comparison, I have to underline the major role played by the Israeli Philharmonic Orchestra in the cultural life of the nation. The orchestra, which was established by the Jewish violinist Bronislau Hubermann and given an unique start by the great Arturo Toscanini, has become the most important institution on our cultural scene. It gives about 200 concerts a year and offers from 10 to 14 different programs. I would guess it has about 25,000 regular subscribers.

The orchestra has achieved international standard and has conducted tours of the United States, Canada, Europe and some Asian countries. It has played under the baton of the most famous conductors, such as both the late Koussevitsky and Mitropoulos, Eugene Ormandi, Bernstein, Solti, Kubelik, Kripps, Sir John Barbirolli and others. It has also played host to illustrious soloists like Arthur Rubinstein, Menuchin, Milstein, Francescatti, Arrau, Richard Tucker, etc. For the last years it has also staged excellent operatic performances, besides the regular performances of the Israel National Opera whose level is lower.

The Philharmonic is not the only orchestra in Israel. There exist the orchestra of the Broadcasting Service, the Army Band, and various local orchestras. Interest in music is not limited to the immigrants from European countries. The young people born in Israel show very great interest it it, and major strides have been made in the field of musical education.

Another highlight of music in Israel was the First Musical Festival, which took place this fall and which assembled a group of famous musicians: The 83-year-old cellist Pablo Casals, Isaac Stern, Rudolf Serkin, Maureen Forrester and the Budapest String Quartet. Although the emphasis was on chamber music, nearly all of the performances were sold out and the 12 concerts were heard by approximately 36,000 people.

Concert

(Continued From Page 1)

51

Columbus, Ohio

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 208,595 S. 276,407
OCT 15 1961

CONSTANT TO AMERICAN COMPOSERS

In the program which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play for the Symphony Club in Veterans Memorial Thursday evening, Charles Munch has exemplified his constant principles of program-building. In the 12 years he has been music director of the Bostonians, he has been a consistent champion of contemporary American composers—and one of them, Aaron Copland, is represented on the Columbus list by his "Quiet City." His repertory during this period has included some 30 native composers, more than one work by some of them. He has offered world premieres of 13 American works, U.S. premieres of three.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278
OCT 20 1961

Burgin's Eroica Brightly Paced

By ABE ZAIDAN
Citizen-Journal Staff Writer

When word arrived that Charles Munch would not direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its program launching the 38th season of the Symphony Club of Central Ohio, at least one question was raised concerning this particular appearance.

The cornerstone of Thursday night's concert in Veterans Memorial was Beethovens indomitable Eroica, and the question was simply whether Associate Conductor Richard Burgin's presence on the podium would represent Munch or Burgin.

MUNCH'S STRENGTH, and he is credited with high attainment in both the romantic and modern, does not reveal itself in an affinity for Beethoven.

Burgin's direction of the Eroica last night seemed to carry over this premise in at least one respect: This was a rapidly-paced performance that offered the well-established virtuosity and outstanding section work of the orchestra to its finest degree without dwelling upon the moments of intensity and sheer strength of the music itself.

This was not a stormy Eroica. The dynamic range of the symphony was scaled to a brighter, less dramatic canvas. This became evident in the early moments of the score, where Burgin chose easier releases rather than sharply intensified cut-offs. It was carried out with a consistent conception the remainder of the way.

TO SOME listeners, this will be a virtue. To those who like Beethoven in a whirlpool of fury, it will be less interesting.

A high point of the evening was the playing of Saint-Saens' first 'cello concerto by first-desk 'cellist Samuel Mayes (and we wonder how many first-desk men of this venerable orchestra could not provide some high points!). The soloist's instrument sounded the romantic voice of the concerto with excellent tone and gifted execution.

Burgin led off with Brahms' joyous "Academic Festival Orchestra," which is as good a way as any to set the audience in a happy mood.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 208,595 S. 276,407
OCT 20 1961

MANY SURPRISES

Outstanding Concert By Boston Orchestra

By ROSEMARY CURTIN HITE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert on Thursday night at Veterans Memorial held an unexpected bonus for the large audience. Samuel Mayes, principal 'cellist of the orchestra for many years, appeared as soloist in the Saint-Saens Cello Concerto.

As familiar as Mr. Mayes' excellent work as orchestra 'cellist is to Columbus listeners, most of these present were quite unprepared for the sheer wonder of his artistry as a solist.

And wonderful it was: such silken tone, such eloquence of phrase, such delicacy of feeling have rarely been heard on this or any other instrument. The Saint-Saens in Mr. Mayes' hands is nothing short of rapturous.

ONE MIGHT also call Richard Burgin's appearance as conductor an unexpected bonus, although his reputation as a conductor is so firmly established as to preclude any surprise at the brilliant results he achieved.

Yet a slight misgiving on the part of the concert-goer that the orchestra might not be up to par in the absence of its regular conductor might be forgiven. Such was not the case, however. If anything, the orchestra played more brilliantly than ever, and Mr. Burgin's conducting bore the stamp of true authority.

HE OPENED the concert with Brahms Academic Festival Overture in an interpretation rather more brilliant than sonorous. The main work of the evening, the Beethoven Third Syphony followed intermission. In this, as in the Saint-Saens, the incredible perfection of this orchestra struck the listener anew. No demand is beyond its scope; every least nuance is turned with such skill and such expertness as to seem to rise above the usual human limitations.

Mr. Burgin's forthright Germanic concept of the first movement was realized with a sparkling clarity. The second movement, enhanced by the exquisite woodwind playing of flutist Doriot Anthony, oboist Ralph Gomberg, and bassoonist Sherman Walt, was so moving that one felt a sense of loss at its conclusion.

After, the third and fourth movements (rollicking, ebullient, and tender in turn), the Symphony Club of Central Ohio patrons left the hall with a feeling close to awe at having participated in an event of such consummate artistry.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
D. 208,595 S. 276,407
OCT 18 1961

FIRST CELLIST BOSTON SOLOIST

Samuel Mayes, first cellist of the Boston Symphony, will play the Saint-Saens A-minor Concerto at the concert the orchestra gives in the Veterans Memorial on Thursday evening for the Symphony Club of Central Ohio. Richard Burgin will conduct.

REYNOLDSBURG, OHIO
RECORD
W. 1,500
OCT 12 1961

Symphony Club Season To Open

The 38th season of the Symphony Club opens with a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thursday, Oct. 19, 8:30 p.m. at Veterans' Memorial.

Charles Munch will conduct a program embracing a contemporary American, a turn-of-the century Frenchman and the greatest of the German romantics:

"Quiet City," by Aaron Copland; "Iberia," by Debussy and "Eroica," Beethoven.

This is a farewell Ohio appearance for the distinguished French conductor, who has just passed his 70th birthday and will retire at the end of the season.

52

Detroit, Michigan

DETROIT, MICH.
MICHIGAN CHRONICLE
W. 32 852
OCT 21 1961

BY ROBERT NOLAN

Musical Jottings

Due to the demand for space in last week's Chronicle our discussion on 'Charles D. Coleman's 'Bridging' the gap from his school, to the Concert stage,' was cut. Herein, we'd like to give you the remainder of that 'unfinished symphony' of Coleman events.

Recently returned from Nashville, where, at the Spruce Street Baptist church in the vicinity of Fisk University, Coleman was accorded a thunderous ovation of acclaim for his organ recital debut performance there.

Acclaimed Dr. John Work, a veteran composer, arranger and head of Fisk's Music Department: "Wow, what a brilliant technique!"

In a few days, Coleman will perform a piano recital for students of the Sampson School here.

Already a degree-member of the American Guild of Organists, he (in 1957), was one of two American organists invited to attend the International Congress of Organists in London.

As a composer and arranger, Coleman has written works (some published by reputable firms), for organ, piano, voice, violin, choral and small orchestra. He has also written works for special occasions, like weddings, Freedom movements and for commemorative community observances.

Last, but certainly not least, he is married to Juanita, who is also a Wayne State University 'Master' grad., an instructor at the Marcy Elementary school, and part-time instructor at the Northwestern School of Music.

She is also an exceptional pianist and accompanist.

Together, they are the parents of Clifton, 6, and Ronald 18 months. And by a previous marriage, there are Charles, 14, and Charlotte, 10, all of them evidencing alert response and interest in the fine arts.

We were recently honored with a short visit from Mrs. Charlotte Perry, of Windsor, where she teaches at the City College.

She dropped in to personally present to us an autographed copy of a song she has just composed, titled: "Plenty For All." 'Tis a gem of a ditty . . . immediately catchy and popular in appeal.

* * *

Soloists on the Aijalon Baptist church recent Fall Musicale whose names failed to show include Idella Brown, James Laws, Gerri Kitchen and Richard Merritt. Thelma Thomas and Grace Burns were the fine accompanists.

* * *

Performing the first half of his forthcoming Detroit concert on a Mozart piano, Paul Badura-Skoda will open the Detroit Institute of Arts Concert series on Thursday evening, October 26, at 8:20 p.m. This should prove an exceptional delight . . . especially for young students of music.

* * *

Charles Munch, world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will lead the orchestra for the last time in Detroit Friday, Oct. 20, in Masonic Auditorium at 8:20 p.m.

DETROIT, MICH.
NORTH-END NEWS
W. 6,560
OCT 12 1961

Munch Will Conduct Here

Charles Munch, the world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead that orchestra for the last time in Detroit Oct. 20, in Masonic auditorium.

Doctor Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1962 season.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Doctor Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952, at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand last year.

The program to be presented in Detroit Oct. 20 is as follows: "Quiet City, for lish Horn," by Copland, Debussy's "Iberia," ("Images," No. 2) and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68."

Tickets are still available for the Boston Symphony concert at Grinnell's downtown store and at the Masonic Temple box office.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D. 501,115 S. 522,202
OCT 21 1961

A RESOUNDING TRIPLE

Boston Symphony Proves Its Greatness

BY COLLINS GEORGE
Free Press Music Writer

The three pieces which made up the Boston Symphony program at the Masonic Auditorium Friday night represented three major facets of the musical history of that great organization.

The program opened with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" music, indicative of the great assistance the orchestra, under both Koussevitsky and Charles Munch, has given to modern American music.

The second work, DeBussy's "Iberia," represented the native affinity that Munch, like our own Paul Paray, has for music of Gallic origin.

The program closed with that great classic, Brahms' First Symphony, a staple in any orchestra's repertory.

The orchestra, as was to be expected, was exemplary throughout.

* * *

THE FIRST two pieces are both descriptive and evocative. Copland's "Quiet City"—for strings, trumpet and English horn—suggests the essential loneliness of a large American metropolis, particularly in the very early hours when most of the city is asleep.

The plaintive songs of the trumpet and English horn only serve to emphasize this loneliness. Roger Voisin, on the trumpet, and Louis Speyer, on the English horn, made the solo passages ever so poignant.

This work directly contrasted with the second work, "Iberia."

Like the Copland work, it is descriptive of a place, Spain, and a Spanish town at that.

* * *

BUT THERE is no loneliness there. The first and last sections tell of action on highways and streets on the morning of a holiday.

The middle section tells of the perfumes of the night. It is a languorous night, but one of shared solitude—not loneliness.

Throughout it all, there are the shifting and contrasting Spanish rhythms which give a complete picture in music.

In the Brahms work, with its massive harmonies and stirring progressions, one noted the precision and the glorious tones of the string sections for which the Boston Symphony is noted.

The tall, white-haired, benign director of the orchestra, Dr. Munch, was conducting his last concert in Detroit. He retires from the orchestra at the end of this season to be replaced by Erich Leinsdorf.

He will be missed, because of his thorough involvement in the music which he manages to draw from the orchestra in such overwhelming sounds as in Friday's concert.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
D. 482,384 S. 647,446
OCT 21 1961

Applause Greets Munch in Farewell to Detroit

By JOSEF MOSSMAN
Detroit News Music Critic

Joy of reunion and the nostalgia of farewell mingled in the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Masonic Auditorium.

As it has for many years past, the Boston orchestra opened the Masonic Temple Symphony Series and was greeted as an old friend by the near-capacity crowd.

Conductor Charles Munch was recalled to the stage again and again at the end of the concert to receive the tumultious applause of the audience. It probably was his farewell to Detroit, for he has announced his retirement from the Boston conductorship at the end of this season.

Munch's farewell was expressed in a sweeping, powerful performance of Brahms' symphony No. 1 in C minor that doubtless will be long remembered by those present.

For all his mild manner and economy of gesture, Munch evoked from the orchestra one of the most penetrating and eloquent performances the Brahms first has ever had. It was orchestral playing of awesome breadth.

The phrasing in the second movement clarified Brahms' sometimes meandering ideas, and a stunning musical entity was created out of this single movement.

The final movement had majesty and brilliance, the orchestra's legendary tone was at its most glorious, and the normally restrained Detroit audience was so enthusiastic that it broke into applause a good six beats before the end of the final chord.

Earlier the orchestra had been brilliant in Debussy's "Iberia," second of his "Images" suites.

"Iberia" has a program of three movements utilizing the Spanish rhythms and moods that Debussy loved so dearly. The opening section, "In the streets and byways," and the closing, "Festival day," were played in the gala spirit they deserve, although the middle section, "Perfums of the night," was rather too robust and lacked the diaphanous feel it should have had.

The program opened with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" suite, a symphonic version of his incidental music for a play by Irwin Shaw.

Even in symphonic form, it remains incidental music, and was notable chiefly for the opportunity it provided for some superb solo playing by Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278
OCT 19 1961

At Veterans

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be on the podium Thursday night in place of the ailing Charles Munch, as the group appears in concert at Veterans Memorial at 8:30. The program is offered by the Symphony Club, and tickets are available at the door.

52

Detroit, Michigan

DETROIT, MICH.
MICHIGAN CHRONICLE
W. 32,852
OCT 21 1961

BY ROBERT NOLAN

Musical Jottings

Due to the demand for space in last week's Chronicle our discussion on Charles D. Coleman's 'Bridging' the gap from his school to the Concert stage,' was cut. Herein, we'd like to give you the remainder of that 'unfinished symphony' of Coleman events.

Recently returned from Nashville, where, at the Spruce Street Baptist church in the vicinity of Fisk University, Coleman was accorded a thunderous ovation of acclaim for his organ recital debut performance there.

Acclaimed Dr. John Work, a veteran composer, arranger and head of Fisk's Music Department: "Wow, what a brilliant technique!"

In a few days, Coleman will perform a piano recital for students of the Sampson School here.

Already a degree-member of the American Guild of Organists, he (in 1957), was one of two American organists invited to attend the International Congress of Organists in London.

As a composer and arranger, Coleman has written works (some published by reputable firms), for organ, piano, voice, violin, choral and small orchestra. He has also written works for special occasions, like weddings, Freedom movements and for commemorative community observances.

Last, but certainly not least, he is married to Juanita, who is also a Wayne State University 'Master' grad., an instructor at the Marcy Elementary school, and part-time instructor at the Northwestern School of Music.

She is also an exceptional pianist and accompanist.

Together, they are the parents of Clifton, 6, and Ronald 18 months. And by a previous marriage, there are Charles, 14, and Charlotte, 10, all of them evidencing alert response and interest in the fine arts.

We were recently honored with a short visit from Mrs. Charlotte Perry, of Windsor, where she teaches at the City College.

She dropped in to personally present to us an autographed copy of a song she has just composed, titled: "Plenty For All." 'Tis a gem of a ditty . . . immediately catchy and popular in appeal.

* * *

Soloists on the Aijalon Baptist church recent Fall Musicale whose names failed to show include Idella Brown, James Laws, Gerri Kitchen and Richard Merritt. Thelma Thomas and Grace Burns were the fine accompanists.

* * *

Performing the first half of his forthcoming Detroit concert on a Mozart piano, Paul Badura-Skoda will open the Detroit Institute of Arts Concert series on Thursday evening, October 26, at 8:20 p.m. This should prove an exceptional delight . . . especially for young students of music.

* * *

Charles Munch, world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will lead the orchestra for the last time in Detroit Friday, Oct. 20, in Masonic Auditorium at 8:20 p.m.

DETROIT, MICH.
NORTH-END NEWS
W. 6,560
OCT 12 1961

Munch Will Conduct Here

Charles Munch, the world-famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead these orchestra for the last time in Detroit Oct. 20, in Masonic auditorium.

Doctor Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1962 season.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Doctor Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952, at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand last year.

The program to be presented in Detroit Oct. 20 is as follows: "Quiet City, for lish Horn," by Copland, Debussy's "Iberia," ("Images," No. 2) and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68."

Tickets are still available for the Boston Symphony concert at Grinnell's downtown store and at the Masonic Temple box office.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D. 501,115 S. 522,202
OCT 21 1961

A RESOUNDING TRIPLE

Boston Symphony Proves Its Greatness

BY COLLINS GEORGE
Free Press Music Writer

The three pieces which made up the Boston Symphony program at the Masonic Auditorium Friday night represented three major facets of the musical history of that great organization.

The program opened with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" music, indicative of the great assistance the orchestra, under both Koussevitsky and Charles Munch, has given to modern American music.

The second work, DeBussy's "Iberia," represented the native affinity that Munch, like our own Paul Paray, has for music of Gallic origin.

The program closed with that great classic, Brahms' First Symphony, a staple in any orchestra's repertory.

The orchestra, as was to be expected, was exemplary throughout.

* * *

THE FIRST two pieces are both descriptive and evocative. Copland's "Quiet City"—for strings, trumpet and English horn—suggests the essential loneliness of a large American metropolis, particularly in the very early hours when most of the city is asleep.

The plaintive songs of the trumpet and English horn only serve to emphasize this loneliness. Roger Voisin, on the trumpet, and Louis Speyer, on the English horn, made the solo passages ever so poignant.

This work directly contrasted ith the second work, "Iberia." Like the Copland work, it is descriptive of a place, Spain, and a Spanish town at that.

* * *

BUT THERE is no loneliness there. The first and last sections tell of action on highways and streets on the morning of a holiday.

The middle section tells of the perfumes of the night. It is a languorous night, but one of shared solitude—not loneliness.

Throughout it all, there are the shifting and contrasting Spanish rhythms, which give a complete picture in music.

In the Brahms work, with its massive harmonies and stirring progressions, one noted the precision and the glorious tones of the string sections for which the Boston Symphony is noted.

The tall, white-haired, benign director of the orchestra, Dr. Munch, was conducting his last concert in Detroit. He retires from the orchestra at the end of this season to be replaced by Erich Leinsdorf.

He will be missed, because of his thorough involvement in the music which he manages to draw from the orchestra in such overwhelming sounds, as in Friday's concert.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
D. 482,384 S. 647,446
OCT 21 1961

Applause Greets Munch in Farewell to Detroit

By JOSEF MOSSMAN
Detroit News Music Critic

Joy of reunion and the nostalgia of farewell mingled in the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Masonic Auditorium.

As it has for many years past, the Boston orchestra opened the Masonic Temple Symphony Series and was greeted as an old friend by the near-capacity crowd.

Conductor Charles Munch was recalled to the stage again and again at the end of the concert to receive the tumultious applause of the audience. It probably was his farewell to Detroit, for he has announced his retirement from the Boston conductorship at the end of this season.

Munch's farewell was expressed in a sweeping, powerful performance of Brahms' symphony No. 1 in C minor that doubtless will be long remembered by those present.

For all his mild manner and economy of gesture, Munch evoked from the orchestra one of the most penetrating and eloquent performances the Brahms first has ever had. It was orchestral playing of awesome breadth.

The phrasing in the second movement clarified Brahms' sometimes meandering ideas, and a stunning musical entity was created out of this single movement.

The final movement had majesty and brilliance, the orchestra's legendary tone was at its most glorious, and the normally restrained Detroit audience was so enthusiastic that it broke into applause a good six beats before the end of the final chord.

Earlier the orchestra had been brilliant in Debussy's "Iberia," second of his "Images" suites.

"Iberia" has a program of three movements utilizing the Spanish rhythms and moods that Debussy loved so dearly. The opening section, "In the streets and byways," and the closing, "Festival day," were played in the gala spirit they deserve, although the middle section, "Perfums of the night," was rather too robust and lacked the diaphanous feel it should have had.

The program opened with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" suite, a symphonic version of his incidental music for a play by Irwin Shaw.

Even in symphonic form, it remains incidental music, and was notable chiefly for the opportunity it provided for some superb solo playing by Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN JOURNAL
D. 85,872 S. 89,278
OCT 19 1961

At Veterans

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be on the podium Thursday night in place of the ailing Charles Munch, as the group appears in concert at Veterans Memorial at 8:30. The program is offered by the Symphony Club, and tickets are available at the door.

53

Ann Arbor, Michigan

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,800
OCT 2 3 1961

HOMECOMING CONCERT:

Boston Symphony: Excellence per Usual

THE IMPECCABLE BOSTON SYMPHONY opened a well received concert last night with American Howard Hanson's contemporary, "Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky." As one learns to expect from the Bostonians, splendid orchestral sonority and balance highlighted this lyrical and subtly colored work. Nevertheless, in all probability, it will not become an enduring example of American orchestral writing, although hints of extreme originality were evident—notably in the haunting close of the work.

In Saint-Saens popular Violincello Concerto No. 1, soloist Samuel Mayes displayed a warm, vibrant tone but not always precise intonation. The French "joie de Vie" which permeates much of Saint-Saens' music was not at all times apparent, although in the darker, lyrical passages, Mayes revealed much depth and rhapsdic flow of line. At times it is difficult to say whether dramatic lapses in this work were the fault of the composer or the conductor; one is inclined to say that the fault lies with Saint-Saens. Nevertheless, the intense lyricism of this work became immensely moving through the romantic and sensitive interpretation that one expects and invariably gets from Munch.

* * * *

IN THE FAMILIAR Brahms Symphony No. 1, Munch revealed an inspired reading that was at once songful yet dramatic, sensitively lyrical yet driving with strong, forceful energy. There was a feeling of stature and musical proportion throughout. Perhaps the only fault was the inevitable tendency of many conductors to flatten out the familiar C-major melody in the last movement into something lachrymose and sentimental. But never did Munch let his French sensuousness and lyricism allow the destruction of the noble, strong and sweeping Teutonic splendor that belongs to Brahms at his greatest.

—Alan Gillmor

Munch . . . last local concerts

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,800
OCT 24 1961

AT HILL AUDITORIUM:

Ovation for Munch: Genuine, Rational

AARON COPELAND'S Quiet City made an effective transition between a splendid autumn afternoon and the concert hall at Sunday's performance of the Boston Symphony. Conductor Munch, in his last Ann Arbor appearance, drew forth lovely quiet sustained sounds from his string section in this duo for trumpet and English horn. The solo instruments complement each other nicely. The English horn can be like a rich baritone trumpet, and thus the two instruments extend the sound range of each other. A nervous tone marred the trumpet part somewhat, but Copland's work remained a pleasing piece in a conservative contemporary idiom.

It was fresh to have both this and Saturday's concert begin with subdued music rather than the usual off-and-running overture. Variety was aided in both concerts by inclusion of American, French and German works. Both programs were designed to build dramatically to the end, and sections within the works were interpreted with similar effect in mind. This tampering with the dynamics and tempos of a piece can become boring if done repeatedly; but it's good showmanship, if that's what you want.

Debussy's Iberia is Spain seen through a veil of incense and mist. Munch's romantic inclinations are well suited to this type of music. His suave, easy conducting establishes a level from which he ca command nuances, many unwritten, which are a major component of his style.

He often selects slow tempos which allow an exciting accelerando, but it is precisely these slow tempos and frequent alterations of speed that destroy the dynamic drive of sections where cross rhythms and syncopation are predominate.

* * * *

RHYTHMIC DRIVE is intrinsic to Beethoven, but it was lacking in Munch's reading of the "Eroica." Beethoven's masterpieces of musical achritecture are carefully timed and are dramatically successful when played as he wrote them.

In the funeral march, Munch's fine sostenuto was effectively applied about half way through the movement at the return to C minor. There was a feeling of strength as the sustained sound grew. It would have been more effectively capped by a trumpet tone which had less fuzz and more solid concentrated sound.

A delightful reading of the Scherzo sparkled with Mendelssohian lightness. Munch excels in this type of music and in sostenuto passages. Although seemings sometimes to overbalance, the timpani was especially effective in the last seventeen bars of the finale.

I wonder how many standing ovations in history have been fully genuine and rational . . .

—Donald Matthews

54

Fourth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 26 1961

Munch & Burgin To Share Podium In Coming Week

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Associate Conductor, will conduct the Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday (October 27, 2:15) and Saturday (October 28, 8:30). Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the Orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The Orchestra's Second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, November 2. This will be the Orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of November 3-4 which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition. The November 3-4 concerts will also include the Symphony No. 5 by Schubert and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, conducted by Charles Munch.

Doctor Munch will open the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on October 31st and the first of the new Monday evening concerts at Symphony Hall on November 6 with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Debussy and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

The complete programs:

Friday, Oct. 27, 2:15; Saturday, Oct. 28, 8:30; Symphony Hall: Richard Burgin conducting: Bartok, Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; Karl A. Hartman, Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Tuesday, Oct. 31, 8:30, Sanders Theatre, Cambridge; Charles Munch conducting: Hanson, Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Debussy, Iberia ("Images," No. 2); Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique"

Thursday, Nov. 2, 7:30, Symphony Hall: Open Rehearsal

Friday, Nov. 3, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 4, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch and Foss conducting: Schubert, Symphony No. 5, in B-flat; Roussel, "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43; Foss, Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra) Adele Addison, soprano; Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble Conducted by the Composer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

NOV 5 1961

From the Aisle

THEATER—"Nine O'Clock Revue" was less a revue than a supper club show, and Lena Horne did not need the two microphones, but she did handsomely by a varied and generous selection of songs. Boston University's production of "Cock-a-Doodle-Dandy" was a chance to see Sean O'Casey's rarely presented comic fantasy.

★ ★ ★

SCREEN—"West Side Story," at the Gary Theater, was found "a film masterpiece," a superb musical made even better on the screen. "The Mark," at the Metropolitan, a "courageous and unconventional" picture, handled its delicate subject with tact, honesty and feeling. The reviewer of "Mr. Sardonicus," the horror film at the Paramount, seemed preoccupied with the audience participation poll. "Leda," the "new wave" French film at the Telepix, was sometimes bewildering but beautifully photographed and strongly acted.

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—Last Friday's Symphony concert, under the direction of Richard Burgin, introduced the Sixth Symphony of Karl Amadeus Hartmann, heavy, but sonorous and likable. Norma Auzin's Boston violin debut was charming, and, by the end, feelingly dramatic. On Saturday the Berlin Philharmonic, conducted by Herbert von Karajan, returned to Symphony Hall in triumph, disciplined, warm and stirring. Galina Vishnevskaya's soprano recital on Sunday was a splendid musical occasion.

Stowe Conc...

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, October 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, October 28, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BARTÓK . . . . . Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12

I. Preludio: Moderato
II. Scherzo: Allegro
III. Intermezzo: Moderato
IV. Marcia Funebre: Maestoso
(First performance in Boston)

HARTMANN, KARL AMADEUS . . . Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra

I. Adagio
II. Toccata variata
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

I. Moderato
II. Allegretto
III. Largo
IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

OCT 22 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor, will conduct the orchestra at Symphony Hall, Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the Orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The orchestra's second Open Rehearsal of the season will b held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov 2. This will be the orchestra's fina rehearsal for the concerts of Nov 3-4 which are scheduled to in clude the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition.

The Nov. 3-4 concerts will also include the Symphony No. 5 by Schubert and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, conducted by Charles Munch.

Dr. Munch will open the orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Oct. 31 and the first of the new Monday evening concerts at Symphony Hall on Nov. 6 with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Dubussy and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

RICHARD BURGIN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———

OCT 23 1961

Associate To Conduct

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor, will conduct the orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartman's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shastakovitch, which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The orchestra's second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held at 7:30 p. m., Thursday, Nov. 2. This will be the orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of Nov. 3-4, which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition.

54

Fourth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
OCT 26 1961

Munch & Burgin To Share Podium In Coming Week

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Associate Conductor, will conduct the Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday (October 27, 2:15) and Saturday (October 28, 8:30). Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the Orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The Orchestra's Second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, November 2. This will be the Orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of November 3-4 which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition. The November 3-4 concerts will also include the Symphony No. 5 by Schubert and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel conducted by Charles Munch.

Doctor Munch will open the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on October 31st and the first of the new Monday evening concerts at Symphony Hall on November 6 with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Debussy and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

The complete programs:

Friday, Oct. 27, 2:15; Saturday, Oct. 28, 8:30; Symphony Hall: Richard Burgin conducting: Bartok, Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12; Karl A. Hartman, Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5, Op. 47.

Tuesday, Oct. 31, 8:30, Sanders Theatre, Cambridge; Charles Munch conducting: Hanson, Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Debussy, Iberia ("Images," No. 2); Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 6 in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique"

Thursday, Nov. 2, 7:30, Symphony Hall: Open Rehearsal

Friday, Nov. 3, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 4, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Munch and Foss conducting: Schubert, Symphony No. 5, in B-flat; Roussel, "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43; Foss, Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra) Adele Addison, soprano; Lukas Foss, Improvisation Chamber Ensemble Conducted by the Composer.

Fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, OCTOBER 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

BARTÓK . . . . . Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12

I. Preludio: Moderato
II. Scherzo: Allegro
III. Intermezzo: Moderato
IV. Marcia Funebre: Maestoso
(First performance in Boston)

HARTMANN, KARL AMADEUS . . . Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra

I. Adagio
II. Toccata variata
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

SHOSTAKOVITCH . . . . . Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

I. Moderato
II. Allegretto
III. Largo
IV. Allegro non troppo

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 5 1961

From the Aisle

THEATER—"Nine O'Clock Revue" was less a revue than a supper club show, and Lena Horne did not need the two microphones, but she did handsomely by a varied and generous selection of songs. Boston University's production of "Cock-a-Doodle-Dandy" was a chance to see Sean O'Casey's rarely presented comic fantasy.

★ ★ ★

SCREEN—"West Side Story," at the Gary Theater, was found "a film masterpiece," a superb musical made even better on the screen. "The Mark," at the Metropolitan, a "courageous and unconventional" picture, handled its delicate subject with tact, honesty and feeling. The reviewer of "Mr. Sardonicus," the horror film at the Paramount, seemed preoccupied with the audience participation poll. "Leda," the "new wave" French film at the Telepix, was sometimes bewildering but beautifully photographed and strongly acted.

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—Last Friday's Symphony concert, under the direction of Richard Burgin, introduced the Sixth Symphony of Karl Amadeus Hartmann, heavy, but sonorous and likable. Norma Auxin's Boston violin debut was charming, and, by the end, feelingly dramatic. On Saturday the Berlin Philharmonic, conducted by Herbert von Karajan, returned to Symphony Hall in triumph, disciplined, warm and stirring. Galina Vishnevskaya's soprano recital on Sunday was a splendid musical occasion.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 22 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor, will conduct the orchestra at Symphony Hall, Friday and Saturday.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the Orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The orchestra's second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 2. This will be the orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of Nov. 3-4 which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition.

The Nov. 3-4 concerts will also include the Symphony No. 5 by Schubert and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Rousel, conducted by Charles Munch.

Dr. Munch will open the orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Oct. 31 and the first of the new Monday evening concerts at Symphony Hall on Nov. 6 with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Dubussy and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6.

RICHARD BURGIN

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. ———
OCT 23 1961

Associate To Conduct

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor, will conduct the orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Amadeus Hartman's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5 by Shastakovitch, which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The orchestra's second Open Rehearsal of the season will be held at 7:30 p. m., Thursday, Nov. 2. This will be the orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of Nov. 3-4, which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison as his soloist, will conduct his composition.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
OCT 28 1961

THE SYMPHONY

Fine Music but Bit Heavy

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The Sixth Symphony of the contemporary German composer, Karl Amadeus Hartmann, which Richard Burgin introduced in its first Boston performance at Symphony Hall yesterday, brings forth still another musical heir to the traditions of Gustav Mahler.

An extraordinarily interesting work, the Sixth owes much to Mahler—and, of course, Wagner—and also of the tone row procedures of Schonberg and Berg. It remains, however, an intricate and individual work, though partaking of these masters. And some of its virtues and all of its limitations derive from the character of German symphonic vision.

Huge Orchestra

The oversized orchestra is, perhaps, the first prominent trait. Hartmann calls for the conventional forces, an augmented percussion element. The latter involves such voices as piano (four hands), glockenspiel, woodblock, jazz cymbal, tom-tom, two xylophones, and indeed, most of the color-groups exploited by the modern baroque conception. This is Wagnerian.

Hartmann's use of his huge orchestra, though, resembles Mahler rather than Wagner. The composer frequently explores the possibilities of solo or smaller instrumental clusters balanced against each other or the mass, as in the jagged dialogue between piano and kettledrum in the second movement. Where Hartmann breaks with the past and acquires validity, it seems to me on one hearing, resides less in his piquant timbres than his reaction against 12-tone compression and austerity.

The Sixth Symphony is in two parts, marked "Adagio" and "Toccata variata." The chromatic first movement is anything save sensuous as it builds toward a massive triple forte by full orchestra. The strings and the woodwinds dominate here, and the small tone steps create a basic mood of the contemplative, blazing into passion, then fading away.

Related Fugues

In the last section we hear three related fugues, beginning with the strings and then endowed with more depth and pigmentation reaching a stormy coda. Always, the musical ideas disclose ingenuity and wit; but Hartmann drives them home with a sledgehammer. He is rather like a raconteur who insists on repeating his punch line three times in case anyone in the audience missed the point.

Compared to Hartmann, the lumbering jocosity of Beethoven and Brahms appears rapier-like. Teutonic thoroughness has seldom received a more vigorous application. Despite his elephantine humors, I liked the Sixth Symphony, which is surcharged with feeling and indicative of the melodic freedom present in dodecaphony. Karl Amadeus Hartmann's utilization of the resources of 12-tone thinking gives us the weirdly beautiful sonorities of the school; but his density and cadences suggest an older western style.

Mr. Burgin conducted the formidable work with the competence and musicality of his several guest appearances in the conductor's role, and his reading of the rest of the program conveyed identical control. It was a serious and slightly ascetic program that he arranged, three severe compositions only slightly variant in terms of loudness. One would have appreciated a random frivolity.

I suppose the Shostakovitch Fifth does not absolutely merit the description of severity, since it is propelled by a lively romantic vigor. Contrary to much contemporary criticism, I'm afraid it's an extremely mixed bag. The Fifth, with the landler rhythms and the glowing brass and the rich array of felicities that distinguish certain passages, also declares the drawbacks of hyper-emotionalism. Often the grandiose is confused with grandeur, the ring of rhetoric with sincerity. Mingling intense, personal statement with trumpery that Sousa might have confected more skillfully, the Shostakovitch Fifth is a flawed masterwork.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the fourth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 .. Bartok
Symphony No., 6, for Large Orchestra Hartmann
Symphony No. 5, Op. 47 .. Shostakovitch

Munch to Return

But Mr. Burgin's treatment was clear enough, as was his beat in the first Boston performance of Bartok's "Orchestral Pieces." Here again we had romanticism, but fashioned so soundly that it never seems bombastic. The plastic line of the prelude and the firm sweep of the set display pure integrity of form. The Pieces reach tumultuous climaxes, yet darkling melancholy touches each one and never betrays the mechanical contrivance of Shostakovitch. In Bartok, the rhapsodic cannot be fabricated, for it is real.

Next week Charles Munch returns to conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B-flat and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariadne" Suite No. 2, Op. 43. The highlight of the program finds Lukas Foss conducting the local premiere of his "Time Cycle," for soprano and orchestra, Adele Addison soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 27 1961

Walter Daran

Richard Burgin will conduct the weekend concerts of the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
OCT 28 1961

55

New Hartmann Symphony, Rare Bartok From Burgin

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fourth program of the Friday–Saturday series. Richard Burgin conducted the following program: Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12 (first performance in Boston), Bartok; Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra (first performance in Boston), Karl Amadeus Hartmann; Symphony No. 5, Shostakovitch.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave us an entire program of 20th Century music, as he made his first appearance this season on the stand at Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon. Nothing was older than 1912, and the Sixth Symphony by Karl Amadeus Hartmann, which received first local performance, was composed early in the 1950s. This was a concert of red-hot pepper and high decibels.

Hartmann's Symphony is designated as for Large Orchestra, and large it is. Two extra percussion men had to be called in to augment the Orchestra's regular five, and tympanist Everett Firth (later congratulated by Burgin) had a half-dozen or more separately-tuned drums to handle. Everybody was busy, busy, busy!

Set in two long movements, an adagio and a toccata with variations, Hartmann's work is undoubtedly the wildest and noisiest music here since Robert Moevs' "Attis" of two seasons ago. It is, however, much more highly organized, even to the presence of three consecutive free fugues at the beginning of the toccata! What is more, it utilizes principles of the 12-tone system without sounding like serial technic, and that is surely a major achievement for any composer.

Hartmann's Sixth is most unlikely to win any popularity ballot, and it will appeal to a small, prevailingly young, minority of the public, and to other musicians. It is exceedingly noisy, and some of it is definitely in the category of "nasty noises." But the noise has logic in its dissonance and true dramatic power in its strength. The play of rhythm is a delight for the analytical ear, and so is the sense of tonality in which the melodic fragments are cast.

Most of all, Hartmann's Sixth, anything but dryly academic despite its complexity, is music brimming with drive and passion. It will prove, I think, to be in its way a monument of later 20th Century composition.

We shall never know, probably, just why Bartok's marvelous Four Orchestral Pieces of 1912 have been so unjustly neglected. They are superb music in every sense. The melodic substance is endearing, and all is clothed in orchestration of splendor.

A carefully listening ear will perceive here technical construction of a fabulous master—for Bartok was that even in his 30s. As with Hartmann, though in a much different way, this music of Bartok exhibits great dramatic intensity. It is this passion which sometimes makes all the difference, in contemporary usage, between theoretical "laboratory" stuff and music which is truly alive. I, for one, hope that before this season is out, the Boston Symphony will have recorded Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces.

Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, which Richard Burgin introduced here in 1939, is quite conservative, compared to Hartmann and Bartok. For the most part, it has worn well in the nearly 25 years since its creation. Once the work repelled and irritated this chronicler, who now must admit that most of it has a fine quality and a certain glory of sound. That is not because the music has improved, for music—like wine in bottles, does not improve, but the listener grows into it.

The march and the finale, however, still impress me as vulgar, although the final peroration on the "How Dry I Am" theme of the six-four dominant chord is a rouser, and peculiarly satisfying.

Little space is left to speak of Burgin's conducting. It was no less than masterly, and deservedly earned him an ovation. To pull together in a week's rehearsals so intricate and difficult a program takes a real master.

Next week Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Schubert's Fifth Symphony and Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariane" Suite. By Dr. Munch's invitation, Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston premiere of his own "Time Cycle," with soprano Adele Addison as soloist.

STAGE IN TOWN

SL

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 28 1961

Two Boston Premières at Symphony

Burgin Introduces Works by Bartók and Hartmann

By Harold Rogers

Richard Burgin is giving us what may be truly called an adventure in music this weekend as he spells Charles Munch on the Boston Symphony podium, though over territory that not all listeners may care to explore. Never one to think in traditional terms, Mr. Burgin has devised a contemporary program with two Boston premières—contemporary, that is, if Bartók can be considered so. And why not? His Four Orchestral Pieces of 1912 are as pleasantly contemporary as anyone could wish.

With the Bartók as one of the premières, Karl Amadeus Hartmann's Symphony No. 6 for Large Orchestra as the other, and Shostakovitch's majestic masterpiece, his Symphony No. 5, Mr. Burgin managed to set up about as lovely a din as has been heard in Symphony Hall in a long time.

The tamest of the three was the set by Bartók, who seldom frightens people any more; in fact, these days one can think of Bartók as a classicist among moderns. His Four Orchestral Pieces represent him at the age of 31; and they are about as far out as his Concerto for Orchestra that came at the close of his career, which is to say that they aren't far out at all. They represent his rather sturdy brand of impressionism, of gossamer melodies contrasted with granitic harmonies, often spiced with spinning rhythms. Easy, easy listening.

But the Hartmann, alas, is something else again. This German lays one low with the battery — brilliantly so, it's true, but at the same time boringly so. Through a fascinating use of percussion he builds up mountains of sound; but the failure of the symphony, it appears to me, is that he cannot support these decibels with the same measure of emotion. Masses of noise, however ingeniously organized, are not enough.

* * *

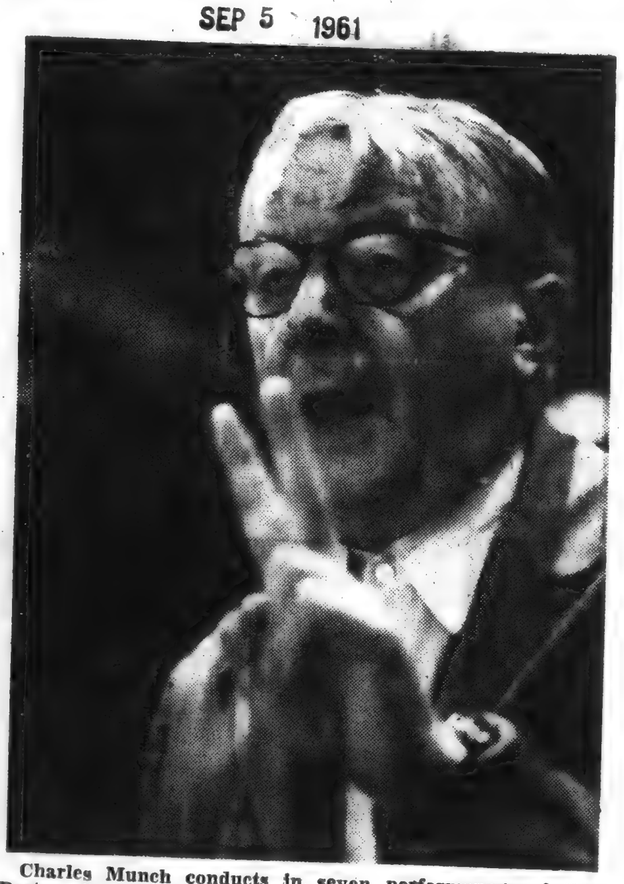
Composed in two movements (the human system could hardly stand more), the first is by far the best. Here we find an other-worldly melody that sings forth now and again, often enough to beguile one into thinking that something richer is in the offing.

But the second is a delusion, even though several fugal passages are neatly constructed. It seems to be intellectually managed, not an effusion of the heart; and contemporary composers will never win their way through intellect alone. Music still is, and always will be, an emotional language. It makes no difference what idiom is chosen; idiom is not the determining factor. It is the message—what is said, not how it is said.

The Shostakovitch Fifth, of course, is a prime example of an emotional statement in contemporary terms. There are all the decibels one could wish, yet the tympanum never takes precedence over the heart. Here we have impassioned melodies, droll humor, deep pathos, massive climaxes trenchant with poetry. Even Shostakovitch has not managed such a superb blend of idiom, emotion, and originality in his subsequent symphonies.

Mr. Burgin let the orchestra have its head, and it galloped off to glory.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
SEP 5 1961



Charles Munch conducts in seven performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be telecast on National Educational Television.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
OCT 21 1961

Music

Unitarian Players to Present "Damn Yankees"

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Following many years of success in the field of the legitimate stage the Unitarian Players of Chelmsford have launched their first campaign into the field of musical comedy. The Players will present the Broadway and film hit, "Damn Yankees" on Nov. 17-18, in the Chelmsford high school auditorium.

Rehearsals are under way and a talented group of leads are scheduled to act and sing their way through the delightful pages of the baseball saga that is now an all-time hit on the American theatrical scene.

Dr. Michael Weidman

This vehicle was selected by the play reading committee. Among the members who selected the musical was Dr. Michael Weidman, who has appeared with the group several times in important roles.

Plans have been completed for the voice recital by Rosalind Elias in the Andover Celebrity series that is scheduled to open next Friday evening in George Washington hall, Andover. Miss Elias will also appear in the Community Concert series in Manchester, N. H., the following week. Next Tuesday evening she will make her initial appearance of the season at the Metropolitan opera in "Cosi Fan Tutti."

The entire artist list for the Greater-Lowell-Lawrence series for the coming season promises a varied and well-balanced series of events. The famed Met baritone, Robert Merrill is expected to head the list, and the celebrated chamber ensemble, I Musici from Italy also gives promise of an evening of fine musical entertainment. The gifted young award winning pianist, Lee Luvisi, will also be heard. Mr. Luvisi was top prize winner at the Brussels Piano competition last year.

THE GREATER-LOWELL Choral society is holding regular rehearsal sessions. The group is under the direction of Dr. Domenic R. Procopio. There will be other programs presented this season in addition to the regular Christmas and spring concerts.

Walter Targ, violinist, of this city, will be a member of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra when it appears in Nashua, N. H., during the Community Concert season of 1961-62. Mr. Targ, who has been a member of the orchestra for several years was previously a member of the Indianapolis Symphony orchestra. While at Indianapolis he was first violinist of the orchestra's string quartet.

Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony orchestra's associate conductor, will conduct the orchestra at Symphony hall Friday and Saturday of next week. Mr. Burgin's program will consist of the first performance by the orchestra of Bartok's Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, the first Boston performance of Karl Hartmann's Symphony No. 6, for Large Orchestra, and the Symphony No. 5, by Shostakovitch which Mr. Burgin introduced to Boston at the Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 20-21, 1939.

The orchestra's second open rehearsal of the season, will be held at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 2. This will be the orchestra's final rehearsal for the concerts of Nov. 3-4, which are scheduled to include the first Boston performance of "Time Cycle (for Soprano and Orchestra)" by Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss, with Adele Addison, soprano, as his soloist, will conduct the composition. The Nov. 3-4 concerts will also include the Symphony No. 5, by Schubert and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, conducted by Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

OCT 29 1961

Good Music for This Week

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be telecast by Channel 2 on Tuesday, from Sanders Theater, Harvard, beginning at 8:30 p.m. For this program Charles Munch has chosen Iberia by Debussy and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor by Brahms. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky, a rarely heard composition by American composer Howard Hanson.

A choral work for women's voices by Messiaen and the first appearance with the orchestra by the cellist Zara Nelsova will be among the highlights of the New York Philharmonic concert conducted by Leonard Bernstein and broadcast on WEAN and WPJB-FM at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday. The Messiaen composition will be Trois Petites Liturgies do La Presence Divine. Participating in its performance will be the Women's Chorus of the Choral Art Society, under the direction of William Jonson. Miss Nelsova will be the soloist in Bloch's Schelomo, Hebrew Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra.

A complete recording of Puccini's opera Turandot, featuring Birgit Nilsson, Renata Tebaldi, Jussi Bjoerling and Giorgio Tozzi, will be played on Opera House, today at 8:06 p.m. on WPFM-FM. The Rome Opera House Orchestra and Chorus is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

WPJB-FM will present Queen of Spades, Tchaikovsky's opera in three acts, Friday at 7 p.m. on At the Opera. Soloists include Alexander Marinkovich, Jovan Gligor, Dushan Popovich, Melanie Burgarinovich and Valeria Heybalova. Kreshimir Baranovich conducts the Orchestra of the National Opera, Belgrade as well as the Chorus of the Yugoslav Army and the Children's Chorus of Radio Belgrade.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Circ. 13,928

NOV 7 1961

Good Reception Reported On Test Patterns From WCBB

LITCHFIELD — There's been a new signal on Maine television screens this week.

WCBB is spending two or three hours a day sending out test patterns.

Leo Vincent, transmitter supervisor, said reports had been received of excellent reception in Kennebec and Androscoggin and in the greater Portland area.

There's no definite schedule for the patterns, Vincent added.

The regular Channel 10 programs will start Monday with two classroom shows in the morning.

At 5:30 p.m. an adult show, New Biology, aimed at the college level will be shown. Following it there will be a half hour program for children, then comes the news, a program on international television and the dedicatory program for the station.

The channel with the call letters of WCBB emanates from the tower atop Danforth Hill and will be devoted to educational, informative and cultural programs. Live programming is not planned as the station hasn't any studio. If such eventuality arises, Station WMTW, Poland Spring, has offered its facilities for this use.

Vincent plans to move his family to the area from Gorham, H. N. when the station begins operating all day to 10:30 at night. Full operation is expected in about two weeks. Roger Barton, Lewiston, and Garfield Adams, Monmouth, complete the crew at the station. Chief engineer, Roland Desjardins lives in Gorham.

Programs from the station are expected to reach 500,000 persons about 54 per cent of Maine's population. The legal maximum signals, granted by the Federal Communications Commission, are 316,000 watts video and 158,000 audio.

The morning programs will be beamed into classrooms. Adult programs with emphasis on information and high level entertainment will take the evening hours beginning at 6 p.m. Concerts by the Boston Symphony, programs from the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and weekly book reviews are part of the plans.

No program can be interrupted by a commercial. The station will run on funds from Maine's three private colleges, Bates, Bowdoin and Colby.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,500

OCT 27 1961

PAGE EIGHT

WGBH Live Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert October 31

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience, but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday, Oct. 31, is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that gutted studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

There is a lot of work to do at Channel 2's temporary studios on Granby Street in the Back Bay, but all should be in readiness by Tuesday.

These symphony telecasts have won much applause, both in New England and across the country, where they are seen on the National Educational Television Network. Presented once a month throughout the winter by Channel 2, direct from Sanders Theatre, the TV concerts have gained an ever-growing army of followers.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra. For this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson, "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

NOV 1 196

WHDH HELPS CH. 2 COVER THE SYMPHONY

WGBH-TV, Channel 2, whose Cambridge studios were destroyed by fire only 17 days ago, brought the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season to its viewers without a hitch last night, thanks to an assist from WHDH-TV, Channel 5.

WHDH supplied the educational channel with four cameras to record the concert and a mobile unit which was set up at Sanders Theater at Harvard.

From the control room in that unit sound and picture were sent by microwave relay to the temporary studio of Channel 2 in the Catholic Television Center in the Back Bay.

From there the signal was relayed to the WGBH transmitter on Great Blue Hill in Milton. WGBH cited the assist as an outstanding example of the generous help commercial stations have given to Channel 2 since the fire and said that without it the concert could never have gone on.

WGBH was also able to record the concert for presentation on the 56 National Educational Television affiliated stations at a later date.

The taping was done in the mobile videotape unit of Channel 2, parked outside the CTC studios on Granby street. The unit was one of the few pieces of equipment not damaged by the fire.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

OCT 26 1961

BSO on TV

A concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be telecast live from Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Channel 2 next Tuesday evening, Oct. 31 at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct a program including Debussy's "Iberia"; Tchaikowski's Symphony No. 6 and Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

OCT 29 1961

Symphony on Channel 2

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience; but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday (Oct. 31) is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that ruined studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra; for this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson—"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,167

OCT 26 1961

WGBH Live Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert October 31

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience, but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday, Oct. 31, is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that gutted studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

There is a lot of work to do at Channel 2's temporary studios on Granby Street in the Back Bay, but all should be in readiness by Tuesday.

These symphony telecasts have won much applause, both in New England and across the country, where they are seen on the National Educational Television Network. Presented once a month throughout the winter by Channel 2, direct from Sanders Theatre, the TV concerts have gained an ever-growing army of followers.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra. For this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson, "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

Political Advertisement

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
OCT 29 1961

Good Music for This Week

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra concert will be telecast by Channel 2 on Tuesday, from Sanders Theater, Harvard, beginning at 8:30 p.m. For this program Charles Munch has chosen Iberia by Debussy and the Symphony No. 1 in C minor by Brahms. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky, a rarely heard composition by American composer Howard Hanson.

A choral work for women's voices by Messiaen and the first appearance with the orchestra by the cellist Zara Nelsova will be among the highlights of the New York Philharmonic concert conducted by Leonard Bernstein and broadcast on WEAN and WPJB-FM at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday. The Messiaen composition will be Trois Petites Liturgies do La Presence Divine. Participating in its performance will be the Women's Chorus of the Choral Art Society, under the direction of William Jonson. Miss Nelsova will be the soloist in Bloch's Schelomo, Hebrew Rhapsody for Violoncello and Orchestra.

A complete recording of Puccini's opera Turandot, featuring Birgit Nilsson, Renata Tebaldi, Jussi Bjoerling and Giorgio Tozzi, will be played on Opera House, today at 8:05 p.m. on WPFM-FM. The Rome Opera House Orchestra and Chorus is under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

WPJB-FM will present Queen of Spades, Tchaikovsky's opera in three acts, Friday at 7 p.m. on At the Opera. Soloists include Alexander Marinkovich, Jovan Gligor, Dushan Popovich, Melanie Burgarinovich and Valeria Heybalova. Kreshimir Baranovich conducts the Orchestra of the National Opera, Belgrade as well as the Chorus of the Yugoslav Army and the Children's Chorus of Radio Belgrade.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Kennebec Journal (m)
AUGUSTA, Me.
Circ. 13,928
NOV 7 1961
047

Good Reception Reported On Test Patterns From WCBB

LITCHFIELD — There's been a new signal on Maine television screens this week.

WCBB is spending two or three hours a day sending out test patterns.

Leo Vincent, transmitter supervisor, said reports had been received of excellent reception in Kennebec and Androscoggin and in the greater Portland area.

There's no definite schedule for the patterns, Vincent added.

The regular Channel 10 programs will start Monday with two classroom shows in the morning.

At 5:30 p.m. an adult show, New Biology, aimed at the college level will be shown. Following it there will be a half hour program for children, then comes the news, a program on international television and the dedicatory program for the station.

The channel with the call letters of WCBB emanates from the tower atop Danforth Hill and will be devoted to educational, informative and cultural programs. Live programming is not planned as the station hasn't any studio. If such eventuality arises, Station WMTW, Poland Spring, has offered its facilities for this use.

Vincent plans to move his family to the area from Gorham, H. N. when the station begins operating all day to 10:30 at night. Full operation is expected in about two weeks. Roger Barton, Lewiston, and Garfield Adams, Monmouth, complete the crew at the station. Chief engineer, Roland Desjardins lives in Gorham.

Programs from the station are expected to reach 500,000 persons about 54 per cent of Maine's population. The legal maximum signals, granted by the Federal Communications Commission, are 316,000 watts video and 158,000 audio.

The morning programs will be beamed into classrooms. Adult programs with emphasis on information and high level entertainment will take the evening hours beginning at 6 p.m. Concerts by the Boston Symphony, programs from the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and weekly book reviews are part of the plans.

No program can be interrupted by a commercial. The station will run on funds from Maine's three private colleges, Bates, Bowdoin and Colby.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,500
OCT 27 1961

PAGE EIGHT

WGBH Live Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert October 31

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience, but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday, Oct. 31, is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that gutted studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

There is a lot of work to do at Channel 2's temporary studios on Granby Street in the Back Bay, but all should be in readiness by Tuesday.

These symphony telecasts have won much applause, both in New England and across the country, where they are seen on the National Educational Television Network. Presented once a month throughout the winter by Channel 2, direct from Sanders Theatre, the TV concerts have gained an ever-growing army of followers.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra. For this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson, "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 1 196

WHDH HELPS CH. 2 COVER THE SYMPHONY

WGBH-TV, Channel 2, whose Cambridge studios were destroyed by fire only 17 days ago, brought the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season to its viewers without a hitch last night, thanks to an assist from WHDH-TV, Channel 5.

WHDH supplied the educational channel with four cameras to record the concert and a mobile unit which was set up at Sanders Theater at Harvard.

From the control room in that unit sound and picture were sent by microwave relay to the temporary studio of Channel 2 in the Catholic Television Center in the Back Bay.

From there the signal was relayed to the WGBH transmitter on Great Blue Hill in Milton. WGBH cited the assist as an outstanding example of the generous help commercial stations have given to Channel 2 since the fire and said that without it the concert could never have gone on.

WGBH was also able to record the concert for presentation on the 56 National Educational Television affiliated stations at a later date.

The taping was done in the mobile videotape unit of Channel 2, parked outside the CTC studios on Granby street. The unit was one of the few pieces of equipment not damaged by the fire.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
OCT 26 1961

BSO on TV

A concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be telecast live from Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Channel 2 next Tuesday evening, Oct. 31 at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct a program including Debussy's "Iberia"; Tchaikowski's Symphony No. 6 and Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

Symphony on Channel 2

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience; but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday (Oct. 31) is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that ruined studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra; for this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson—"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,167
OCT 26 1961

WGBH Live Telecast Of Boston Symphony Concert October 31

A live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast is always a special event for the Channel 2 audience, but the fact that there will be one on Tuesday, Oct. 31, is almost a miracle.

Despite the fire that gutted studios and facilities Oct. 14, the full-length Symphony telecast will begin as scheduled at 8:30 p.m., direct from Sanders Theatre, Harvard.

There is a lot of work to do at Channel 2's temporary studios on Granby Street in the Back Bay, but all should be in readiness by Tuesday.

These symphony telecasts have won much applause, both in New England and across the country, where they are seen on the National Educational Television Network. Presented once a month throughout the winter by Channel 2, direct from Sanders Theatre, the TV concerts have gained an ever-growing army of followers.

This is Charles Munch's last season with the Orchestra. For this first TV program he has chosen two much-loved works: "Iberia" by Debussy and the Sixth Symphony of Tchaikovsky. To open the concert Mr. Munch will perform a rarely heard but highly appropriate composition by the American composer Howard Hanson, "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Kottsevitsky."

Political Advertisement

55

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ 157,545
DEC 2 1961

Our Readers Write:

Music for the Last Lifeboat?

(The following letters are in response to Harold Rogers' review of Lukas Foss's "Time Cycle," given its Boston première on Nov. 3-4, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the composer. In his review Mr. Rogers mentioned that many listeners rebelled by leaving Symphony Hall while the music was in progress.)

For More Scholarly Critics

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

I think that Lukas Foss's "Time Cycle" deserved a more scholarly review than it received from the Boston critics, Cyrus Durgin described it as "way out and queer stuff" and "aesthetically backward-looking." Robert Taylor labeled it a "highly complex systemized brusquely belligerent intellectualism of form" which "felt like the struggle for the last lifeboat on a sinking liner." Harold Rogers outdid them both, declaring that "the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra was made to sound like a chamber group as it twittered, plunked, twanged, and konked," and he concluded by saying that "many of us, numbed by ennui, could do little more than breathe a sigh of relief at its close."

I have been listening to contemporary music for quite a while now, and I can remember a good many compositions which, at first hearing, really did seem quite painful, but the "Time Cycle" did not hang heavily upon my ears at all. To be sure, it was not like anything we are used to, but after all, are we supposed to sit in Symphony Hall until doomsday, censuring everything but Brahms, Beethoven, and Tchaikovsky?

JO BREWER

Newton Highlands, Mass.

Hats Off

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

My hat off to your reviewer for having the courage to give his candid opinion of the Foss "Time Cycle." I am in complete agreement with him that a composer must first have something to say regardless of the musical language. Paucity of ideas is covered with smart and pretentious orchestrations.

ALFRED AKRON

Hartford, Conn.

Trivial Schubert?

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

The Lukas Foss piece was no more or no less interesting than the trivial Schubert and boring Roussel heard on the same program.

Let us hope that the incoming Leinsdorf performs more Foss and less of the 19th and 20th century French frauds. I have never seen the impolite Boston boors walk out on Franck, Berlioz, or Honegger.

R. SCHUMANN

Boston

What Needed Saying

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Let me commend your critic for his fearlessness in saying what needed to be said about Lukas Foss.

ARTHUR BURKHARD

Cambridge, Mass.

Bad Mannered Audience

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your reviewer presumes too much when he says that "Bostonians are a well-behaved people." I consider that it is very bad manners to walk out and also very stupid not to have the curiosity to try to find out what someone with different ideas from one's own is saying. I am shocked that a critic of one of our leading newspapers did not write a stinging criticism of the audience, and a more perceptive and positive review of the music.

Boston MORNA E. CRAWFORD

Magnificent!

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your critique on Foss magnificent!

Boston MABEL DANIELS

'Musicians With Sidelines'

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

May I trespass on your time to comment on the recent letter entiled, "Musicians With Sidelines."

The letter writer assures us that "few people enjoy and appreciate good music more than I do." He then goes on at some length to show that the professional musician, in spite of brief concert season, does not fare so badly after all when compared with the remainder of the community.

This is probably true, in a way.

The shining jewel in his effort is where he cites the case of the musician for whom he has the most admiration. One who, when not performing music, goes from door to door selling a nationally advertised product.

He does not state whether it is the musicianship or the salesmanship of this young man which excites this admiration. One infers it is the latter quality.

What sets me wondering is that now, if this young musician, having hitched his wagon to a nationally advertised product finds it so rewarding that he gives up music altogether, would your letter writer consider this to be a social gain?

It is my own view that those who have by study and training become top-grade musicians, should be rewarded adequately for their professional services and thus protected from joining in the rat-race of professional salesmanship.

J. F. LEEKS

Grimsby, England

'Utter Futility'

To THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Spokesmen for the peoples of the world are raising their voices in emphatic protests against atomic tests, fearing that even these few blasts may cause dangerous contamination within the next two years.

How ironic it is that a hundred or so nuclear bombs showered on the U.S.S.R. from the United States might prove as lethal to Japanese, Canadians, and Americans as to Russians. This even if the Soviet Union had been unable to fire one missile bomb.

The utter futility of nuclear war becomes blindingly clear when one realizes that no nation can use nuclear bombs on a major scale without destroying its own people.

Boston WILLIAM YALE

This newspaper welcomes letters from readers. The briefer they are, the better is the prospect of [illegible]

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 9 1961

BSO Concert

STRANGE NEW FOSS SONG CYCLE

By PETER DAVISON

No one will ever hear again the music that I and the other members of the audience heard last Saturday at Symphony Hall; nor was what we heard the same notes as were played at the Friday afternoon concert. Lukas Foss' Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, had, as an added dimension between each song, a short piece of improvised music, played by Mr. Foss and three soloists, on the piano, cello, clarinet and percussion, respectively. These improvised sections had, according to Mr. Foss' program note, no relation to the music of the song cycle except as a spontaneous commentary, or perhaps an echo of the songs on another "level of performance."

This is very difficult music to describe in words, particularly after only one hearing; but I found it rewarding for the variety and subtlety of sound, even though the structure escaped me. Not so, it appeared, did about a hundred members of the audience, who, with a shameful discourtesy that makes it so easy to accuse Bostonians of deep-dyed provincialism, walked out noisily during the performance. Are there not better ways of dealing with unfamiliar experiences than simply walking out on them?

However, there is no question that the music was unfamiliar in flavor. Following the lead of such modern pacesetters as Webern and Boulez, the songs started out in a crispy, exploratory style, bafling sounds alternating with pregnant silences. The first song, to a text by W. H. Auden, seemed to me arbitrary, as though the composer's intention to display his ideas about time had overcome his feeling for the organic in music. The first improvisation, which followed, likewise reached with trembling hands toward new ranges of sound: weird shrieks from the clarinet, percussive strangenesses from the other instruments, combining to create the sounds and rhythms of nightmare.

Yet, as the song cycle went forward, the music took on flesh. The second song, steeped in the sound of bells, takes lyrics by A. E. Housman; the third (to me the most interesting of the four) illustrated a fantastic passage from Kafka about the difference between the inner time of the personality and the outer time of clocks. The improvisation that followed this gave stronger voice to the inter-relations of the four improvising instruments; and the cycle concluded with a powerful but difficult setting of a poem of Nietzche.

To sum up the first experience of this work, which might well be called "An Experiment with Time," I can only say that I found its sounds and texture exciting; but except in the Kafka song, Mr. Foss' intentions regarding time (which he explains rather elaborately in the program) eluded me. Is it possible that he has strained so hard to deal with philosophical notions in this music that he has done an injustice to his rich musical talent? On one hearing it is impossible to say. At any rate, those members of the Symphony audience who have any curiosity at all about new directions in music were able to hear and see one of our most interesting younger composers conducting and performing in a very challenging new work. It was performed well by that excellent soprano, Adele Addison; and the orchestra stood to it manfully.

Dr. Munch conducted the first half of the program, which consisted of Schubert's bewitching Fifth Symphony in G Minor and Roussel's Bacchus et Ariane ballet, Second Suite, Op. 43. In the Schubert, Dr. Munch, as so often with strictly formal music of the classical period, was unable to provide the music with that inner poise and alertness that gives strightliness and grace. The performance felt rather like a football without enough air in it. Gaiety is a temperament that Dr. Munch's conducting lacks. Passion, yes, sensuousness, yes, but no agility. Consequently the full delight of this symphony was muted by the clumsiness of the performance.

The clamorous sensuousness of Roussel is more in Dr. Munch's line. Bacchus et Ariane makes deliberate and almost rigid what seems to have come with the utmost naturalness to Debussy, with transparent clarity to Ravel. It is, of course, a ballet suite; and in ballet suites melodrama is an inherent danger on the one hand, and vacuity on the other. (Recollect the arid and stuffed-out passages in Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, for example.) Yet, although this music does not seem to me the highest of artistic achievements, Dr. Munch is doubtless at his best in conducting it. This French music of spectacle, of sensation, of a high-pitched, almost sexual mixture of the senses—in music of this kind few conductors can touch him. Yet isn't Dr. Munch's forte, after all, a rather short chapter in the history of music — from Debussy to Honegger?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
NOV 3 1961

At Symphony

Lukas Foss' latest work, "Time Cycle," which won the New York Music Critics' Circle Award last season, is being performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its weekend concerts.

The Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble—piano, 'cello, clarinet and percussion—will participate in this first Boston performance of the work. Adele Addison will be soprano soloist.

Completing the program will be Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, conducted by Charles Munch.

59

Fifth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Foss to Inject Fresh Dimension With Symphony

PENNY AMBROSE, 15-year-old violinist, who will be soloist at the opening of Harry Ellis Dickson's third season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on Saturday morning at 11 a.m.

"To the classically trained musician," declares the composer, Lukas Foss, "improvisation means something random, makeshift, haphazard. Also, it invariably means solo improvisation to him, and he is likely to regard it as a form of self-indulgence.

"Let us make no mistake about it: solo and ensemble improvisation are two different procedures not to be confused with each other."

How different will be illustrated by Mr. Foss at next weekend's pair of Boston Symphony Concerts. Part of his latest opus, "Time Cycle," which the BSO will introduce, involves episodes of improvisation. Of ensemble improvisation.

The Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble, piano, 'cello, clarinet and percussion, occupies an integral part of this performance, and Mr. Foss describes their role thus:

"They form an added attraction, a spontaneous commentary. The four improvising instruments remain silent during the performance of a composed movement; the conductor, orchestra and singer stand by and the improvising chamber group takes over; then the composition continues with the next song. At no time are composition and improvisation combined."

Concert Preview

Their separate identities and their underlying relationship fascinate Mr. Foss withal. What he does, in effect, stresses the bond. The composed element and the improvised element stand apart, yet reflect upon each other within the frame of the same work. The intent: to supply fresh dimension to the musical experience.

LUKAS FOSS

For those who might wish to hear how this sounds, the new Victor release of "Studies In Improvisation," featuring Mr. Foss (piano), Richard Dufallo, clarinet, Charles Delancey, percussion, Howard Colf, 'cello, and David Duke assisting French horn, acquires added interest as as a kind of concert preview.

While the music of the record involves the players in smaller forms and instrumental combinations (the titles exhibit, say, a "Bagatelle" for piano, clarinet, percussion, 'cello, or a "Variations On a Theme In Unison"), the technique remains basically the same.

★ ★ ★

Guessing Game

Following it on a record could be a guessing game to determine where the composed part leaves off, and the improvisation begins; but Victor has spared the professional reviewer, at least, this embarrassment, by packaging an enclosed guide sheet.

I confess that I came to the record with a disposition to condemn. The value of the spontaneous is high; but to achieve it at the cost of selectivity and form struck me as a cruel sacrifice.

I was wrong. The works on the record turned out to have singular grace and originality, though the perception of such qualities by the listener requires an effort, a struggle expended in shucking off the conventions and prejudices of conventional concert hall notions.

The factor that makes this easier, however, is not the factor of spontaneity. One soon discovers that Lukas Foss's exploration of the music of chance is distinct from the roulette-wheel method of what might be called the music of luck as practised, say, by John Cage.

Controlled Anarchy

For the Foss Ensemble works within a principle of order. Rather than leave the choice of notes to fate, the players improve inside boundaries. Musical freedom occurs among previously accepted limits. The element of planning dominates chance. Or as the composer indicates: "the predetermined coordination of non-predetermined musical ideas."

In a way, this parallel to the developments that have been occuring in other contemporary art forms. The theater of Harold Pinter and Beckett; the novels of Sarraute and Robbe-Grillet; the painting of Debenkorn and David Park, all contain references to each other.

They display a controlled anarchy. We have been through a period of near-complete anarchy in most forms; and it would seem, generally speaking, that artists are less interested in shattering tradition than in altering its shape. With Mr. Foss, at any rate, this has produced a provocative, challenging musical statement.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
OCT 30 1961

Station to Feature Boston Symphony

Three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, two of them live, will be heard over FM Station WAMC this week.

A recorded program at 8:30 p. m. today will offer works by Bartok, Hartmann and Shistakovich.

A concert, will be broadcast at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow from Sanders Theater on the campus of Harvard University. Charles Munch will lead a program of works by Howard Hanson, Debussy and Brahms.

Lukas Foss's latest work, "Time Cycle," will be heard at 2:10 p.m. Friday from Symphony Hall in Boston. Adele Addison, soprano and the Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble, piano, cello, clarinet and percussion will participate. Mr. Munch will conduct the remainder of the program: Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariane" Suite.

"Time Cycle" is set to texts of four philosophical poets. It was awarded the New York Music Critics' Circle Award this past season. Miss Addison sang it this summer at a special Tanglewood program.

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 4, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony No. 5, in B-flat

I. Allegro
II. Andante con moto
III. Minuetto; Allegro molto
IV. Allegro vivace

ROUSSEL . . . . . "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43

INTERMISSION

Foss . . . . . Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, with Improvised Interludes

We're late (W. H. Auden)
Interlude
When the bells justle (A. E. Housman)
Interlude
Sechzehnter Januar (Franz Kafka)
Interlude
O Mensch, gib Acht (Friedrich Nietzsche)

Soloist: Adele Addison

Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble

Richard Dufallo (Clarinet) — Howard Colf (Violoncello)
Charles DeLancey (Percussion) — Lukas Foss (Piano)

First performance in Boston; Conducted by the Composer

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 30 1961

Whitestone

Lucas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his "Time Cycle" in Symphony Hall on Nov. 3 and 4. Adele Addison will be the soprano soloist.

Fifth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
OCT 29 1961

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Foss to Inject Fresh Dimension With Symphony

"To the classically trained musician," declares the composer, Lukas Foss, "improvisation means something random, makeshift, haphazard. Also, it invariably means solo improvisation to him, and he is likely to regard it as a form of self-indulgence.

PENNY AMBROSE, 15-year-old violinist, who will be soloist at the opening of Harry Ellis Dickson's third season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on Saturday morning at 11 a.m.

"Let us make no mistake about it: solo and ensemble improvisation are two different procedures not to be confused with each other."

How different will be illustrated by Mr. Foss at next weekend's pair of Boston Symphony Concerts. Part of his latest opus, "Time Cycle," which the BSO will introduce, involves episodes of improvisation. Of ensemble improvisation.

LUKAS FOSS

The Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble, piano, 'cello, clarinet and percussion, occupies an integral part of this performance, and Mr. Foss describes their role thus:

"They form an added attraction, a spontaneous commentary. The four improvising instruments remain silent during the performance of a composed movement; the conductor, orchestra and singer stand by and the improvising chamber group takes over; then the composition continues with the next song. At no time are composition and improvisation combined."

Concert Preview

Their separate identities and their underlying relationship fascinate Mr. Foss withal. What he does, in effect, stresses the bond. The composed element and the improvised element stand apart, yet reflect upon each other within the frame of the same work. The intent: to supply fresh dimension to the musical experience.

For those who might wish to hear how this sounds, the new Victor release of "Studies in Improvisation," featuring Mr. Foss (piano), Richard Dufallo, clarinet, Charles Delancey, percussion, Howard Colf, 'cello, and David Duke assisting French horn, acquires added interest as a kind of concert preview.

While the music of the record involves the players in smaller forms and instrumental combinations, (the titles exhibit, say, a "Bagatelle" for piano, clarinet, percussion, 'cello, or a "Variations On a Theme In Unison"), the technique remains basically the same.

★ ★ ★

Guessing Game

Following it on a record could be a guessing game to determine where the composed part leaves off, and the improvisation begins; but Victor has spared the professional reviewer, at least, this embarrassment, by packaging an enclosed guide sheet.

I confess that I came to the record with a disposition to condemn. The value of the spontaneous is high; but to achieve it at the cost of selectivity and form struck me as a cruel sacrifice.

I was wrong. The works on the record turned out to have singular grace and originality, though the perception of such qualities by the listener requires an effort, a struggle expended in shucking off the conventions and prejudices of conventional concert hall notions.

The factor that makes this easier, however, is not the factor of spontaneity. One soon discovers that Lukas Foss's exploration of the music of chance is distinct from the roulette-wheel method of what might be called the music of luck as practised, say, by John Cage.

Controlled Anarchy

For the Foss Ensemble works within a principle of order. Rather than leave the choice of notes to fate, the players improve inside boundaries. Musical freedom occurs among previously accepted limits. The element of planning dominates chance. Or as the composer indicates: "the predetermined coordination of non-predetermined musical ideas."

In a way, this parallel to the developments that have been occuring in other contemporary art forms. The theater of Harold Pinter and Beckett; the novels of Sarraute and Robbe-Grillet; the painting of Debenkorn and David Park, all contain references to each other.

They display a controlled anarchy. We have been through a period of near-complete anarchy in most forms; and it would seem, generally speaking, that artists are less interested in shattering tradition than in altering its shape. With Mr. Foss, at any rate, this has produced a provocative, challenging musical statement.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D: 66,353
OCT 30 1961

Station to Feature Boston Symphony

Three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, two of them live, will be heard over FM Station WAMC this week.

A recorded program at 8:30 p. m. today will offer works by Bartok, Hartmann and Shistakovich.

A concert, will be broadcast at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow from Sanders Theater on the campus of Harvard University. Charles Munch will lead a program of works by Howard Hanson, Debussy and Brahms Lukas Foss's latest work, "Time Cycle," will be heard at 2:10 p.m. Friday from Symphony Hall in Boston. Adele Addison, soprano and the Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble, piano, cello, clarinet and percussion will participate. Mr. Munch will conduct the remainder of the program, Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariane" Suite.

"Time Cycle" is set to texts of four philosophical poets. It was awarded the New York Music Critics Circle Award this past season. Miss Addison sang it this summer at a special Tanglewood program.

Fifth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 3, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 4, at 8:30 o'clock

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony No. 5, in B-flat

I. Allegro
II. Andante con moto
III. Minuetto; Allegro molto
IV. Allegro vivace

ROUSSEL . . . . . "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43

INTERMISSION

Foss . . . . . Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra, with Improvised Interludes

We're late (W. H. Auden)
Interlude
When the bells justle (A. E. Housman)
Interlude
Sechzehnter Januar (Franz Kafka)
Interlude
O Mensch, gib Acht (Friedrich Nietzsche)

Soloist: Adele Addison

Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble

Richard Dufallo (Clarinet) — Howard Colf (Violoncello)
Charles DeLancey (Percussion) — Lukas Foss (Piano)

First performance in Boston; Conducted by the Composer

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
OCT 30 1961

Whitestone
Lucas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony in his "Time Cycle" in Symphony Hall on Nov. 3 and 4. Adele Addison will be the soprano soloist.

60

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 4 1961

Foss Brings Musical Experiment to Boston

9-61

'Time Cycle' Hangs Heavy on Listeners' Ears

By Harold Rogers

During 14 years of concert-going I have never seen so many people desert a première during its performance. Bostonians are a well behaved people, and there are only two ways in which a Symphony Hall audience can be expected to express its displeasure: (1) by refraining from applause; (2) by making for the door. Yesterday afternoon they did both.

There may come a day when Lukas Foss, like Stravinsky, will be able to look back with pride on the negative reaction his music once produced. If Bostonians were like Parisians, they would have doubtless set upon one another yesterday with tooth and nail, as the Parisians did at the première of "Le Sacre du Printemps." Yet if a Bostonian were to have even a mere urge to hiss, he would quickly squelch it.

It is not likely, however, that Mr. Foss's "Time Cycle" will some day share the stature "Le Sacre du Printemps" now enjoys. At first hearing the "Time Cycle" hardly impresses one as being timeless music; it is so evanescent that time is likely to hang heavy on the listener's ears while the music makes its ineffective way through four songs and three improvised interludes.

It all went something like this:

Charles Munch had devoted the first half of the program to Schubert's Symphony No. 5 (a very neat rendering) and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" (which caught fire magnificently and called down a radiant shower of applause on the conductor's head).

* * *

The post-intermission period was devoted to the first Boston hearing of the Foss work, which evoked a sense of anti-climax as soon as it began under the composer's direction. Adele Addison was on hand to sing it—Mr. Foss had composed it for her on commission by the Ford Foundation Humanities and Arts Program—and sing it she valiantly did, with that wonderful sense of calm she possesses, eloquently phrasing the line of her clear, warm soprano as it followed melodies that leapt like mountain goats among the ledger lines.

On hand, too, was Mr. Foss's Improvisation Chamber Ensemble, and according to the concert bulletin Mr. Foss "has discarded the obvious possibility of improvisations developing from thematic material of the songs." Rather he has conceived a variety of basic textures and pulses which are put in order as the roles are assigned to the four improvising instruments.

* * *

First Miss Addison sang W. H. Auden's "We're late," in which the entire Boston Symphony was made to sound like a chamber group as it twittered, plunked, twanged, and konked. The soloist admirably managed the ungracious intervalic leaps while most of us waited for something to happen that never came.

Then in the first improvisational period Mr. Foss moved to the piano where he and his three colleagues continued this mood of spare intellectualizing while Richard Dufallo, clarinet, Charles DeLancey, percussion, and Howard Colf, cello, skittered gingerly over a surface of sound that burbled, thumped, shivered, and coughed. At this point the desertion began. Listeners made openly for the doors.

Then Miss Addison sang a text by A. E. Housman, "When the bells justle," and this time the orchestra jangled like a gamelan while parts were fragmented among the trumpets and woodwinds. If anyone was longing for a sense of climax with a soaring voice, this was definitely not what Mr. Foss intended to give.

Afterwards came the second wave of desertions. Then the second improvisation brought out a rash of embarrassed snickers from the audience as the clarinetist fanned his fingers over the keys to gain an effect like butterflies in the stomach. The percussionist became more aggressive, bonging his vibraphone and woodblocks in a cold fury.

More desertions.

Two more songs (these in German to texts by Kafka and Nietzsche) and another "jam session" in which the percussionist also attacked the piano strings with his mallets.

Those remaining had evidently settled for an endurance contest. From first to last the performance carried an air of precious pretense, of intellectual exploration, of searching without finding. Many of us, numbed by ennui, could do little more than breathe a sigh of relief at its close.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
OCT 29 1961

Lukas Foss' 'Time Cycle' At Symphony

The Lukas Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble—consisting of piano, cello, clarinet, and percussion—will participate in the first Boston performances of Mr. Foss' latest work, "Time Cycle," at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. Soprano Adele Addison will also be heard in this performance.

"Time Cycle," set to the texts of four philosophical poets, concerning the contemplations on the passage of time, was awarded the New York Music Critics' Circle Award this past season and has been performed in New York by the New York Philharmonic, in California and, in a chamber version, at Tanglewood.

In discussing his new work and its episodes of improvisation, Mr. Foss has said: "They form an added attraction, a spontaneous commentary. The four improvising instruments remain silent during the performance of a composed movement; the conductor, orchestra and singer stand by and the improvising chamber group takes over; then the composition continues with the next song. At no time are composition and improvisation combined." Foss will conduct his work.

The week-end program, of which there will be an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, will include Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bachus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, conducted by Charles Munch.

The revised program for the orchestra's concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30, conducted by Charles Munch, will consist of Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," Debussy's "Iberia," and the Brahms Symphony No. 1.

Charles Munch will conduct the first concert in the new Monday Evening Series at Symphony Hall Nov. 6. Pianist Vlado Perlemuter will make his United States debut at the second concert of the orchestra's Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall, Nov. 7, in Franck's Symphonic Variations and the Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand. Dr. Munch also will present Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 12 1961

LETTERS FROM READERS

An Open Letter to Boston's Music Critics

Dear Sirs:

I want to raise one small voice in protest against the attitude of the Boston critics in regard to the "Time Cycle" of Lukas Foss, which was performed by the Boston Symphony last Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

This piece has already won the New York Music Critics' Circle Award, which is the composer's most coveted award, and I think it deserved a more scholarly review than it received.

Cy Durgin described it as "way out and queer stuff" in one paragraph and "esthetically backward-looking" in the next. Bob Taylor labelled it a "highly complex systemized brusquely belligerent intellectualism of form" which "felt . . like the struggle for the last lifeboat on a sinking liner."

Hal Rogers outdid them both, declaring that "the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra was made to sound like a chamber group, as it twittered, plunked, twanged and konked" . . "jangled like a gamelin" and "many of us, numbed by ennui, could do little more than breathe a sigh of relief at its close."

I have been listening to contemporary music for quite a while and I can remember many compositions which, at first hearing did seem painful, but the "Time Cycle" did not hang heavily upon my ears at all. In fact, when I first heard the broadcast of this piece from Carnegie Hall, I was impressed by the tonal beauty and the originality of the orchestration more than anything else.

Music, like theatre is a living art. We go to the theatre to see new plays. Why, in the age of space travel do we need to find our music in a coffin? Boston is rampant with fine museums to which we can repair any time we yearn to admire art long long dead.

In America there is no protection for the conservative listener.

The thing about The Symphony concert which really did appear wrong was the programming.

We were given one piece which all but drowned us in a frenzied orgy of eroticism, and were then required to evoke in ourselves a sad and sensitive reticence, an awareness of vaguely disturbing spirituality.

Now contrast is a fine thing, but it has to be tastefully done.

There are certain color combinations (bright scarlet, deep turquoise and pale peach, for instance) which assault one's vision.

The sequence of "Bacchus and Ariadne" and "Time Cycle" was equally an assault upon the sensibilities. If anyone had set about deliberately to sabotage the "Time Cycle," he could hardly have contrived a more fiendish way of doing so.

The second great target for attack was the improvisions, which "burbled, thumped, shivered and coughed," "blew out . . grunts, growls, snorts and snarls," and "plucked . . twits, squeaks, rasps, and groans." Now this really doesn't give an unbiased picture of the improvisations. I think the thing that needed to be changed about them was simply to leave them out of the "Time Cycle" and play them separately. When heard alone, the improvisations present a very interesting challenge to the listener.

In Russia the problem of the conservative listener is solved by the state, which will not allow the composer to create in his chosen medium. He has to toe the musical line. Here we cry out loudly against such stifling of artistic creativity, and at the same time we let our composers practically starve to death, as did Bartok, one of the greatest geniuses of our time.

The critics all mentioned the fact that people walked out, but no one mentioned the more important fact that far more people stayed.

The walkouts—the ones who won't even listen once—are the really closed minds.

It seems to me that one of the first obligations of the critics ought to be to present music, however "far out" in such a way that the next audience is not prejudiced against it beforehand.

Just because a Friday afternoon audience walks out, it doesn't necessarily mean that a Saturday night one has to.

JO BREWER

Newton

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 4 1961

The Symphony

Severe Demands Put on Audience

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Text and music are fellow conspirators," declares Lukas Foss, referring to his Time Cycle, which received a first Boston performance at yesterday's novel Symphony Hall concert. So far as much of the audience was concerned, text and music conspired to rub out sensibility.

It felt like Birnam Wood moving against Dunsinane or perhaps the struggle for the last lifeboat of a sinking liner as a sizable part of the audience streamed toward the exit. One could scarcely deem this good manners, though one could sympathize, being hard put to restraint.

Mr. Foss imposes severe demands on an audience conditioned to the aural patterns of the past; he has taken for his motto Edgar Varese's aphorism: "I refuse to submit myself only to sounds that have already been heard."

Many Sounds

Withal, he has created a work including many sounds already heard, some with unpleasant physiological results in the estimation of the mass of mankind. Yet in many ways the cycle is an interesting and important contribution to contemporary music; as well as being in others, irritating, pretentious and obscure.

What Mr. Foss has composed, I think, may be defined in terms of what it is not. It is not an integrated score as music is understood either in terms of tonality or newer modes. Here the composer is tonal, there he shatters . . . or attempts to . . . keynotes.

An improvisatory quartet sits before the orchestra, and as the four songs of the cycle transpire the improvisatore, clarinet, percussion, 'cello and piano—seek to capture the spontaneous pulse of the jazz "jam session." These improvised interludes punctuate the composed segments.

Mr. Foss's music carries significance, it seems to me, as an attempt to impose system on anarchy, while retaining the freedom of the latter. This has value as experiment, but in performance proves that you can't have your cake and eat it, too.

Shaw, however, in a letter to Nicholas Slonimsky once pointed out "the post-Wagnerian anarchy is falling into order as all anarchies do pretty soon;" and the cycle would appear to be an idiosyncratic part of that development.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the fifth program of the 81st season yesterday at Symphony Hall. Composer Lukas Foss conducted his work, with Adele Addison, soprano, as soloist, and the added quartet of improvisatore consisted o. Richard Dufallo, clarinet; Charles DeLancey, percussion; Howard Coff, 'cello, and Mr. Foss, piano. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30: Symphony No. 5, in B-flat . . . . Schubert "Bacchus et Ariadne," Suite No. 2, Op. 43 . . . . Roussel Time Cycle, Four Songs for Soprano and Orchestra with Improvised Interludes, Foss

Four Fragments

Carrying out his esthetic, Mr. Foss borrows wherever he can, for the cycle consists of four fragments from unrelated poets and prose writers, Auden, Housman, Kafka and Nietzsche, who are lumped together because each somewhere penned a theme or reference "to time, clocks or bells." The same eclectism applies to the vocal and instrumental writing, and every song generates its own serial devices, the tone row being employed the least.

Save for the Mahlerian sonorities of the last song, the cycle is generally devoid of passion or urgency. The subject of time and eternity, the clocks of the measured hour and the clocks of the soul, presents vast possibilities, of course; but Mr. Foss realizes only a few because the highly complex, systematized, brusquely belligerent intellectualism of his form makes emotional exploration of the musical content virtually impossible.

The quartet of soloists adds nothing to the occasion either. On paper the idea of ensemble improvisation seems exciting; in fact, it works out to an absurdity.

Just Happen

Four men producing inspiration deliberately on the stage of Symphony Hall on a Friday afternoon are about as spontaneous as Groucho Marx's old greasepaint mustache. Accidents may perhaps be controlled by the permutations of a computer; but in the human area of music, they just happen.

Adele Addison, the soprano soloist, however, sang splendidly, coping with the formidable difficulties of a nervous line and the dynamic design of a sprechtstimme, song-speech. She was clear, musical and interpretively persuasive throughout. The quartet doodled about as effectively as they could, while the Boston Symphony regarded these efforts with the classic expression—dismay, smiles, unbelief, sobriety—of witnesses at some incredible natural upheaval. There was a thin ripple of applause at the close for Mr. Foss, whose provoking, uneven artistry has at least enlivened a flaccid Symphony season.

First Rate

Schubert's Hayden-esque Symphony No. 5 and Roussel's "Bacchus and Ariadne," which opened the program, received first-rate readings from Dr. Munch.

Both have recently been offered, and comprise little that is fresh in either content or meaning. The suavity, grace, color and style of the conductor's concept are a joy to behold, nevertheless, particularly in the Roussel, which Dr. Munch informs with dionysiac vigor.

Next weekend features the first local performance of Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3; and Charles Munch has also scheduled Ramenau's Suite from "Dardanus" and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy,' 'with Joseph de Pasquale, viola, as the "Harold" soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
NOV 4 1961

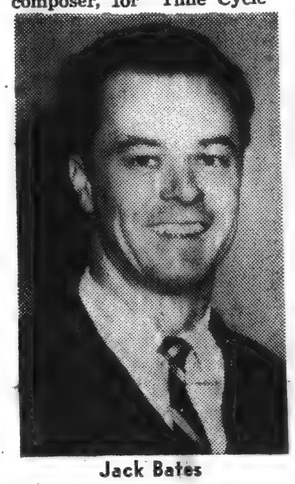
Music

"Time Cycle" Boston Symphony Feature

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—"Time Cycle" a composition by Lukas Foss was the talented work at the second open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra this week. Also on the program was the Schubert "Symphony No. 5", and Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2, Op. 43. The Foss composition was being heard for the first time here.

Dr. Charles Munch gave up the conductor's stand as a gracious overture to the composer, for "Time Cycle" and we feel certain that many in the capacity audience shared our viewpoint that Mr. Foss was the only man present who would desire to attempt such a chore.



Jack Bates

To start with, the composer took the vocal text of his composition from four philosophical poems concerned with the passing of time. The poems are brought to light by a soprano soloist who on this occasion proved to be the talented and vocally capable Adele Addison.

Miss Addison has always been a gracious artist and one whose approach to singing has been of the highest order. How she could retain not only her composure but a fine vocal line on an occasion such as this will always remain a mystery. The part that she sang was made up of brief passages of starts and stops, full-voiced effects that failed to prove their right to exist and intervals that embodied the wildest moments of even the most rabid of the modernists.

The orchestral parts—set off at times by an improvisation chamber ensemble consisting of piano, cello, clarinet and percussion did nothing to improve the situation. As for the composer, he did little to aid his cause with a conducting approach that failed to produce any of the old customs and facets of the podium art that the listener becomes used to in the talents of Dr. Munch and his long line of guest directors.

THE ROUSSEL piece proved interesting and Dr. Munch gave much time to balancing off the individual sections of the orchestra. The Schubert glowed with a melodic splendor that is characteristic of just how truly great this orchestra can be. Several times the conductor returned to the pages of the main theme in order to gain the interpretive effects he desired. Normally this would be something that would bore an audience, but on this occasion the magnificence that is Schubert was never more apparent.

Jack Bates, tenor, will be heard in the role of Joe Hardy in the coming production of "Damn Yankees" that is being presented Nov. 17-18 by the Unitarian Players of Chelmsford. The vehicle is the initial musical for the group.

Mr. Bates has a background that embraces opera, musical comedy, concert and TV. This past season he understudied the tenor lead in the Boston performance of "The Ballad of Baby Doe" by the City Center Opera company of New York. His first appearance in Boston was in 1952 when he was heard in the role of Detloff in "Student Prince" at the Boston Opera House. This past summer he toured with the road company of "Kismet" which featured Howard Keel. This production covered the Eastern summer theater schedule. He recently appeared in the role of Strephon in Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolanthe". Among his other operatic and musical comedy appearances have been in "Il Travatore" with the Shreveport, La., Civic Opera association; "Most Happy Fella"; "South Pacific", and "Pipe Dream." He is a member of the Minute Man Quartet of Winchester and has studied voice with George Dave to whom he was sent by the celebrated tenor Eugene Conley. He is presently coaching with Salvatore Sullo of Boston.

DREAMING

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D 47,136
OCT 30 1961

WAMC to Broadcast Three Concerts By the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Three concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.3 mc.) this week.

* * *

THE CONCERTS will be broadcast today at 8:30 p.m.; tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. and Friday at 2:10 p.m. The Tuesday and Friday concerts will be carried live.

Tonight's concert will consist of four orchestral pieces, opus 12, by Bartok; Symphony 6 by Hartmann; and Shostakovich's Symphony 5.

Tomorrow night's concert will be carried direct from Sanders theater on the campus of Harvard University. Charles Munch will conduct a program comprised of Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky," Debussy's "Iberia" and the Brahms Symphony 1.

LUKAS FOSS' latest work, "Time Cycle," will be heard in the Friday afternoon concert from Symphony hall in Boston. Foss will conduct the performance, in which soprano Adele Addison and the Lukas Foss Improvisation chamber ensemble—piano, cello, clarinet and percussion—will participate. Munch will conduct the remainder of the program: Schubert's Symphony 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel.

"Time Cycle," set to the texts of four philosophical poets, concerning their contemplations on the passage of time, was awarded the New York Music Critics' Circle Award this past season.

WAMC is a non-commercial, educational station that is operated by Albany Medical College with the support of the station's listeners.

62

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

NOV 4 1961

Lukas Foss 'Time Cycle' Is Way-Out Queer Music

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the fifth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch conducted Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B-flat major, and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel. Lukas Foss conducted the first Boston performance of his own "Time Cycle," with soprano Adele Addison as soloist, and with his Improvisation Chamber Ensemble participating. The latter were Richard Dufallo, clarinet; Howard Colf, cello, and Charles DeLancey, percussion, with Foss at piano.

By CYRUS DURGIN

"Time Cycle" by Lukas Foss, whose first Boston performance the composer conducted with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, is musical news. It is not much else, except way-out and queer stuff, even though the New York Music Critics Circle gave it their award for the present year.

"Time Cycle," a setting of four poems about time, clocks, or bells, interspersed with instrumental improvisations which have no relation to the composed portions, is technically most involved and difficult, and peculiar in its concept.

It is backward-looking, esthetically, with many of its effects of sound color and harmonic organization returning to the pointillist peckings of Anton Webern; the rhythmic involutions (which probably look fine on paper but sound like nothing much, of Dutilleux and Messaien; the contorted melodic intervals of the atonalists; even a suggestion of Schoenberg's "speech-sound," or sprechstimme.

Indeed, there is very little recognizable rhythm in "Time Cycle," mainly just metrical stresses and combinations of meters, which makes the greater part of the work sound vague and spineless. The serial technic pours harmonic vinegar over the whole.

The poems used are by Auden and Housman (in English), by Kafka and Nietzsche (in German), in which the voice sometimes imitates bells. (So do other instruments beside the elaborate percussion layout). Miss Addison, a true-blue musican, coped bravely, and I suspect accurately, with the most unsongful voice part.

Mr. Foss would conduct a song, then hop down to the piano for the improvised interludes. If the Boston Symphony players were required to produce a variety of piquancies, plangencies, flutters, bops and general flatulence in the lower brass, the Foss Improvisation Chamber Ensemble did more. Clarinetist Richard Dufallo blew out an impressive repertory of grunts, growls, snorts and snarls, leaping from tip-top of his instrument to its subcellar.

Mr. Colf plucked and bowed the cello in sundry twits, squeaks, rasps and groans, and Mr. DeLancey, with an extensive percussion arsenal of his own, popped, whacked thumped and slammed, at one point mercilessly tearing into the strings of the open piano with his mallets. Mr. Foss, occupied with his assault upon the keyboard, approved and played on.

Quite remarkably, there was very little passion in this long bastinado, mainly just whackery, and if I may say so, musical quackery. Nor was there any discernible emotion in the songs—except for the last, when the sound became expressively musical, and in the manner of Gustav Mahler.

So I left Symphony Hall singing "The Beautiful Earth" theme from Mahler's "The Song of the Earth." Quite a few of the Friday subscribers, it must be reported, had fled much earlier.

Dr. Charles Munch, who had conducted a lovely, lyrical performance of Schubert, and a brilliant, exciting one of Roussel's Suite, was an attractive listener in the balcony for "Time Cycle." I thought I perceived a broad grin on his face during the improvisations.

"Time Cycle" was commissioned for Adele Addison by the Ford Foundation. What would old Henry, who originally made the money, think could he hear the piece.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct a Suite from Rameau's Opera "Dardanus" the Boston premiere of Haieff's Third Symphony, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

NOV 11 1961

The Symphony

Work by Haieff Is Easy to Hear

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The art of decoration in music involves skill of a high order, a surface art that calls for elegance and distinguished workmanship rather than depth of statement. Yesterday's Symphony concert featuring the first Boston performance of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony, was devoted to this glitter of handsome adornment.

Like Rameau's Suite, and the figurative ornamentation of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," the Third Symphony strives essentially for graceful qualities of design. It is easy to hear, contrary to most first performances.

It is fastidiously constructed in terms of the international French style. It exists on the surface of musical thought — and does not pretend to exist on any other level.

Moves Precisely

The Siberian-born, American Haieff, in short, has produced a work that derives from Stravinsky, and moves precisely, cheerfully and brightly describing confident, abstract patterns. The score — allegro, andante, and a third movement, allegro-andante —opens with a short figure developed in various solo and ensemble textures; then, in the andante, states a theme later inverted; ('I would subtitle the second movement 'Narcissus,'" says Haieff, "for the second half is an exact mirror reflection") and ultimately elaborates the opening design further, and contrasts this with a contemplative finale.

The principle of contrast, indeed, dominates the Symphony, of mood, texture, line, the pointillist sonorities; and the affinities to purely visual experience seem to me marked.

An amiable treatment of dissonant counterpoint, the vital brusque Stravinsky-ian rhythms, the logic of the proportions, establish a sophisticated tracery. That it means no more than, say, knowing what constitutes the difference between a regional and a chateau-bottled wine, may bother some; but knowing this difference can be exceedingly important in its proper realm. Haieff's Third is a minor work of civilized sensibility.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Charles Munch conducting, presented the sixth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Joseph de Pasquale, viola, was the soloist; the program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Suite from the Opera "Deardanus" ..... Rameau
Symphony No. 3 ..... Haieff
"Harold in Italy," Symphony With Solo, Op. 16 ..... Berlioz

Crisp Reading

Dr. Munch supplied a properly urbane and crisp reading, and in Rameau's Suite the sphere of the traditional rococo, the orchestra gave us ensemble of sparkling lustre. Offering the Suite in larger dimensions is possible, of course, yet the possibility of surpassing the noble gravity of the BSO strings seems remote.

With "Harold in Italy" we reached the final decoration of the program, mural-sized and crowded by heroic narrative, but decorative still in spite of the illustrative idiom.

William Primrose and the Orchestra's violist, Joseph de Pasquale, have alternated ownership of the rights at these concerts during the last 15 years, and Mr. de Pasquale resumed tenure with a solo performance that was full-bodied, beguiling and, for want of a more concrete word, beautiful. A more technical adjective could scarcely convey the fluent lyricism of Mr. de Pasquale's projection.

His tone production, bowing, exact intonation and emotional stress translated the ancient favorite into living communication. Orchestra and soloist were ideally matched, a welcome integration after the rigors of last week.

Goes on Tour

During the weekend next, the Boston Symphony will be on tour. Richard Burgin conducts the concerts of Nov. 24-25, which find Gary Graffman as the soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto, No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18. The first Boston performance of Kirchner's 'Sinfonia' has been scheduled, and Moussorgsky's Prelude to 'Khovanshchina' and Sibelius's Symphony No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 82.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

NOV 11 1961

Munch Conducts Berlioz, With DePasquale Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the sixth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted a Suite from Rameau's Opera "Dardanus"; the Symphony No. 3 (first performance in Boston) by Alexei Haieff, and Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with first viola Joseph De Pasquale as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

For sheer excitement; the rich, lovely colors of the orchestra and the warmth of romantic melody, Berloiz' "Harold in Italy" is one of the peaks of the early 19th Century. It is, further, something of a specialty with Charles Munch (along with Berloiz' "Romeo and Juliett" and Symphonie Fantastique), who yesterday afternoon gave it yet another memorable performance. The soloist again was the Boston Symphony's notable first viola, Joseph De Pasquale.

This performance was not only excitement and color, but superb orchestral execution, with much polish of detail and no exaggeration or coarseness. A special compliment must be stated for the unexcelled English horn playing of Louis Spere in the serenade of the mountaineer. I venture to claim this to be an ideal realization of the long, amorous melody.

De Pasquale's clean, dexterous technic long since established him as a master of the viola. But there is a great deal more in his playing: such a wonderfully big, expressive and varied quality of tone as you will hear from few other violists; emotional intensity without sentimentality, and a most musical grasp of the relationship of this solo part to the orchestral body of the work.

No wonder, then, that the Friday audience applauded him with heat and volume.

Alexei Haieff was present to hear the first Boston performance of his Symphony No. 3, a work which sounded upon first acquaintance agreeable and substantial if a little dry in its fast movements.

The first movement is characterized by rapid thematic figures in what might be called fragmented form, which skip in close imitation from section to section of the orchestra, with short solo interjections.

The counter-point produces a dissonant teture, but a very logical and vertebrate one. There is vigor of rhythm, both in the agitation of the reiterated fragments and in the sense of a larger and overall continuity of musical thought.

Haieff's slow movement is melodically sustained, immediately pleasing to the ear and with what is sometimes known as heart appeal. That is to say it appeals to one's feelings as much as to one's intellectual perception. The finale is perhaps the largest movement of all three, in that it seems to have the most power and greater extent of design. All of the Symphony, which is not to be digested in a single hearing, has the organic life of music intelltctually conceived, organized both as technical construction and emotional communication.

Dr. Munch used a very small string orchestra to balance the paired flutes, oboes and bassoons in the delectable 18th Century music of Rameau. The effect was clarity and a luminous tone, which, emerging in a decidedly light-handed and graceful performance, gave the Suite the proper style.

Next week the Orchestra will go on tour. Richard Burgin will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts of Nov. 24 and 25. His program will consist of Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantschina"; a Sinfonia of Leon Kirchner (first Boston performance); the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and Rachmaninoff's C minor Piano Concerto, with Gary Graffman as soloist.

Sixth Week

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 11 1961

Haieff Symphony No. 3 in Boston Premiere

9-61

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 16 1961

At BSO

Haieff's Third Symphony Introduced

By PAUL GRICE

Saturday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch presented three works, one from each of the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries and included the first performance in Boston of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony, completed in 1961, and a performance of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with Joseph dePasquale playing the part for solo viola.

Rameau's "Dardanus" suite began the program and was beautifully played by a section of the orchestra. As with other orchestral music by Rameau, one felt that one was listening to the work of a composer who knew exactly what he was trying to achieve, who wrote with admirable economy and directness and yet nearly always managed to inform each piece of music with some happy idea which distinguished it from the ordinary run of 18th century music.

Alexei Haieff at one time studied with Nadia Boulanger, and his Third Symphony exhibits the clarity which one has come to expect from those who have worked with her. The first movement, which was in my view the most successful, was taut and economical, and achieved a rhythmic tenseness, not wholly unlike that to be found in some of Walton's works, which was effective. The slow movement, so the composer tells us, bears the sub-title "Narcissus" and the second half of the movement is an exact mirror-image of the first half. It relied heavily on progressions of more or less remotely related common chords in differing inversions, often grouped in four-note phrases. I must confess that I found the general effect of this movement one of monotony; the device just mentioned has been worked hard (for example by Vaughan Williams and Frank Martin) and it is not now easy to make it exciting. I felt also that there was a certain incongruity of idiom between the first two movements, which reappeared within the final movement, which incorporates elements from its predecessors. My impression, on a first hearing, was that this was not a work of very great distinction.

The concert ended with an exhilarating performance of "Harold in Italy" in which Mr. dePasquale invested the solo part with all the beauty of tone of which he is the master.

Stravinsky, in an unpublished conversation, once remarked that Berlioz was a bad composer; and one can see the features which might have prompted such a judgment; his music sprawls and is uneven in quality, his melodies are sometimes blatant or banal, and one recognizes recurrences of certain favorite tricks, such as the tolling repetition at intervals of a falling semitone, which is used not only in "Harold in Italy" but also in the Requiem and in Nuits d'Ete." But none of this prevents him from being a great composer; not only was he one of the really original musical minds of the 19th century, but his music is so much the expression of a recognizable personality that even its weaknesses become endearing.

"Harold in Italy" is perhaps not quite in the top flight of his works, but it contains many enchanting and exciting moments, to which the fullest justice was done in this performance.

De Pasquale Soloist in 'Harold in Italy'

By Harold Rogers

One cannot point out too often that the content, in our evaluation of contemporary music, is far more important than the medium. It is not the language chosen by the composer that one need find fault with, if indeed there is fault to be found. It is the quality of his inspiration. He may choose an aurally attractive language and have nothing to say. On the other hand, he may choose a forbidding tongue and yet be trenchant with meaning.

True, the listener has work to do if he is to keep up with the changes in our musical language today. Some listeners do not make the effort; the changes therefore pass them by. They may be listening to enthralling poems, yet not be enthralled; much as they would not be moved if a literary poem were read to them in an unknown tongue.

Only those who have kept up with the changing musical speech of our times are in a position to discern the quality of inspiration to be found in a particular piece. They must have arrived at the point where no combination of sounds can fall strangely on the ear. Then, no longer put off by language, they are ready to respond to the composer's message.

* * *

In this way can we judge the worth of a modern work; and it was on this basis that Lukas Foss's "Time Cycle" was adjudged a failure last week—not for its sound, but for the poverty of its message.

It is on this basis that Alexei Haieff's new Symphony No. 3, heard in its Boston première yesterday afternoon, has also missed the mark, though to a much lesser degree than the Foss.

As played under Charles Munch's direction yesterday, the three-movement piece contains much that is interesting to the ear. The composer has a fascinating way of skipping about in the orchestra, quickly touching the horns here, the brass there, or the woods or strings as his fancy dictates. He may punctuate with the snare drum, or even with silence. Tiny explosions of sound are wrapped in rests.

Thus he makes his peppery path through the end movements, occasionally seeking a bit of contrast in a sober melody that is never sustained for long. He dallies intellectually in a bit of counterpoint on occasion, or with sweeps of expanding contrary motion.

The middle movement could be subtitled "Narcissus," as Mr. Haieff explains in the concert bulletin, because the second half of it is an exact reflection of the first half—"what was above is below, up, down, etc., all the way to the end." Here is an intellectual manipulation that is in no way obvious in the hearing of it; the mood of this movement, however, lies slightly below the surface on which the outer movements glide.

* * *

But can it be said that Mr. Haieff's symphony truly takes hold of the listener? I for one do not care what a composer makes me feel; all I ask is that he makes me feel something — even disgust if he can't lift my feelings any higher than that. But I do object to having been left in a void. Music is an emotional language; if it cannot make us feel something, it is merely the letter without the spirit.

Dr. Munch opened with the courtly Suite from Rameau's opera "Dardanus," elegant to the last arch of an eyebrow, and closed with a glowingly romantic reading of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy."

The superb soloist in the Berlioz was Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony's principal viola; and again he gave us of his gorgeously suave tone, at times in phrases that lilt with a sigh. Perhaps the harmonic arpeggios in the "March of the Pilgrims" were not altogether flawless; but — difficult things that they are — they are seldom so. More famous soloists have been heard in this work, but none better that Mr. de Pasquale.

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 11, at 8:30 o'clock

RAMEAU ..... Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus"

I. Entrée (gracieusement et un peu gai)
II. Rondeau du sommeil (modéré)
III. Rigaudon (assez modéré)
IV. Rondeau gai (gaiment)

HAIEFF ..... Symphony No. 3

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Andante; Allegro

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BERLIOZ ..... *"Harold in Italy": Symphony with Viola Solo, Op. 16

I. Harold in the Mountains, Scenes of Melancholy, Happiness and Joy (Adagio; Allegro)
II. March of Pilgrims singing their Evening Hymn (Allegretto)
III. Serenade of a Mountaineer of the Abruzzi to his Mistress (Allegro assai; Allegretto)
IV. Orgy of Brigands; Recollections of the Preceding Scenes (Allegro frenetico)

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Sixth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 11 1961

Haieff Symphony No. 3 in Boston Premiere

9-61

De Pasquale Soloist in 'Harold in Italy'

By Harold Rogers

One cannot point out too often that the content, in our evaluation of contemporary music, is far more important than the medium. It is not the language chosen by the composer that one need find fault with, if indeed there is fault to be found. It is the quality of his inspiration. He may choose an aurally attractive language and have nothing to say. On the other hand, he may choose a forbidding tongue and yet be trenchant with meaning.

True, the listener has work to do if he is to keep up with the changes in our musical language today. Some listeners do not make the effort; the changes therefore pass them by. They may be listening to enthralling poems, yet not be enthralled; much as they would not be moved if a literary poem were read to them in an unknown tongue.

Only those who have kept up with the changing musical speech of our times are in a position to discern the quality of inspiration to be found in a particular piece. They must have arrived at the point where no combination of sounds can fall strangely on the ear. Then, no longer put off by language, they are ready to respond to the composer's message.

* * *

In this way can we judge the worth of a modern work; and it was on this basis that Lukas Foss's "Time Cycle" was adjudged a failure last week—not for its sound, but for the poverty of its message.

It is on this basis that Alexei Haieff's new Symphony No. 3, heard in its Boston première yesterday afternoon, has also missed the mark, though to a much lesser degree than the Foss.

As played under Charles Munch's direction yesterday, the three-movement piece contains much that is interesting to the ear. The composer has a fascinating way of skipping about in the orchestra, quickly touching the horns here, the brass there, or the woods or strings as his fancy dictates. He may punctuate with the snare drum, or even with silence. Tiny explosions of sound are wrapped in rests.

Thus he makes his peppery path through the end movements, occasionally seeking a bit of contrast in a sober melody that is never sustained for long. He dallies intellectually in a bit of counterpoint on occasion, or with sweeps of expanding contrary motion.

The middle movement could be subtitled "Narcissus," as Mr. Haieff explains in the concert bulletin, because the second half of it is an exact reflection of the first half—"what was above is below, up, down, etc., all the way to the end." Here is an intellectual manipulation that is in no way obvious in the hearing of it; the mood of this movement, however, lies slightly below the surface on which the outer movements glide.

* * *

But can it be said that Mr. Haieff's symphony truly takes hold of the listener? I for one do not care what a composer makes me feel; all I ask is that he makes me feel something — even disgust if he can't lift my feelings any higher than that. But I do object to having been left in a void. Music is an emotional language; if it cannot make us feel something, it is merely the letter without the spirit.

Dr. Munch opened with the courtly Suite from Rameau's opera "Dardanus," elegant to the last arch of an eyebrow, and closed with a glowingly romantic reading of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy."

The superb soloist in the Berlioz was Joseph de Pasquale, the Boston Symphony's principal viola; and again he gave us of his gorgeously suave tone, at times in phrases that lilt with a sigh. Perhaps the harmonic arpeggios in the "March of the Pilgrims" were not altogether flawless; but — difficult things that they are — they are seldom so. More famous soloists have been heard in this work, but none better that Mr. de Pasquale.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 16 1961

At BSO

Haieff's Third Symphony Introduced

By PAUL GRICE

Saturday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch presented three works, one from each of the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries and included the first performance in Boston of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony, completed in 1961, and a performance of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with Joseph dePasquale playing the part for solo viola.

Rameau's "Dardanus" suite began the program and was beautifully played by a section of the orchestra. As with other orchestral music by Rameau, one felt that one was listening to the work of a composer who knew exactly what he was trying to achieve, who wrote with admirable economy and directness and yet nearly always managed to inform each piece of music with some happy idea which distinguished it from the ordinary run of 18th century music.

Alexei Haieff at one time studied with Nadia Boulanger, and his Third Symphony exhibits the clarity which one has come to expect from those who have worked with her. The first movement, which was in my view the most successful, was taut and economical, and achieved a rhythmic tenseness, not wholly unlike that to be found in some of Walton's works, which was effective. The slow movement, so the composer tells us, bears the sub-title "Narcissus" and the second half of the movement is an exact mirror-image of the first half. It relied heavily on progressions of more or less remotely related common chords in differing inversions, often grouped in four-note phrases. I must confess that I found the general effect of this movement one of monotony; the device just mentioned has been worked hard (for example by Vaughan Williams and Frank Martin) and it is not now easy to make it exciting. I felt also that there was a certain incongruity of idiom between the first two movements, which reappeared within the final movement, which incorporates elements from its predecessors. My impression, on a first hearing, was that this was not a work of very great distinction.

The concert ended with an exhilarating performance of "Harold in Italy" in which Mr. dePasquale invested the solo part with all the beauty of tone of which he is the master.

Stravinsky, in an unpublished conversation, once remarked that Berlioz was a bad composer; and one can see the features which might have prompted such a judgment; his music sprawls and is uneven in quality, his melodies are sometimes blatant or banal, and one recognizes recurrences of certain favorite tricks, such as the tolling repetition at intervals of a falling semitone, which is used not only in "Harold in Italy" but also in the Requiem and in Nuits d'Ete." But none of this prevents him from being a great composer; not only was he one of the really original musical minds of the 19th century, but his music is so much the expression of a recognizable personality that even its weaknesses become endearing.

"Harold in Italy" is perhaps not quite in the top flight of his works, but it contains many enchanting and exciting moments, to which the fullest justice was done in this performance.

Sixth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 10, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 11, at 8:30 o'clock

RAMEAU ..... Suite from the Opera, "Dardanus"
- I. Entrée (gracieusement et un peu gai)
- II. Rondeau du sommeil (modéré)
- III. Rigaudon (assez modéré)
- IV. Rondeau gai (gaîment)

HAIEFF ..... Symphony No. 3
- I. Allegro
- II. Andante
- III. Andante; Allegro

(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BERLIOZ ..... *"Harold in Italy": Symphony with Viola Solo, Op. 16
- I. Harold in the Mountains, Scenes of Melancholy, Happiness and Joy (Adagio; Allegro)
- II. March of Pilgrims singing their Evening Hymn (Allegretto)
- III. Serenade of a Mountaineer of the Abruzzi to his Mistress (Allegro assai; Allegretto)
- IV. Orgy of Brigands; Recollections of the Preceding Scenes (Allegro frenetico)

SOLOIST
JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

64

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
NOV 17 1961

'Harold In Italy'--Now And In 1874

By PHYLLIS NEWTON

It was one of those curious coincidences that pull the past up close to the present for an instant in a wholly unexpected and personal way.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hodder of Needham were getting ready to go to the Symphony Friday to hear "Harold In Italy." The romantic Berlioz score was one of their favorites.

BOSTON PREMIERE

Before leaving for the concert, Mrs. Hodder sat down for a moment with a rather rare piece of reading material. It was a sheet of the Boston Traveller for Oct. 27, 1874, which had been found on the back of a photo of her great-great-grandfather.

The cut-out oval was tattered and brown at the edges, but she read it with great interest

GREAT-GREAT-GRANDFATHER'S portrait yielded a copy of an 1874 Boston Traveller for Mrs. George Hodder of Needham. The yellowed newspaper carried an announcement of the Boston premiere of "Harold in Italy," which the Hodders heard the Boston Symphony play Friday.

—particularly one item which made her sit bolt upright.

There in the old-fashioned wide columns of the 87-year old newspaper was an announcement of the Boston premiere of "Harold In Italy."

"I really came to attention," says Mrs. Hodder, a music lover who has been a Friday afternoon patron of the Symphony for years.

PROGRAM NOTES

"It struck us so funny to read about the very work we were going to hear in a newspaper of three generations back," adds her husband.

Program notes for the Friday performance verify that the famed symphony which Berlioz composed at Paganini's request was first played in Boston on Oct. 28, 1874, the day after the date of the paper.

"It brought home to us in a very real way the durability of fine music," says Hodder.

"Almost everything else in the paper seemed so remote from modern life—but it was heartwarming to realize that the same good music that appealed to our ancestors has continued to appeal to succeeding generations."

DREAMY MUSIC

A Symphony buff for years, Hodder remarked that the Berlioz work (which was inspired by Byron's poem "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage") seems to keep turning up in his life.

"My colleagues gave me an album of 'Harold In Italy' when I left Buffalo to come to Needham in 1948," he recalls.

"Every time I hear this nostalgic dreamy music I think of these old friends, and although Mozart is my favorite, I have become a devoted Berlioz fan under Dr. Munch's influence."

The Hodders had a wonderful time showing the yellowed newspaper to their Symphony "neighbors" Friday afternoon. The couple has held second-row, second balcony tickets for 15 years.

"We inherited them from my mother, Mrs. James H. Barnard," says Mrs. Hodder. "She used them for 30 years and I believe had them ever since the ticket system began."

The 1874 Traveller was found on the back of a framed portrait of Charles Barnard, Mrs. Hodder's great - great - grandfather, who died in 1869, the same year as Berlioz.

The picture was being repaired by Dr. Ruth C. Warwick of Norwell, a cousin of Mrs. Hodder's father, who is now in her eighties. She gave the newspaper to them as a curiosity.

Its quaint columns reveal that Boston of the gaslight era had other fascinating entertainment to offer, besides the premiere of "Harold In Italy."

At the Boston Museum, there was Tom Taylor's new play "Done On Both Sides." At the Tremont Temple were the Royal Marionettes, described by an enthusiastic reporter as a "delightful company of limber lumber."

There was a "jolly bill" at the Howard Athenaeum featuring hilarious burlesques of "Pocahontas", while at Wesleyan Hall, the East Boston Cornet Band was performing.

None of these divertissements, however, turned out to have the longevity of "Harold In Italy," which has been performed 20 times by the Boston Symphony since that memorable date in 1874.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 7 1961

New Regulars for the Symphony

By Louis Chapin

"First aisle on the right . . ."
"Third aisle on the right . . ."
"Second aisle on the left—see the usher . . ."

To any Boston symphony-goer the ricochet of staccato instructions from side to side of the entrance to the Symphony Hall floor has become a familiar sound, speeding ticket-holders to their seats—stringendo as the warning bells ring and the orchestra comes on stage into a whirr of tuning.

He may have heard it on a Friday afternoon, a Sunday afternoon, a Saturday night, a Tuesday night. But not until yesterday would he have heard it on a Monday night.

The Boston Symphony has enlarged its activities this season to include a new Monday subscription series of six concerts—the first such addition since 1925. Last night's concert, directed by Charles Munch, was the opener in this new series, which is already sold out.

♪ ♪ ♪

The two entrance ushers were busier than usual, because this was a new audience, not yet generally sure of its course seatward, and eager to find it. Some of its members were "graduates" of the open rehearsals, started by Dr. Munch in 1951 and introducing Bostonians and their orchestra to each other in a new way. Many rehearsal attendants have been students, and last night's audience showed a distinctly youthful cast.

Mrs. Ethel Fallon of the Symphony subscription office has found the new list to have certain earmarks. Among the Monday subscribers she finds a noticeable quantity of doctors, and there are clergymen of many denominations. Some names are repetitions, from other series, which probably means gifts of tickets to family or friends. The Boston suburbs are evenly and well represented, with a scattering from New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

♪ ♪ ♪

The new audience was obviously glad to be there and to hear what it heard, though one subscriber's comment looked to the future: "I hope the programs don't stay too conservative, and that we have a good proportion of contemporary music." It didn't look like an audience that wanted to be put to sleep.

And last night it wasn't. Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" tenderly and nobly represented three men—its subject, its composer, and its conductor. Debussy's "Iberia" suite showed off a brilliant cluster of the orchestra's colors, and Tchaikovsky's Sixth exhibited its own compelling gamut of tonal gestures, while Monday symphony-goers found their way into its silences.

They broke the last silence as any pleased audience should. And now that they know their way, they'll be back on Monday, December 18, for more.

65

Monday Series

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
NOV 7 1961

(Boston Globe-UPI Telephoto)

PENNSYLVANIA NATIONAL TROPHY is presented by Mrs. Albert H. Stackpole to Argentina's Dr. Hugo Arrambide after his victory in jumping at National Horse Show, New York. At left: Walter Devereux, show president.

Society: Boston Symphony Launches First of Six Monday Concerts

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

It's Boston's most famous enterprise, but it never rests on its laurels. And last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a most successful premiere of a brand new series of concerts.

The Monday series will be six concerts long, and the remaining dates are Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, Mar. 19, and Apr. 23.

They'll add lustre to a list that includes Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festivals, Pops and the Esplanade concerts, the Youth Concerts and the European tours, and all the familiar wonderful afternoons and evenings at Symphony Hall where three generations of Bostonians have listened to some of the world's finest music.

It was an audience of many ages, of students and young-marrieds, of fathers and daughters, and a lot of doctors and ministers and their wives.

Most of the New England states were represented — Mrs. Ernest Perry of York, Me.; Mrs. William Wagner of Hampton Falls, N. H.; Mrs. Ralph Gale of Bennington, Vt.; and dozens of communities in Massachusetts—Henry Atkins, Concord; Mrs. Richard Chase, Wellesley Hills; Willis Fay, Sudbury; Mrs. Donald Hill, Newton Highlands; John Holbrook, Weston; Mrs. Ernest Leathem, Lincoln; Allan Forbes Leland, Boston; Mrs. Burton Noyes, Wellesley; F. Gardiner Perry, Needham; Donald Snyder, Topsfield; Mrs. C. W. Stillwell, Framingham; Theodore Shackford, Arlington; Peter Semans, Marblehead; Dr. Donald Weis, Braintree, and Robert M. P. Kennard and his daughter, Anne.

First subscribers to the new Monday night series include Dr. Harold Case, president of Boston University, and Mrs. Case, E. Morton Jenning Jr., Rev. Frederick Brigham, Dr. and Mrs. Randolph Byers, David W. Bailey, Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Michelson, Rev. James E. Wolfe, Dr. Jerome Roberts, Carl Weyerhauser, Dr. Harry Lowd, Mrs. Alexander Wheeler, Mrs. Russell Stearns, Dr. Leroy M. S. Miner, Dr. Howard McIntyre, Rev. G. J. Balfour, Mrs. Edwin H. Land, a group of 30 students from Pine Manor Junior College, and hundreds more.

CHILDREN HAD THEIR OPENING concert in the youth series for this season last Saturday morning. From the youngster in the balcony who found his own conductor's beat by opening and closing his coat, to the 15-year-old solo violinist, Penny Ambrose of Coventry, Ct., who drew whistles and cheers, it was a lively house at Symphony Hall.

"A very orderly crowd," said a veteran usher as the children arrived.

Six busloads came from Lexington alone with Miss Louise Cavalieri, Paul Ciano, Guido Piacentini and Mrs. Sheldon Gruber.

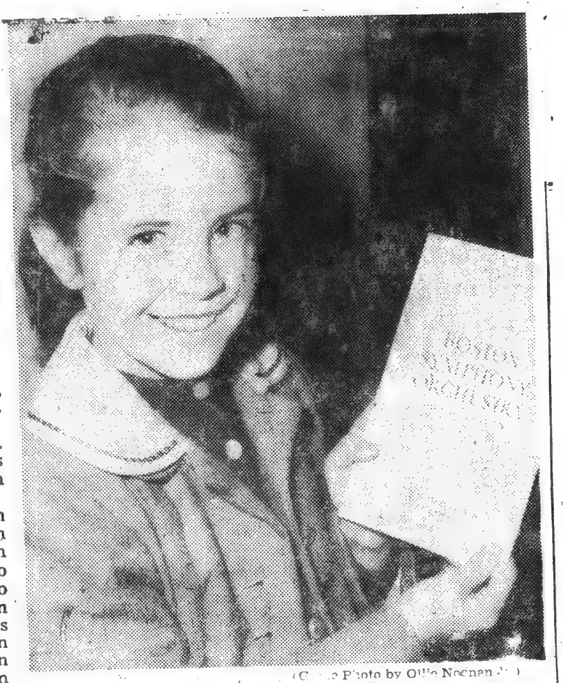
Mrs. Evans Speare Jr. shepherded 82 youngsters from grades five through nine from Walpole.

Driving from Hingham with Mrs. S. Everett Eaton were 80 fifth through tenth grade pupils. Bus loads also gave children a chance to hear Harry Ellis Dickson conduct one of the world's most famous orchestras in both classical and modern music as they arrived from Fall River, Harvard, Townsend, Manchester, New Boston, N. H., Marshfield, Cohasset, Wareham, Plymouth, Scituate, and Kittery Point, Lewiston and York in Maine.

Mrs. A. Clement Titcomb put on her usher's red ribbon to join Mrs. Austin Broadhurst, Mrh. Germain J. Bouchard, Mrs. Leo Pistorino, Mrs. Manuel P. Kurland, Mrs. Harry Brenner, Mrs. Donald A. Haire, Mrs. Leonard Wolsky, Mrs. Leon H. Ballou Jr., Mrs. Abbott Rand, Mrs. Julian Sobin, and Mrs. Ralph Katz, chairman of sponsoring mothers from 47 towns.

Mrs. Alexander H. Ladd Jr., chairman of the advisory committee, had young guests with her as did Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, executive director, Mrs. William Sweet, Mrs. Carter R. Rowe and Mrs. William Waldron.

Hosts also included Youth Concert officers Henry B. Cabot, Dean John Burchard, John L. Thorndike, Stephen D. Paine, Irving W. Rabb, John Corley Jr., Mrs. Harold D. Ashe, Dr. Frederick Gillis, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Stacy Holmes, Mrs. Charles E. Mason Jr., Mrs. A. H. Ladd Jr., Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. James S. Russell, Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky and Mrs. Frank G. Webster.



(Globe Photo by Ollie Nocnen Jr.)

CELEBRATING HER 9TH BIRTHDAY with a visit to Symphony Hall was Betsy Bryan of Newton.

First Program

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

HANSON . . . . . Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44

DEBUSSY . . . . . *Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (Holiday Morning)

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY . . . . *Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathétique"

I. Adagio; allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

45

Monday Series

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
NOV 7 1961

(Boston Globe–UPI Telephoto)

PENNSYLVANIA NATIONAL TROPHY is presented by Mrs. Albert H. Stackpole to Argentina's Dr. Hugo Arrambide after his victory in jumping at National Horse Show, New York. At left: Walter Devereux, show president.

(Globe Photo by Otto Nachen Jr.)

CELEBRATING HER 9TH BIRTHDAY with a visit to Symphony Hall was Betsy Bryan of Newton.

Society: Boston Symphony Launches First of Six Monday Concerts

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

It's Boston's most famous enterprise, but it never rests on its laurels. And last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a most successful premiere of a brand new series of concerts.

The Monday series will be six concerts long, and the remaining dates are Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, Mar. 19, and Apr. 23.

They'll add lustre to a list that includes Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festivals, Pops and the Esplanade concerts, the Youth Concerts and the European tours, and all the familiar wonderful afternoons and evenings at Symphony Hall where three generations of Bostonians have listened to some of the world's finest music.

It was an audience of many ages, of students and young-marrieds, of fathers and daughters, and a lot of doctors and ministers and their wives.

Most of the New England states were represented — Mrs. Ernest Perry of York, Me.; Mrs. William Wagner of Hampton Falls, N. H.; Mrs. Ralph Gale of Bennington, Vt.; and dozens of communities in Massachusetts—Henry Atkins, Concord; Mrs. Richard Chase, Wellesley Hills; Willis Fay, Sudbury; Mrs. Donald Hill, Newton Highlands; John Holbrook, Weston; Mrs. Ernest Leathem, Lincoln; Allan Forbes Leland, Boston; Mrs. Burton Noyes, Wellesley; F. Gardiner Perry, Needham; Donald Snyder, Topsfield; Mrs. C. W. Stillwell, Framingham; Theodore Shackford, Arlington; Peter Semans, Marblehead; Dr. Donald Weis, Braintree, and Robert M. P. Kennard and his daughter, Anne.

First subscribers to the new Monday night series include Dr. Harold Case, president of Boston University, and Mrs. Case, E. Morton Jenning Jr., Rev. Frederick Brigham, Dr. and Mrs. Randolph Byers, David W. Bailey, Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Michelson, Rev. James E. Wolfe, Dr. Jerome Roberts, Carl Weyerhauser, Dr. Harry Lowd, Mrs. Alexander Wheeler, Mrs. Russell Stearns, Dr. Leroy M. S. Miner, Dr. Howard McIntyre, Rev. G. J. Eelfour, Mrs. Edwin H. Land, a group of 30 students from Pine Manor Junior College, and hundreds more.

CHILDREN HAD THEIR OPENING concert in the youth series for this season last Saturday morning. From the youngster in the balcony who found his own conductor's beat by opening and closing his coat, to the 15-year-old solo violinist, Penny Ambrose of Coventry, Ct., who drew whistles and cheers, it was a lively house at Symphony Hall.

"A very orderly crowd," said a veteran usher as the children arrived.

Six busloads came from Lexington alone with Miss Louise Cavalieri, Paul Ciano, Guido Piacentini and Mrs. Sheldon Gruber.

Mrs. Evans Speare Jr. shepherded 82 youngsters from grades five through nine from Walpole.

Driving from Hingham with Mrs. S. Everett Eaton were 80 fifth through tenth grade pupils. Bus loads also gave children a chance to hear Harry Ellis Dickson conduct one of the world's most famous orchestras in both classical and modern music as they arrived from Fall River, Harvard, Townsend, Manchester, New Boston, N. H., Marshfield, Cohasset, Wareham, Plymouth, Scituate, and Kittery Point, Lewiston and York in Maine.

Mrs. A. Clement Titcomb put on her usher's red ribbon to join Mrs. Austin Broadhurst, Mrs. Germain J. Bouchard, Mrs. Leo Pistorino, Mrs. Manuel P. Kurland, Mrs. Harry Brenner, Mrs. Donald A. Haire, Mrs. Leonard Wolsky, Mrs. Leon H. Ballou Jr., Mrs. Abbott Rand, Mrs. Julian Sobin, and Mrs. Ralph Katz, chairman of sponsoring mothers from 47 towns.

Mrs. Alexander H. Ladd Jr., chairman of the advisory committee, had young guests with her as did Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, executive director, Mrs. William Sweet, Mrs. Carter R. Rowe and Mrs. William Waldron.

Hosts also included Youth Concert officers Henry B. Cabot, Dean John Burchard, John L. Thorndike, Stephen D. Paine, Irving W. Rabb, John Corley Jr., Mrs. Harold Dr. Ashe, Dr. Frederick Gillis, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Stacy Holmes, Mrs. Charles E. Mason Jr., Mrs. A. H. Ladd Jr., Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. James S. Russell, Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky and Mrs. Frank G. Webster.

First Program

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

HANSON . . . . . Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44

DEBUSSY . . . . . *Ibéria ("Images," No. 2)

I. Par les rues et par les chemins (Through the Highways and Byways)
II. Les Parfums de la nuit (The Fragrance of the Night)
III. Le Matin d'un jour de fête (Holiday Morning)

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY . . . . *Symphony No. 6, in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathétique"

I. Adagio; allegro non troppo
II. Allegro con grazia
III. Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Adagio lamentoso

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BALDWIN PIANO

4

Society: Boston Symphony Launches First of Six Monday Concerts

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

It's Boston's most famous enterprise, but it never rests on its laurels. And last night the Boston Symphony Orchestra had a most successful premiere of a brand new series of concerts.

The Monday series will be six concerts long, and the remaining dates are Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, Mar. 19, and Apr. 23.

(Globe Photo by Ollie Noonan Jr.)

HELPING INAUGURATE new Monday Series of concerts at Symphony Hall last night were Prof. N. C. Amkeny of M.I.T. and his daughter Katy.

They'll add lustre to a list that includes Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festivals, Pops and the Esplanade concerts, the Youth Concerts and the European tours, and all the familiar wonderful afternoons and evenings at Symphony Hall where three generations of Bostonians have listened to some of the world's finest music.

It was an audience of many ages, of students and young-marrieds, of fathers and daughters, and a lot of doctors and ministers and their wives.

Most of the New England states were represented — Mrs. Ernest Perry of York, Me.; Mrs. William Wagner of Hampton Falls, N. H.; Mrs. Ralph Gale of Bennington, Vt.; and dozens of communities in Massachusetts—Henry Atkins, Concord; Mrs. Richard Chase, Wellesley Hills; Willis Fay, Sudbury; Mrs. Donald Hill, Newton Highlands; John Holbrook, Weston; Mrs. Ernest Leathem, Lincoln; Allan Forbes Leland, Boston; Mrs. Burton Noyes. Wellesley; F. Gardiner Perry, Needham; Donald Snyder, Topsfield; Mrs. C. W. Stillwell, Framingham; Theodore Shackford, Arlington; Peter Semans, Marblehead; Dr. Donald Weis, Braintree, and Robert M. P. Kennard and his daughter, Anne.

First subscribers to the new Monday night series include Dr. Harold Case, president of Boston University, and Mrs. Case, E. Morton Jenning Jr., Rev. Frederick Brigham, Dr. and Mrs. Randolph Byers, David W. Bailey, Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Michelson, Rev. James E. Wolfe, Dr. Jerome Roberts, Carl Weyerhauser, Dr. Harry Lowd, Mrs. Alexander Wheeler, Mrs. Russell Stearns, Dr. Leroy M. S. Miner, Dr. Howard McIntyre, Rev. G. J. Ealfour, Mrs. Edwin H. Land, a group of 30 students from Pine Manor Junior College, and hundreds more.

CHILDREN HAD THEIR OPENING concert in the youth series for this season last Saturday morning. From the youngster in the balcony who found his own conductor's beat by opening and closing his coat, to the 15-year-old solo violinist, Penny Ambrose of Coventry, Ct., who drew whistles and cheers, it was a lively house at Symphony Hall.

"A very orderly crowd," said a veteran usher as the children arrived.

Six busloads came from Lexington alone with Miss Louise Cavalieri, Paul Ciano, Guido Piacentini and Mrs. Sheldon Gruber.

Mrs. Evans Speare Jr. shepherded 82 youngsters from grades five through nine from Walpole.

Driving from Hingham with Mrs. S. Everett Eaton were 80 fifth through tenth grade pupils. Bus loads also gave children a chance to hear Harry Ellis Dickson conduct one of the world's most famous orchestras in both classical and modern music as they arrived from Fall River, Harvard, Townsend, Manchester, New Boston, N. H., Marshfield, Cohasset, Wareham, Plymouth, Scituate, and Kittery Point, Lewiston and York in Maine.

Mrs. A. Clement Titcomb put on her usher's red ribbon to join Mrs. Austin Broadhurst, Mrh. Germain J. Bouchard, Mrs. Leo Pistorino, Mrs. Manuel P. Kurland, Mrs. Harry Brenner, Mrs. Donald A. Haire, Mrs. Leonard Wolsky, Mrs. Leon H. Ballou Jr., Mrs. Abbott Rand, Mrs. Julian Sobin, and Mrs. Ralph Katz, chairman of sponsoring mothers from 47 towns.

Mrs. Alexander H. Ladd Jr., chairman of the advisory committee, had young guests with her as did Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, executive director, Mrs. William. Sweet, Mrs. Carter R. Rowe and Mrs. William Waldron.

Hosts also included Youth Concert officers Henry B. Cabot, Dean John Burchard, John L. Thorndike, Stephen D. Paine, Irving W. Rabb, John Corley Jr., Mrs. Harold D. Ashe, Dr. Frederick Gillis, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Stacy Holmes, Mrs. Charles E. Mason Jr., Mrs. A. H. Ladd Jr., Mrs. William Morton, Mrs. James S. Russell, Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky and Mrs. Frank G. Webster.

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
NOV 6 1961

SMART SET . . . . . By ROSE WALSH

Dame Boston Soiree

A few weeks ago we received an intriguing invitation to a "Soiree honoring Dame Boston," tonight. Of course we're going if for no other reason than to satisfy our curiosity because we don't know who "Dame Boston" is.

What further piqued our curiosity is that the "Dame" is to be introduced by Cleveland Amory. We want to meet him and ask him a few questions about his ideas of Boston in "Who Killed Society?"

MRS. ARTHUR M. BOBRICK, chairman of "Bal Classique," serves coffee to Mrs. Arthur M. Saftel, president of the Volunteer Corps of the Mass. Cancer Detection Clinic dinner-dance, Saturday, Nov. 18, at the Statler-Hilton for the benefit of the clinic.

So after we stop in at Symphony Hall for the opening of a new series of Boston Symphony concerts, conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, we will hustle over to the Oval Room of the Sheraton Plaza and say "how do you do" to Dame Boston.

Remember a while back everyone with a sweet tooth was talking about "Mamie's Fudge." It was a very, very special recipe of Mamie Eisenhower's (not for calorie watchers) and really delicious. Dorothy Cornish, who is a prime worker every year for the Church of the Redeemer (Chestnut Hill) Annual Christmas Market, has that recipe in her pet collection.

She has promised to make several batches for the Market's candy table, always a popular feature of the fair, which is scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 14, 10 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., at the church on Hammond st.

Table decorations for Thanksgiving and Christmas will be on sale along with more attractive "Holiday Glitter" created by Mrs. James W. Moss, Mrs. Ralph Cies and their committee.

Mrs. Cyrus Brewer and Mrs. Frederick T. Ernst have arranged to entertain the children of shoppers at the "Market." Mrs. Robert Tappan, Mrs. Robert S. Fifield and Mrs. Bartlett Harwood are planning the menu for the traditional gourmet lunch which will be served by pretty waitresses from noontime on.

OUR SOURCE of information on the Rev. Joseph McCulloch, who is to be the guest speaker at the meeting of the English-Speaking Union on Wednesday, is the Boston Branch of the Union. We hear that the rector of St. Mary-le-Bow in London is a "rather unconventional parson. His passionate concern is to see the 20th Century Church playing an integral part in industrial democracy in answer to the challenge of Marxism."

His present mission is to convey to the English-speaking world the importance of mingling tradition and innovation in the modern church. St. Mary-le-Bow, with its 900-year history provides a good example of the evolution of the church which he uses as his background.

The lecture is planned for 3:30 at the ESU, 44 Commonwealth ave. Tea will be served at 3 o'clock.

* * *

MRS. LLEWELLYN HOWLAND is opening her Weston estate Thursday evening for a small chamber music concert by four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to benefit The Greater Boston Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy.

Joseph Silverstein, Harry Ellis Dickson, violinists (the latter assistant director of the Boston Pops Orchestra; Eugene Lehner, violinist and Richard Kapuschinski, cellist, will offer a program including the Haydn Quartet, the Brahms Quartet in A minor and the J. S. Bach Violin Sonata No. 3 in C major.

Proceeds (reservations limited to 100 at $10 per person) will be used by SANE to direct efforts away from ineffective civil defense programs; promote creative methods for dealing with the current nuclear threat; to push a permanent cessation of nuclear weapon tests and help strengthen the UN as an instrument for effective international government.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

NOV 6 1961

67

Series Is Sold Out -- What A Surprise

Along with rather splendd trust funds and now and again an excellent wine cellar, Boston Symphony season tickets are willed by prominent Hub families from one generation unto the next.

Thus if you wanted to buy a season ticket for any of the four series, there was only an occasional subscription to be had.

In fact, not since 1925 have season tickets been available for the 2,631 seats in Symphony Hall. So it comes as no surprise that a fifth and new series of Monday nights—opening this evening—is sold out.

While no doubt there are some Bostonians who've been waiting these long years to get a series ticket, one would guess that a great many of the new Monday night subscribers are also new to the land east of Dedham.

Indeed, the high number of "Dr. and Mrs." on the list indicates that the scientific research crowd—a most welcome addition to the Boston scene during the past 10 years — will be well represented.

It's a poignant and wonderful Cinderella story when a cerebral palsied child is able to leave Children's Hospital Nursery School and enter regular nursery school.

Thus it's quite appropriate that the Women's Auxiliary of United CP of Boston is planning a Cinderella Ball. The gala dinner dance will be Saturday night at the Hotel Somerset, with Ruby Newman and his orchestra providing the music.

A lucky Cinderella and Prince Charming will be chosen from among those at the party. Though we're sworn to secrecy, We can reveal that they'll each receive a prize singularly in keeping with their fairy tale counterparts.

Mrs. Byron Schiller of Belmont is chairman of the affair and Mrs. Jean Weinstein of Newton is co-chairman.

Others assisting include Mrs. Harold Rosenthal, Mrs. Kenneth Gordon, Mrs. Samuel Stonberg, Mrs. George Bronstein, Mrs. Selma Axelrod and Mrs. Melvin Levin, all of Newton.

Also Mrs. Eli Fishman, Chestnut Hill; Mrs. Philander Ratzkoff, Brookline; and Mrs. Alvan Jacobson, Belmont.

Proceeds will go to the Cerebral Palsy Unit of Children's Hospital and the Nursery School for cerebral palsied children.

MUSICALE AT LEAGUE HOUSE

The thundering strains of the Warsaw Concerto and the haunting melody of Rhapsody in Blue will ring through the League House, One Arlington St., Thursday afternoon.

Boston Pops pianist Leo Litwin will be soloist at a musicale sponsored by the League of Catholic Women.

Following the concert there'll be a tea, and pourers will be Mrs. Edward F. Flynn and Dr. Catherine P. Lally of Swampscott, Mrs. Raymond W. Hewes, Needham, and Mrs. William L. Graham, Stoneham.

Mrs. Paul Gallagher of Swampscott is chairman of the day, while Mrs. John T. Finnegan of West Roxbury is general chairman of the League House series of social affairs.

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

NOV 9 1961

Smart Set
By Rose Walsh

Symphony Lures All Age Groups

"Three aisles over to your right; two aisles over to your left; Row D the first two seats, first row seats 10 and 11" chanted the busiest usher I have seen in years at t his week's opening of the Monday night Symphony Concerts at Symphony Hall. Another usher told me, "This is a whole new set of concert goers, the regulars know exactly where their seats are. In fact they get a little miffed if you try to direct them."

The evening was a sellout. You know Boston is a music-loving town when you look up to the top balcony of Symphony Hall and see it paeked with a young audience. "Monday is a good night for us to get out," Dr. and Mrs. John Mahoney of Randolph told me. With seven youngsters to get off to bed and last minute instructions to the baby sitter, they didn't quite make the 8:30 beginning and stood with a hundred other late comers (no seating during the firt number) in the lobby during the 14-minute wait.

Dr. Richmond Holder and his attractive wife (also parents of a young family) were among the first nighters as were Robert M. P. Kennard and his attractive daughter, Anne. The college set made up a big part of the audience and I noted a great number of male and female junior executives who have an ear for fine music.

★ ★ ★

WOULD YOU believe it? Dame Boston who made her gracious, stately bow in the Oval Room of the Sheraton Plaza Monday night left the celebrated social historian, Cleveland Amory, author of "The Proper Bostonians" and "Who Killed Society", speechless.

The man who mentions in his latter volume, "If one were a Bostonian, for example, one defined this Society idea by saying that in Philadelphia one asked who a person was, in New York one asked how much he or she was worth, and in Boston one asked what did he or she know," didn't get a chance at his usual sharp ribbing of the Social Register set.

Our first "Dame Boston" — Marge Mills, the popular, talented, friendly newspaper editor, radio and TV "gal" really stole the show. And why not, the gay, entertaining evening of music, dancing and fun was in honor of Marge's 70th anniversary.

Mr. Amory did assist MC Carl deSuze in the presentation of a gold, jewelled bracelet, a gift to the radiant jubilarian from her large circle of Boston friends. And he did whisper a few suggestions as she cut the three-tiered birthday cake wheeled in by stage star Arthur Treacher.

★ ★ ★

AFTER FEASTING on a Pan-American menu Friday, at the sixth Pre-Symphony Luncheon at the Midtown Motor Inn, the concert devotees will listen to Russian - born musicologist Nicolas Slonimsky (an authority on South American music) play a composition by a noted Brazilian composer. Then they will go on their Symphony program of European composers.

★ ★ ★

68

Tuesday Concert

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68

I. Un poco sostenuto; allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; allegro non troppo, ma con brio

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra

RAVEL ..... Piano Concerto for the Left Hand

SOLOIST
VLADO PERLEMUTER
Mr. PERLEMUTER uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
NOV 3 1961

French Pianist Perlmuter In U. S. Debut Here Tuesday

Pianist Vlado Perlemuter will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

He will be soloist in two works: the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct the Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

Mr. Perlmuter, born in France in 1904, received most of his training at the Conservatoire National de Musique de Paris; the Conservatoire awarded him its Medaille, le Prix (classe Alfred Cortot), Prix d'Honneur and Prix Diemer.

Soloist with the Colonne, Pasdeloup, Lamoureux and l'Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, among others, in Europe, Mr. Perlemuter has performed in North Africa, the Near and Far East, and in Canada but not previously in the United States.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 8 1961

Pianist's Debut

MATERIAL UNWORTHY OF GREAT TALENT

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The American debut of the 57-year-old French pianist, Vlado Perlemuter, who appeared as solo performer in the Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, may be accounted a success within limits.

The limits were imposed by the program, not by the artist's talent. Surely the Franck Variations and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand constitute a curious choice in which to display an admirable musicality.

If there are two more superficial items in the repertory than the faded salon graces of the former and the bombast of the latter, one would have to ransack the worst of Chaminade.

Considering Mr. Perlemuter's recordings, those discs in which he has interpreted Mozart, the selection proved disappointing. For this man of medium height, whose roseate face and smooth, silvery hair neatly parted in the middle gives him the aspect, rather, of a benign H. L. Mencken, possesses technique to spare in such a program.

He has strong fingers, a supple and singing tone at every level (particularly above mezzo-forte where his touch remains delicately articulated), a logical dynamic imagination, and fluency and strength of proportion. While his marksmanship was not infallible during the Variations, his sensitive rhythmic sense and his communication never faltered.

In the Left Hand Concerto he emphasized, more properly, an immense technical authority. It was a theatrical performance, but so skillfully modulated that the dramatic assumed a restrained role. Mr. Perelemuter can scamper about the keyboard with the best of the young men, but he has something that comes with dedicated maturity, only. He has poetry and he has depth.

The capacity audience shouted bravos at the close. Alas, one member could only reflect what a pity that such a pianist should have to deal in material unworthy of his great gift.

The Program

Vlado Perlemuter, pianist, made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the second concert of the Tuesday evening series in the 81st season, Charles Munch conducting.

Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68 ..... Brahms
Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra ..... Franck
Piano Concerto for the Left Hand ..... Ravel

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
NOV 6 1961

At Symphony

The French pianist, Vlado Perlemuter, will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening.

He will be soloist in the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. Brahms' Symphony No. 1 will complete the program.

This evening Dr. Munch is conducting the first concert of the orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts. The program will be Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky," "Iberia" by Debussy and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 5 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Pianist Vlado Perlemuter will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening.

Mr. Perlemuter will be soloist in two works: the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct the Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

VLADO PERLMUTER

Perlemuter, born in France in 1904, received most of his training at the Conservatoire National de Musique de Paris; the Conservatoire awarded him its Medaille, le Prix (classe Alfred Cortot), Prix d'Honneur and Prix Diemer.

He was appointed to the Conservatoire faculty in 1928 and re has recently been nominated for a full professorship in piano.

Tomorrow Dr. Munch will conduct the first concert of the Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts. At this concert will be offered Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Debussy, and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

Other musical events this week:

68

Tuesday Concert

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 7, at 8:30 o'clock

BRAHMS.....*Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68

I. Un poco sostenuto; allegro
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
IV. Adagio; allegro non troppo, ma con brio

INTERMISSION

FRANCK.....Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra

RAVEL.....Piano Concerto for the Left Hand

SOLOIST
VLADO PERLEMUTER
Mr. PERLEMUTER uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
NOV 3 1961

French Pianist Perlmuter In U.S. Debut Here Tuesday

Pianist Vlado Perlemuter will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

He will be soloist in two works: the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. At this concert Charles Munch will also conduct the Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

Mr. Perlmuter, born in France in 1904, received most of his training at the Conservatoire National de Musique de Paris; the Conservatoire awarded him its Medaille, le Prix (classe Alfred Cortot), Prix d'Honneur and Prix Diemer.

Soloist with the Colonne, Pasdeloup, Lamoureux and l'Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, among others, in Europe, Mr. Perlemuter has performed in North Africa, the Near and Far East, and in Canada but not previously in the United States.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 8 1961

Pianist's Debut

MATERIAL UNWORTHY OF GREAT TALENT

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The American debut of the 57-year-old French pianist, Vlado Perlemuter, who appeared as solo performer in the Tuesday evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, may be accounted a success within limits.

The limits were imposed by the program, not by the artist's talent. Surely the Franck Variations and Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand constitute a curious choice in which to display an admirable musicality.

If there are two more superficial items in the repertory than the faded salon graces of the former and the bombast of the latter, one would have to ransack the worst of Chaminade.

Considering Mr. Perlemuter's recordings, those discs in which he has interpreted Mozart, the selection proved disappointing. For this man of medium height, whose roseate face and smooth, silvery hair neatly parted in the middle gives him the aspect, rather, of a benign H. L. Mencken, possesses technique to spare in such a program.

He has strong fingers, a supple and singing tone at every level (particularly above mezzo-forte where his touch remains delicately articulated), a logical dynamic imagination, and fluency and strength of proportion. While his marksmanship was not infallible during the Variations, his sensitive rhythmic sense and his communication never faltered.

In the Left Hand Concerto he emphasized, more properly, an immense technical authority. It was a theatrical performance, but so skillfully modulated that the dramatic assumed a restrained role. Mr. Perlemuter can scamper about the keyboard with the best of the young men, but he has something that comes with dedicated maturity, only. He has poetry and he has depth.

The capacity audience shouted bravos at the close. Alas, one member could only reflect what a pity that such a pianist should have to deal in material unworthy of his great gift.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
NOV 6 1961

At Symphony

The French pianist, Vlado Perlemuter, will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening.

He will be soloist in the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. Brahms' Symphony No. 1 will complete the program.

This evening Dr. Munch is conducting the first concert of the orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts. The program will be Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky," "Iberia" by Debussy and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

The Program

Vlado Perlemuter, pianist, made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the second concert of the Tuesday evening series in the 81st season, Charles Munch conducting.

Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68 Brahms
Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra Franck
Piano Concerto for the Left Hand Ravel

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 5 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Pianist Vlado Perlemuter will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening.

Mr. Perlemuter will be soloist in two works: the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct the Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

Perlemuter, born in France in 1904, received most of his training at the Conservatoire National de Musique de Paris; the Conservatoire awarded him its Medaille, le Prix (classe Alfred Cortot), Prix d'Honneur and Prix Diemer.

He was appointed to the Conservateire faculty in 1928 and re has recently been nominated for a full professorship in piano.

Tomorrow Dr. Munch will conduct the first concert of the Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts. At this concert will be offered Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," "Iberia" by Debussy, and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

Other musical events this week:

VLADO PERLMUTER

Vlado Perlemuter's U.S. Debut

French Pianist Acclaimed In Franck and Ravel Works

By Harold Rogers

Although Vlado Perlemuter made his United States debut only last night, his reputation as a distinguished pianist had preceded him several years ago by means of his excellent recordings of Ravel. He is, in fact, a Ravel specialist; and last night the seldom-performed Concerto for the Left Hand was one of the two works in which he was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Perhaps "seldom-performed" is no longer the term appropriate for the Concerto for Left Hand, since Monique Haas played it here last season. But prior to that it was heard in 1934 and again in 1937. It deserves a revival every season or two. Those who wish to possess M. Perlemuter's recording of this work will find it on Vox, PL-9220.

The other piece in which M. Perlemuter appeared last night was César Franck's Symphonic Variations, and in this, as in the Ravel, he had Charles Munch's instant support as an orchestral accompanist. It was obvious at the outset that M. Perlemuter is an ideal concerto man; he has a brilliant attack that neatly cleaves the surrounding orchestral fabric, though both Franck and Ravel wrote so masterly for the piano and orchestra that the two are generally balanced in friendly interplay: they seldom compete.

* * *

But the soloist had far more than mere power; he possesses a bright tone that is susceptible of a great variety of shading. He phrases with true French elegance; the sensitive rise and fall of his dynamics proves him to be an artist—and few there be—who can blend poetry with entertainment in the concerto form. A few minor misses in no way dimmed the beauty of his playing.

Thus the Franck skimmed by with great élan, genial from first to last. The Ravel is a more complex work, not merely technically, as it must obviously be, but emotionally. There is the profound mood of the introduction before the piano enters — could this dark churning restlessness be Ravel's depiction of what a pianist must experience who loses an arm? This, of course, is what happened to Paul Wittgenstein, the pianist who commissioned the work.

* * *

And then the darkness of the introduction seems to lift, as if the pianist were beginning to see a way of pursuing his career in spite of his handicap; and in an orchestral crescendo the light breaks through as the piano makes a stunningly triumphant entry.

The work is further complicated in its emotional context by the combination of this undertone of struggle with certain brilliant jazz effects that fascinated Ravel at that time. He wrote magnificently for the left hand, now with sweep, again with delicate tracery; and M. Perlemuter lifted his listeners to the realm of shouting excitement at its close.

Dr. Munch opened this concert with a deeply satisfying reading of the Brahms First.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
NOV 8 1961

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 7 1961

At Symphony Tonight

Vlado Perlemuter, pianist, will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall this evening at 8:30 o'clock. Mr. Perlemuter will be soloist in two works: the Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra by Franck, and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct the Symphony No. 1 by Brahms.

Mr. Perlemuter, born in France in 1904, received most of his training at the Conservatoire National de Musique de Paris; the Conservatoire awarded him its Medaille, le Prix (classe Alfred Cortot), Prix d'Honneur, and Prix Diemer. Mr. Perlemuter was appointed to the Conservatoire faculty in 1928 and he has recently been nominated for a full professorship in piano. In addition to his teaching in Paris, Mr. Perlemuter has taught at—and is now honorary at—the Conservatoire de la Ville de Lausanne and he has given courses at the Dartington Festival at Dartington, England.

The orchestra will be on tour the week of Nov. 13.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 8 1961

Crespi
Vlado Perlemuter, French pianist, who was soloist last night with the Boston Symphony.

Vlado Perlemuter Makes His American Debut Here

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall last night, the second concert of the Tuesday series. Dr. Charles Munch conducted Brahm's Symphony N. 1, in C minor; the Symphonic Variations by Cesar Franck, and Ravel's Piano Concerto for the Left Hand. The soloist was Vlado Perlemuter, who made his American debut at this concert.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Vlado Perlemuter made his American debut in Symphony Hall, last night, as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the second concert of the Tuesday series. Yet, thanks to the art and science of modern recording, he was not precisely a stranger. The French pianist already was known to many of us on this side of the Atlantic for his Ravel discs. They had indicated an artist of essential musicality and a technician of considerable resource.

So it proved upon first direct acquaintance, last night, especially in Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand. This work, written for Paul Wittgenstein, who lost an arm in the first World War, is quite plainly a tour de force for a player equipped with 10 fingers. The solo part races over the keyboard, and thanks to the cunning of Ravel, soon makes one think that more than a single hand is playing. Thanks to Perlemuter's artistry, it was less this technical aspect than the consideration of the work as a musical entity that made the strongest impression.

Franck's venerable Symphonic Variations had gone quite as well, most musically and expressively. Yet one wondered why something a little less faded than Franck had not been chosen for the occasion, perhaps a concerto of Saint-Saens.

Perlemuter is among those pianists who, equipped with masterful technic, admirably chooses not to try to sound with brilliance. As with Ravel, so with Franck: the performance was notable for avoidance of brilliant effects, for consummate rhythm and for a general "singing" of the solo part and its integration with the orchestral accompaniment. At the end, applause was hearty, liberal and spontaneous. Perlemuter is an artist we should like to hear again.

The evening began with Brahms' C minor Symphony, more notable for pervasive zest than for mellow style. Dr. Munch did it well enough, but his conducting of Franck and Ravel was decidedly more authoritative.

70

First New York Tour

Storrs, Conn.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 6,005

NOV 9 1961

Munch At UConn . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday, Nov. 13, at 8:15 p.m.

Mr. de Pasquale, one of the youngest violists to hold a "first seat" in a major orchestra when he joined the BSO in 1947, will play "Harold In Italy," by Berlioz. He performed the same work in his solo debut with the Boston orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitsky.

Dr. Munch, who retires as the Boston orchestra's music director at the end of the 1961-62 season, will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," and Haieff's "Symphony No. 3."

Ticket information may be obtained from the university.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
MANCHESTER, Conn.
Circ. 12,756

NOV 8 1961

As You Like It

By JUDITH AHEARN

Two affairs come up this week and two at the end of the month, to brighten life in Manchester. Friday and Saturday nights, the Community Players will perform the comedy about New York City's ladies garment industry, "The Fifth Season." The show will be in Whiton Library Auditorium at 8:30 o'clock. Saturday night the Danish Gym Team will perform in Manchester High School's Bailey Auditorium at 8 o'clock. The team of 16 men and women is sponsored by the Manchester Lions Club.

Sunday, Nov. 26, the Manchester Civic Orchestra will give the first concert of its season in Bailey Auditorium.

On the program are Mozart's 3rd Concerto for French Horn and Orchestra, with Barry Benjamin of the Hartford Symphony as soloist; Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 by Bach, Symphony No. 8, the Unfinished Symphony, by Schubert; the prelude to "Le Deluge" by Saint-Saens; and Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav."

Wednesday, Nov. 29, the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra will play at Bailey Auditorium in the first of the Manchester Community Concert series, open to members only.

Movies

"Make Mine Mink" is the special movie Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. in the State Theater's series of six shows. With it will be "Piano Encore" and "Carribean Playground."

"Splendor in the Grass' with Natalie Wood and Warren Beatty opens at the State today. While the quality of the acting is somewhat uneven, as well as the story thread itself, there are some surprisingly excellent scenes in the show.

Burgess to Direct

Phil Burgess Sr., president of the Manchester Little Theater, will direct the group's next show, "The Women," to be presented Feb. 8, 9 and 10. The cast has 35 women. Tryouts will be announced next week.

Competition Deadline

Student musicians planning to enter competition for the $1,000 Aetna Life music scholarship in connection with Hartford Symphony Orchestra's 1962 TV concert series must apply by Friday.

Music supervisors at Connecticut public, parochial and private secondary schools, as well as music schools and private music teachers, have been invited to nominate students for the scholarship competition.

Applications should be submitted to Hartford Symphony headquarters at 609 Farmington Ave., Hartford.

Worthy of Note

Robert Cohan, a former star dancer with the Martha Graham troupe, will give a master lesson tonight at the University of Connecticut's Hawley Armory at 7 o'clock.

Betty Allen, young Negro mezzo-soprano, will sing with the Hartford Symphony orchestra in its second subscription concert Wednesday evening, Nov. 15, at Bushnell Memorial. Miss Allen will sing the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and the Prokofieff "Alexander Nevsky" with the entire symphony chorale and the orchestra.

Professor George H. Cohen, a nationally recognized painter, is giving first "one-man show" at the University of Connecticut's new Fine Arts Center Gallery now through Nov. 21.

"Spanish Main Adventure," a travel movie in color narrated by Col. John D. Craig, will be shown at the Bushnell Memorial Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"The Rivals" opened last night at the University of Connecticut in the Little Theater at 8 p.m., to be played through Saturday.

The fourtennth annual Institute of Contemporary American Music will be presented by Hartt College of Music of the University of Hartford Sunday and Monday in the college's main auditorium, 187 Broad St. The first two concerts will be Sunday at 3:30 p.m. and 7:45 p.m. On Monday a symposium on "The Electronic Production of Music" will begin at 10:30 a.m., with the third concert scheduled for 8:30 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday at 8:15 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088

NOV 3 1961

Boston Symphony to Give Concert at UConn Nov. 13

Special to the Hartford Times

Storrs — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Nov. 13 at 8:15 p. m.

Dr. Munch, who helped dedicate the university's auditorium when it opened in 1955, will be returning for his last appearance at Storrs as music director of the Boston Symphony.

Mr. De Pasquale, one of the youngest violists to hold a "first seat" in a major orchestra when he joined the symphony in 1947, will play "Harold in Italy," by Berlioz.

Trained by his father, Mr. De Pasquale studied under the celebrated William Primrose. During World War II, he appeared with the U. S. Marine Corps Orchestra and performed at White House state dinners for such distinguished guests as Winston Churchill and Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

Dr. Munch, who retires as the orchestra's music director at the end of the 1961-62 season, will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," and Haieff's "Symphony No. 3."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,997

NOV 10 1961

Musical Events

Gilbert and Sullivan's "HMS Pinafore" at the Bunnel High School in Stratford, November 10 - 11.

Second Candlelight Concert, featuring Joseph Silverstein, violinist, at 4 p.m. at the Wilton Congregational Church on November 12.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Charles Munch, retiring conductor, at the University of Connecticut at Storrs on November 13, and at Woolsey Hall, Yale University, New Haven, on November 14.

At the Julius Hartt School of Music, 187 Broad Street, Hartford, Institute of Contemporary American Music Concerts at 3:30 p.m. and 7:45 p.m. on November 12; Richard Provost, classic guitar recital at 8:30 p.m. on November 20; and College Band Concert at 8:30 p.m. on November 21.

At Bushnell Memorial Hall 166 Capitol Avenue, Hartford November 15, Hartford Symphony Orchestra; November 18 Annual Parade of Barber Shop Quartets; and November 21 Bellini's "Norma," starring Blanche Thebom.

Barber Shop Quartet Festival for the benefit of the Trumbull High School Scholarship Fund at the high school on November 17.

Episcopal Church Choir Festival at St. John's Church, New Milford, on November 19.

Connecticut Symphony Orchestra Concert, conducted by Gregory Millar, with Nan Merriman, mezzo - soprano, as guest, at 3:30 p.m. at the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre in Stratford on November 19.

Norwalk Symphony Orchestra with the Women's Chorus of Darien and the solo choristers of Southport's Trinity Church at the Norwalk High School auditorium on November 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 27,703

NOV 6 1961

for the meeting.

BOSTON SYMPHONY AT UCONN NOV. 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday, Nov. 13 at 8:15 p.m.

Dr. Munch, who helped dedicate the university's auditorium when it opened in 1955, will be returning for his last appearance at Storrs as music director of the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Stafford Press
STAFFORD SPRINGS, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 1,800

NOV 9 1961

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday (Nov. 13) at 8:15 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 97,860

NOV 8 1961

Boston Symphony At Storrs Monday

STORRS, Conn. — Charles Munch will make his last appearance at University of Connecticut as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Monday evening at the auditorium.

Dr. Munch, who has announced his retirement at the end of the 1961-62 season, helped dedicate the auditorium in 1955.

Featured on the program Monday will be viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale performing Berlioz' "Harold in Italy."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 6,771
NOV 15 1961

Capacity Audience For Symphony Concert At Storrs Monday Night

The Boston Symphony presented a program on Monday night in the Albert N. Jorgensen Auditorium at the University of Connecticut which was as good in the second half as it was bad in the first. The programs of this great orchestra have on previous occasions found wanting in proper balance and this concert did not greatly change the situation.

The evening opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky. This appeared as a sincere work in proper keeping with the dedication. The performance was sensitive, and the orchestra was in good form sounding both clear and crisp.

The second work of the evening was the Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff which the program notes indicated was completed in March 1961. This appeared to be a series of sounds arranged in three movements, and quite lacking in the traditional definition of music as consisting of melody, harmony, and rhythm.

The first movement was akin to what has been termed as "piddling" music consisting of an organized collection of notes scattered among the various instruments of the orchestra.

The second movement was quiet but not pleasant, while the third movement was— A further search for adjectives would serve little purpose. This writer did question the applause, even though polite applause, at the conclusion, wondering why American audiences applaud everything, whether such audiences are hypocritical; or, perhaps,whether the applause was for the conclusion of the composition.

Perhaps a more generous attitude should be taken. Perhaps the composer did have something to say and this writer did not get the message. If so, he was not alone in the audience.

It is a real pleasure, at this point, to turn to a very positive position in this review. The second half of the program consisted of Hector Berlioz' "Harold in Italy", which has been described as a symphony in four movements with viola solo, with the principal violist of the orchestra, Joseph de-Pasquale, performing the solo part.

The orchestra has never performed better for its director, Charles Munch, in any previous [illegible] and the playing and interpretation of this compos[illegible] once.

As a rule, "Harold in Italy" sounds much better in a recording than in actual performance, due to the fact that the solo viola is frequently submerged in a sea of orchestral sound in the concert hall, whereas in a recording the microphones can give the solo instrument a proper balance.

It was to the credit of Dr. Munch that he controlled the orchestra at all times on Monday evening to allow the violist to compete on even terms, and De-Pasquale met the demands of his part admirably.

According to Berlioz' own account, the composition of this work owes its origin to the great violin virtuoso,Paganini. Berlioz was requested by Paganini to write a work for "a marvelous viola, an admirable Stradivarius" which he wished to play in public.

In conceiving the work, Berlioz made use of the Byron's idea of a poet travelling in Italy after the manner of Byron's Childe Harold. Other than this the music has little to do with Byron's text, and the music critic Tovey speaks of Berlioz' "encyclopaedic inattention" to the poem.

The work is in four movements, each one bearing a descriptive title: (1) Harold in the Mountains, (2) March of the Pilgrims, (3) Serenade of a Mountaineer of the Abrizzi to his Mistress, and (4) Orgy of the Brigands.

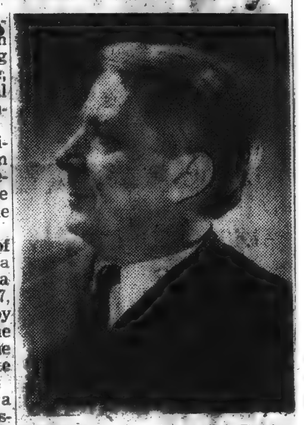
From beginning to end, the performance was a sheer delight. The running pizzicato of the bass viols in the second movement maintained the march with a steady tread, and the viola arpeggio accompaniment, so frequently never heard over the orchestra, came forth clearly over the subdued orchestral theme.

This was Munch's final program at Storrs in his position as music director of the Boston Symphony; he is scheduled to retire from his present post at the conclusion of the current season. Since Munch has long been known for his interpretations of Berlioz, it was most fitting that a work of this composer should have been performed to conclude the evenings's program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle (e)
WILLIMANTIC, Conn.
Circ. 6,771
NOV 10 1961

Munch's Last Season

Boston Symphony Gives UConn Concert Monday



STORRS — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at The University of Connecticut Monday at 8:15 p.m.

Dr. Munch, who helped dedicate the University's Auditorium when it opened in 1955, will be returning for his last appearance at Storrs as music director of the Boston Symphony.

Meanwhile, de Pasquale, one of the youngest violists to hold a "first seat" in a major orchestra when he joined the BSO in 1947, will play "Harold in Italy", by Berlioz. He performed the same work in his solo debut with the Boston orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Trained by his father, also a professional musician, de Pasquale studied under the celebrated William Primrose. During World War II, he appeared with the U. S. Marine Corps Orchestra and performed at White House State dinners for such distinguished guests as Winston Churchill and Gen. Charles De Gaulle.

Dr. Munch, who retires as the Boston orchestra's music director at the end of the 1961-62 season, will conduct Hanson's "Elegy for My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," and Haieff's "Symphony No. 3."

Since the great conductor joined the Boston ensemble 13 years ago, he has commissioned many new works by such great moderns as Barber, Copland, Milhaud, Sessions, Bernstein and von Einem, and has made an indelible impression on the music world.

Although a sell out is expected for Dr. Munch's farewell performance, seats are still available in the first balcony and orchestra of the Auditorium. Tickets may be obtained by mail order only. Checks should be payable to the University and mailed to the A. N. Jorgensen Auditorium Box Office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322
NOV 5 1961

Boston Symphony To Play At UConn

(Special to The Republican)

STORRS — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch and featuring viola soloist Joseph de Pasquale, will perform its seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday, Nov. 13, at 8:15 p. m.

Dr. Munch, who helped dedicate the university's auditorium when it opened in 1955, will be returning for his last appearance at Storrs as music director of the Boston Symphony.

Meanwhile, Mr. de Pasquale, one of the youngest violists to hold a "first seat" in a major orchestra when he joined the BSO in 1947, will play "Harold in Italy," by Berlioz. He performed the same work in his solo debut with the Boston orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitzky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen
COLCHESTER, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 550
NOV 9 1961

At UConn Monday

The Boston Symphony, under the baton of Charles Munch will perform the seventh annual concert at the University of Connecticut Monday. Gerald Gelbloom, formerly of Colchester, joined the symphony this summer.

Also taking place at the university, a one man show of paintings and colleges will be held at the Arts Center Gallery Monday, Nov. 6 through Nov. 21. The artist is George H. Cohen, professor of design and painting at Smith College.

72

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
NOV 12 1961

New Haven.

Boston Symphony Will Be Here Tuesday For Second Program In Woolsey Series

Charles Munch (inset) will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night in Woolsey Hall.

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will be here on Tuesday evening to give the second program in the Woolsey Series. Charles Munch will conduct this first of two concerts which the orchestra is scheduled to give here this season as customary. From recent announcements it is generally known that this season's concerts will mark the last appearances here of Dr. Munch and concertmaster Richard Burgin, both of whom will be leaving the orchestra at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival.

The reign of conductor Munch, though only about half as long as that of his illustrious predecessor, Serge Koussevitsky, has nonetheless been significant and productive. The Boston Symphony has maintained its reputation and world-wide prestige as "one of the finest." And recently, the orchestra's new 50-week season, the longest of any privately supported orchestra in the world, heralded the realization of the cherished goal of all orchestral musicians.

Since Mr. Munch took over the helm 13 years ago, the Boston Symphony has received many honors and awards both here and abroad. Here is a partial listing: Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards (to compositions introduced to New York by the orchestra); two American International Fund Awards; nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. Dr. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for the orchestra's recording of Debussy's Images.

Three concert tours abroad in the past 10 years have added many thousands to the orchestra's large following in this country. Dr. Munch took the Boston musicians on European tours in 1952 and 1956. On the latter, the orchestra enjoyed the distinction of being the first western symphonic ensemble to perform in the Soviet Union. On the last tour in 1960, the orchestra spent eight weeks in the Far East, giving concerts in Japan, Taiwan, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand.

Like his immediate predecessor, the present Boston conductor has been an avid exponent of the music of our time and chalked up an impressive number of "first performances." American composers such as Harvard's Walter Piston and Julliard's William Schuman, among many others, are grateful to Dr. Munch and the orchestra for works commissioned and premiered by the Bostonians. A dozen or so new works, containing a generous complement by American composers, was commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Orchestra and the overall record established during the Munch tenure is most impressive. The list includes some 48 U. S. premieres, 32 world premieres, and performed works by 31 American composers.

Concertmaster Burgin, whom we will also miss next season, has held the post longer than any previous incumbent. Joining the orchestra some 40 years ago and first serving under the baton of Pierre Monteux, Burgin has served through the entire reigns of Koussevitsky and Munch. While he will not be found in his long familiar place, he will continue his connection with the orchestra as an associate conductor.

The program which the Bostonians will offer in Tuesday's concert will be typical, which is to say that at least one work will be in the modern category. This is to be the Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky (Op. 44), by Howard Hanson. The other two works are to be Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2) and the Symphony No. 1 of Brahms.

• • •

An organ recital in Battell Chapel tomorrow evening (8:30) is the first of two events scheduled this week for Yale Music School degree candidates. The young organist, Mary Frances Ross, will be heard in an all-Bach program. A native of Marion, North Carolina, Miss Ross is studying with Frank Bozyan.

The second event is scheduled for Friday evening (8:30) in Sprague Hall. This will be a program of original compositions by James Hopkins, to include a violin sonata, a string quartet, and pieces for orchestra. Hopkins, a pupil of Quincy Porter, is a native of Pasadena, Calif.

Both of these events are open and free to the public.

• • •

Another free public event is a lecture-recital to be given at the Neighborhood Music School by Martha Blackman on Wednesday at 8 p.m. A new member of the school's faculty this year, Miss Blackman will discuss the literature of the viola de gamba and perform a number of works from the repertory of that older instrument. The program is to be given in connection with the regular course in Early Music inaugurated at the Neighborhood Music School last year by Joseph Iadone.

A graduate of both the American Conservatory in Chicago and Northwestern University, Miss Blackman is a recognized performer on the cello as well as the gamba. A former member of the New York Pro Musica, the celebrated ensemble with which she recently played in Sprague Hall, Miss Blackman is presently in demand for solo appearances and performances with a number of chamber music groups.

• • •

The New Haven Chapter of the Connecticut Music Teachers Association will hold its next meeting on Nov. 28 instead of the date originally scheduled. Members will meet in the building which houses the Yale Collection of Musical Instruments (15 Hillhouse Ave.) to hear curator Robert Conant. The program will also include several haprsichord selections by the speaker. The meeting is scheduled for 8 p. m.

• • •

We will have our first opportunity to hear the Yale Glee Club after its successful goodwill tour of South America this past summer in the singers' joint concert with the Harvard Glee Club on Nov. 24 in Woolsey Hall. Tickets for the event are on sale at David Dean Smith's Loomis's, the Yale Co-op, and Hendrie Hall.

Fenno Heath will conduct the offerings by the Yale singers. Of special interest to listeners will be two works completed recently by the highly talented young Yale conductor. These are an arrangement of a popular spiritual and a musical setting of three poems by William Blake. Music especially prepared for the club's recent tour are also to be included in the program. The Whiffenpoofs will be around, of course, to entertain in their inimitable fashion.

• • •

The Campus Theater Players of Albertus Magnus College will present four performances of the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, "Carousel," commencing on Friday of this week and extending through Monday, Nov. 20. All of the performances, with the exception of next Sunday's matinee at 2:30 p. m, will be given in the evening at 8:30 at the college.

The entire production will be supervised and directed by Maxine Schlingman, associate professor of speech at Albertus Magnus.

• • •

Briefs . . . The Artisans will sponsor a program by H. Leroy Baumgartner, organist, and Mrs. Lou Coleman, soprano, next Sunday evening (5-7) at the Church of the Redeemer. The public is invited . . . Gregory Millar is to be the guest conductor of the Connecticut Symphony Orchestra's second concert next Sunday afternoon (3:30) at the Shakespeare Festival Theater in Stratford. The soloist will be soprano Nan Merriman . . . The accomplished young Madison violinist, Paul Rosenthal, will be the soloist with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 100,394
NOV 15 1961

BRAHMS' WORK SCORES HIT AT WOOLSEY HALL

The Boston Symphony made its first visit of the season to Woolsey Hall Tuesday evening. Charles Munch conducted a program which, despite the usual inclusion of a contemporary piece, found general favor with listeners in this second event of the Woolsey series. Such is not invariably the case!

Much of the modern music which the Bostonians have introduced here over the years has been more endured than admired by many listeners. But nobody can deny that the orchestra's penchant for new music hasn't added spice and novelty to its programs. And surely any conductor and orchestra are to be commended for espousing the cause of the composers of our time. In this respect, Dr. Munch has followed in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, who was an enthusiastic exponent of contemporary music. So it is to be hoped that this policy of long standing will continue after the present conductor's retirement next year.

The new work in this program was commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the Boston Symphony and first performed by the orchestra in 1956. Commissioned jointly by the orchestra and the Koussevitzky Foundation, its title is self explanatory—"Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," by Howard Hanson. Dr. Munch also conducted the work in a memorial concert at the Berkshire Music Festival last summer.

The most conservative music devotee can accept the Elegy which is, in fact, closer to 19th century romanticism than 20th century dissonance. The orchestra set forth its lyricism and flowing line with gentle fervor and with a surging intensity in building up to the larger sonorities. The music's decline from the final climax to the hushed closing was most impressive. It seemed to say "Requiescat in pace."

Following this opening work, came Debussy's Iberia ("Images" No. 2). Though this music is somewhat "old-hat" at this late date, since it was composed in 1910, actually is could be considered the most modern offering in the program. In any case, its ingenious harmonic and rhythmic conceptions, clothed in orchestral colorings hardly exceeded by Ravel, found the orchestra in its best "Spanish style."

The final offering, Brahms' Symphony No. 1, has never received a more enthusiastic reception here. And this even though the performance was something less than the usual "tour de force" which the orchestra makes of the work. This is not to say that there was any lack of dramatic impact or the virtuosic approach—quite the contrary! But Mr. Munch exercised more restraint with regard to tempos and concentrated his efforts on expressive details in a straightforward if masterful reading. This was a memorable exhibition of the Boston Symphony at its "finest hour"—in the Brahms anyway! (G. E. A.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 100,394
NOV 14 1961

Boston Symphony To Give Woolsey Concert Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make the first of its two annual appearances here tonight as the second offering of the current Woolsey Hall Series under the auspices of the Yale School of Music.

Charles Munch, musical director of the famed 110-piece symphonic body, has arranged a notable program for the occasion. The evening of great music will open with Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44, continue with Debussy's Iberia ("Images," No. 2), and conclude with the Brahms Symphony in C minor, No. 1, Op. 68.

Tonight's concert will mark the first of the two final appearances of Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Woolsey Hall. He retires at the end of next summer's series at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Tonight's performance will commence at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933
NOV 14 1961

Boston Group To Perform At Woolsey Tonight

Marking the second event of the current Woolsey Hall Series under the auspices of the Yale School of Music, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Woolsey Hall tonight. The performance will be under the baton of Charles Munch, music director of the nted 110-piece symphonic organization. Munch retires at the end of this season, so this will be his next to last New Haven appearance on the podium here.

Tonight's program will consist of three fine selections. Howard Hanson's "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" will be the opening work, to be followed by Claude Debussy's "Iberia," ("Images," for Orchestra) No. 2. The closing piece will be the beautiful Symphony in C minor, No. 1, Op. 68, by Johannes Brahms.

The performance will begin at 8:30.

Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
SAT NOV 25 1961

Betty Beale's Washington

Empty Kennedy Box Stirs Indignation At Constitution Hall

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25. — If the camera could but capture the moods and emotions of one week in the nation's capital—the indignation of the concert audience in Constitution Hall when they saw that the only empty box for the visiting performance of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra was No. 13, the Presidential box.

The President was away when Charles Munch brought Mr. Kennedy's home city symphony to Washington. President Assistant Ted Sorensen had been eager to take his family; accompanied by brother and sister, he drove to Friendship Airport to whisk his mother off the plane from Lincoln Nebr., straight to Constitution Hall. But her plane was an hour and a half late so they never made it.

Betty Beale

* * *

GIAN CARLO MENOTTI rhapsodizing about that White House Casals concert: "It is the first time Americans have really shown they are above Europe culturally. Nowhere in Europe today can you have an evening like this. . . . The roles have changed. English royalty is entertaining movie stars while the American President is entertaining a world-famous musician."

* * *

PAUL HENRI SPAAK, Belgium's experienced and able foreign minister, explaining animatedly to Secretary of State Rusk at the elegant Belgian embassy dinner in Mr. Spaak's honor the position of Belgium in the strife-torn Congo. . . . As for doing the same thing before the U.N. Security Council, he had his fingers crossed. He even demonstrated by crossing his third finger over his forefinger and then rubbing them up and down on the bridge of his nose. The noserubbing with crossed fingers, the famed foreign minister said with deadpan humor, was supposed to be especially effective in bringing good luck.

* * *

FRIENDS of Speaker Sam Rayburn attending the memorial service for him at the Washington Cathedral and thinking dejectedly how unlike Mr. Sam that his personal friends should be seated in the back while all the rank was ushered up front.

Asked last summer how he felt about being moved up from fourth to third place (above the Chief Justice) in the federal order of precedence, Mr. Sam replied, "I never worried about where I sat; it was what I had to listen to that bothered me." . . . His sturdy, broad-shouldered figure will be much missed from the Washington social scene where he always remembered people, always clicked, always brushed aside the sham.

* * *

EBULLIENT, outspoken Gen. James Van Fleet fairly bouncing with pleasure at the Korean embassy reception for Korea's head of the military junta, Gen. Chung Hee Park. "This is the finest thing that has happened to Korea in a thousand years. . . . I know these boys. They fought under me. . . ." he showed the gold signet ring on the little finger of his right hand. "This is the ring of the group who pulled it (the coup) off. They made me an honorary member."

Secretary of Defense and Mrs. Robert McNamara gleefully acquiring a Washington house of their own after 10 months of searching. This means he will now have to do something about a bomb shelter which he was smilingly asked about at a press conference after Civil Defense was put under his wing. . . . At the time he truthfully replied that he couldn't do anything to someone else's house which he was leasing. But now that he has property of his own?

"He is certainly going to be adequately prepared," said his wife. "His theory and the theory of the Defense Department is to use what you have and build around it." They intend to plan and stock a shelter in the basement of the Spanish style six-bedroom house in fashionable Kalorama Heights, where they will move the middle of January.

* * *

ALTHOUGH the Twist may well have African origins, diplomats from African nations are picking it up here. . . . Little Mrs. Konan Bedie, wife of the Ivory Coast ambassador, confided on her fellow wives that she had learned the Twist by watching it on a TV program at 4 in the afternoon. She planned to surprise her husband with it when he returned from a trip, hoping he would think she had acquired her dexterity at Washington nightclubs.

RARE COMBINATION: Two wives of the Kennedy administration, Mrs. Newton Minow, wife of the FCC chairman (left), and Mrs. Arthur Schlesinger, wife of the Presidential assistant, are pictured at a private film showing with Edward Bennett Williams, Jimmy Hoffa's lawyer.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NEWS
D. 179,314 SAT. 145,807
NOV 9 1961

LAST SEASON — Charles Munch, who is returning in the spring, will conduct the Boston Symphony at Constitution Hall next Thursday at 8:30 p. m. in Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky; Debussy's Iberia and Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Munch, Boston Men, In Pre-Finale

By Paul Hume

From week to week as this symphony season progresses, the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be playing one or another famous work for the last time under the direction of Charles Munch.

Hume

The celebrated conductor has announced his resignation for the end of the season, and his replacement, Erich Leinsdorf, already has been named.

An orchestra is wholly altered when a change in conductors occurs. The Boston Symphony today is almost totally different from the instrument it grew to be under Serge Koussevitsky and it is certain at this moment not only that it will change, but how it will change under Leinsdorf.

At the moment it is Munch's creation in tone and playing style, at least to the degree that he has been able to command, cajole, or wheedle its players to conform to his thought. This was apparent in three different ways in the three works on last night's program.

Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitsky, opened the evening in a mood of golden sound, and a quiet, sustained line of dated music that quotes from the composer's own Romantic Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Isle of the Dead, and, indirectly, a good many other scores intimately associated with Koussevitsky. Here the orchestra was docile, pouring out radiant tone, molding phrases as their conductor outlined them, in simple, supple forms.

Debussy's Iberia is a masterpiece of subtleties. Much of its beauty is in the realm of half-lights, suggested rhythms, evanescent timbres that gleam for an instant, and are gone. Munch restrains any thought of the whip here, turning one brilliant facet after another to our ears. And again, his orchestra was responsive in the highest degree.

To the First Symphony of Brahms, one of his favorite scores, Munch brings the same amount of intense concentration that marks his Debussy or some new work. He feels the Brahms message profoundly.

It happens that he feels it in a very personal way, one that is not always indicated in Brahms' notation or markings. When, as in the case of the outer movements of the symphony, this persuades Munch to use frequent adjustment of the tempo, in both directions, it requires the utmost attention, agreement and devotion from the orchestra to follow with complete fidelity.

Last night, it may have been agreement that was missing, but there were ragged times when unison passages were not of one mind and when the slowing down and speeding up process did not occur at the same rate throughout the affected choirs.

The inner movements of the symphony were eloquent, with many details of the most refined elegance. The solos that dot the work, notably those for oboe, flute, horn, and violin, were given with incredible beauty.

Finally, in the chorale of the coda, Munch held the tempo firmly in place, and the closing pages were superb.

Every seat in Constitution Hall was occupied, and the audience refused to wait until the music was over before it burst into applause.

Orchestra and conductor return, for the last time, next April.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NEWS
D. 179,314 SAT. 145,807
NOV 17 1961

Munch&Boston Stir Ovation

Charles Munch, who is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony, was at Constitution Hall last night for the first of two Washington concerts with the orchestra.

But if the capacity audience had its way, as demonstrated by its applause, Mr. Munch would stay around for many more years.

After the performance of Debussy's Iberia, a work which both Mr. Munch and the Boston do to perfection, the conductor was called back for four bows before the audience would let him go for intermission.

And after the Brahms Symphony No. 1, with its overpowering climax, there was a standing ovation.

Altho Mr. Munch's Brahms encompasses a smaller canvass than, say, Bruno Walter's or Von Karajan's, it still has great appeal. The sheer beauty of the Boston Symphony's tone insures that.

Washington will hear Mr. Munch and the orchestra again on April 5. It would be smart to get tickets for this his final appearance here as the head of this great orchestra as soon as possible.

74

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 273,405 S. 310,373
NOV 17 1961

EXCLUSIVELY YOURS

By BETTY BEALE

Social Scene Not the Same Devoid of Beloved Mr. Sam

It is difficult to imagine the Washington social picture forever devoid of the strong-faced, broad-shouldered, sturdy figure of Sam Rayburn.

He was that rare and lovable combination of blunt honesty and kindliness, an unbending tower of political strength filled with the supple warmth of humane regard for his fellow men.

He was a great man with too much humility and too much humor to be carried away by his own greatness. This was easily apparent on the social scene. He always remembered people, always clicked, always brushed aside the sham.

He usually said what he thought which made him an unusual asset on a party, though he was not the easiest man to trap socially. When he went to big parties, he either did it for the sake of his country or to please a friend, but he so loved the company of politically minded companions and oldtime intimates he probably never had a lunch or dinner alone.

A typical comment from Mr. Sam was his reply to someone who asked him last summer how he felt about being moved up to third place in the Nation's order of precedence. "I never worried about where I sat," said Mr. Rayburn, "it was what I had to listen to that bothered me."

Such an honest approach was never characteristics of the diplomatic world, yet it was a diplomat who ob served, "For us he was th best that is America."

For Americans he was among the best loved of patriots.

* * * *

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE Robert McNamara has finally bought a Washington house, which makes two things apparent. 1) He can do something about a bomb shelter which he was smilingly asked about at a press conference after Civil Defense was put under his wing. And 2) It is obvious that he is not one of those businessmen who plans to keep his cabinet post for a mere two years because that is all the "sacrifices" he can afford from his lucrative job.

He and his wife could have renewed the lease on the Herbert Faleses' house on Kalorama circle, but the day before the deadline they signed the contract on the purchase of the late Gen. and Mrs. William D. Connor's house at 2412 Tracy place.

A comfortable size for the McNamara family, it is a Spanish style house with four bedrooms on the second floor and two on the third. "It has a delightful terrace in back with a garden planted with beautiful azaleas and dogwood," said Margie McNamara. They expect to move in by the middle of January by which time they hope to have modernized the kitchen and done some repainting and renovating.

Will the Secretary of Defense build a bomb shelter now that he has property of his own? "He is certainly going to be adequately prepared," said his wife. "His theory and the theory of the Defense Department is to use what you have and build around it." They are going to plan and stock a shelter in the basement but as yet they haven't even had time to decide in which part of the basement they will put it.

* * * *

THE AMBASSADOR OF IRAN Ardeshir Zahedi gave a 7:30 reception and supper last evening in honor of Vice Admiral Farajollah Rassai, Commander of the Imperial Iranian Navy. The very agreeable admiral, who speaks four languages plus better English than you'll find one American in a thousand speaking Persian, is here at the invitation of our Chief of Naval Operations George Anderson.

Actually, Admiral Anderson's invitation was proffered by his predecessor, Arleigh Burke, because these things are arranged considerably in advance. They have to be, because it is Navy policy to invite all the heads of navies of friendly countries at the rate of one a month to come here and get a bolstering look at our defenses. During the tenure of one United States Chief of Naval Operations, it wouldn't be possible to get around to them all.

Asked if he kept some of his fleet in the Caspian Sea, Admiral Rassail replied that he did. "Why," he was asked, "to keep the Russians from stealing your caviar?" "As a matter of fact that is the reason," said Ambassador Zahedi, who said that since Iran nationalized its caviar industry and took the concession away from the Russians (so-called Russian caviar has always come from the Iranian side of the Caspian) the Soviets had made various attempts at counter measures.

But is is not just Persian sturgeon the Soviets are after Moscow Radio began this week to openly urge the people of Iran to revolt against the Shah. In addition they may have produced enough radiation from their nuclear tests to affect the caviar so the Persians can't sell it to Europe and America. A leading Persian scientist thinks the Caspian waters should be tested to determine if the sturgeon have been contaminated. It would be ironic if they have been, for the Soviets who still buy one-third of the Persian caviar, would lose their favorite food with vodka.

* * * *

ACROSS THE TOWN:—Charles Munch took seven curtain calls at the close of the Boston Symphony's magnificent concert last evening. As the bravos rang out at the end of Brahms' First Symphony, one wondered why no one at all was sitting in the presidential box. The President is away but he has a large culture-loving cabinet and White House staff.

Chilean Ambassador and Mrs. Muller will be guests of honor at the "Baile de Navidad" which means Christmas Ball, at the Kennedy-Warren on December 8.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
TUE NOV 7 1961

Music Notes

American music will be included in both of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's opening New York concerts of the season under Charles Munch's direction at Carnegie Hall. Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3, in its first performance here, and Howard Hanson's "Elegy" are scheduled for Wednesday night, Nov. 15, and Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" will be played Saturday afternoon, Nov. 18.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
NOV 26 1961

REPRISE

COMPOSERS: Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony was "a very interesting work" and Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" was "a generous homage from one fine musician to another." They were introduced by the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch.

165 Church Street — New York

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 273,405 S. 310,373
NOV 17 1961

NEWS OF MUSIC

Sell-Out Audience Hears Bostonians

By DONALD MINTZ
Contributing Critic

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor. At Constitution Hall. Program: Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky, Op. 44, Hanson; Iberia (No. 2 of Images,) Debussy; Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, Brahms.

Charles Munch, now in his last season as music director of the Boston Symphony, brought his orchestra to Constitution Hall last night, and the enormous place was completely sold out. Why?

Not sheer love of music, to be sure, for if that were the case the auditorium would be packed far more often. No, I think it is the old magic of the big three of the orchestral world, New York, Philadelphia and Boston, in any order you please.

The monopoly has long since been broken by other orchestras, but the legend that these ensembles are incomparable and invincible is perhaps hardier than the objects of the legend themselves.

Of course, the Boston Symphony is one of the world's great orchestras. It has a great, luscious tone, a tone that is very beautiful for its own sake. But this tone has its drawbacks too, for at times it puts a heavy, impenetrable gloss on the surface of the sound, and one can't hear through to the middle.

And it puts a limitation on the dynamic range of the orchestra for great volume tends to roughen tone while a genuine pianissimo thins it and there is a clear tendency to avoid these extremes.

Dr. Munch's Debussy playing is justly famous. Last night's performance of Iberia had an easy familiarity that comes only from deep knowledge. Oddly, it also seemed tame, and lacking in verve.

During the evening there except in the last movement, were a few ugly lapses of intonation, and the second movement of Iberia, especially the last moments, suffered rather badly from them.

The Brahms symphony received a heroic performance. How could this work be played otherwise? But there is a clear split among conductors, between those who emphasize the intricate motivic relationships that unify the entire symphony and those who prefer to play it less analytically.

Dr. Munch belongs to the latter group, and his reading was a superb example of the type. It seems to me that some climaxes are less clear in this kind of performance than they are in the analytic variety. On the other hand, Dr. Munch's approach avoids the curious distortions of natural orchestra sound that are inevitable if one seeks to lay bare the deepest secrets of the architecture.

It was certainly not a perfect concert, and perhaps it was not a great one. But it was very good indeed and not even the most captious critic would want to deny the justice of the great salvo of applause that broke in on the last chord of the Brahms.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 836 760 S. 1,195 553
THU NOV 9 1961

76th Season at Carnegie Hall

Charles Munch, who retires this season as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director, will open the orchestra's 76th consecutive season of New York concerts at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday evening and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 18.

The Wednesday program—the 701st Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in New York—will include the first New York performance of the Symphony No. 3 by Alexei Haieff. The concert will include "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky," and the Brahms Symphony No. 1.

The Saturday concert will consist of "Quiet City—for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn" by Aaron Copland, Debussy's "Iberia" and the Symphony No. 6 by Tchaikovsky.

New York

75

Jun Miki

CONDUCTORS FAREWELL SEASON—Charles Munch, on the podium, now in his final year with the Boston Symphony, will direct the orchestra in New York and Brooklyn this week in its first concerts of the season.

MUSIC WORLD: 1-2-3 SPLASH FOR NEW HALL

By ROSS PARMENTER

WHEN Philharmonic Hall opens at Lincoln Center next fall it will do so with a 1-2-3 splash. The New York Philharmonic, under Leonard Bernstein, will give the first concert on Sept. 23, the Boston Symphony will play the next night and the Philadelphia Orchestra the night after. And each of the concerts by America's orchestral prides will be doubly special.

They will be special because they will be in advance of, and in addition to, the orchestras' regular subscription concerts. And they will be special because of the nature of the programs. Each orchestra plans to bring something big out of its sleeve. The Boston, for instance, plans to present the world première of the piano concerto that Samuel Barber is working on now.

This is Barber's first major piano work since his Piano Sonata of 1949. In view of the success of the sonata, there will be considerable advance excitement over the concerto, especially since it is Barber's first concerto for this particular instrument. John Browning is the pianist the composer has selected to introduce the work. The concert will be Erich Leinsdorf's first New York appearance in his new role as the Boston Symphony's music director.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

NOV 12 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are out of town this week to present concerts at the University of Connecticut, New Haven, Washington, Brooklyn and at Carnegie Hall, New York.

The Carnegie Hall programs—the 701st and 702nd Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in New York—will open the Orchestra's 76th consecutive season of New York appearances.

Dr. Munch will be on vacation following this tour and until Dec.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU NOV 16 1961

Music

All Eyes On Big 3 Of Boston

The names of three conductors were on everybody's mind at the first local concert this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night.

There was Charles Munch who is conducting his farewell season with the orchestra and for whom there was a warm greeting on his entrance last night.

There was the thought of Eric Leinsdorf, who has been appointed Mr. Munch's successor.

'Elegy' by Hanson.

And there was the memory of Mr. Munch's predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, as expressed in the opening number of the program, an "Elegy" by Howard Hanson.

The ::Elegy," written in Mr. Hanson's recognizable vein of personal intensity, is the heartfelt tribute of a composer who revered Koussevitzky as conductor and friend.

Also featured last night was a local premiere of the Third Symphony of the Siberian-born Alexei Haieff, a composer who has identified himself strongly with the America of his adoption.

Daring in Structure.

The symphony is spare and terse in idiom, somewhat jumpy, and made up of almost as many pauses as notes. There is daring here in structure and rhythm, but discomfort too.

If Mr. Haieff could do a little more with the Andante, the two halves of which are an exact mirror of each other, he might give us one of the best slow movements in American music.

Mr. Munch gave the novelty a tightly controlled reading. The program ended with Brahms' First Symphony.

L.B.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
NOV 19 1961

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLAYS 'QUIET CITY'

Copland Work Is Revived in Homage to Koussevitzky

The touch of nostalgia noted at the Boston Symphony's first Carnegie Hall concert on Wednesday night lingered during the orchestra's second appearance of the season there yesterday afternoon.

Charles Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," the work of a composer much played and respected by the late Serge Koussevitzky, and appropriately revived on this tenth anniversary of the conductor's death.

Time has been kind to this fragrant work, which was treated with loving care. The English horn and trumpet solos were beautifully played by Louis Speyer and Roger Voisin, and the strings surrounded their efforts with the famous Bostonian glow.

Mr. Munch continued with Debussy's "Ibéria." This is of the kind of music in which he has few peers among conductors, and the performance was superb. Once again the orchestra produced sounds that accorded perfectly with the composer's vivid coloristic sense.

It was in the performance of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" Symphony that nostalgia came particularly to the fore, however. Mr. Munch's performances of this work in the past have been admirably straightforward, but on this occasion he chose to let the bung out. Tempos were rashly retarded or whipped up, dynamics were stressed out of proportion.

This was "Koussie's" way with this music, and one could almost see the old Doctor on the podium telling his men (as he once did), "when Tchaikovsky writes 'ppp' or 'fff' it's only because he didn't have space to write 'ppppppp' or 'fffffff.'" Whatever end results, this approach may have produced in days of yore, the symphony seemed unnecessarily coarse yesterday.

ALAN RICH.

76

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590

THU NOV 16 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians in Last Carnegie Opening

The Boston Symphony began its 76th season here last night saying officially, goodbye not au revoir to its home since 1898. This will be the orchestra's final opening in Carnegie Hall; it moves to Lincoln Center in 1962. And it was music director Charles Munch's farewell N. Y. curtain-raiser as head of the orchestra. His retirement has been announced as of next season when he will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, at present music consultant and conductor with the Metroplitan Opera.

No matter what enticements the future holds, changes invite reflection and evaluation, and Munch's leadership last night didn't disburse the dynamic excitement for which he is celebrated. He conducted with detachment as if his heart weren't really in the job. Many attacks were raggedy (the winds especialy so) and the projection of the music, particularly in the Brahms Symphony No. 1, with which the program closed, was soporific.

Elegy for Koussevitzky

The somber aspects of the evening were heightened by the nature of the program itself, which began with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," and continued with the first local performance of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony.

Hanson's threnody, lasting almost 20 minutes, sounded like a pacified slice out of Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung." Siegfried's "Rhine Journey" had been slowed up and transferred to the peaceful English countryside. While there were moments of melodic beauty, this is not one of Hanson's best works. It is repetitious without justification.

Haieff's short symphony in three movements was about the length of Hanson's "Elegy," but though it offered more contrast, it is barren music. The Andante, subtitled Narcissus, because the second part is an exact mirror reflection of the first, suggests the contrived quality of the Symphony as a whole.

Nemesis Punished Narcissus

Just as Nemesis punished Narcissus by having him pine away over love of his own reflection in a spring, so it appears that Haieff in his symphony is subconsciously castigating himself by falling in love with his musical devices.

When employed to convey high emotion, devices are invaluable, but worthless when they become ends in themselves, as in the case of this symphony.

Munch's interpretation was labored, as if he were forcing himself to produce an energetic rendition. Haieff was present to acknowledge the applause from the stage.

In the final pages of the Brahms the music picked up vitality, but by this time a perverse thought was inescapable: Munch appeared glad to have arrived at the home stretch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

NOV 19 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

FRI NOV 17 1961

Music: Boston Symphony Is Heard

Orchestra Conducted by Charles Munch

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THE Boston Symphony came to town Wednesday night, giving its first Carnegie Hall concert of the season. In some respects the event was packed with nostalgia. Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is retiring after this season. The program also held a reminder of the late Serge Koussevitzky, dead ten years, who for such a long time headed the orchestra.

The work in question was Howard Hanson's "Elegy" in memory of the conductor. Mr. Hanson's "Elegy" was composed for the seventy-fifth-anniversary of the orchestra and had its première in 1956. It is flowing and dignified, with echoes of Wagner and Sibelius (the latter was one of Koussevitzky's favorite composers), and it is the serious homage from one fine musician to another.

•

Alexei Haieff's recently completed Third Symphony received its first New York performance. It is a very personal three-movement work, about twenty minutes long, that one would gladly like to hear again. Sections of it are a bit puzzling. The idiom itself is traditional, in that dissonance is not pronounced and harmonies stem from a tonal center. But the treatment itself is anything but traditional.

Elements of Stravinsky and the dodecaphonists enter into the writing, though never in a sense that is derivative. Mr. Haieff has his own language in this symphony and he does not rely on anybody else. The first movement has thematic fragments thrown around in an intense, enigmatic manner. On the other hand, the middle section of the slow movement has an unusually pronounced, long-phrased melody.

In this slow movement, Mr. Haieff is having his little joke. The latter part is a mirror reflection of the first: everything goes backward and upside down. There is nothing really new in this procedure, which dates back to Bach. Hindemith has written a whole opera in this manner ("Hin und Zurueck"), and the twelve-tone composers use it all the time.

•

It is to Mr. Haieff's credit that, using so intellectual a device, he still has created a movement that has a strong emotional feeling about it.

Like most composers, he is economical of his themes. The symphony is interlocked, with motifs coming up everywhere in various guises. It cannot be said that the symphony made an overwhelming impression. The applause was rather lukewarm. But nonetheless, Mr. Haieff has composed a very interesting work, and the feeling here is that with repetition it will grow and grow.

The ever-present Brahms First ended the program. At this stage of the game there is nothing one can say about the symphony, and little that can be said of Mr. Munch's conducting of the score. He has done it many times in the past, and on this occasion there were no surprises. Tempos, as always, tended to be just a shade fast. This was a French, not a German, Brahms. It can be said, though, that Mr. Munch paid more attention to detail than he has been known to do in the past, and the interpretation was clean, logical and fine-textured.

Karsh, Ottawa

Charles Munch

Hanson's 'Elegy' to Koussevitzky Given

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. At Carnegie Hall.

Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky ..... Hanson
Symphony No. 3 (first New York performance) ..... Haieff
Symphony No. 1 in C minor ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 644,175

NOV 20 1961

Munch Leads Boston Symphony In Copland's 'Quiet City' Here

The touch of nostalgia noted at the Boston Symphony's first Carnegie Hall concert on Wednesday night lingered during the orchestra's second appearance of the season there Saturday afternoon.

Charles Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," the work of a composer much played and respected by the late Serge Koussevitzky, and appropriately revived on this tenth anniversary of the conductor's death.

Time has been kind to this fragrant work, which was treated with loving care. The English horn and trumpet solos were beautifully played by Louis Speyer and Roger Voisin, and the strings surrounded their efforts with the famous Bostonian glow.

Mr. Munch continued with Debussy's "Ibéria." This is of the kind of music in which he has few peers among conductors, and the performance was superb. Once again the orchestra produced sounds that accorded perfectly with the composer's vivid coloristic sense.

It was in the performance of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" Symphony that nostalgia came particularly to the fore, however. Mr. Munch's performances of this work in the past have been admirably straightforward, but on this occasion he chose to let the bung out. Tempos were rashly retarded or whipped up, dynamics were stressed out of proportion.

This was "Koussie's" way with this music, and one could almost see the old Doctor on the podium telling his men (as he once did), "when Tchaikovsky writes 'ppp' or 'fff' it's only because he didn't have space to write 'ppppppp' or 'fffffff.'" Whatever end results, this approach may have produced in days of yore, the symphony seemed unnecessarily coarse yesterday.

ALAN RICH.

Hub Symphony, Copland

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) — When the Boston Symphony played Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" in its second New York concert of the season recently, it was the 184th time since 1925 the Bostonians had performed Copland.

New Symphony

This long-standing love affair between a major orchestra and a living composer goes to show performing musicians are not to be blamed for any neglect of contemporary music. When given even minor signs of public approbation, they go for the new.

The Boston orchestra this season is featuring a brand new symphony of the contemporary, Alexei Haieff, his third. It is the winner of the 1961 Horblit award. The first performance was in Boston Nov. 10, the second in New York last Wednesday.

Haieff, like Copland, is a composer in touch with today's moods, outlooks and aspirations. He is not an exhibitor of technical twists which at best are of only academic interest to musical audiences. His musical commentaries on life and living have clear application.

This is Charles Munch's last season as the Boston's music director and conductor. He is retiring to the less strenuous role of a guest conductor of the world's symphony orchestras, in view of his mounting years.

Signalizing the occasion in a quiet way, he paid tribute to his predecessor by programming Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky." This is the piece Munch and the orchestra commissioned five years ago.

The current featured soloist of the New York Philharmonic is the pianist, Fou Ts'Ong who made his American debut with the Cincinnati symphony Nov. 10. He is a Chopin specialist and anyone who expected an artist named Fou to provide unique insights into that Polish composer was disappointed.

Fou was preceded to America by his phonograph records which revealed a Chopin pianist completely steeped in the Chopin tradition, which can't be considered any wonder because he studied in the Warsaw Conservatory and won an important prize there in 1955.

The orchestra now is in the midst of its third post-war American tour, and there were only a few protests because the Israelf pianist, David Bar-Illan will play with it in its third New York concert next Wednesday. Bar-Illan could ignore them, and has.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000

NOV DEC 1961

Leonard Bernstein was elected to the National Institute of Arts and Letters. . . . Aaron Copland received a Doctor of Music degree from Harvard University recently. . . . Time Cycle for soprano and orchestra by Lukas Foss received the 1961 New York Music Critics' Award. . . . Richard Franko Goldman was the recipient of the 1961 Columbia University-Alice M. Ditson Conductors Awards. . . . Alexei Haieff's Concerto for Piano and Symphony No. 2 won the 1961 Boston Symphony Merit Award.

76

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
THU NOV 16 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Bostonians in Last Carnegie Opening

The Boston Symphony began its 76th season here last night saying officially, goodbye not au revoir to its home since 1898. This will be the orchestra's final opening in Carnegie Hall; it moves to Lincoln Center in 1962. And it was music director Charles Munch's farewell N. Y. curtain-raiser as head of the orchestra. His retirement has been announced as of next season when he will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, at present music consultant and conductor with the Metropolitan Opera.

No matter what enticements the future holds, changes invite reflection and evaluation, and Munch's leadership last night didn't disburse the dynamic excitement for which he is celebrated. He conducted with detachment as if his heart weren't really in the job. Many attacks were raggedy (the winds especialy so) and the projection of the music, particularly in the Brahms Symphony No. 1, with which the program closed, was soporific.

Elegy for Koussevitzky

The somber aspects of the evening were heightened by the nature of the program itself, which began with Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," and continued with the first local performance of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony.

Hanson's threnody, lasting almost 20 minutes, sounded like a pacified slice out of Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerting." Siegfried's "Rhine Journey" had been slowed up and transferred to the peaceful English countryside. While there were moments of melodic beauty, this is not one of Hanson's best works. It is repetitious without justification.

Haieff's short symphony in three movements was about the length of Hanson's "Elegy," but though it offered more contrast, it is barren music. The Andante, subtitled Narcissus, because the second part is an exact mirror reflection of the first, suggests the contrived quality of the Symphony as a whole.

Nemesis Punished Narcissus

Just as Nemesis punished Narcissus by having him pine away over love of his own reflection in a spring, so it appears that Haieff in his symphony is subconsciously castigating himself by falling in love with his musical devices.

When employed to convey high emotion, devices are invaluable, but worthless when they become ends in themselves, as in the case of this symphony.

Munch's interpretation was labored, as if he were forcing himself to produce an energetic rendition. Haieff was present to acknowledge the applause from the stage.

In the final pages of the Brahms the music picked up vitality, but by this time a perverse thought was inescapable: Munch appeared glad to have arrived at the home stretch.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
FRI NOV 17 1961

Music: Boston Symphony Is Heard

Orchestra Conducted by Charles Munch

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THE Boston Symphony came to town Wednesday night, giving its first Carnegie Hall concert of the season. In some respects the event was packed with nostalgia. Charles Munch, the orchestra's musical director, is retiring after this season. The program also held a reminder of the late Serge Koussevitzky, dead ten years, who for such a long time headed the orchestra.

The work in question was Howard Hanson's "Elegy" in memory of the conductor. Mr. Hanson's "Elegy" was composed for the seventy-fifth anniversary of the orchestra and had its première in 1956. It is flowing and dignified, with echoes of Wagner and Sibelius (the latter was one of Koussevitzky's favorite composers), and it is the serious homage from one fine musician to another.

•

Alexei Haieff's recently completed Third Symphony received its first New York performance. It is a very personal three-movement work, about twenty minutes long, that one would gladly like to hear again. Sections of it are a bit puzzling. The idiom itself is traditional, in that dissonance is not pronounced and harmonies stem from a tonal center. But the treatment itself is anything but traditional.

Elements of Stravinsky and the dodecaphonists enter into the writing, though never in a sense that is derivative. Mr. Haieff has his own language in this symphony and he does not rely on anybody else. The first movement has thematic fragments thrown around in an intense, enigmatic manner. On the other hand, the middle section of the slow movement has an unusually pronounced, long-phrased melody.

In this slow movement, Mr. Haieff is having his little joke. The latter part is a mirror reflection of the first: everything goes backward and upside down. There is nothing really new in this procedure, which dates back to Bach. Hindemith has written a whole opera in this manner ("Hin und Zurueck"), and the twelve-tone composers use it all the time.

•

It is to Mr. Haieff's credit that, using so intellectual a device, he still has created a movement that has a strong emotional feeling about it.

Like most composers, he is economical of his themes. The symphony is interlocked, with motifs coming up everywhere in various guises. It cannot be said that the symphony made an overwhelming impression. The applause was rather lukewarm. But nonetheless, Mr. Haieff has composed a very interesting work, and the feeling here is that with repetition it will grow and grow.

The ever-present Brahms First ended the program. At this stage of the game there is nothing one can say about the symphony, and little that can be said of Mr. Munch's conducting of the score. He has done it many times in the past, and on this occasion there were no surprises. Tempos, as always, tended to be just a shade fast. This was a French, not a German, Brahms. It can be said, though, that Mr. Munch paid more attention to detail than he has been known to do in the past, and the interpretation was clean, logical and fine-textured.

Karsh, Ottawa

Charles Munch

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. At Carnegie Hall.

Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky ..... Hanson
Symphony No. 3 (first New York performance) ..... Haieff
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor ..... Brahms

Hanson's 'Elegy' to Koussevitzky Given

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
NOV 19 1961

Hub Symphony, Copland

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) — When the Boston Symphony played Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" in its second New York concert of the season recently, it was the 184th time since 1925 the Bostonians had performed Copland.

New Symphony

This long-standing love affair between a major orchestra and a living composer goes to show performing musicians are not to be blamed for any neglect of contemporary music. When given even minor signs of public approbation, they go for the new.

The Boston orchestra this season is featuring a brand new symphony of the contemporary, Alexei Haieff, his third. It is the winner of the 1961 Koussevitzky award. The first performance was in Boston Nov. 10, the second in New York last Wednesday.

Haieff, like Copland, is a composer in touch with today's moods, outlooks and aspirations. He is not an exhibitor of technical twists which at best are of only academic interest to musical audiences. His musical commentaries on life and living have clear application.

This is Charles Munch's last season as the Boston's music director and conductor. He is retiring to the less strenuous role of a guest conductor of the world's symphony orchestras, in view of his mounting years.

Signalizing the occasion in a quiet way, he paid tribute to his predecessor by programming Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky." This is the piece Munch and the orchestra commissioned five years ago.

The current featured soloist of the New York Philharmonic is the pianist, Fou Ts'Ong who made his American debut with the Cincinnati symphony Nov. 10. He is a Chopin specialist and anyone who expected an artist named Fou to provide unique insights into that Polish composer was disappointed.

Fou was preceded to America by his phonograph records which revealed a Chopin pianist completely steeped in the Chopin tradition, which can't be considered any wonder because he studied in the Warsaw Conservatory and won an important prize there in 1955.

The orchestra now is in the midst of its third post-war American tour, and there were only a few protests because the Israeli pianist, David Bar-Illan will play with it in its third New York concert next Wednesday. Bar-Illan could ignore them, and has.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 644,175
NOV 20 1961

Munch Leads Boston Symphony In Copland's 'Quiet City' Here

The touch of nostalgia noted at the Boston Symphony's first Carnegie Hall concert on Wednesday night lingered during the orchestra's second appearance of the season there Saturday afternoon.

Charles Munch began the program with Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," the work of a composer much played and respected by the late Serge Koussevitzky, and appropriately revived on this tenth anniversary of the conductor's death.

Time has been kind to this fragrant work, which was treated with loving care. The English horn and trumpet solos were beautifully played by Louis Speyer and Roger Voisin, and the strings surrounded their efforts with the famous Bostonian glow.

Mr. Munch continued with Debussy's "Ibéria." This is of the kind of music in which he has few peers among conductors, and the performance was superb. Once again the orchestra produced sounds that accorded perfectly with the composer's vivid coloristic sense.

It was in the performance of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" Symphony that nostalgia came particularly to the fore, however. Mr. Munch's performances of this work in the past have been admirably straightforward, but on this occasion he chose to let the bung out. Tempos were rashly retarded or whipped up, dynamics were stressed out of proportion.

This was "Koussie's" way with this music, and one could almost see the old Doctor on the podium telling his men (as he once did), "when Tchaikovsky writes 'ppp' or 'fff' it's only because he didn't have space to write 'ppppppp' or 'fffffff.'" Whatever end results, this approach may have produced in days of yore, the symphony seemed unnecessarily coarse yesterday.

ALAN RICH.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
NOV DEC 1961

Leonard Bernstein was elected to the National Institute of Arts and Letters. . . . Aaron Copland received a Doctor of Music degree from Harvard University recently. . . . Time Cycle for soprano and orchestra by Lukas Foss received the 1961 New York Music Critics' Award. . . . Richard Franko Goldman was the recipient of the 1961 Columbia University-Alice M. Ditson Conductors Awards. . . . Alexei Haieff's Concerto for Piano and Symphony No. 2 won the 1961 Boston Symphony Merit Award.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
MIRROR
D. 312 258 SAT. 286,617
NOV 17 1961

RAYMOND KENDALL

Hendl Offers Varied Fare

Walter Hendl began a three-week stint as guest conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra on Thursday night in the Philharmonic Auditorium. His program was a varied and interesting one, his soloist, the American pianist Leon Fleisher.

Vaughan Williams' "Variations on a Theme of Thomas Tallis" was the opening work, and it is a work not only to show off the full string section of a symphony orchestra to advantage; it is well wrought and inspired as well.

KENDALL

It was only a sense of responsibility which impelled Leon Fleisher to fulfill his commitment to play the Mozart C major Piano Concerto (K.303). He was suffering from a virus infection, so I am told, and was barely able to play. This was certainly an exercise in self-discipline, for while everything did not go well, it was in no way a shabby performance.

There was noticeable dynamic and rhythmic unevenness as well as some lack of clarity in the long parallel sequences in the development, but these should be forgiven under the circumstances.

A firm sense of musical architecture was still evident, while the opening of the slow movement could hardly have been improved upon.

★ ★

SO FAR AS I can tell, Thursday night's audience heard the first Los Angeles performance of Hindemith's "Symphonia Serena," commissioned by the Dallas Symphony and first performed by that orchestra in 1947.

It is a strong and vigorous work, with the characteristic contrapuntal and tonal idioms of which Hindemith never tires. Soloistic treatment of two violins, two violas and the piccolo are a challenge to these instruments, and first-chair men Frisina, Igelman, Schonbach, Hlinka and Stevens did themselves proud.

If the woodwind scherzo and double string choir "Colloquy" sound familiar, it is primarily because they are so intensely idiomatic for these instruments. The traditional first movement and the satirical finale have the same patina of excellence as Hindemith's "Harmonie der Welt" or "Mathis der Maler."

★ ★

IT IS AN OLD axiom that the best Spanish music has been written by Frenchmen. Debussy's "Iberia" is no exception. Though he visited Spain but once, and briefly, Debussy caught the nostalgic flavor of the warm land south of the Pyrenees; translated it into exotic sound.

Walter Hendl made efficient use of his rehearsal time this week, and turned out a very good concert. He knows his business, and generally gets the results he seeks.

★ ★

ON WEDNESDAY night I heard the first New York concert this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. This is the Boston ensemble's 81st season; its 76th in New York.

Munch programmed Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" (Op.44), the first New York performance of Haieff's Third Symphony, and the Brahms First Symphony.

Hahson's Elegy is not as much of a monochrome as the Boston made of it, but there was the expected refinement of sound, even if it was not full of much-needed contrasts.

Haieff's Symphony is given over to too much soloistic treatment, with a doffed hat to middle-period Stravinsky at nearly every turn.

Strongest movement is the first; the Andante wanders about in the 12-tone thicket, and the finale never gets off the ground.

But as usual, the Boston Orchestra has given another new work a hearing, and this is important.

★ ★

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON NOV 20 1961

MUSIC

Week-End Events

A compilation of reviews by Francis D. Perkins, Martin Bernheimer, John Gruen and Judith Robison

The Boston Symphony Orchestra chose a safe, audience-oriented program (Copland, Debussy and Tchaikovsky) for the first matinee of its New York season on Saturday. The playing was on such a high level, however, that one almost welcomed the ham-and-eggs diet.

The only departure from the standard repertory was "Quiet City," a sparse yet agreeably monochromatic tone poem by Aaron Copland. Charles Munch may not be the most versatile of conductors, but he does certain things extraordinarily well, and Debussy's "Iberia" is one of them. And what a pleasure it is to observe a maestro who can extract optimum expression and precision from his men without emoting on the podium, and without the benefit of choreography! This was even more gratifying in Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique," which made its points minus an overabundance of drippy — or droopy — pathos. Munch made no attempt to tone down the bombastic qualities; it was a manly yet mellow performance.

M. B.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D 678 802 S 812 836
THU NOV 16 1961

AT CITY CENTER

Brilliant Show By Mazowsze

By MILES KASTENDIECK

MAZOWSZE BROUGHT AN ENTRANCING song and dance show to City Center last night. Short of artifice and bravado but brimful of joyousness and vitality, this Polish company whipped up enthusiasm quickly and sustained it through sheer genuineness in two relays of short, colorful numbers.

Named after the region of central Poland around Warsaw, Mazowsze (pronounced mahzoff-shuh) presents a composite program selected by the boys and girls of the company (all of them between 18 and 25). The numbers are about as unspellable and unpronounceable as the names of the performers themselves.

Aside from traditional dancing, much of which might be described as in the round, the show has the most disarming array of costumes to fill the eye with kaleidoscopic colors. Some of them are literally breath-taking.

• • •

Beauty Galore

So, for that matter, are some of the girls. As pretty a lineup of natural beauty has rarely been presented here. With handsome, dashing young men as partners, they make an exceptionally good-looking company. Their exuberance is infectious, and their performance quite winning.

Some familiar dances like the Polka, the Polonaise, and inevitably the Mazurka, and some familiar songs are almost points of departure. With one or two somewhat fantastic native musical instruments for variety (one of them to be seen to be believed). They range from the simple to the intricate with no attempt at brilliant showmanship. Interestingly enough the show needs none.

Most of the music is by the late Tadeusz Sygietynski, founder of the company with his wife, Mira Ziminska-Sygietynska, the present artistic director. They have created a remarkably homogeneous show that should draw capacity audiences steadily to City Center during the three-week engagement. Go!

• • •

Bostonians Begin

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony began Munch's last season with the orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night. The program offered two contemporary works balanced by the Brahms First Symphony.

Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" set a somber, albeit sincere mood at the start, not dispelled by the scherzo movements of Haieff's Symphony No. 3 heard in its first New York performance.

It remained for a rugged masterpiece like the Brahms to raise the spirits of the audience.

Haieff wrote the second movement of his symphony first. It is the best of the three, possibly because it sounds the most unified. An invenious scheme to create the second half as a mirror reflection of the first comes out successfully until the final measures. Beauty and communication ex-

165 Church Street — New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI NOV 17 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 ..... Hanson
Symphony No. 3 (First N. Y. performance) Haieff
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68 Brahms

By Paul Henry Lang

The Boston Symphony's first concert of the season offered a novelty, Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony. The most we can say about the work is that it is an elegant trifle and, at least for a while, easy to hear. Mr. Haieff writes with the air of a man who has had a good idea and is determined to make us appreciate it, too. There is a perky, rather jaunty manner, which wears well in the first movement, but it soon becomes tedious. Although the composer uses all manner of contrapuntal artifices—this is the good idea—he shows more response to the charm of the picturesque, to the glitter and sophisticated miniature work of the middle-period Stravinsky, than to musical realities of a substantial kind.

This sort of thing goes well enough in fast movements; Mr. Haieff is an accomplished orchestrator and is well equipped with compositional skills. But the slow movement immediately betrays the real defects of that too-conscious mild modernism that has sprouted all over the West as a result of Stravinsky's tremendous attraction. These composers cannot create a simple slow movement because their mind works staccato and is incapable of introspection, therefore in an adagio or andante they elaborate a situation or mental state whose quality or pathos is already sufficiently obvious.

The new symphony was the best played work on the evening's program; it was obviously well rehearsed and Charles Munch brought a nice virtuoso touch to the fireworks. I hasten to say, though, that Mr. Haieff's fireworks are rather delicate and not at all bombastic.

The rest of the program did not fare so well. Surely

Charles Munch, conductor.

Howard Hanson's tribute to his departed colleague. "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," contains more nuances than Mr. Munch allowed in his performance. There was very little between a nice piano and a clangorous forte.

Brahms' First Symphony started alarmingly with a kettledrum solo that simply turned the tables on the composer. The timpani are there to mark the massiveness of the rather ponderous beginning of this work, but with their insistent pounding they only succeeded in siphoning away the listener's attention from the evolving musical substance. This symphony is often opaque, it needs a very acute sense for corrective balancing of the orchestra, otherwise it becomes muddy and congested. Well, it was both; and in addition Mr. Munch's tempos were slow.

Perhaps by tomorrow, when the next concert comes along, the Bostonians will be in better form.

at it, yet it did not take hold of this listener last night.

Orchestral pallor and soft textures rob the other movements of saliency. Though plenty of lively rhythms keep them moving, some stretches are long because colorless and others mostly busy. They did not reach the audience on first hearing, though it applauded the composer with respect.

Munch brought out fully the heartfelt emotion written into Hanson's elegiac piece which ends like a benediction. He worked conscientiously through the Haieff, but could not work up the performance where the composer had not supplied the incentive. The Bostonians sounded good but uninspired in this work.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
MIRROR
D. 312,258 SAT. 285,617
NOV 17 1961

RAYMOND KENDALL

Hendl Offers Varied Fare

Walter Hendl began a three-week stint as guest conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra on Thursday night in the Philharmonic Auditorium. His program was a varied and interesting one, his soloist, the American pianist Leon Fleisher.

Vaughan Williams' "Variations on a Theme of Thomas Tallis" was the opening work, and it is a work not only to show off the full string section of a symphony orchestra to advantage; it is well wrought and inspired as well.

KENDALL

It was only a sense of responsibility which impelled Leon Fleisher to fulfill his commitment to play the Mozart C major Piano Concerto (K.503). He was suffering from a virus infection, so I am told, and was barely able to play. This was certainly an exercise in self-discipline, for while everything did not go well, it was in no way a shabby performance.

There was noticeable dynamic and rhythmic unevenness as well as some lack of clarity in the long parallel sequences in the development, but these should be forgiven under the circumstances.

A firm sense of musical architecture was still evident, while the opening of the slow movement could hardly have been improved upon.

* *

SO FAR AS I can tell, Thursday night's audience heard the first Los Angeles performance of Hindemith's "Symphonia Serena," commissioned by the Dallas Symphony and first performed by that orchestra in 1947.

It is a strong and vigorous work, with the characteristic contrapuntal and tonal idioms of which Hindemith never tires. Soloistic treatment of two violins, two violas and the piccolo are a challenge to these instruments, and first-chair men Frisina, Igelman, Schonbach, Hlinka and Stevens did themselves proud.

If the woodwind scherzo and double string choir "Colloquy" sound familiar, it is primarily because they are so intensely idiomatic for these instruments. The traditional first movement and the satirical finale have the same patina of excellence as Hindemith's "Harmonie der Welt" or "Mathis der Maler."

* *

IT IS AN OLD axiom that the best Spanish music has been written by Frenchmen. Debussy's "Iberia" is no exception. Though he visited Spain but once, and briefly, Debussy caught the nostalgic flavor of the warm land south of the Pyrenees; translated it into exotic sound.

Walter Hendl made efficient use of his rehearsal time this week, and turned out a very good concert. He knows his business, and generally gets the results he seeks.

* *

ON WEDNESDAY night I heard the first New York concert this season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. This is the Boston ensemble's 81st season; its 76th in New York.

Munch programmed Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" (Op.44), the first New York performance of Haieff's Third Symphony, and the Brahms First Symphony.

Hahson's Elegy is not as much of a monochrome as the Boston made of it, but there was the expected refinement of sound, even if it was not full of much-needed contrasts.

Haieff's Symphony is given over to too much soloistic treatment, with a doffed hat to middle-period Stravinsky at nearly every turn.

Strongest movement is the first, the Andante wanders about in the 12-tone thicket, and the finale never gets off the ground.

But as usual, the Boston Orchestra has given another new work a hearing, and this is important.

* *

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON NOV 20 1961

MUSIC

Week-End Events

A compilation of reviews by Francis D. Perkins, Martin Bernheimer, John Gruen and Judith Robison

The Boston Symphony Orchestra chose a safe, audience-oriented program (Copland, Debussy and Tchaikovsky) for the first matinee of its New York season on Saturday. The playing was on such a high level, however, that one almost welcomed the ham-and-eggs diet.

The only departure from the standard repertory was "Quiet City," a sparse yet agreeably monochromatic tone poem by Aaron Copland. Charles Munch may not be the most versatile of conductors, but he does certain things extraordinarily well, and Debussy's "Iberia" is one of them. And what a pleasure it is to observe a maestro who can extract optimum expression and precision from his men without emoting on the podium, and without the benefit of choreography! This was even more gratifying in Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique," which made its points minus an overabundance of drippy — or droopy—pathos. Munch made no attempt to tone down the bombastic qualities; it was a manly yet mellow performance.

M. B.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D 618,802 S. 812,836
THU NOV 16 1961

AT CITY CENTER

Brilliant Show By Mazowsze

By MILES KASTENDIECK

MAZOWSZE BROUGHT AN ENTRANCING song and dance show to City Center last night. Short of artifice and bravado but brimful of joyousness and vitality, this Polish company whipped up enthusiasm quickly and sustained it through sheer genuineness in two relays of short, colorful numbers.

Named after the region of central Poland around Warsaw, Mazowsze (pronounced mah-zoff-shuh) presents a composite program selected by the boys and girls of the company (all of them between 18 and 25). The numbers are about as unspellable and unpronounceable as the names of the performers themselves.

Aside from traditional dancing, much of which might be described as in the round, the show has the most disarming array of costumes to fill the eye with kaleidoscopic colors. Some of them are literally breath-taking.

* * *

Beauty Galore

So, for that matter, are some of the girls. As pretty a lineup of natural beauty has rarely been presented here. With handsome, dashing young men as partners, they make an exceptionally good-looking company. Their exuberance is infectious, and their performance quite winning.

Some familiar dances like the Polka, the Polonaise, and inevitably the Mazurka, and some familiar songs are almost points of departure. With one or two somewhat fantastic native musical instruments for variety (one of them to be seen to be believed). They range from the simple to the intricate with no attempt at brilliant showmanship. Interestingly enough the show needs none.

Most of the music is by the late Tadeusz Sygietynski, founder of the company with his wife, Mira Zimińska-Sygietyńska, the present artistic director. They have created a remarkably homogeneous show that should draw capacity audiences steadily to City Center during the three-week engagement. Go!

* * *

Bostonians Begin

CHARLES MUNCH and the Boston Symphony began Munch's last season with the orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night. The program offered two contemporary works balanced by the Brahms First Symphony.

Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" set a somber, albeit sincere mood at the start, not dispelled by the scherzo movements of Haieff's Symphony No. 3 heard in its first New York performance.

It remained for a rugged masterpiece like the Brahms to raise the spirits of the audience.

Haieff wrote the second movement of his symphony first. It is the best of the three, possibly because it sounds the most unified. An ingenious scheme to create the second half as a mirror reflection of the first comes out successfully until the final measures. Beauty and communication ex-

165 Church Street - New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI NOV 17 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL
Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44 ..... Hanson
Symphony No. 3 (First N. Y. performance) ..... Haieff
Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68 ..... Brahms

By Paul Henry Lang

The Boston Symphony's first concert of the season offered a novelty, Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony. The most we can say about the work is that it is an elegant trifle and, at least for a while, easy to hear. Mr. Haieff writes with the air of a man who has had a good idea and is determined to make us appreciate it, too. There is a perky, rather jaunty manner, which wears well in the first movement, but it soon becomes tedious. Although the composer uses all manner of contrapuntal artifices—this is the good idea—he shows more response to the charm of the picturesque, to the glitter and sophisticated miniature work of the middle-period Stravinsky, than to musical realities of a substantial kind.

Charles Munch, conductor.

This sort of thing goes well enough in fast movements; Mr. Haieff is an accomplished orchestrator and is well equipped with compositional skills. But the slow movement immediately betrays the real defects of that too-conscious mild modernism that has sprouted all over the West as a result of Stravinsky's tremendous attraction. These composers cannot create a simple slow movement because their mind works staccato and is incapable of introspection, therefore in an adagio or andante they elaborate a situation or mental state whose quality or pathos is already sufficiently obvious.

The new symphony was the best played work on the evening's program; it was obviously well rehearsed and Charles Munch brought a nice virtuoso touch to the fireworks. I hasten to say, though, that Mr. Haieff's fireworks are rather delicate and not at all bombastic.

The rest of the program did not fare so well. Surely Howard Hanson's tribute to his departed colleague, "Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky," contains more nuances than Mr. Munch allowed in his performance. There was very little between a nice piano and a clangorous forte.

Brahms' First Symphony started alarmingly with a kettledrum solo that simply turned the tables on the composer. The timpani are there to mark the massiveness of the rather ponderous beginning of this work, but with their insistent pounding they only succeeded in siphoning away the listener's attention from the evolving musical substance. This symphony is often opaque, it needs a very acute sense for corrective balancing of the orchestra, otherwise it becomes muddy and congested. Well, it was both; and in addition Mr. Munch's tempos were slow.

Perhaps by tomorrow, when the next concert comes along, the Bostonians will be in better form.

...ist in it, yet it did not take hold of this listener last night.

Orchestral pallor and soft textures ran the other movements of saliency. Though plenty of lively rhythms keep them moving, some stretches are long because colorless and others mostly busy. They did not reach the audience on first hearing, though it applauded the composer with respect.

Munch brought out fully the heartfelt emotion written into Hanson's elegiac piece which ends like a benediction. He worked conscientiously through the Haieff, but could not work up the performance where the composer had not supplied the incentive. The Bostonians sounded good but uninspired in this work.

78

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 280,307 S. 458,274
NOV 20 1961

Bostonians Play 184th Copland

Symphony by Haieff, Too

NEW YORK, Nov. 19. — (UPI) — When the Boston Symphony played Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" in its second New York concert of the season, it was the 184th time since 1925 the Bostonians had performed Copland.

This long-standing love affair between a major orchestra and a living composer goes to show performing musicians are not to be blamed for any neglect of contemporary music. When given even minor signs of public approbation, they go for the new.

The Boston Orchestra this season is featuring a brand new symphony of the contemporary, Alexei Haieff, his third. It is the winner of the 1961 Koussevitsky award. The first performance was in Boston Nov. 10, the second in New York last Wednesday.

Haieff, like Copland, is a composer in touch with today's moods, outlooks and aspirations. He is not an exhibitor of technical twists which at best are of only academic interest to musical audiences. His musical commentaries on life and living have clear application.

This is Charles Munch's last season as the Boston's music director and conductor. He is retiring to the less strenuous role of a guest conductor of the world's symphony orchestras, in view of his mounting years.

Signalizing the occasion in a quiet way, he paid tribute to his predecessor by programming Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky." This is the piece Munch and the orchestra commissioned five years ago.

The current featured soloist of the New York Philharmonic is the pianist, Fou Ts'Ong, who made his American debut with the Cincinnati Symphony Nov. 10. He is a Chopin specialist and anyone who expected an artist named Fou to provide unique insights into that Polish composer was disappointed.

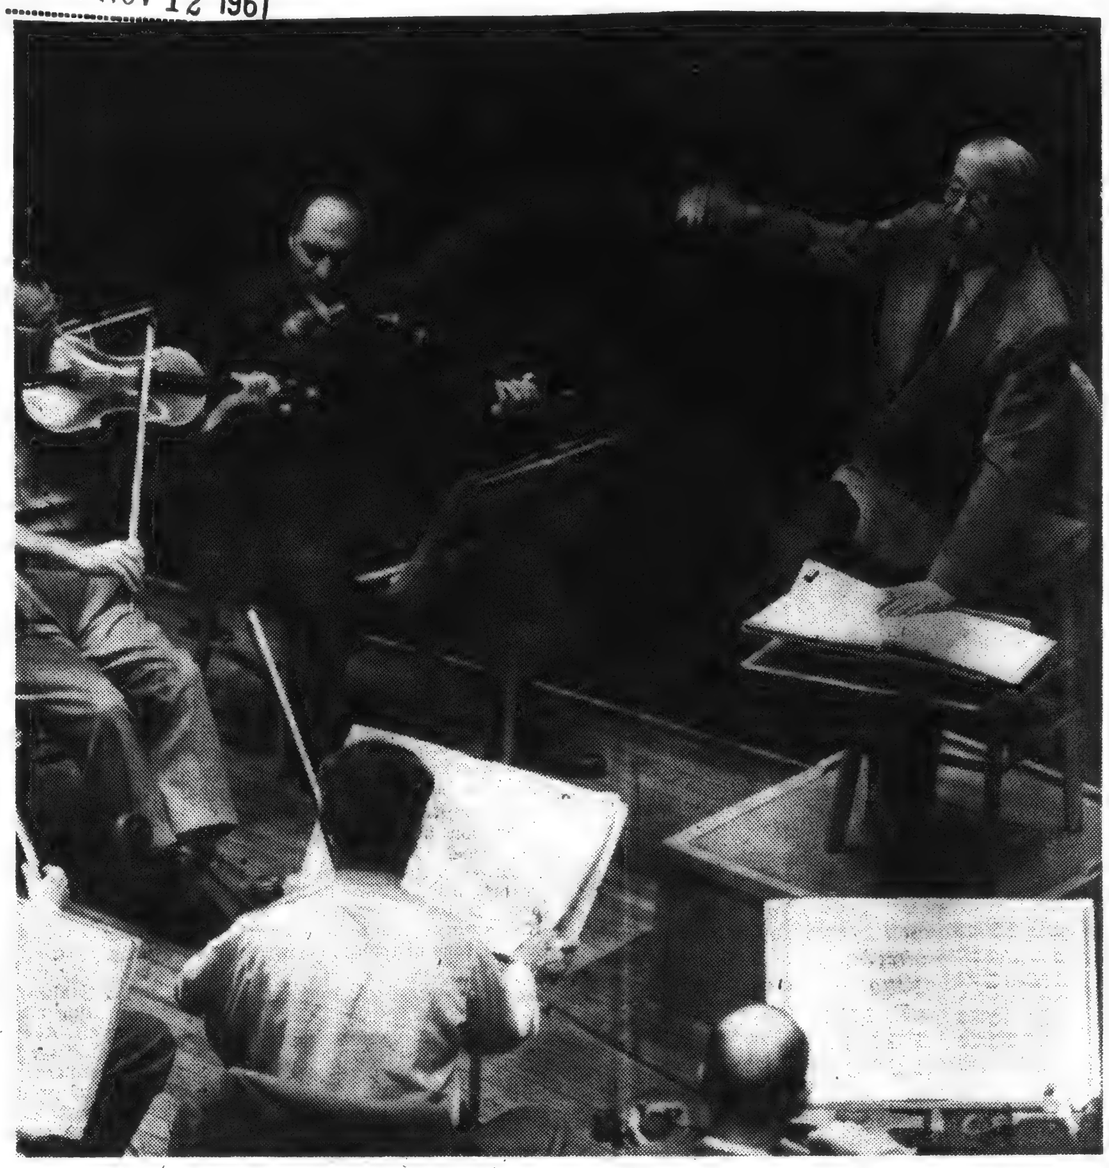
Fou was preceded to America by his records which revealed a Chopin pianist completely steeped in the Chopin tradition, which can't be considered any wonder because he studied in the Warsaw Conservatory and won an important prize there in 1955.

A most personable young man, this Fou (he is 27 years old). If it wasn't for his name, he'd be aesthetically indistinguishable from the new generation of virtuosi. Last year he married Yehudi Menuhin's daughter, Zamira. You can see he belongs to the Western musical world.

Speaking of Menuhin, there was a great outcry of protest when he performed with the Berlin Philharmonic soon after the end of World War II. It came from people who felt Jewish musicians should not readily forget or forgive what happened to them in Hitler's Germany.

The orchestra now is in the midst of its third post-war American tour, and there were only a few protests because the Israeli pianist, David Bar-Illan, will play with it in its third New York concert next Wednesday. Bar-Illan could ignore them, and has

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN NOV 12 1961



The Boston Symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, open their New York season, the last for Mr. Munch, at Carnegie Hall Wednesday night. The program includes two American works.

FLATBUSH MAGAZINE
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
MONTHLY 3,000
OCT 1961

DR. CHARLES MUNCH IN FAREWELL SEASON WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1962, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

Dr. Munch, who has endeared himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists as soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

Dr. Munch's opening program in Brooklyn on Friday evening, November 17 will include Howard Hanson's Elegie, Claude Debussy's Iberia, and Peter Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony (Pathetique).

Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50 $14.50. Box Seats, $11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting with the 1962-63 season, will be presented on Thursday nights instead of Fridays. Beginning in the fall of 1962, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will transfer its Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, where it will perform on Wednesday and Friday evenings. In recent years, many residents in Brooklyn have requested a change from the Friday night schedule, and it is hoped that Thursday night concerts will be popular with the orchestra's large and loyal Brooklyn audience since the coming of the Lincoln Center requires the new schedule anyway.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER
D. 280,307 S. 458,274
NOV 20 1961

Bostonians Play 184th Copland

Symphony by Haieff, Too

NEW YORK, Nov. 19. — (UPI) — When the Boston Symphony played Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" in its second New York concert of the season, it was the 184th time since 1925 the Bostonians had performed Copland.

This long-standing love affair between a major orchestra and a living composer goes to show performing musicians are not to be blamed for any neglect of contemporary music. When given even minor signs of public appreciation, they go for the new.

The Boston Orchestra this season is featuring a brand new symphony of the contemporary, Alexei Haieff, his third. It is the winner of the 1961 Koussevitsky award. The first performance was in Boston Nov. 10, the second in New York last Wednesday.

Haieff, like Copland, is a composer in touch with today's moods, outlooks and aspirations. He is not an exhibitor of technical twists which at best are of only academic interest to musical audiences. His musical commentaries on life and living have clear application.

This is Charles Munch's last season as the Boston's music director and conductor. He is retiring to the less strenuous role of a guest conductor of the world's symphony orchestras, in view of his mounting years.

Signalizing the occasion in a quiet way, he paid tribute to his predecessor by programming Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitsky." This is the piece Munch and the orchestra commissioned five years ago.

The current featured soloist of the New York Philharmonic is the pianist, Fou Ts'ong, who made his American debut with the Cincinnati Symphony Nov. 10. He is a Chopin specialist and anyone who expected an artist named Fou to provide unique insights into that Polish composer was disappointed.

Fou was preceded to America by his records which revealed a Chopin pianist completely steeped in the Chopin tradition, which can't be considered any wonder because he studied in the Warsaw Conservatory and won an important prize there in 1955.

A most personable young man, this Fou (he is 27 years old). If it wasn't for his name he'd be aesthetically indistinguishable from the new generation of virtuosi. Last year he married Yehudi Menuhin's daughter, Zamira. You can see he belongs to the Western musical world.

Speaking of Menuhin, there was a great outcry of protest when he performed with the Berlin Philharmonic soon after the end of World War II. It came from people who felt Jewish musicians should not readily forget or forgive what happened to them in Hitler's Germany.

The orchestra now is in the midst of its third post-war American tour, and there were only a few protests because the Israeli pianist, David Bar-Illan, will play with it in its third New York concert next Wednesday. Bar-Illan could ignore them, and has

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN NOV 12 1961

The Boston Symphony and Charles Munch, conductor, open their New York season, the last for Mr. Munch, at Carnegie Hall Wednesday night. The program includes two American works.

FLATBUSH MAGAZINE
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
MONTHLY 3,000
OCT 1961

DR. CHARLES MUNCH IN FAREWELL SEASON WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1962, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

Dr. Munch, who has endeared himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists as soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

Dr. Munch's opening program in Brooklyn on Friday evening, November 17 will include Howard Hanson's Elegie, Claude Debussy's Iberia, and Peter Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony (Pathetique).

Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50 $14.50. Box Seats, $11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting with the 1962-63 season, will be presented on Thursday nights instead of Fridays. Beginning in the fall of 1962, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will transfer its Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, where it will perform on Wednesday and Friday evenings. In recent years, many residents in Brooklyn have requested a change from the Friday night schedule, and it is hoped that Thursday night concerts will be popular with the orchestra's large and loyal Brooklyn audience since the coming of the Lincoln Center requires the new schedule anyway.

Brooklyn

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
WED NOV 15 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

Academy's Offering Everything From Charles Munch to Mathis

By FELIX KESSLER,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

In the next two nights, the Academy of Music puts on its stage musical programs that will have little in common except for their magnetic appeal to audiences.

Tomorrow night at 8:30 there will be Johnny Mathis, a 26-year-old high-jumper turned vocal gymnast. On Friday at the same hour, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In six years Mr. Mathis has come from a $75-a-week night club singer in his native San Francisco to a perch high on the record best-seller list. He generates a response close to ecstasy among women in his audience and mild hysteria among teenagers.

Last spring, for example, Mr. Mathis' appearance at the Brooklyn Paramount resulted in a throng of 2100 teens—95 percent girls—before the doors opened at 9:30 a.m. Two dozen cops were needed to restore order.

* * *

The Boston Symphony will give five concerts at the Academy this season, its 74th in Brooklyn. But it's also the last year for 71-year-old Dr. Munch, who was made director in 1949 after Serge Koussevitzky retired.

Dr. Munch, who will retire after next summer at Tanglewood, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

Regarded as one of the top interpreters of French composers — Berlioz, in particular—Dr. Munch will conduct Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," Debussy's "Iberia" and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the "Pathetique."

The Copland work, written originally in 1939 as incidental music for a play by Irwin Shaw, is of special interest. Not only will the Brooklyn-born Mr. Copland be in the audience—he will be honored on stage by the academy — but also he has conducted the Boston Symphony 22 times in his own compositions.

* * *

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
MON NOV 27 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Anemic Applause

Ever since the day man began telling stories or making music, there's been applause. It nourishes the performer and, at its best, provides a spontaneous outlet for an audience's emotions.

So, what happened at the Boston Symphony's opening concert at the Academy of Music? This great orchestra gave a thrilling performance but was greeted by anemic handclapping, as if all listeners were wearing gloves over dainty, brittle fingers. Conductor Charles Munch and his fine musicians have every reason to feel baffled and, possibly, hurt.

On the other hand, the Boston Symphony is now in its 74th Brooklyn season. Perhaps it's accustomed to this very proper and sedate audience, which takes in music as a good patient swallows medicine. The stuff may do some good but one doesn't have to get enthusiastic about it.

A cop on traffic duty at the Academy that night said he counted 41 chauffeured limousines—more than one normally sees at Carnegie Hall or even the Metropolitan.

It's generally accepted that the older listener who arrives in a big black car doesn't generate the enthusiasm of the younger music buff. But the house was sold out and it's too bad that even the standees—I saw them back there—couldn't shame other patrons into making some noise.

About the only time that applause reached a level higher than polite came at the wrong moment—during the Tchaikovsky Sixth Symphony—but this can be forgiven. Tchaikovsky never did know when he had finished.

This brings to mind an incident a few years back when a conductor confronted a London opera audience, which applauded out of turn, and said:

"Thank you, but may I say you've spoiled exquisite performances during the first and third acts by untimely applause. If you have any feelings of affection toward me, please give me the extreme pleasure of allowing me to hear the end of this work."

At the Academy, a few more sounds of approval seem in order. Perhaps we'll just have to revive the claque, the paid applauders who used to beat calloused palms for particular stars and hiss at audiences that clapped at the wrong time.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SAT NOV 18 1961

COPLAND IS HONORED

Brooklyn Academy Calls Hih a 'Credit to the Borough'

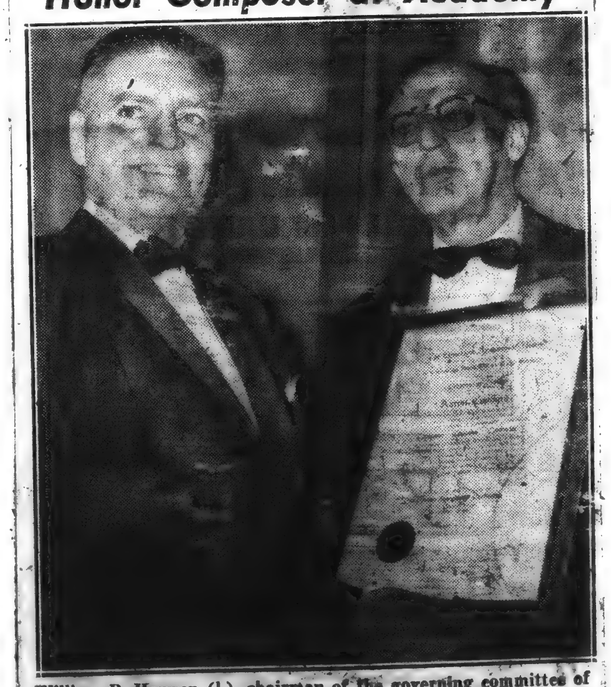
Aaron Copland was honored last night by the Brooklyn Academy of Music during a concert there by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The musician, who was born and educated in Brooklyn, received a citation describing him as a "credit to the borough" because of his activities as composer, educator and conductor. William B. Hewson, chairman of the Academy's governing committee, made the presentation.

Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" was included in the program, conducted by Charles Munch.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
WED NOV 29 1961

Honor Composer at Academy



William B. Hewson (l.), chairman of the governing committee of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, presents a citation to music composer Aaron Copland, who was born in Brooklyn. Copland attended a concert at the academy, at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played his "Quiet City."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 35,000
NOV 18 1961

EDUCATION

BROOKLYN ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 30 Lafayette Ave., Bklyn. With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season Friday evening, Nov. 17 at 8:30 p.m. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6 in B minor, the "Pathetique". Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on Nov. 14, 1900.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15,370
NOV 11 1961

MUSIC · ART · DRAMA

Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, on Friday evening, November 17, at 8:30 p.m. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetique."

The November 17 concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 74th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munch's final season as music director of the Bostonians. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on November 14, 1900, and was educated in the Brooklyn public schools. At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainbleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger. Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year. The late Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Copland's "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra" in 1925, and the Orchestra has presented 184 performances of 21 Copland compositions since that time.

As a teacher, Copland probably is one of the most influential and important figures in American music. Since 1940, he has been Chairman of the Faculty and the head of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are now on sale at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

86 NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691.
MON NOV 20 1961

Composer Aaron Copland, right, receives a citation describing him as "a credit to the borough" from William R. Hewson, chairman of the Brooklyn Academy of Music's governing committee. The presentation took place on stage at the academy Friday night after a performance of Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The composer is Brooklyn born and educated.

Footlights and Spotlights

Munch Offers Concert Audience A Night of Copland, Debussy

By FELIX KESSLER,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Audiences throughout the world have come to expect sheer brilliance from Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony in the past decade and their faith is well-founded.

Before a packed house in the Academy of Music Friday night, Dr. Munch led the orchestra in glittering performances of works by Copland, Debussy and Tchaikovsky and every minute was golden.

For 10 minutes, the mood of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City," a work for strings, trumpet and English horn, was evoked in a moving reading by Dr. Munch. The string section, often called the best in the country, was superb and so were the soloists, Roger Voisin on trumpet and Louis Speyer on the English horn, particularly in the passages when their instruments conversed.

After the playing of this work, which isn't heard as often as it merits, Mr. Copland had every reason to smile when he was honored on stage as "a credit to the borough."

The rousing fireworks came with Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony, the "Patheteique." Time was when Dr. Munch was criticized for playing the first movement too rapidly, barely allowing the strings a chance to make their entrances.

There will be no such quibble here. This was an animated first movement with nuances I had never heard. And if the brasses were superb in their sudden, startling entrance, they outdid themselves in the third movement.

Also on the program, and played in sterling manner, was Debussy's familiar "Iberia."

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3 500
NOV 16 1961

Academy Season Opens

Munch to Lead Boston Symphony

With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. The program opens with Mr. Coplands "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetique".

The concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 74th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munch's final season as music director of the Bostonians. He is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Mr. Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the

Charles Munch

Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on November 14, 1900, and was educated in the Brooklyn public schools. At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainbleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger. Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year. The late Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Copland's "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra" in 1925, and the Orchestra has presented 184 performances of 21 Copland compositions since that time.

"Quiet City" had its genesis in the spring of 1939 when Harold Clurman, Director of the Group Theatre, asked Copland to write the incidental music for a new play by Irwin Shaw, author of "Bury the Dead" and other plays. Shaw's new opus was titled "Quiet City" and was a fantasy concerning the night-thoughts of many different kinds of people in a large city. It called for music depicting the nostalgia and inner distress of a society profoundly aware of its own insecurity.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200
BURRELLE'S PAGE ONE CERTIFIED
NOV 10 1961

Boston Symphony Opens Season Next Friday

Director Munch

With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, on Friday evening, November 17, at 8:30 p.m. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetique."

The November 17 concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 74th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munch's final season as music director of the Bostonians. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on November 14, 1900, and was educated in the Brooklyn public schools. At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger. Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W 239 477
DEC 2 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Munch Begins His Last Go-Round—Fou Ts'Ong

This past, present, and future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was more than casually at the first concert of its final season in Carnegie Hall. For it began with Charles Munch, who is retiring at the end of this season, conducting an "Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" (his predecessor) by Howard Hanson. In a box was Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed him, paying heed also to the playing of a new symphony (No. 2) by Alexei Haieff and an old work (No. 1) by Johannes Brahms. The two new works, Hanson's and Haieff's, clearly the easier to like. It is straightforward, schooled in the best of the eclectic and above all rounding. It seemed, somewhat, to follow the formula ascribed by the late Newman to the "Marche funèbre" of Chopin's B flat minor Sonata: "The poor fellow is dead" (somber). "But he had a good life and he is certainly enjoying the hereafter" (brightening up). "But, after all, he is dead" (somber again). In Hanson's case, the "moving ahead" section suggestive of the conductor's long, active career tended also to recall some composers for whom he had a special partiality—Sibelius, Wagner, Copland. Whether this was wholly intentional, I have no way of knowing—but it was, in a special way, appropriate. Munch organized these as well as the other values with considerable persuasiveness, and with a hint of pastel shadings (in an autumnal hue) which typify the sound of the orchestra at its current best.

The Haieff symphony was, of course, quite another matter. It is spare, sophisticated, chary of any note not predained to occupy a meaningful place in a chord, a thematic interjection or a counterphrase. This, to be sure, is a valuable discipline against the venial sin of overwriting. But it can, and does at certain moments of this work, produce the impression that the composer has pondered so long over his next move that, in the manner of a chess match, interest in the outcome is forfeit. One could go on to make a variety of other analogies in the same metaphoric frame, but the sum of them all would be that Haieff here is rather more occupied with method than communication. He has, for example, alluded to the slow movement as "Narcissus," because the latter portion is a total reflection of the beginning, note for note, backward and upside down. Doubtless I would hear more of this on a second, third, or fourth time; but would it mean more? I doubt it. The finale also has its share of the schematic, but not, to my taste, enough of impulse, decisiveness, or resolution to establish a real involvement with the listener. There was every indication that the composer, who was present to acknowledge the applause for his work, was pleased with the performance.

A pianist direct from China who qualified for an engagement with the New York Philharmonic would be indeed exceptional, but Fou Ts'Ong, who is, indeed, Chinese, does not quite fit the description. For he has spent the years since 1958, when he was a prize winner in Warsaw, absorbing European influences, especially the traditional approaches to the F minor (No. 2) Concerto of Chopin with which he was introduced as a soloist with Paul Paray conducting. In several respects it was finely fluent, musical Chopin, touched with many evidences of artistic sensitivity and aptness of the composer's poetic purpose.

However, these were qualities that had to be perceived in spite of, rather than by means of, the sound Fou Ts'Ong produces. It had a certain amount of resonance in cantilena passages, especially in the slow movement, but it inclined to be metallic in runs and arpeggios, and incisive rather than ringing in chords. It all tended to become overburdened by Paray's preference for a very large body of players (for Chopin) in the orchestra, beginning with eight basses. In any case, more subtlety, contrast, and variety of sound is imperative if Fou Ts'Ong is to make the most of his otherwise admirable qualities.

For the orchestral elements of the evening, Paray had the players under firm control in the "Hebrides" ("Fingal's Cave") Overture of Mendelssohn, the Schumann C major Symphony, and, post-pianist, Ravel's "Bolero." His fine sense of phrasing, orchestral coloration and balance were especially evident in the Schumann, whose slow movement gave the Philharmonic's first clarinet (Stanley Drucker) and oboe (Harold Gomberg) opportunity for a perfectly matched interchange.

Along with its promised "Ring" cycle, this season of Metropolitan Opera may be remembered as much for a cycle of Puccini, whose works promise to exceed any previous sum for a single season. In the latest "Butterfly" Dorothy Kirsten demonstrated the vocal command (short of meeting the written requirements of the entrance), carefully elaborated characterization, and identity with the inner life of the one she is impersonating which place it first in her range of competence. It is, also, a far closer approach to credibility than her recent Minnie in "La Fanciulla," which, however well it was sung (and much of it was well sung) was so marcelled, glamorized, and carefully tailored as to suggest that her mountain shack was hard by a Forty-niner's version of Helena Rubinstein's.

But who is to make a case for credibility in the present state of matters Metropolitan when the Pinkerton to Kirsten's Cio-Cio-San is the eager, musicianly, but light-voiced George Shirley. Musicianship, a modest demeanor, and intelligent feeling for the vocal line of Puccini are factors in his favor, but he is, in tonal production, a size or two small for this auditorium. Such a moment as Pinkerton's angry order for the local priest to desist from disturbing the peace of "Casa mia" ("My home") lost force, hence meaning, for lack of it in the singer's voice, cleverly as Fausto Cleva endeavored to cover the lack with his conducting. Clifford Harvuot was an uncommonly convincing Sharpless, the new Andrea Velis a good Goro, and Margaret Roggero a cherishable Suzuki.

The Metropolitan added a tall, broad-shouldered man with a voice to match when Randolph Symonette attracted more than usual attention to the music of Telramund at a recent "Lohengrin". From a background of musical theatre ("Street Scene," "The Consul," etc.) Symonette has made his way through the German opera theatres to an authoritative command of Wagnerian requirements. He tends a little to the explosive enunciation of text, but this may alter in another part. Of particular note were his top tones: free and on pitch in the difficult E-F range. Also new was Ernst Wiemann, who was rather hard put for the depth or height of the vocal range for King Henry. Character roles would seem to be more in his line.

Latest of imported dance attractions is the "Mazowsze" Polish song and dance company currently at the City Center. Its sizable complement of females is not only talented but pretty, and its matching male personnel earn high marks for physical discipline and spirit. But, in terms of some past visitors, the choreographic arrangements are highly informal, lacking the creative discipline that makes artistry of the informal. Within its scope, the company performs well (including the compliment of a touchingly sung "Red River Valley") but that scope is decidedly restricted. As a detail: an amount of choreographic care equal to the needlework on the enchanting costumes would have added as much to the visual movement as to the decor.—IRVING KOLODIN.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston Symphony

The first Saturday afternoon concert of the current season by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall was given Nov. 18, with the program consisting of "Quiet City—for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn" by Aaron Copland, Debussy's "Iberia" and the Sixth Symphony by Tchaikovsky. Charles Munch conducted. It is interesting to note that this performance of "Quiet City" was the 184th Boston Symphony performance of a composition written by Aaron Copland. This was a favorite work of the late Serge Koussevitzky, and this performance marked the tenth anniversary of the conductor's death. It was a lovely, gentle reading with Roger Voisin on the Trumpet and Louis Speyer on the English Horn contributing skillfully. Debussy's "Iberia" was enchantingly colorful. For the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique," Dr. Munch pulled out all the stops. This was in contrast with the controlled, sensitive performances of the other two works. We thought the Tchaikovsky was the least effective of the afternoon's selections.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
OCT 7 1961

MUSIC · ART · DRAMA

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1962, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

Dr. Munch, who has endeared himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists and soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

MUSIC · ART · DRAMA

(Continued from Page 6)

Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50, $14.50. Box Seats, $11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting with the 1962-63 season, will be presented on Thursday nights instead of Fridays. Beginning in the fall of 1962, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will transfer its Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, where it will perform on Wednesday and Friday evenings. In recent years, many residents in Brooklyn have requested a change from the Friday night schedule, and it is hoped that Thursday night concerts will be popular with the orchestra's large and loyal Brooklyn audience since the coming of the Lincoln Center requires the new schedule anyway.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W 239,477
DEC 2 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

Munch Begins His Last Go-Round—Fou Ts'Ong

The past, present and future of the Boston Symphony Orchestra blossomed more than usually at the first concert of its final season in Carnegie Hall. For it began with Charles Munch, who is retiring at the end of this season, conducting an Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky" (his predecessor), by Howard Hanson. In the box was Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed Munch, paying heed also to the orchestra's playing of a new symphony (No. 3) by Alexei Haieff and an old symphony (No. 1) by Johannes Brahms.

Of the two new works, Hanson's "Elegy" was, clearly, the easier to like. It is direct, straightforward, schooled in the manners of the eulogist, and above all, well-sounding. It seemed somewhat to follow the formula ascribed by the late Ernest Newman to the "Marche funèbre" of Chopin's B flat minor Sonata. "The poor fellow is dead" (sombre). "But he had a good life and he is probably enjoying the hereafter" (brightening up). "But, after all, he is dead" (sombre again). In Hanson's case, the "moving ahead" section suggestive of the conductor's long, active career tended also to recall some composers for whom he had a special partiality—Sibelius, Wagner, Copland. Whether this was wholly intentional, I have no way of knowing—but it was in a special way, appropriate. Munch organized these as well as the other values with considerable persuasiveness, and with a hint of pastel shadings (in an autumnal hue) which typify the sound of the orchestra at its current best.

The Haieff symphony was, of course, quite another matter. It is spare, sophisticated, chary of any note not predained to occupy a meaningful place in a chord, a thematic interjection or a counterphrase. This, to be sure, is a valuable discipline against the venial sin of overwriting. But it can, and does at certain moments of this work, produce the impression that the composer has pondered so long over his next move that, in the manner of a chess match, interest in the outcome is forfeit. One could go on to make a variety of other analogies in the same metaphoric frame, but the sum of them all would be that Haieff here is rather more occupied with method than communication. He has, for example, alluded to the slow movement as "Narcissus," because the latter portion is a total reflection of the beginning, note for note, backward and upside down. Doubtless I would hear more of this a second, third, or fourth time, but would it mean more? I doubt it. The finale also has its share of the [illegible] establish a real involvement with the [illegible] This [illegible] this composition, [illegible] knowledge the applause for this work, was pleased with the performance, moved [illegible] direct, [illegible] quainted [illegible] New York Philharmonic would be [illegible] deed except possibly [illegible] description. Perhaps upon the occasion [illegible] winner [illegible] Symphony, and, [illegible] pianist Ravel's "Bolero." His fine sense of phrasing, orchestral coloration and balance were especially evident in the Schumann. The slow movement gave the Philharmonic's first clarinet (Stanley Drucker) and oboe (Harold Gomberg) opportunity for a perfectly matched interchange.

Along with its promised "Ring" cycle, this season of Metropolitan Opera may be remembered as much for a cycle of Puccini, whose works promise to exceed any previous sum for a single season. In the latest "Butterfly" Dorothy Kirsten demonstrated the vocal command (short of meeting the written requirements of the entrance), carefully elaborated characterization, and identity with the inner life of the one she is impersonating which place her first in her range of competence. It is, also, a far closer approach to credibility than her recent Minnie in "La Fanciulla" which, however well it was sung (and much of it was well sung), was so marcelled, glamorized, and carefully tailored as to suggest that her mountain shack was [illegible] version of Helena Rubinstein. [illegible] But what is to make a case for crediting [illegible] the present state of matters [illegible] Pinkerton to [illegible] Sharpless, the [illegible] Suzuki? The Metropolitan added a tall, broad-shouldered male with a voice to match when Randolph Symonette attracted more than usual attention to the music of Telramund in a recent "Lohengrin". From a background of musical theatre ("Street Scene," "The Consul," etc.) Symonette has made his way through the German opera pentres to an authoritative command of Wagnerian requirements. He tends a little to the explosive enunciation of text, but this may alter in another part. Of particular note were his top tones: free and on pitch in the difficult E-F range. Also new was Erna Wiemann, who was rather hard put for the depth or height of the vocal range for King Henry. Character roles would seem to be more in his line.

Latest of imported dance attractions is the "Mazowsze" Polish song and dance company currently at the City Center. Its sizable complement of females is not only talented but pretty, and its matching male personnel earn high marks for physical discipline and spirit. But, in terms of some past visitors, the choreographic arrangements are highly informal, lacking the creative discipline that makes artistry of the informal. Within its scope the company performs well (including the compliment of a touchingly sung "Red River Valley") but that scope is decidedly restricted. As a detail: an amount of choreographic care equal to the needlework on the enchanting costumes would have added as much to the visual movement as to the decor.—IRVING KOLODIN.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 1961

Boston Symphony

The first Saturday afternoon concert of the current season by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall was given Nov. 18, with the program consisting of "Quiet City—for Strings, Trumpet and English Horn" by Aaron Copland, Debussy's "Iberia" and the Sixth Symphony by Tchaikovsky. Charles Munch conducted. It is interesting to note that this performance of "Quiet City" was the 184th Boston Symphony performance of a composition written by Aaron Copland. This was a favorite work of the late Serge Koussevitzky, and this performance marked the tenth anniversary of the conductor's death. It was a lovely, gentle reading with Roger Voisin on the Trumpet and Louis Speyer on the English Horn contributing skillfully. Debussy's "Iberia" was enchantingly colorful. For the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique," Dr. Munch pulled out all the stops. This was in contrast with the controlled, sensitive performances of the other two works. We thought the Tchaikovsky was the least effective of the afternoon's selections.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
OCT 7 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1949, will conduct four times at The Brooklyn Academy of Music during his farewell season with the Bostonians. The Boston orchestra, a feature of Academy of Music concert seasons since 1888, will perform its customary series of five concerts on Friday evenings, with the first program scheduled on November 17.

Subsequent dates are December 15, January 26, 1962, February 23 and April 6. The concert of December 15 will be marked by the debut in Brooklyn of Ernest Ansermet, the distinguished founder of l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, whom Dr. Munch has invited to be the guest conductor on this occasion. Mr. Ansermet, recognized as one of the world's foremost conductors, is very well known in the United States due to previous tours and numerous recordings, but this will be his initial appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn.

Dr. Munch, who has endeared himself to his Brooklyn audiences during his tenure with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood. His programs, since he assumed the musical leadership in Boston, have been marked by a very progressive policy in repertoire, and he has introduced a number of significant contemporary works by American composers, in addition to conducting many neglected compositions by French composers. He also has introduced to the American public a number of important new artists and soloists. He will be succeeded as music director by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 17, 1961.

MUSIC · ART · DRAMA

(Continued from Page 6)

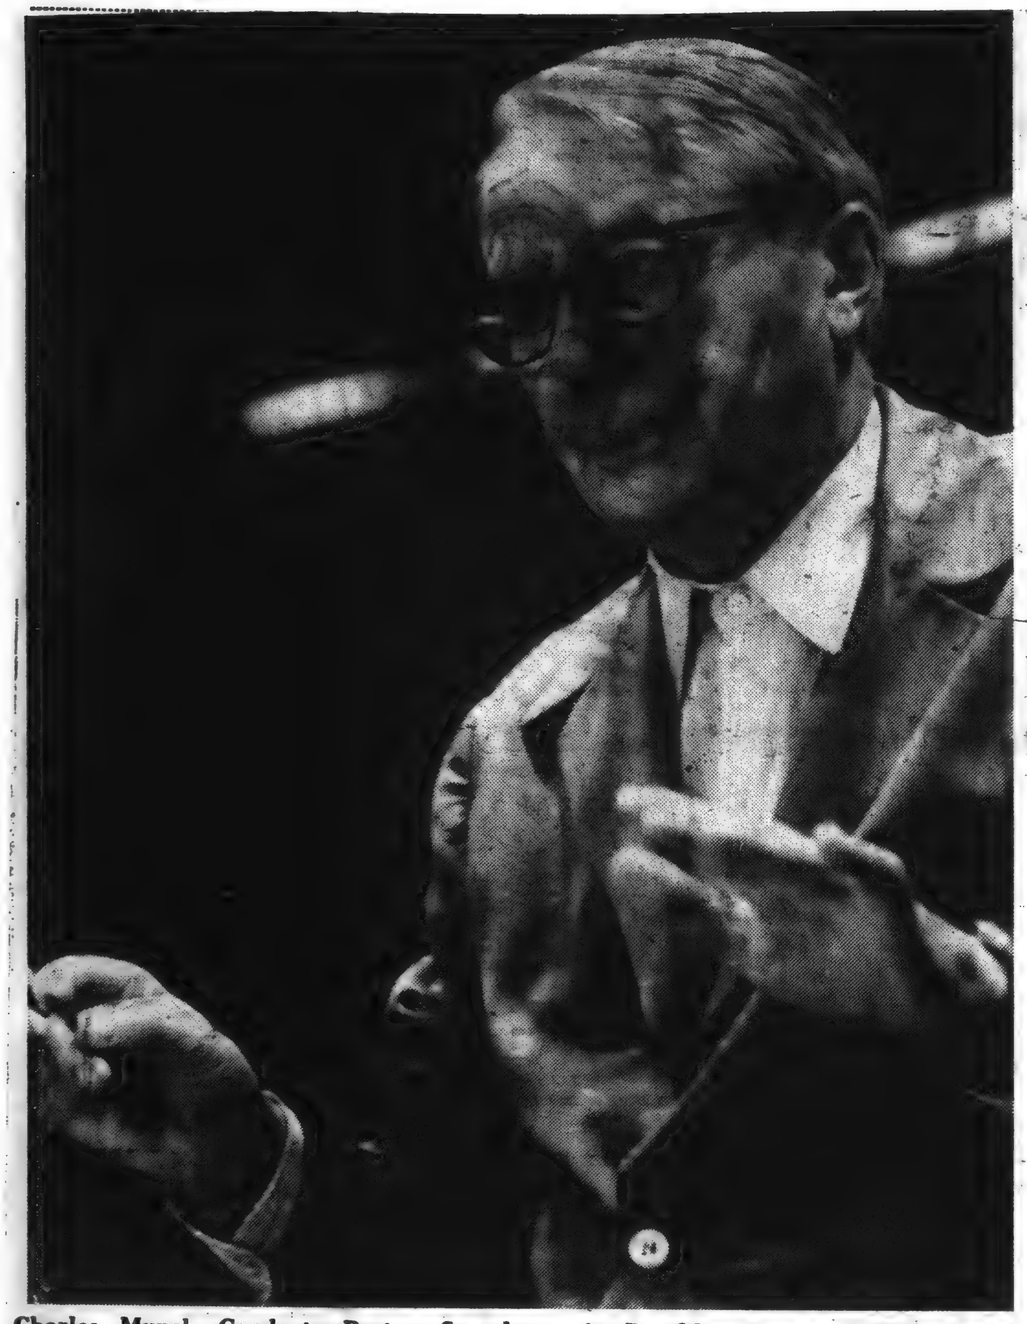
Subscriptions for the 1961-62 concerts for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn are being accepted now at the Academy. Subscription prices for the entire series of five concerts are: Orchestra and Mezzanine, $14.50, $17.50, $20.50; Balcony, $11.50, $14.50. Box Seats, $11.50, $14.50, $20.50, $23.50. The Academy member is entitled to a reduction of $2.50 on his own subscription. Orders for individual concerts, priced from $3.00 to $4.50, will be filled after locations for subscriptions have been assigned.

The Brooklyn concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting with the 1962-63 season, will be presented on Thursday nights instead of Fridays. Beginning in the fall of 1962, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will transfer its Manhattan concerts from Carnegie Hall to Philharmonic Hall of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, where it will perform on Wednesday and Friday evenings. In recent years, many residents in Brooklyn have requested a change from the Friday night schedule, and it is hoped that Thursday night concerts will be popular with the orchestra's large and loyal Brooklyn audience since the coming of the Lincoln Center requires the new schedule anyway.

82

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39 650
NOV 13 1961



Charles Munch Conducts Boston Symphony At Brooklyn Academy November 17

With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, on Friday evening, November 17, at 8:30 p.m. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetique."

The November 17 concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestras 47th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munchs final season as music director of the Bostonians. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on November 14, 1900, and was educated in the Brooklyn public schools. At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger. Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year. The late Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Copland's "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra" in 1925, and the Orchestra has presented 184 performances of 21 Copland compositions since that time.

Copland has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest composer-conductor on 22 occasions and as composer-pianist five times. On November 20, 1959, Copland conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in the orchestral suite from his opera, "The Tender Land." He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for "Appalachian Spring," anda Motion Picture Academy "Oscar" for his score, "The Heiress."

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are now on sale at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933
NOV 15 1961

Music In Review

'Magnificent' Program Conducted By Munch

A magnificent program featuring Brahms and Debussy was presented by the Boston Symphony in Woolsey Hall last night. It was the orchestra's first concert of the season here and the second-to-last time that New Haven music lovers will have the pleasure of watching Charles Munch direct this famous organization.

It is now 13 years since Munch first came here with the Boston Symphony, and the news that he is retiring next fall, after the conclusion of the Berkshire Music Festival, is regretful for all who have thrilled to his masterful work on the podium.

Last night he conducted the entire program without score. The great C minor Symphony No. 1 by Brahms, was given a reading that emphasized the grandeur of this beautiful work, which begins in an almost tragic manner, working up to the last exultant movement when the violins soar into a regular burst of joyous music.

The second movement in particular was a joy to hear, with its two beautiful melodies, one by the strings and then later another, carried by the oboe.

After the mellow third movement the final movement was given a very dramatic reading with increasing tempo, heightened by the pizzicati of the strings, and lovely hits for the horn and flute. Just before the grand climax, Munch kept the strings almost hushed and then signaled for the glorious, dramatic conclusion.

The Debussy work was a happy choice and a sparkling contrast to the more somber Brahms work. It was the Iberia, the second of Debussy's three "Images" and filled with the spirit of Spain. It is an impressionistic work and Munch gave it a wholly delightful reading so that it graphically described life in Spain. Against a brilliant tonal picture one heard the click of castanets, and the metallic call of the tambourine punctuating the work by the strings.

The evening's concert opened with Howard Hanson's Elegy to the Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the Boston Symphony from 1924 to 1948, the longest period for a single conductor. The work was composed by Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, after it had been commissioned by the orchestra for its 75th anniversary.

Dr. Hanson is considered a romantic composer and he has had many of his works performed by the Boston Symphony. His elegy is mellow in mood with sweet and melancholy work for the woodwinds.

F. R. J.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W, 17,420
NOV 15 1961

Boro-Born Dean of American Composers To Attend Boston Symphony at Academy

With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Layfayette Ave., on Friday evening, Nov. 17, at 8:30 P.M. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetikque."

famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger.

Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year. The late Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Copland's "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra" in 1925 and the Orchestra has presented 184 performances of 21 Copland compositions since that time

Copland has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest composer-conductor on 22 occasions and as composer-pianist five times. On Nov. 20, 1959, Copland conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in the orchestral suite from his opera, "The Tender Land". He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for "Appalachian Spring", and a Motion Picture Academy "Oscar" for his score, "The Heiress".

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are now on sale at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Nov 17 concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 74th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munch's final season as music director of the Bostonians. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on Nov. 14, 1900, and was educated in local public schools.

At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 38,700
DEC 1961

NEW YORK

Three New Works Performed

Three new major works – in length if not significance – have recently added a flush of color to what has otherwise been a rather drab New York concert season: David Diamond's Symphony Number Eight, performed for the first time on October 26 by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic; Vittorio Giannini's Medead for soprano and orchestra, given October 31 by Irene Jordan and the National Orchestral Association under John Barnett, and Alexei Haieff's Symphony Number Three, presented by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on November 15.

Mr. Diamond's latest excursion into the symphonic realm, one imagines, is intended to serve as a kind of orchestral block-buster whose angry vigor goes more or less unrelieved throughout the piece. It opens with a blast of sound in the form of a motto-theme that arrests the attention the instant it is heard. Subsequently, the composer piles one thematic idea on top of another, with the unfortunate end result that the symphony lacks a genuine flow and rounded contour. Directly a theme comes along, it is interrupted, cut off, smothered by something new, so that the ear scarcely has time to adjust to one episode before it is assaulted all over again. A little bit of this brand of intensity goes a long, long way; in attempting to maintain this high-pitched level of expressivity, Mr. Diamond leaves a listener more exhausted than refreshed. And his superabundance of melodic and rhythmic gestures, coming, as they do, so closely on the heels of each other tend to cancel one another out.

Still, the drive of the score is never less than impressive, and the Harris-Schuman texture of its sound has just the right bite to make the work snap at the senses. Granted, it is rowdy and certainly undisciplined, but it is a brave piece and an heroic one. If it were not quite so taut, not quite so aggressively nervous, the Eighth Symphony would do well as a repertory piece. As it stands, it is all tough sinew with no soft flesh to give it shape.

Mr. Giannini's Medead (after Euripides) was commissioned by the Ford Foundation especially for Irene Jordan, and the composer has gone out of his way to provide the soprano with a rousing virtuoso platform for her talents. In effect, the work is a 40-minute monodrama which exploits the soloist's register and coloristic potential to its ultimate degree; indeed, an ability to get through the piece without going dry or hoarse proclaims its performer as a mistress of technique and stamina. Not that the Medead is difficult merely for the sake of difficulty – far from it. But the nature of the text, which involves Medea's revulsion at Jason's treachery and her murder of their two children, cries out for dramatic accents that ring like struck steel. This Mr. Giannini has supplied in a kind of Verdi-plus idiom wandering between highly-charged recitative and billowing waves of tune.

Of Italian background, Mr. Giannini understands the voice almost by instinct, and while his melodic sense is not especially ingenious nor his lyric attainments particularly inspired, he manages all the same to reflect Medea's horror and tragedy with a minimum of wasted effort. Actually, the Medead is a gripping piece of "mood music," though it is hardly distinguished in terms of song. It establishes character and keeps that character alive through a wholly expert use of the voice and a climactic use of the orchestra. But there is not a tune in it that clings to the mind nor a phrase that stabs at memory. For her part Miss Jordan sang the work so gloriously that she almost concealed its deficiencies. Almost – but not quite.

Of all the new works encountered, the least successful, unhappily, was written by the most gifted composer of the three. Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony simply does not come off as a complete work of art. There are dozens of wonderful ideas, the orchestra scampers, does tricks and dodges by the pack, and the piece has a lustrous sound. But nothing happens. The themes fall apart into scrappy and fragmentary heaps, and the instruments seem to tease each other rather than produce a continuum of sonority. Throughout, the symphony chases its own tail. It gets nowhere.

This writer suspects these faults are directly traceable to a basic imbalance between the music and the manner in which it is laid out. The work seems to be conceived for a chamber orchestra and yet is blown up to full symphonic size.

– JAY HARRISON

Fred Plaut

Alexei Haieff

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Nov. 15—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. HOWARD HANSON: Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky. ALEXEI HAIEFF: Symphony No. 3 (New York Premiere). BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1

The best that can be said in praise of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony is that it contains some alluring music. In handling his material, Mr. Haieff displays a juggler's skill, keeping the hearer in anticipation. Strong doubts are in order, however, as to whether this initial urge will not wear thin after repeated hearings.

Mr. Haieff is at his best in the two fast movements, to which he gave a definite rhythmic profile; but the slow movement, where the artist's inner self is supposed to emerge, reveals the composer's emotional reticence and his prevalently humoristic approach (incidentally, he titles the movement Narcissus, merely because a mirroring technique is employed in its planning!) now tends to simplicity. In his syntax, Mr. Haieff adheres to the Stravinskian, employs staccato figures, nervous rhythms, disintegrates his lines and distributes the resulting fragments to various instruments. In this latter practice he seems to respond to Webern's appeal, depending on Stravinsky's experiences along the same line instead of being on his own. This gives the work a marked character of eclecticism.

Howard Hanson's outspoken romantic traditionalism results in music of sturdier foundations and, for that matter, of more credibility. His Elegy is impregnated with a dignified sentiment and constructed by the sure hand of a fine workman.

Both works were convincingly interpreted. As to the habitual season-opener, the Brahms First, it was given a slick and taut reading.

—Ilhan K. Mimaroglu

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Nov. 18, 2:15—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. COPLAND: Quiet City. DEBUSSY: Iberia. TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 6.

Iberia is a Munch specialty, and the Bostonians gave these Debussy impressions a brilliant, sensuous reading. The Tchaikovsky Symphony had more life and luster than I remember on recent hearings. Mr. Munch kept the tempos in the March-Scherzo at a reasonable pace, and evoked a feeling of genuine pathos in the Adagio lamentoso. A chorus of cheers greeted the conductor and players at the end, something you seldom hear from the Saturday-afternoon subscribers. —Wriston Locklair

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 17,420
NOV 15 1961

Boro - Born Dean of American Composers To Attend Boston Symphony at Academy

With Aaron Copland, dean of American composers in the audience, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its first concert of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Layfayette Ave., on Friday evening, Nov. 17, at 8:30 P.M. The program opens with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" followed by Debussy's "Iberia" and after intermission Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B minor, the "Pathetikque."

famous composition pedagogue, Nadia Boulanger.

Returning to the United States in 1924, his compositions were first performed in this country in the same year. The late Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Copland's "Symphony for Organ and Orchestra" in 1[illegible] and the Orchestra has presented 184 performances of 21 Copland compositions since that time.

Copland has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest composer-conductor on 22 occasions and as composer-pianist five times. On Nov. 20, 1959, Copland conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in the orchestral suite from his opera, "The Tender Land". He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for "Appalachian Spring", and a Motion Picture Academy "Oscar" for his score, "The Heiress".

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert are $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are now on sale at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Nov 17 concert marks the beginning of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 74th Brooklyn season; at the same time it marks the beginning of Dr. Munch's final season as music director of the Bostonians. Munch is retiring at the end of the 1962 season at Tanglewood and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf.

Copland's life and career have special associations with the borough of Brooklyn and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The eminent composer was born in Brooklyn on Nov. 14, 1900, and was educated in local public schools.

At the age of 21, he went to France, where he was a student of composition at the Fontainebleau School of Music and later took advanced studies with the

MUSIC MAGAZINE AND
MUSICAL COURIER
EVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 38,700
DEC 1961

NEW YORK

Three New Works Performed

Three new major works – in length if not significance – have recently added a flush of color to what has otherwise been a rather drab New York concert season: David Diamond's Symphony Number Eight, performed for the first time on October 26 by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic; Vittorio Giannini's Medead for soprano and orchestra, given October 31 by Irene Jordan and the National Orchestral Association under John Barnett, and Alexei Haieff's Symphony Number Three, presented by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on November 15.

Mr. Diamond's latest excursion into the symphonic realm, one imagines, is intended to serve as a kind of orchestral block-buster whose angry vigor goes more or less unrelieved throughout the piece. It opens with a blast of sound in the form of a motto-theme that arrests the attention the instant it is heard. Subsequently, the composer piles one thematic idea on top of another, with the unfortunate end result that the symphony lacks a genuine flow and rounded contour. Directly a theme comes along, it is interrupted, cut off, smothered by something new, so that the ear scarcely has time to adjust to one episode before it is assaulted all over again. A little bit of this brand of intensity goes a long, long way; in attempting to maintain this high-pitched level of expressivity, Mr. Diamond leaves a listener more exhausted than refreshed. And his superabundance of melodic and rhythmic gestures, coming, as they do, so closely on the heels of each other tend to cancel one another out.

Still, the drive of the score is never less than impressive, and the Harris-Schuman texture of its sound has just the right bite to make the work snap at the senses. Granted, it is rowdy and certainly undisciplined, but it is a brave piece and an heroic one. If it were not quite so taut, not quite so aggressively nervous, the Eighth Symphony would do well as a repertory piece. As it stands, it is all tough sinew with no soft flesh to give it shape.

Mr. Giannini's Medead (after Euripides) was commissioned by the Ford Foundation especially for Irene Jordan, and the composer has gone out of his way to provide the soprano with a rousing virtuoso platform for her talents. In effect, the work is a 40-minute monodrama which exploits the soloist's register and coloristic potential to its ultimate degree; indeed, an ability to get through the piece without going dry or hoarse proclaims its performer as a mistress of technique and stamina. Not that the Medead is difficult merely for the sake of difficulty – far from it. But the nature of the text, which involves Medea's revulsion at Jason's treachery and her murder of their two children, cries out for dramatic accents that ring like struck steel. This Mr. Giannini has supplied in a kind of Verdi-plus idiom wandering between highly-charged recitative and billowing waves of tune.

Of Italian background, Mr. Giannini understands the voice almost by instinct, and while his melodic sense is not especially ingenious nor his lyric attainments particularly inspired, he manages all the same to reflect Medea's horror and tragedy with a minimum of wasted effort. Actually, the Medead is a gripping piece of "mood music," though it is hardly distinguished in terms of song. It establishes character and keeps that character alive through a wholly expert use of the voice and a climactic use of the orchestra. But there is not a tune in it that clings to the mind nor a phrase that stabs at memory. For her part Miss Jordan sang the work so gloriously that she almost concealed its deficiencies. Almost – but not quite.

Of all the new works encountered, the least successful, unhappily, was written by the most gifted composer of the three. Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony simply does not come off as a complete work of art. There are dozens of wonderful ideas, the orchestra scampers, does tricks and dodges by the pack, and the piece has a lustrous sound. But nothing happens. The themes fall apart into scrappy and fragmentary heaps, and the instruments seem to tease each other rather than produce a continuum of sonority. Throughout, the symphony chases its own tail. It gets nowhere.

This writer suspects these faults are directly traceable to a basic imbalance between the music and the manner in which it is laid out. The work seems to be conceived for a chamber orchestra and yet is blown up to full symphonic size.

—JAY HARRISON

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Nov. 15—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. HOWARD HANSON: Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky. ALEXEI HAIEFF: Symphony No. 3 (New York Premiere). BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1

The best that can be said in praise of Alexei Haieff's Third Symphony is that it contains some alluring music. In handling his material, Mr. Haieff displays a juggler's skill, keeping the hearer in anticipation. Strong doubts are in order, however, as to whether this initial urge will not wear thin after repeated hearings.

Mr. Haieff is at his best in the two fast movements, to which he gave a definite rhythmic profile; but the slow movement, where the artist's inner self is supposed to emerge, reveals the composer's emotional reticence and his prevalently humoristic approach (incidentally, he titles the movement Narcissus, merely because a mirroring technique is employed in its planning!) now tends to simplicity. In his syntax, Mr. Haieff adheres to the Stravinskian, employs staccato figures, nervous rhythms, disintegrates his lines and distributes the resulting fragments to various instruments. In this latter practice he seems to respond to Webern's appeal, depending on Stravinsky's experiences along the same line instead of being on his own. This gives the work a marked character of eclecticism.

Fred Plaut

Alexei Haieff

Howard Hanson's outspoken romantic, traditionalism results in music of sturdier foundations and, for that matter, of more originality. His Elegy is impregnated with a dignified sentiment and constructed by the sure hand of a fine workman.

Both works were convincingly interpreted. As to the habitual season-opener, the Brahms First, it was given a slick and taut reading.

—Ilhan K. Mimaroglu

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Nov. 18, 2:15—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. COPLAND: Quiet City. DEBUSSY: Iberia. TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 6.

Iberia is a Munch specialty, and the Bostonians gave these Debussy impressions a brilliant, sensuous reading. The Tchaikovsky Symphony had more life and luster than I remember on recent hearings. Mr. Munch kept the tempos in the March-Scherzo at a reasonable pace, and evoked a feeling of genuine pathos in the Adagio lamentoso. A chorus of cheers greeted the conductor and players at the end, something you seldom hear from the Saturday-afternoon subscribers. —Wriston Locklair

84

Seventh Week

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 24, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

MOUSSORGSKY ..... Prelude to Khovanshchina

KIRCHNER ..... Sinfonia
(First performance in Boston)

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82
I. Tempo molto moderato
II. Allegro moderato, ma poco a poco stretto
III. Andante mosso, quasi allegretto
IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18
I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GARY GRAFFMAN
MR. GRAFFMAN plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 25 1961

The Symphony

Fond Memories Of Things Past

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The era of Serge Koussevitzky lives again in Symphony Hall this weekend. Richard Burgin, as guest conductor, has arranged a program that exhales a fond remembrance of things past.

Save for the presence of the Kirchner Sinfonia (and for Kirchner substitute Hanson or Copland, of any one of a dozen then-new Americans whom Koussevitzky had discovered), it might have been 1925, and outside the Hall optimism reigning omniscient. The Khovanshchina was one of the leitmotifs of the Koussevitzky years. And did not Mr. Burgin himself introduce Sibelius, enthusiastically endorsed by the maestro? As for Rachmaninoff . . . .

But this was 1961, and the most important feature of the concert—although the excellent pianism of Gary Graffman ranks beside it in terms of interpretation — was the first Boston performance of the Sinfonia, by Leon Kirchner, who is now Professor of Music at Harvard.

The Sinfonia was composed a decade ago, commissioned by Rodgers and Hammerstein, not customarily regarded in this role, for the League of Composers. Later it received the Naumberg Foundation Award.

The score is not intended as a work of major scope, but reveals the technique of the composer, writing for orchestra, to

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the seventh program of the 81st season Richard Burgin conducting, presented yesterday in Symphony Hall. Gary Graffman, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Prelude to Khovanshchina . . . . Moussorgsky
Sinfonia . . . . Kirchner
Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82 . . . . Sibelius
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18 . . . . Rachmaninoff

be of the highest order. Unlike the Haieff Symphony, heard at the last pair of concerts, the aim is one of depth and complexity, and the music demands several hearings for the full revelation of an intricate and close-knit musical logic.

I think, however, that the first-time listeners may perceive the seriousness of purpose in the Sinfonia's design, catch the power if not the nuance of the artist's thought, and recognize the emotional impetus.

For Kirchner's is not an arid exercise in dissonance. The sonorities are full, the modulations in tempo and dynamics convey tumultuous unrest, a mood of stormy and contending tensions contrasted with the rhapsodic scoring of flute and piano. The slashing rhythms from a necessary part of structure; it is an organic statement.

What I find appealing is the fact that the composer isn't attempting shock effects for the sake of shock. Chromatic idiom and dissonance are used for the sake of the music's growth, not for isolated moments of titillation.

The Sinfonia is extremely broad and subjective in the manner of Expressionist painting; and one is conscious of the intensity, the wealth of feeling poured into the effort. The personal quality of the minor but shapely score projects.

The composer, in the audience, was warmly greeted onstage, and since his writing constitutes a modern off-shoot of post-romanticism, the programming of Rachmaninoff's Second proved beguiling. Mr. Graffman gave it a firm, propulsive outline.

The soloist's large tone, rhythmic valor and general elan proved appropriate to the familiar concerto. His performance sounded fresh and entertaining. Time and Tin Pan Alley have wrought changes, yet the Second refuses to stay banal, and Gary Graffman's treatment of the darkling, virtuosic piece was bravura and sympathetic.

The Sibelius and the Prelude long since established in Boston but in desuetude of late, received splendid readings under Mr. Burgin. The former built to the final chord sequence with a radiant variety of inner detail, a long-sighing line. And the ensemble of the Moussorgsky could hardly be bettered. The violas! The woodwinds! O Koussevitzky, o mores!

Next weekend Ernest Ansermet is guest conductor. Bach's Suite No. 2 finds Doriot Anthony as flute soloist. Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; Debussy's "L'Apres Midi," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition," complete the program.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 19 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday.

At these concerts Burgin will also conduct the Prelude to "Khovantschina" by Moussorgsky, the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and Gary Graffman will be guest artist. In a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff.

Kirchner, formerly professor of music at Mills College and guest composer in the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center (1959), was recently appointed to succeed Walter Piston as professor of music at Harvard University.

Kirchner was awarded the 1949-50 New York Music Critics Circle Award for his String Quartet No. 1 and he received the Naumberg Recording Award for his Piano Concerto which Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic introduced in 1956.

The American pianist Gary Graffman, in addition to his appearances with Burgin in Symphony Hall this week, will be soloist at the Orchestra's concerts in Worcester Sunday, Nov. 26, and in Providence Tuesday, Nov. 28.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 30 1961

At BSO

Burgin Conducts Seventh Program

By ALLAN SLY

Richard Burgin always puts together an intriguing program and last week's (the BSO's seventh) was no exception.

After a tender and meltingly excursion into old Russia — Moussorgski's Khovanshchina Prelude, he plunged us (for the first time) into Leon Kirchner's Sinfonia. New York had lived through this twelve years previously, but Boston comes along, given time. Now that Mr. Kirchner is teaching at Harvard (and he has produced many scores since this one) we should expect to know more of him. He steers a course in between many of today's celebrated mannerisms and defended positions, and hews out a highly individual communication in its own unique terms. The orchestra produces some repellent sounds, but apparently this is a necessary aspect of what Mr. Kirchner has to report of life as he sees it (but not at Harvard, surely?). There are episodes of quietude among the asperities and the whole pithy experience is soon over. More than this I can't say, on a first hearing.

Next we reached back to 1915 for Sibelius' Fifth, though most of us got to know it only in the thirties. Whether it will retain its place in tomorrow's repertoire remains to be seen, but while we still have it, it is probably good for us to visit again its rugged, lonely assertions.

It was never Rachmaninoff's fault that his second concerto (of 1902) has been raided by lesser men as though it were a trunkful of faded stage costumes relegated to the attic. To have conceived this work in the Dresden of 1902 was a superlative accomplishment and the passage of 60 years has added to its lustre, as far as I am concerned. The BSO handled it affectionately — as did the audience. Gary Graffman was an exemplary soloist for it and Mr. Burgin presided with aplomb.

Whatever and whenever Richard Burgin conducts, everything comes off felicitously. His rapport with his colleagues is a joy to observe. The next two programs are to be conducted by Ernest Ansermet.

84

Seventh Week

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 24, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 25, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

MOUSSORGSKY ..... Prelude to Khovanshchina

KIRCHNER ..... Sinfonia

(First performance in Boston)

SIBELIUS ..... Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82

I. Tempo molto moderato
II. Allegro moderato, ma poco a poco stretto
III. Andante mosso, quasi allegretto
IV. Allegro molto

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18

I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GARY GRAFFMAN
Mr. GRAFFMAN plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
NOV 25 1961

The Symphony

Fond Memories Of Things Past

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The era of Serge Koussevitzky lives again in Symphony Hall this weekend. Richard Burgin, as guest conductor, has arranged a program that exhales a fond remembrance of things past.

Save for the presence of the Kirchner Sinfonia (and for Kirchner substitute Hanson or Copland, of any one of a dozen then-new Americans whom Koussevitzky had discovered), it might have been 1925, and outside the Hall optimism reigning omniscient. The Khovanshchina was one of the leitmotifs of the Koussevitzky years. And did not Mr. Burgin himself introduce Sibelius, enthusiastically endorsed by the maestro? As for Rachmaninoff . . . .

But this was 1961, and the most important feature of the concert—although the excellent pianism of Gary Graffman ranks beside it in terms of interpretation — was the first Boston performance of the Sinfonia, by Leon Kirchner, who is now Professor of Music at Harvard.

The Sinfonia was composed a decade ago, commissioned by Rodgers and Hammerstein, not customarily regarded in this role, for the League of Composers. Later it received the Naumberg Foundation Award.

The score is not intended as a work of major scope, but reveals the technique of the composer, writing for orchestra, to

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, the seventh program of the 81st season Richard Burgin conducting, presented yesterday in Symphony Hall Gary Graffman, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Prelude to Khovanshchina....Moussorgsky
Sinfonia.....Kirchner
Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, Op. 82.....Sibelius
Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18.....Rachmaninoff

be of the highest order. Unlike the Haieff Symphony, heard at the last pair of concerts, the aim is one of depth and complexity, and the music demands several hearings for the full revelation of an intricate and close-knit musical logic.

I think, however, that the first-time listeners may perceive the seriousness of purpose in the Sinfonia's design, catch the power if not the nuance of the artist's thought, and recognize the emotional impetus.

For Kirchner's is not an arid exercise in dissonance.. The sonorities are full, the modulations in tempo and dynamics convey tumultuous unrest, a mood of stormy and contending tensions contrasted with the rhapsodic scoring of flute and piano. The slashing rhythms from a necessary part of structure; it is an organic statement.

What I find appealing is the fact that the composer isn't attempting shock effects for the sake of shock. Chromatic idiom and dissonance are used for the sake of the music's growth, not for isolated moments of titillation.

The Sinfonia is extremely broad and subjective in the manner of Expressionist painting; and one is conscious of the intensity, the wealth of feeling poured into the effort. The personal quality of the minor but shapely score projects.

The composer, in the audience, was warmly greeted onstage, and since his writing constitutes a modern off-shoot of post-romanticism, the programming of Rachmaninoff's Second proved beguiling. Mr. Graffman gave it a firm, propulsive outline.

The soloist's large tone, rhythmic valor and general elan proved appropriate to the familiar concerto. His performance sounded fresh and entertaining. Time and Tin Pan Alley have wrought changes, yet the Second refuses to stay banal, and Gary Graffman's treatment of the darkling, virtuosic piece was bravura and sympathetic.

The Sibelius and the Prelude, long since established in Boston but in desuetude of late, received splendid readings under Mr. Burgin. The former built to the final chord sequence with a radiant variety of inner detail, a long, sighing line. And the ensemble of the Moussorgsky could hardly be bettered. The violas! The woodwinds! O Koussevitzky, o mores!

Next weekend Ernest Ansermet is guest conductor. Bach's Suite No. 2 finds Doriot Anthony as flute soloist. Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; Debussy's "L'Apres Midi," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition," complete the program.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 19 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts Friday and Saturday.

At these concerts Burgin will also conduct the Prelude to "Khovantschina" by Moussorgsky, the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and Gary Graffman will be guest artist. In a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff.

Kirchner, formerly professor of music at Mills College and guest composer in the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center (1959), was recently appointed to succeed Walter Piston as professor of music at Harvard University.

Kirchner was awarded the 1949-50 New York Music Critics Circle Award for his String Quartet No. 1 and he received the Naumberg Foundation Award for his Piano Concerto, which Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic introduced in 1956.

The American pianist Gary Graffman, in addition to his appearances with Burgin in Symphony Hall this week, will be soloist at the Orchestra's concerts in Worcester Sunday, Nov. 26, and in Providence Tuesday, Nov 28.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 30 1961

At BSO

Burgin Conducts Seventh Program

By ALLAN SLY

Richard Burgin always puts together an intriguing program and last week's (the BSO's seventh) was no exception.

After a tender and reminiscent excursion into old Russia — Moussorgski's Khovanshchina Prelude, he plunged us (for the first time) into Leon Kirchner's Sinfonia. New York had lived through this twelve years previously, but Boston comes along, given time. Now that Mr. Kirchner is teaching at Harvard (and he has produced many scores since this one) we should expect to know more of him. He steers a course in between many of today's celebrated mannerisms and defended positions, and hews out a highly individual communication in its own unique terms. The orchestra produces some repellent sounds, but apparently this is a necessary aspect of what Mr. Kirchner has to report of life as he sees it (but not at Harvard, surely?). There are episodes of quietude among the asperities and the whole pithy experience is soon over. More than this I can't say, on a first hearing.

Next we reached back to 1915 for Sibelius' Fifth, though most of us got to know it only in the thirties. Whether it will retain its place in tomorrow's repertoire remains to be seen, but while we still have it, it is probably good for us to visit again its rugged, lonely assertions.

It was never Rachmaninoff's fault that his second concerto (of 1902) has been raided by lesser men as though it were a trunkful of faded stage costumes relegated to the attic. To have conceived this work in the Dresden of 1902 was a superlative accomplishment and the passage of 60 years has added to its lustre, as far as I am concerned. The BSO handled it affectionately — as did the audience. Gary Graffman was an exemplary soloist for it and Mr. Burgin presided with aplomb.

Whatever and whenever Richard Burgin conducts, everything comes off felicitously. His rapport with his colleagues is a joy to observe. The next two programs are to be conducted by Ernest Ansermet.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

Burgin Leads Symphony; Graffman Piano Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 7:30, the seventh program of the Friday–Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantachina;" first Boston performance of the Sinfonia by Leon Kirchner; the Symphony No. 5, in E-flat major, by Sibelius, and the C minor Piono Concerto of Rachmaninoff, with Gary Graffman as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week making his second appearances of the season, brings to first local performance a Sinfonia by Leon Kirchner. The composer, now a professor at Harvard, first came to attention here in Feb., 1960, when he conducted the Boston premiere of his Toccata, a work which won favorable recognition.

The Sinfonia, completed in 1949-50 upon a Rodgers and Hammerstein commission for the League of Composers, is an earlier work than the Toccata. Originally in two padts, the Sinfonia as performed yesterday consisted only of the first part. It is pure abstraction, solidly built and full of substance. It has much of the rhythmic drive, the fragmentation of musical discourse and of orchestral use, that characterizes the Toccata.

But where the Toccata is a work of expertise and of considerable expressive power, the Sinfonia impressed me as less masterful, both in technic and character. That is to say, upon first hearing. This is not the sort of musical art that is to be perceived whole or in detail quickly. There is too much going on in it for that. Nonetheless, it seems that Kirchner was not then the composer he proved to be five years later when he created the Toccata.

Yet the Sinfonia reveals something of the same attributes — the very dissonant idiom, vigor amounting to passion, and a manner highly individual. Also the logic of construction, which is a most important aspect of this composer. How much there may be of 12-tone practice here one could not say upon this brief acquaintance, but it is evident that there is none of the mechanical involvements of the system in strict usage. This is music, not academic theory which looks nice on paper and sounds like nothing. The composer bowed from the stage to cordial applause.

Much variety characterizes Burgin's program this week, from the orchestral landscape of Moussorgsky, through Kirchner, the Sibelius Fifth and the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto. Considering the big ovation Gary Graffman received after his strong singing performance of Rachmaninoff, it was obvious that the Friday subscribers like that familiar item of late romanticism quite the best.

My own highest enjoyment in the course of a notably pleasurable afternoon, was the first performance here in almost 10 years, of Sibelius' E-flat Symphony. The popularity of the mighty Finn has flowed and ebbed over the past three decades, but his music remains the same, in the case of this Symphony a masterwork wholly original in its sparse texture, dark colors, poetic evocation of mood and real melodic song. In its displaced accents arising from the rhythmic patterns which move above the metrical stresses, this is an exceedingly tricky piece.

Yesterday's performance was eloquent, but it was not the best that Burgin has managed. There were little untidinesses, late entrances, less than good balance of orchestral sections from time to time. But the tempi were right from start to finish, and the very wide spacing of those last six chords made a very dramatic ending.

Moussorgsky and Rachmaninoff were set forth to near-perfection. At least if anything went wrong it was not apparent out front. The deep admiration the Boston Symphony players have for Burgin was ignificantly shown when, during the cheers and applause that followed the Piano Concerto, the Orchestra arose when the conductor was returning to the stage, to add their own handclapping to that of the audience.

Ernest Ansermet will be guest conductor for the next two weeks. His first program will bring Bach's B minor Suite with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in the orchestration by Ravel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

NOV 19 1961

Burgin Conducts Symphony

Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. He will present the Prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovantschina"; first Boston performances of the Sinfonia by Leon Kirchner; the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto in C minor, with Gary Graffman soloist.

Burgin also will conduct the concert Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Sanders Theater, Cambridge. Brahms: "Academic Festival" Overture; Bartok: Four Pieces for Orchestra; Shostakovitch: Fifth Symphony.

Ernest Ansermet, the eminent Swiss conductor, will return for another two weeks as guest at the concerts of Dec. 1 and 2. His program then will bring Bach's Suite in B minor; the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly . Circ. 14,500

NOV 21 1961

Burgin To Conduct Kirchner's "Sinfonia" At Hub Symphony

Richard Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's "Sinfonia" at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts Friday (Nov. 24, 2:15) — Saturday (Nov. 25, 8:30). At these concerts Mr. Burgin will also conduct the Prelude to "Khovantschina" by Moussorgsky, the Symphony No. 5 by Sibelius and Gary Graffman will be guest artist in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff.

Mr. Kirchner, formerly Professor of Music at Mills College (Oakland, California) and guest composer in the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center (1959), was recently appointed to succeed Walter Piston as Professor of Music at Harvard University. Mr. Kirchner was awarded the 1949-50 New York Music Critics Circle Award for his String Quartet No. 1 and he received the Naumberg Recording Award for his Piano Concerto which Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York Philharmonic introduced in 1956. The Boston Symphony Orchestra — conducted by Mr. Kirchner — performed his "Toccata for Strings, Solo Winds and Percussion" in Boston and in New York during the 1959-60 season.

The American pianist Gary Graffman, in addition to his appearances with Mr. Burgin in Symphony Hall this week, will be soloist at the Orchestra's concerts in Worcester Sunday (November 26) and in Providence Tuesday (November 28).

Ernest Ansermet, Director of the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for thirteen concerts and one open rehearsal in December. At the Symphony Hall concerts of December 1, 2, 3 and 5 (Friday - Saturday, Sunday, Tuesday) Mr. Ansermet will conduct the Bach Suite No. 2 with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as his soloist, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, the Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition".

Complete program:

Friday, Nov. 24, 2:15; Saturday, Nov. 25, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Richard Burgin conducting: Moussorgsky — Prelude to "Khovantschina", Kirchmer — Sinfonia; Sibelius — Symphony No. 5, in E-flat major, Op 82; Rachmaninoff — Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18. Soloist: Gary Graffman.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

NOV 12 1961

Symphony Programs

Richard Burgin will conduct the next concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30, Nov. 24 and 25. This coming week the orchestra will be away on tour.

Mr. Burgin will present Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantschina", first Boston performances of the Sinfonia by Leon Kirchner; the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2, with Gary Graffman as soloist.

The Tuesday evening concert of Nov. 21 at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, also will be conducted by Burgin, as follows: "Academic Festival" Overture, Brahms; Four Pieces for Orchestra, Bartok; Fifth Symphony, Shostakovitch.

Ernest Ansermet, a frequent guest here in the past, will return for the two weeks of Dec. 1 and 2, 8 and 9. His initial program will consist of the Bach Suite No. 2, in B minor; the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

86

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
NOV 25 1961

Kirchner Music in Boston Première

11-61

Richard Burgin on Podium; Graffman as Piano Soloist

By Harold Rogers

Richard Burgin seldom offers a program that boasts neither a Boston première nor a world première, and his program for the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend is running to form. He is presenting the first Boston performance of Leon Kirchner's Sinfonia. It is a short work—perhaps not more than ten minutes long—so the ears of the traditionalists could hardly have been outraged beyond endurance; and those of us who welcome a foray into aural exercise were pleased.

♪ ♪ ♪

Mr. Kirchner has recently joined the faculty of the Harvard Department of Music; the addition of a composer of his caliber to the Boston scene is surely a piece of good fortune. He is a man of ideas who possesses the means to put them in action; his Sinfonia is a fine example of his trenchant musical speech, his flow of musical emotion.

In the concert bulletin Mr. Kirchner is quoted as saying that he doesn't think that "an analysis of the type which usually appears in program notes can help the listener to a finer and deeper appreciation of the score," to which at least one music lover can say amen. He accordingly gives us no analysis, prefering rather that our attention be concentrated on the organic growth of the work as a whole.

♪ ♪ ♪

It would be quite useless to seek any traditional sense of form in Mr. Kirchner's Sinfonia; it its single movement it follows no succession of sustained moods as many other one-movement symphonies do; it is rather put together in one piece of some six or seven parts of stress and relaxation, beginning with a mood that is almost a nocturne and which quickly tightens itself into a knot of frenetic, nervous energy. This in turn subsides into serenity, only to rise again into a mountain of tension. And so it went, with a lovely lyrical flute singing forth at one point, only to be swallowed up again in another harrassment of sound. The piece ends as serenely as it began.

♪ ♪ ♪

As for style, Mr. Kirchner lies somewhere between the country explored by Bartók on the one hand and Schoenberg on the other. He has a truly poetic, gift of contemplation and the ability of an expressionist to evocate spasms of anguish. He was present at the Symphony Hall performance yesterday afternoon and was duly applauded.

Apart from the Kirchner, the program ranged through the glorious effusions of Mussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanschchina," redolent, as usual, with seething aspiration; of Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, with its sweeping themes and sunbursts of chordal brasses; and of the grandiloquent schmalz of Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

♪ ♪ ♪

Mr. Burgin, holding forth while Charles Munch is on his mid-winter vacation, was in rare form, giving the orchestra full rein and letting it sing its head off. The Sibelius Fifth was long overdue for a return to Symphony Hall; a favorite of Koussevitzky's and Bernstein's, it has been almost a decade since Bernstein last conducted it at these concerts.

When Mr. Burgin launched into the Rachmaninoff, there were times when the orchestra threatened to swallow up Gary Graffman, the soloist; but Mr. Graffman was equal to the demand. He simply fought back in brilliant fashion, losing none of his ability to make the piano sing. Thus the final effect was one of magnificent collaboration; and the listeners, in their turn, responded in kind.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
NOV 29 1961

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Performs Russian Composers' Works

By RUTH TRIPP

Richard Burgin conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening in a program of music by Russian composers. The large, enthusiastic audience at Veterans Memorial Auditorium acclaimed his artistic work and the evening may well be remembered as one of the finest programs ever guided by his baton.

Gary Graffman, pianist, was the guest artist and his performance also was a superlative one.

Late comers kept the conductor from starting as soon as he arrived on the stage. It was easy to understand why absolute silence was required when the delicate notes of Moussorgsky's lovely Prelude to Act I of "Khovanshchina" floated through the air. The artistry of this short bit of orchestral magic was exactly right to set the atmosphere for the warm, appealing Rachmaninoff score which followed.

Gary Graffman is a pianist with all the qualifications of greatness. His performance of the Rachmaninoff Concerto in C minor, No. 2, was a remarkably fine demonstration of the power of communication. His music said many things to many people. His complete understanding of the structure of this difficult work made his playing alternately a part of the orchestra and then again, a glorious singing solo instrument.

The moods of the music ran the gamut from deep despair to exaltation. The middle movement was perhaps the most moving and those of us who are old enough to have heard the composer play were reminded of Rachmaninoff's own sensitive interpretations. Graffman finished the last brilliant chord of his concerto and the audience shouted its approval. He and Richard Burgin were recalled several times.

The second high point of the evening came with the fine performance of Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovich. The orchestra played with exceptional brilliance and control. The Allegretto was perfectly charming and almost as vivid as a ballet. The deepest musical expression of the entire evening came in the inspired Largo of this symphony, which, for me, is one of the great pieces of writing of this century. I was reminded of the Russian composer who spoke in his native tongue, at the International Composers Conference two summers ago, in Stratford, Ontario. He made a plea for "music with a soul" and he spoke with such sincerity that it almost made one ashamed to have been found expressing interest in the artificial and mechanical electronic compositions which were being extolled to such a high degree. Richard Burgin could not have known about this speech. He would have been busy at Tanglewood at the time. Yet he acted as interpreter for Shostakovich last evening and brought us this Largo as "music with a soul." Perhaps music is the voice which will ultimately speak and be heard universally. Who knows?

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 28,133
NOV 29 1961

Music In Review

Piano Virtuoso Acclaimed AtBostonSymphonyConcert

Gary Graffman proved to his audience last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Veterans Memorial Auditorium that he is a piano virtuoso of first magnitude. And at the conclusion of his performance of Rachmaninoff's "Concerto No. 2 in C Minor," he was given cheers and unabating applause until he had taken five curtain calls.

♦♦♦

IN THE GLORIOUS first movement, moderato, he showed his virtuosity in warm embracing sound in the lyric passages, and a measured grace and elegant precision in the swifter phrases that were played without dash and glitter. Combined with an orchestral accompaniment that was gently driven and sensitively restrained by the knowing and understanding direction of Richard Burgin, it was a gem of eloquence set in a luxurious richness of harmony.

The adagio sostenuto, second movement with its serene flute obligato and singing backdrop of woodwinds, brought breathless silence to the crowded auditorium. And the finale, allegro scherzando with its promise, and fulfillment, of joy and enlivening drama, proved his mastery of the delayed attack and the eloquent pause. It brought the cheers from the listeners and the flood of applause.

♦♦♦

THE OPENING WORK was Moussorgsky's "Prelude to Khovanshchina," which set the mood for the evening with its persuasive gentleness that Mr. Burgin so aptly expressed.

Shostakovitch was the third Russian composer to be heard in one evening and his "Symphony No. 5" [illegible] combined the contemporary with the traditional in a sonorous and buoyant masterpiece.

C. H. L.

Worcester Concert

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
NOV 27 1961

Music:
Boston Symphony At Auditorium

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Worcester Civic Music audience was privileged to hear one of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's most glowing performances yesterday afternoon at the Auditorium. This was the opening concert of Civic Music's 32nd season.

Conductor was Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra. Gary Graffman was soloist in Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Opus 18.

Orchestral works were the Prelude to Act I from Moussorgsky's opera, "Khovanshchina" and Symphony No. 5, Opus 47, by Shostakovich.

Delicate, but Durable

No orchestra short of the Boston's standard could have made music of such moment with Moussorgsky's scanty prelude. Burgin managed to turn its opening phrases into delicate, but durable, fiber.

A real atmosphere was immediately set, not only of the opera but of Moussorgsky's style — rhythmic, plodding backgrounds to richly modal melody.

The eminence of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony was, to a considerable degree, a product of Burgin. He is neither a self-effacing nor an ambiguous director. Certainly the Shostakovich opens the door wide for podium histrionics. Burgin is too concerned with the music to indulge in such nonsense.

What one heard was a Shostakovich Fifth of bredth, sensitivity, intense power (even in the dynamically restricted scherzo) — and core-deep musicianship.

Pompous Oratory

The fast movements had vision. There was no disguising the pomous oratory of the opening movement. Conductor and orchestra were as meticulous in treating its veiled passages as in giving full vent to tart sonorities — rampant, murky, muddy passages.

Machinelike rhythms of the allegretto were loaded with engergy. Clear-sailing melody was at a premium sometimes, but not in solos by concertmaster Alfred Krips, flute by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and horn by James Stagliano. Quite heroism prevailed in the slow movement, engaging the strings in their most lavish sounds.

We've heard greater piano performances of the Rachmaninoff Second, but never a more sumptuous participation by orchestra.

Performance With Plan

Graffman is not only an excellent pianist, but a fine musician. One might not have agreed with some of his philosophy in the concerto, but clearly the young man meant every note of it. Any argument, therefore, becomes a matter of personal opinion, there were no wide digressions from the score.

He played the opening piano chords with unusual deliberation. Thereafter, orchestra and conductor gave Graffman powerful incentives.

The pianist was technically accurate. He showed concern over melody-production and achieved sounds extending from the lyrical sections of the slow movement (also played at ritarded tempos) to fistfuls of chords in the martial section of the first movement and rushing drive of the finale.

The total performance had elan and clear articulation. The real excitement was in the finale, established first by the orchestra. Graffman displayed excellent poise in not becoming engulfed in the tempest and it was as well that Burgin chose to accelerate the tempo at the end.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
NOV 19 1961

Boston Symphony To Appear Sunday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will come to Worcester next Sunday for a concert at 3 p.m. in the Auditorium. It will be the first program in the 1961-62 season of the Worcester Civic Music Association.

Gary Graffman, internationally known American-born pianist, will be an added feature. Graffman, 33, has in the past five years made eight European tours, two South American tours, one South African tour, plus a concert trip around the world.

He has made eight solo appearances with the Boston Symphony in the past six months.

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor since 1943, will direct. Conductor Charles Munch, now in his farewell season, will be unable to appear. He is under doctors' orders to ease his schedule, according to Henry B. Dewey, Civic Music president.

The concert will be open to all Civic Music members who newly subscribed or renewed their listing with the association during its Membership Week last spring.

RICHARD BURGIN
To Conduct

The Boston Symphony is in its 81st season. It gave three Worcester concerts in its second season and has often returned to the city, in recent years under Civic Music auspices.

Burgin has been a member of the orchestra for half of its lifetime. He was engaged as concertmaster in 1920 by Conductor Pierre Monteux. The late Serge Koussevitsky appointed him assistant conductor in 1935 and associate conductor eight years later.

He is a native of Warsaw, made his concert debut with the Warsaw Philharmonic at the age of 11, and studied under both Joachim and Leopold Auer.

Burgin regularly conducts the Boston Symphony for several weeks each season in Boston and on tour. He is in charge of chamber music at the Berkshire Music Center, summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,860
NOV 27 1961

Civic Music Opener Is Outstanding

By JOHN F. KEYES
Gazette Music Critic

The first event of the Worcester Civic Music Association season yesterday was outstanding. The size and enthusiasm of the audience made plain the pleasure Worcester felt to be hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra once again.

Though Charles Munch is taking things a little easier, on the advice of his physician, Richard Burgin's conducting yesterday left no cause for grumbling. The orchestra was kept up to a good level of technique. Burgin's interpretations were well-conceived and his leadership was workmanlike.

Especially was there cause for rejoicing in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, where the pianist Gary Graffman and Burgin cooperated with notable efficiency. Climactic passages were resounding and thrilling without being noisy, and the gentler pages revealed clear-cut handling of details and a nice feeling of emotion without bombast. Graffman impressed as being an outstanding soloist happily free from the prima donna attitude of many keyboard egotists.

Three Eras

The all-Russian program covered three eras. First came the Moussorgsky Prelude to Act I of "Khovanshchina" (spelled as per the program notes), a 19th century composer's painting of events which happened in the 16th or 17th century. This music was not mournful, but was introspective in its depiction of outdoor scenes. The mood was one of prefacing, and fulfillment came in the piano concerto immediately afterward.

The second era was that of White Russia in the early present century, as exemplified by Rachmaninoff, "the last of the romantics." The familiar "Second" Concerto made a good oasis for the average listener.

Runs Gamut

I was much pleased to hear the Shostakovich Symphony No. 5, a modern work with considerable popular appeal. This symphony runs the gamut from strong accents and lively masses of tone, down to slow and sweet finedrawn harmonies. It is often exciting and elsewhere, seldom gets really off the ground; one would hesitate to call it inspired. Nevertheless, it helps to accustom ears to modern approaches, and paves the way for enjoyment of music thought to be unpalatable a few years ago.

The drums and other percussion dvices had a field-day in this symphony, but it remained for the "Largo" movement to remind us that modern composers seem to be least dissonant when the tempo is reduced.

88

Eighth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
NOV 30 1961

Two-Volume Work Completed

Ansermet Philosophizes on Music

By CYRUS DURGIN

When Swiss conductor Ernest Ansermet arrived here for his three weeks as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his luggage included some exceedingly valuable possessions. Nothing taxable or that the customs people would be curious about, but the page proofs of a book which he has been writing for the past 20 years.

Ansermet had alluded to the book when last this chronicler talked with him at Symphony Hall five years ago. But very casually, for he was still in the process of work. Last Spring Ansermet finished it, and next week it will be published by a Swiss house, in French. Italian and German translations are arranged for, but an edition in English has yet to be planned.

"I call it 'The Foundation of Music in Human Consciousness'," said the slight, white-bearded musician, as he sat down yesterday afternoon in a green leather chair in the conductor's room at Symphony Hall.

He was attired in a faultlessly-tailored gray suit, with the rosette of a decoration in his lapel. From his vivacity of manner, and the way his eyes danced as he spoke, you would not have thought that Ansermet passed his 78th birthday the 11th of this month.

"My book is in two volumes," he continued, lighting a cigarette and settling down for what proved to be serious but lively talk. "It is based on the philosophical conception called phenomenology, developed by the Moravian-Jewish philosopher Husserl, who Hitler chased out of Germany. Husserl and Sartre have written the best on this. There are few phenomenologists in this country, for phenomenology disagrees with the philosophy of most Anglo-Saxon people; but you have a few, and one of them is at Brandeis University. Phenomenology is the enemy of psychology.

"Up to now it has been impossible to make objective judgment of music. Everything has been subjective, for Beethoven's Fifth Symphony may signify something to one person and something quite different to another. We have had no way, no criterion, no etymology—thas is, the right words — to make objective judgment.

"What I have done is to prove that all music has a basis in that part of mathematics known as logarithms. I have discovered that we really hear music logarithmically, that our scales, intervals, counterpoint and harmony all can be proved in terms of logarithms."

For Ansermet, who was professor of mathematics of opera, symphony and ballet, it was no effort to pencil out numbers rapidly on the margin of a Symphony program book and explain what he meant.

ERNEST ANSERMET

His principles also analyze the process of hearing and set forth what he considers natural laws of hearing. Then comes the point where scientific principles carry over into thepsychic effect of music upon the listener, and then into the expressive effect of music.

He sang snatches of Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, of "La was horrified. Then I said: Marseillaise" and, of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, as he demonstrated how the precise nature of every element of music, including rhythm, is provable on a logarithmic basis.

Not the least of what Ansermet has done is to prove that atonal music, that of the 12-tone scale and serial technic—which he always has disliked—violates both the natural law of hearing and the logarithmic theory.

"Three years ago I mentioned this to Stravinsky, who

'Suppose you took the syllables of the words in a sentence, each syllable representing a musical note in the 12-tone system." I forget what sentence I used, but today let us take 'Welcome, Jack Kennedy!' Six syllables. You give one syllable to one speaker, and in succession they say 'Welcome, Jack Kennedy'. But if they all speak their syllables at once, would it make any sense?

"Stravinsky paused, reflected, said 'No, but it would be very effective!' Well, that is 12-tone music!"

Ansermet smiled, laughed, stubbed out his cigarette and the conversation was over.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
DEC 7 1961

Ernest Ansermet Named to Conduct Open Rehearsal

Ernest Ansermet will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third of this season's open rehearsals at Symphony Hall today at 7:30 p.m. The two - hour public rehearsal will be in preparation for the concerts which are scheduled to consist of compositions by Brahms, Frank Martin and de Falla.

Tickets, all seats unreserved, to the rehearsals are $2.00 per rehearsal or $12.00 for the series of eight rehearsals scheduled for the remainder of this season. Symphony Hall officials have announced this special season ticket rate will not be offered after tonight's rehearsal.

Tickets to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's open rehearsals — the only activity of the orchestra for which tickets are still available — are on sale at the Symphony Hall box office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 2 1961

'Very Effective'

Boston

Ernest Ansermet, who is in town for two weeks as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, spoke during a press interview of a recent meeting with Igor Stravinsky.

M. Ansermet, a long-time proponent of contemporary music through his Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, has just completed an exhaustive book which—among other things—raises certain questions about the 12-tone technique. Mr. Stravinsky has of late joined the ranks of composers using this technique, whereby the tone-row of a given piece may be used vertically, as a chord, as well as melodically.

"Suppose, Igor," explained M. Ansermet, "you had several actors on a stage and wanted them all to say 'Jack Kennedy.' You tell the first actor to say 'J-,' the second '-a-,' the third '-ck-,' and so on until each sound is taken care of. Then you have them say it all at once, like a chord. Would it make any sense?"

"Of course not," answered Mr. Stravinsky, "but you'll have to admit it would be very effective."

L. C.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
DEC 2 1961

Stunning 'Pictures' Conducted by Ansermet

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the eighth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Ernest Ansermet, as guest, conducted Bach's B minor Suite, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; the Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

By CYRUS DURGIN

A stunning performance of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in the orchestration of Ravel, ended the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. A shock wave of applause and cheers rushed through Symphony Hall toward the stage, where guest conductor Ernest Ansermet stood bowing.

This brilliant account of purely representational music clothed in rainbow orchestration, interpreted straightforwardly without tricks or showmanship, but with enormous vigor, was the peak and crown of a superlative afternoon. Ansermet is both a scholarly and an emotional conductor, an honest master of his art, and we are most fortunate to have him with us again.

Bach of the B minor Suite was impeccably turned: clear, just the right speed and style for each of the multiple movements; grace and warmth in all. Doriot Anthony Dwyer once again brought a virtuoso's touch to the solo flute part of the Badinerie, and was repeatedly brought back for merited solo bows by the courtly Swiss conductor. He later repeated his gesture of admiration after Mrs. Dwyer's work in Debussy's mood music of languorous sensuality.

★ ★ ★

Indeed, there was much excellent solo playing throughout this concert and not the least of it came from the percussion section — those brief but ever-so-important delicate touches of the tiny finger cymbals from Messrs. Smith and Press in "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun", and the work of the entire section in the "Pictures." Not to forget, either, the fine singing of the troubador by Mr. Tapley's saxophone and Mr. Walt's bassoon, in the same work.

We may also thank Mr. Ansermet for reviving the Stravinsky Symphony in Three Movements, after a local shelving of nearly 14 years. Not so much that it is exceptional music, as it is a certain distance marker in the career of the man whom Virgil Thomson, years ago distinguishing between the two Igors, Markevitch and Stravinsky, called "Big Igor."

To bound it roughly, the Symphony in Three Movements came after the Symphony in C major and before the composer's decline and fall into serial technic. The Symphony in Three Movements is juicy where the C major Symphony is dry, warm where the other is icy, possessed of instrumental color where the other is dusty-gray, tonal where "Agon" and the Canticum Sacrum are atonal if not quite invertebrate.

This juice, warmth, color and tonality collectively produce a catalysis which renders all the more powerful Stravinsky's enormously clever play of rhythm. The little touch of drollery, when Stravinsky uses that waggish tune from "The Barber of Seville" at the beginning of the slow movement, adds a humanity less discernable in the later Stravinsky.

In short, the Symphony in Three Movements is one of "Big Igor's" finer works, and it is a pleasure to hear it again—especially in the perspective of time. Even the shock value of the heavy accents in the first movement make more sense than once they did.

Next week Ansermet will present Brahms' Symphony No. 2, in D major; Overture and Four Etudes for Orchestra (first time in Boston) by the Swiss Frank Martin, and the Suite from the Ballet "Three-Cornered Hat," Manuel de Falla.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

—Ansermet Guest at Symphony

The Symphony

Routine Program, Finely Conducted

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Returning to the Boston Symphony yesterday for the first time in five years, the distinguished Swiss conductor, Ernest Ansermet, of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, made his presence felt by a noble interpretation of an otherwise routine program.

Mr. Ansermet is one of the Modern Old Masters of contemporary conducting, occupying a place with Monteux, and until recently, Beecham, roughly similar to that of Braque, Picasso, and until recently, Matisse, in painting. Although he was born in 1883, this elegant, bearded man with a silvery tonsure, remains one of the absolute monarchs of his art, his vitality undimmed.

His conducting style combines the visionary and inspirational qualities of Munch—via the eloquent left hand—with the detached simplicities of Monteux—via the firm beat—with an intellectual refinement of his own. Boston had a chance to witness his brilliance over three months, a decade ago, when he came to the rescue of the then-ailing Dr. Munch; and yesterday's concert elapsed on that same shining level.

Sound Concepts

By positioning the 'cellos at right foreground, Mr. Ansermet was able to insure an orchestral balance that seemed to accord with his personal sound concepts, weightier than usual yet retaining the essential character of a French ensemble in terms of clarity and detail. Save for the Bach Suite, which required the Bach orchestra, this imparted crispness and strength.

The trouble with the B minor suite, it seemed to me, lay in the inflated string body. The performance was suave, and demonstrated the polish of the players and soloist. It was, however, a curiously mellow Bach, filtered to us through post-romantic lushness, and lacking the glittering astringency of the composer.

When von Karajan, conducting from the harpsichord, offered the same suite with the Berliners here several weeks ago, the B minor was heard in truer perspective. The chamber grouping of the strings permitted the harpsichord to be voiced—as it was not in this account—and the flute solo of Karl-Heinz Zoller soared in high relief.

Solo Flute

Except for the Badinerie, there was little to indicate that Bach had written for solo flute yesterday, since it only emerged briefly from the tutti, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's delightful virtuosity was demonstrated far more compellingly in "L'Apres Midi."

The rest of the program, though, found Mr. Ansermet achieving radiant results. I share Roman Vlad's opinion that the Symphony In Three Movements represents a Stravinsky-ian assimilation of the Brahms Third.

A body of work in which the composer went to Handel's secular oratorios for "Oedipus Rex," to Gabrieli and his school for the Octet, to Tchaikovsky for "The Fairy's Kiss," to C. P. E. Bach for the Sonata, is not likely to suddenly ignore tradition. Stravinsky sees the future as an extension of the past.

In any case, this beguiling minor opus, the one novel aspect of the program, with its shifting dialogue of piano-harp, crystallized into an animated, spontaneous whole. Mr. Ansermet's tempos, his blending of tone and texture, supplied the impulse for a sprightly, clean-cut performance.

Old Scores

His treatment of the Debussy and the "Pictures At An Exhibition" showed his gift even more persuasively. Who would have thought the old scores had so much sparkle in them? The enchanted atmosphere of the Afternoon of a Faun, in which a scrim might have been dropped before the aural scene, held limpid grace.

The dash, the ease, the abundance of color, the scrupulous lines of The Pictures, revealed the contour of years of experience and sensibility; and as the Great Gate of Kiev rose massively, so did our spirits.

Next week Mr. Ansermet presents the first Boston performance of Frank Martin's "Etudes for String Archestra"; Brahms's second, in D, and Falla's Suite from "El Sobrero de Tres Picos."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphoy Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet conducting, presented the eighth concert of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, was the soloist in Bach's Suite. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Suite No. 2, in B minor for flute and strings ..... Bach
Sym. In Three Movements ... Stravinsky
Prelude a 'l'Apres-midi d'une Faune' ..... Debussy
"Pictures at an Exhibition" ..... Moussorgsky-Ravel

Familiar Program Has Its Downs and Its Ups

By Harold Rogers

Ernest Ansermet—a grand old man of music if there ever was one—has returned to the Symphony Hall podium for two weeks while Charles Munch is on his winter vacation. His program yesterday afternoon, to be repeated tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night, is easy to assimilate—perhaps a little too easy, or a little too familiar.

He may not have been told that Herbert von Karajan led the Berlin Philharmonic in an impeccable traversal of Bach's Suite No. 2 for flute and strings only a few weeks ago; and by comparison, odious as it may be, the Boston Symphony's performance yesterday was easy-going, rambling, even a bit cluttered.

♪ ♪ ♪

Though billed as soloist and hailed as such at the conclusion, Doriot Anthony Dwyer was seated with the rest of the musicians, her flute swallowed up most of the time in what appeared to be more of a rehearsal than a performance. Call it ingratiating informal chamber music, if you please; it was hardly more.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, though bright in color and sprightly in rhythm, also gave one the sensation that it was being assembled on the spot. It had hardly the crystalline reading it should have had.

But after the intermission all was suddenly turned right. M. Ansermet's way with Debussy's "Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune", was paved with rose petals—sheer tonal poetry in shimmering sound. Again the conductor singled out Mrs. Dwyer for special applause.

♪ ♪ ♪

And what can one say of Ravel's arrangement of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition"? Apart from the fact that it is heard too often in Symphony Hall, one can say that M. Ansermet squeezed it of every last ounce of drama.

My own response would have been 100 per cent positive were it not for the callow young man sitting behind me who insisted on singing along with the brasses. Not that I would have minded his singing had he been on key. M. Ansermet can share no blame for this, unless, of course, he made the music so exciting that the young man couldn't resist taking part.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

NOV 25 1961

Ansermet Conducts 4 Concerts by BSO

Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor during Charles Munch's December vacation, has asked Doriot Anthony Dwyer to be his guest artist at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 p. m., next Saturday at 8:30 p. m., Sunday at 3 p. m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

Mrs. Dwyer, the orchestra's first flute, will be heard in Bach's Suite No. 2, for Flute and Strings. The remainder of Mr. Ansermet's program at these concerts will consist of the Symphony in Three Movements by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition," by Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 2, at 8:30 o'clock

ERNEST ANSERMET, Guest Conductor

BACH ..... Suite No. 2, in B minor, for Flute and Strings

I. Overture
II. Rondeau
III. Sarabande
IV. Bourrées I and II
V. Polonaise and Double
VI. Menuett
VII. Badinerie

Flute Solo: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY ..... "Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune"
(Eclogue by Stéphane Mallarmé)

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade – Gnomus – Promenade – Il vecchio castello – Tuileries – Bydlo – Promenade – Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells – Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle – Limoges: The Marketplace – Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) – The Hut on Fowls' Legs – The Great Gate of Kiev.

Harpsichord by courtesy of Eric Herz

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
DEC 2 1961

89

—Ansermet Guest at Symphony

The Symphony

Routine Program, Finely Conducted

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Returning to the Boston Symphony yesterday for the first time in five years, the distinguished Swiss conductor, Ernest Ansermet, of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, made his presence felt by a noble interpretation of an otherwise routine program.

Mr. Ansermet is one of the Modern Old Masters of contemporary conducting, occupying a place with Monteux, and until recently, Beecham, roughly similar to that of Braque, Picasso, and until recently, Matisse, in painting. Although he was born in 1883, this elegant, bearded man with a silvery tonsure, remains one of the absolute monarchs of his art, his vitality undimmed.

His conducting style combines the visionary and inspirational qualities of Munch—via the eloquent left hand—with the detached simplicities of Monteux—via the firm beat—with an intellectual refinement of his own. Boston had a chance to witness his brilliance over three months, a decade ago, when he came to the rescue of the then-ailing Dr. Munch; and yesterday's concert elapsed on that same shining level.

Sound Concepts

By positioning the 'cellos at right foreground, Mr. Ansermet was able to insure an orchestral balance that seemed to accord with his personal sound concepts, weightier than usual yet retaining the essential character of a French ensemble in terms of clarity and detail. Save for the Bach Suite, which required the Bach orchestra, this imparted crispness and strength.

The trouble with the B minor suite, it seemed to me, lay in the inflated string body. The performance was suave, and demonstrated the polish of the players and soloist. It was, however, a curiously mellow Bach, filtered to us through post-romantic lushness, and lacking the glittering astringency of the composer.

When von Karajan, conducting from the harpsichord, offered the same suite with the Berliners here several weeks ago, the B minor was heard in truer perspective. The chamber grouping of the strings permitted the harpsichord to be voiced—as it was not in this account—and the flute solo of Karl-Heinz Zoller soared in high relief.

Solo Flute

Except for the Badinerie, there was little to indicate that Bach had written for solo flute yesterday, since it only emerged briefly from the tutti, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's delightful virtuosity was demonstrated far more compellingly in "L'Apres Midi."

The rest of the program, though, found Mr. Ansermet achieving radiant results. I share Roman Vlad's opinion that the Symphony In Three Movements represents a Stravinsky-ian assimilation of the Brahms Third.

A body of work in which the composer went to Handel's secular oratorios for "Oedipus Rex," to Gabrieli and his school for the Octet, to Tchaikovsky for "The Fairy's Kiss," to C. P. E. Bach for the Sonata, is not likely to suddenly ignore tradition. Stravinsky sees the future as an extension of the past.

In any case, this beguiling minor opus, the one novel aspect of the program, with its shifting dialogue of piano-harp, crystallized into an animated, spontaneous whole. Mr. Ansermet's tempos, his blending of tone and texture, supplied the impulse for a sprightly, clean-cut performance.

Old Scores

His treatment of the Debussy and the "Pictures At An Exhibition" showed his gift even more persuasively. Who would have thought the old scores had so much sparkle in them? The enchanted atmosphere of the Afternoon of a Faun, in which a scrim might have been dropped before the aural scene, held limpid grace.

The dash, the ease, the abundance of color, the scrupulous lines of The Pictures, revealed the contour of years of experience and sensibility; and as the Great Gate of Kiev rose massively, so did our spirits.

Next week Mr. Ansermet presents the first Boston performance of Frank Martin's "Etudes for String Archestra"; Brahms's second, in D, and Falla's Suite from "El Sobrero de Tres Picos."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet conducting, presented the eighth concert of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, was the soloist in Bach's Suite. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Suite No. 2, in B minor for flute and strings ..... Bach
Sym. In Three Movements ..... Stravinsky
Prelude a 'l'Apres-midi d'une Faune' ..... Debussy
"Pictures at an Exhibition" ..... Moussorgsky-Ravel

Familiar Program Has Its Downs and Its Ups

By Harold Rogers

Ernest Ansermet—a grand old man of music if there ever was one—has returned to the Symphony Hall podium for two weeks while Charles Munch is on his winter vacation. His program yesterday afternoon, to be repeated tonight, Sunday afternoon, and Tuesday night, is easy to assimilate—perhaps a little too easy, or a little too familiar.

He may not have been told that Herbert von Karajan led the Berlin Philharmonic in an impeccable traversal of Bach's Suite No. 2 for flute and strings only a few weeks ago; and by comparison, odious as it may be, the Boston Symphony's performance yesterday was easy-going, rambling, even a bit cluttered.

♪ ♪ ♪

Though billed as soloist and hailed as such at the conclusion, Doriot Anthony Dwyer was seated with the rest of the musicians, her flute swallowed up most of the time in what appeared to be more of a rehearsal than a performance. Call it ingratiating informal chamber music, if you please; it was hardly more.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, though bright in color and sprightly in rhythm, also gave one the sensation that it was being assembled on the spot. It had hardly the crystalline reading it should have had.

But after the intermission all was suddenly turned right. M. Ansermet's way with Debussy's "Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune", was paved with rose petals—sheer tonal poetry in shimmering sound. Again the conductor singled out Mrs. Dwyer for special applause.

♪ ♪ ♪

And what can one say of Ravel's arrangement of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition"? Apart from the fact that it is heard too often in Symphony Hall, one can say that M. Ansermet squeezed it of every last ounce of drama.

My own response would have been 100 per cent positive were it not for the callow young man sitting behind me who insisted on singing along with the brasses. Not that I would have minded his singing had he been on key. M. Ansermet can share no blame for this, unless, of course, he made the music so exciting that the young man couldn't resist taking part.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
NOV 25 1961

Ansermet Conducts 4 Concerts by BSO

Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor during Charles Munch's December vacation, has asked Doriot Anthony Dwyer to be his guest artist at the orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 p. m., next Saturday at 8:30 p. m., Sunday at 3 p. m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

Mrs. Dwyer, the orchestra's first flute, will be heard in Bach's Suite No. 2, for Flute and Strings. The remainder of Mr. Ansermet's program at these concerts will consist of the Symphony in Three Movements by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition," by Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 1, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 2, at 8:30 o'clock

ERNEST ANSERMET, Guest Conductor

BACH ..... Suite No. 2, in B minor, for Flute and Strings

I. Overture
II. Rondeau
III. Sarabande
IV. Bourrées I and II
V. Polonaise and Double
VI. Menuett
VII. Badinerie

Flute Solo: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY ..... "Prélude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune"
(Eclogue by Stéphane Mallarmé)

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade – Gnomus – Promenade – Il vecchio castello – Tuileries – Bydlo – Promenade – Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells – Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle – Limoges: The Marketplace – Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) – The Hut on Fowls' Legs – The Great Gate of Kiev.

Harpsichord by courtesy of Eric Herz

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

90

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 1 1961

John Brook

Ernest Ansermet will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its concerts in Symphony Hall today, Saturday, Sunday, and Tuesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
NOV 30 1961

Doriot Dwyer Named Guest Artist By Boston Symphony

Ernest Ansermet to Conduct Orchestra During Month of December

Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor during Charles Munch's December vacation, he asked Doriot Anthony Dwyer to be his guest artist at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this Friday, Dec. 1 at 2:15 p.m., Saturday, Dec. 2, at 8:30 p.m., Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3 at 3 p.m. and Tuesday evening, Dec. 5, at 8:30 p.m.

Mrs. Dwyer, the orchestra's first flute, will be heard in Bach's Suite No. 2, for Flute and Strings. The remainder of Mr. Ansermet's program at these concerts will consist of the Symphony in Three Movements by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Appointed permanent conductor of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande in Geneva in 1918, Mr. Ansermet who celebrated his 78th birthday on November 11, last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in eleven concerts during the 1955-56 season. He was first guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1949 and has since conducted the Orchestra in 43 concerts in Boston and on tour.

His present appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Boston and on tour will be Mr. Ansermet's only engagements in the United States this season. Earlier this season he conducted his orchestra in Lisbon, at the Montreux Festivol, and at its regular concerts in Geneva. He has also accepted invitations to conduct orchestral concerts in London, Berlin, Milan and in April he will conduct "Pelleas and Melisande" at the Hamburg Opera.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
DEC 3 1961

LETTERS FROM READERS

Moment's Response Is a Token Earned

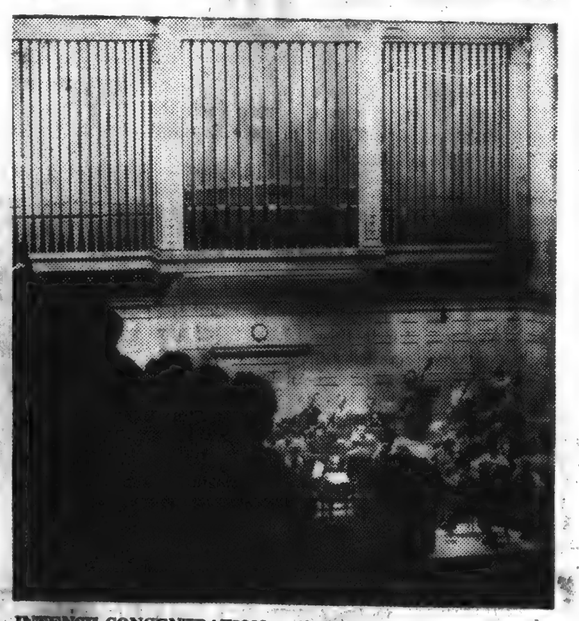
To the Editor of The Herald:

I fail to understand why large segments of an audience at many live concerts and theatrical events in Boston must strike out in a cloud of dust for the exits as soon as the last word is voiced or the last note is noted at such performances and give nary a "Heigh ho, Silver!" for the performers.

Though I realize that the ticket of admission entitles one to certain privileges, through custom it has also made one subject to certain obligations. Among such obligations has been the act of applauding at the end of the performance.

Decency, to say nothing of a shred of respect to the performers, would seem to command this behavior. If, however, one can endure an entire concert and yet not be moved to either decency or respect, it still seems to me that one should not move at all—at least until other members of the audience have been given a chance to show their appreciation.

I was amazed at the number of people who did not show such courtesy at the Saturday evening performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here in this audience were supposedly the elite of Boston, the cultured of Boston.



INTENSE CONCENTRATION — its release can't be response?

When in this situation, however, a prominent member of the Department of Music at Boston University and many others flee Symphony Hall as if it were the Cocoanut Grove fire, what is cultured Boston coming to?

If one is so lured by nicotine or so bothered by crowds, why doesn't one stay home?

Monson DONALD G. BUTT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
DEC 4 1961

Do They Have To Flee Symphony?

To the Editor—Up to this moment, I fail to understand why large segments of an audience at many live concerts and theatrical events in Boston must strike out in a cloud of dust for the exits as soon as the last word is voiced or the last note is noted at such performances and give nary a "Heigh ho, Silver!" for the performers.

Though I realize that the ticket of admission entitles one to certain privileges, through custom it has also made one subject to certain obligations. Among such obligations has been the act of applauding at the end of the performance. Decency, to say nothing of a shred of respect to the performers, would seem to command this behavior.

If, however, one can endure an entire concert and yet not be moved to either decency or respect, it still seems to me that one should not move at all—at least until other members of the audience have been given a chance to show their appreciation.

I was amazed at the number of people who did not show such courtesy at the Saturday evening performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here in this audience were supposedly the elite of Boston, the cultured of Boston.

When in this situation, however, many flee Symphony Hall as if it were the Cocoanut Grove fire, what is cultured Boston coming to?

DONALD G. BUTT
Monson

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
NOV 26 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor during Charles Munch's December vacation, has asked Doriot Anthony Dwyer to be his guest artist at the Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts this Friday, Saturday, Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Dwyer, the orchestra's first flute will be heard in Bach's Suite No. 2, for Flute and Strings. The remainder of Ansermet's program at these concerts will consist of the Symphony in Three Movements by Igor Stravinsky, Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Ninth Week

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 9, at 8:30 o'clock

ERNEST ANSERMET, Guest Conductor

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
IV. Allegro con spirito

INTERMISSION

MARTIN ..... Etudes for String Orchestra

Overture
Etude I — for the sequence of features
Etude II — for pizzicato
Etude III — for expression and "sostenuto"
Etude IV — for fugal play, or "each person or thing in its place"
(First performance in Boston)

FALLA ..... Suite from the Ballet "El Sombrero de Tres Picos"

Introduction and Dance — The Neighbors — Dance of the Miller — Final Dance

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
DEC 9 1961

The Symphony

Martin's 'Etudes' Well-Made Work

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Frank Martin's "Etudes For String Orchestra" is a shapely, stable score, and easy to hear, and that is the sum total of my views on the subject. Which is more than I can say about most of the contemporary music encountered at Symphony this year.

Introduced yesterday to Boston, by Ernest Ansermet, the Swiss conductor who ends a fortnight's visit as guest this weekend, the "Etudes" reveal a high level of craftsmanship, the finish of a skilled professionalism. The work is well-made.

This may seem tepid praise, but in the present era of music—a transitional period, I think, when composers are attempting to establish a style without imitating atonality, a method now as old as the century—it is something. Martin, a countryman of Mr. Ansermet who has championed the composer here on two occasions (most notably with the "Petite symphonie concertante"), has passed through a Schoenberg phase, and is now pursuing an eclectic path.

I'm afraid my enthusiasm for his "Etudes" doesn't go much beyond an admiration for construction. The music contains more emotion than the school of Schoenberg ordinarily affords; but is still so technically-oriented that one can't believe expression comes first.

In four sections, and overture, the score patently suggests the inspiration of Chopin or, indeed, the Bach of the "Goldberg Variations," where pure technical study rises into artistic statement: now carried over from the keyboard into the orchestra. Etude I is for "the sequence of features"; II for "pizzicato"; III for "sostenuto"; IV for "fugal play"; and each ably integrated.

What I didn't find was a strong sense of emotional urgency such as the No. 12 in C minor, of the Op. 10 Etudes of Chopin illustrates; an urgency that informs and kindles the exercise. Martin's neat coherent episodes remain simply amiable exploration of the potential of strings. Not for a moment do I accept the quote of the program, "bound to find its way into the regular orchestral repertoire." And yet I liked its limited virtues. Why must we be so "masterpiece-conditioned" that every piece of new music is either immortal or nothing?

The Brahms Second: I am tempted to round off the sentence there. According to a friend of a statistical turn, we have had six Brahms Seconds in six successive years: Munch, Burgin, Barbirolli, Ormandy, Maazel, and now, Ansermet. A record of sorts. May one suggest, however timidly, that we're ready to go on to, say Brahms's Third, that relatively neglected symphony.

Yesterday's performance by Mr. Ansermet was not one of his finest, but segments indicated his transcendent authority. He appears, more than anything else, temperamentally out of phase with Brahms. To a Swiss conductor whose scrupulous intellect makes a specialty out of Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, this score must represent the challenge of the uncongenial.

A heavy accenting of fortissimos marked the first movement, though the coda was delightfully deft. The middle sections went too fast. The final movement was a gem of brilliant definition and lyrical phrasing. On the whole, this was an astringent reading, immensely urbane and polished without Brahms's dense romantic majesty.

The Manuel De Falla suite, however, restored Mr. Ansermet to his realm. A dominion of wit, warmth, melodic charm, vivacity, color and the point of view that, sympathetic and detached, is so vital. Mr. Ansermet retains the folk flavor in terms of the sophisticated vision of Falla; no one does it better. It left one hoping to hear this great conductor again, as the guest of Mr. Leinsdorf.

Next week the Symphony tours, returning Dec. 29-30 with Evelyne Crochet as soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in E-flat, K.482. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the Symphony in G minor, K.550, and Bach's Suite No. 3, in D major, and Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past."

E. POWER BIGGS, opening a series of four organ recitals by different soloists at Symphony Hall next Sunday, Dec. 17, at 6 p.m.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet conducting, presented the ninth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73 ... Brahms
Etudes For String Orchestra ... Martin
Suite from the Ballet, "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" ... Falla

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 19 1961

Open Rehearsal Seats

With the recent selling out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday Evening Series for the season, all series of Symphony Hall concerts of the orchestra are fully subscribed, with the exception of the Open Rehearsals.

These are final rehearsals of the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs. Held in Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings at 7:30, they are, largely, concerts with occasional interruptions to add the perfecting touches by Charles Munch or a distinguished guest conductor or soloist.

Another attraction has been the fact that all seats are unreserved, so that "you sit where you please"—where best to watch instrumental techniques, or to hear to the best individual satisfaction. Tickets are available at $2 for each date.

The schedule is as follows: Jan. 4 and 11; Feb. 8 and 15, March 8 and 29, and April 26.

Mail orders for Open Rehearsal tickets should be accompanied with check and self-addressed envelope, and addressed to: Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Lessons and Carols

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
DEC 14 1961

At Ninth Program

Ansermet Again Conducts BSO

By ROBERT E. GARIS

Saturday's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was mildly agreeable but not very exciting, and for this the programing was at least partly to blame. The music was not quite good enough. There ought, you would think, to be at least one piece of first-rate music on every symphony program, not just for the record, but because otherwise an evening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems a bit ritualistic, a conventional rather than an important way to spend time and money.

Doubtless the Brahms Second Symphony was counted on to fill this requirement and doubtless for many of the audience it succeeded. This work is everybody's old friend and it is now permanently glued into a respectable position in the standard repertory, but it is not first-class music for all of that; it is a rather long piece of respectable music-making.

The program notes (no less feeble this year than before, by the way) handle the Brahms symphony by playing that old game of making fun of its first reviewers, way back then. But the men who, in the 1880's, wrote that Brahms's Second Symphony was "not distinguished by inventive power," that it was "wearisome" and "cold-blooded" — these men were apparently listening alertly to the actual piece, not to the sound of its reputation, and they described it accurately enough, if somewhat cruelly.

The author of the program notes likes to think that their jaws would have dropped, comic old fools that they were, if they could have been told how "wrong" they were being. But we can at most accuse them of undue optimism about the development of musical taste in the next century: theirs was a noble dream.

Frank Martin has for many years been writing music with a regularity and a professional competence which guarantee him occasional performances by major orchestras. He is a regular member of the international musical Establishment. And so the audience on Saturday night listened patiently to his Etudes for String Orchestra, composed in 1957. The work has little character and no readily audible motive for existing: despite its title, it does not explore the possibilities of the string orchestra in a fresh way, and its expressive content is small and neutral. Its idiom is post-Stravinsky international neoclassicism, with some new sound effects in the pizzicato movement.

The "applause-machine" at the end of the concert was a suite from Falla's The Three-Cornered Hat, charm music which, for this listener at least, has retained its entertaining freshness.

Mr. Ansermet saw to it that the orchestra played accurately, smoothly and cleanly, but there was no notable vigor or intensity. The conductor's main business in playing the Brahms symphony ought to consist of, first, getting the brass to play with a smooth pastoral steadiness and calm and, second, shaping the transitions with an attentively plastic sensitivity. Mr. Ansermet succeeded only moderately well in these two respects. We await eagerly the clean sweeping next year's new broom can be hoped to give us.

Ninth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
DEC 9 1961

The Symphony

Martin's 'Etudes' Well-Made Work

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Frank Martin's "Etudes For String Orchestra" is a shapely, stable score, and easy to hear, and that is the sum total of my views on the subject. Which is more than I can say about most of the contemporary music encountered at Symphony this year.

Introduced yesterday to Boston, by Ernest Ansermet, the Swiss conductor who ends a fortnight's visit as guest this weekend, the "Etudes" reveal a high level of craftsmanship, the finish of a skilled professionalism. The work is well-made.

This may seem tepid praise, but in the present era of music—a transitional period, I think, when composers are attempting to establish a style without imitating atonality, a method now as old as the century—it is something. Martin, a countryman of Mr. Ansermet who has championed the composer here on two occasions (most notably with the "Petite symphonie concertante"), has passed through a Schoenberg phase, and is now pursuing an eclectic path.

I'm afraid my enthusiasm for his "Etudes" doesn't go much beyond an admiration for construction. The music contains more emotion than the school of Schoenberg ordinarily affords; but is still so technically-oriented that one can't believe expression comes first.

In four sections, and overture, the score patently suggests the inspiration of Chopin or, indeed, the Bach of the "Goldberg Variations," where pure technical study rises into artistic statement: now carried over from the keyboard into the orchestra. Etude I is for "the sequence of features"; II for "pizzicato"; III for "sostenuto"; IV for "fugal play"; and each ably integrated.

What I didn't find was a strong sense of emotional urgency such as the No. 12 in C minor, of the Op. 10 Etudes of Chopin illustrates; an urgency that informs and kindles the exercise. Martin's neat coherent episodes remain simply amiable exploration of the potential of strings. Not for a moment do I accept the quote of the program, "bound to find its way into the regular orchestral repertoire." And yet I liked its limited virtues. Why must we be so "masterpiece-conditioned" that every piece of new music is either immortal or nothing?

The Brahms Second: I am tempted to round off the sentence there. According to a friend of a statistical turn, we have had six Brahms Seconds in six successive years: Munch, Burgin, Barbirolli, Ormandy, Maazel, and now, Ansermet. A record of sorts. May one suggest, however timidly, that we're ready to go on to, say Brahms's Third, that relatively neglected symphony.

Yesterday's performance by Mr. Ansermet was not one of his finest, but segments indicated his transcendent authority. He appears, more than anything else, temperamentally out of phase with Brahms. To a Swiss conductor whose scrupulous intellect makes a specialty out of Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, this score must represent the challenge of the uncongenial.

A heavy accenting of fortissimos marked the first movement, though the coda was delightfully deft. The middle sections went too fast. The final movement was a gem of brilliant definition and lyrical phrasing. On the whole, this was an astringent reading, transcensely urbane and polished without Brahms's dense romantic majesty.

The Manuel De Falla suite, however, restored Mr. Ansermet to his realm. A dominion of wit, warmth, melodic charm, vivacity, color and the point of view that, sympathetic and detached, is so vital. Mr. Ansermet retains the folk flavor in terms of the sophisticated vision of Falla; no one does it better. It left one hoping to hear this great conductor again, as the guest of Mr. Leinsdorf.

Next week the Symphony tours, returning Dec. 29-30 with Evelyne Crochet as soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in E-flat, K.482. Dr. Munch has also scheduled the Symphony in G minor, K.550, and Bach's Suite No. 3, in D major, and Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past."

E. POWER BIGGS, opening a series of four organ recitals by different soloists at Symphony Hall next Sunday, Dec. 17, at 4 p.m.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet conducting, presented the ninth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73 ..... Brahms
Etudes For String Orchestra ..... Martin
Suite from the Ballet, "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" ..... Falla

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 19 1961

Open Rehearsal Seats

With the recent selling out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday Evening Series for the season, all series of Symphony Hall concerts of the orchestra are fully subscribed, with the exception of the Open Rehearsals.

These are final rehearsals of the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening programs. Held in Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings at 7:30, they are, largely, concerts with occasional interruptions to add the perfecting touches by Charles Munch or a distinguished guest conductor or soloist.

Another attraction has been the fact that all seats are unreserved, so that "you sit where you please"—where best to watch instrumental techniques, or to hear to the best individual satisfaction. Tickets are available at $2 for each date.

The schedule is as follows: Jan. 4 and 11; Feb. 8 and 15; March 8 and 29, and April 26.

Mail orders for Open Rehearsal tickets should be accompanied with check and self-addressed envelope, and addressed to: Box Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 8, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 9, at 8:30 o'clock

ERNEST ANSERMET, Guest Conductor

BRAHMS ..... *Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 73
- I. Allegro non troppo
- II. Adagio non troppo
- III. Allegretto grazioso, quasi andantino
- IV. Allegro con spirito

INTERMISSION

MARTIN ..... Etudes for String Orchestra
- Overture
- Etude I — for the sequence of features
- Etude II — for pizzicato
- Etude III — for expression and "sostenuto"
- Etude IV — for fugal play, or "each person or thing in its place"

(First performance in Boston)

FALLA ..... Suite from the Ballet "El Sombrero de Tres Picos"
- Introduction and Dance — The Neighbors — Dance of the Miller — Final Dance

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
DEC 14 1961

At Ninth Program

Ansermet Again Conducts BSO

By ROBERT E. GARIS

Saturday's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was mildly agreeable but not very exciting, and for this the programing was at least partly to blame. The music was not quite good enough. There ought, you would think, to be at least one piece of first-rate music on every symphony program, not just for the record, but because otherwise an evening with the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems a bit ritualistic, a conventional rather than an important way to spend time and money.

Doubtless the Brahms Second Symphony was counted on to fill this requirement and doubtless for many of the audience it succeeded. This work is everybody's old friend and it is now permanently glued into a respectable position in the standard repertory, but it is not first-class music for all of that; it is a rather long piece of respectable music-making.

The program notes (no less feeble this year than before, by the way) handle the Brahms symphony by playing that old game of making fun of its first reviewers, way back then. But the men who, in the 1880's, wrote that Brahms's Second Symphony was "not distinguished by inventive power;" that it was "wearisome" and "cold-blooded" — these men were apparently listening alertly to the actual piece, not to the sound of its reputation, and they described it accurately enough, if somewhat cruelly.

The author of the program notes likes to think that their jaws would have dropped, comic old fools that they were, if they could have been told how "wrong" they were being. But we can at most accuse them of undue optimism about the development of musical taste in the next century; theirs was a noble dream.

Frank Martin has for many years been writing music with a regularity and a professional competence which guarantee him occasional performances by major orchestras. He is a regular member of the international musical Establishment. And so the audience on Saturday night listened patiently to his Etudes for String Orchestra, composed in 1957. The work has little character and no readily audible motive for existing: despite its title, it does not explore the possibilities of the string orchestra in a fresh way, and its expressive content is small and neutral. Its idiom is post-Stravinsky international neo-classicism, with some new sound effects in the pizzicato movement.

The "applause-machine" at the end of the concert was a suite from Falla's The Three-Cornered Hat, charm music which, for this listener at least, has retained its entertaining freshness.

Mr. Ansermet saw to it that the orchestra played accurately, smoothly and cleanly, but there was no notable vigor or intensity. The conductor's main business in playing the Brahms symphony ought to consist of, first, getting the brass to play with a smooth pastoral steadiness and calm and, second, shaping the transitions with an attentively plastic sensitivity. Mr. Ansermet succeeded only moderately well in these two respects. We await eagerly the clean sweeping next year's new broom can be hoped to give us.

92

Music

Ansermet Scores With Boston Symphony Baton

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Ernest Ansermet who founded and is permanent conductor of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, appeared in his first open rehearsal with the Boston Symphony orchestra in this week's event, the third in this year's series.

Maestro Ansermet is serving as guest conductor at the request of his friend and co-artist, Dr. Charles Munch. That his stay in Boston will be a complete success is already assured. On this occasion he was warmly received.

Dr. Dominic R. Procopio

His program was one of variety in taste as well as one that provided him with the means of displaying his talents in more than one field. His work is marked by the influence of the European school. It is also easily distinguished as a medium that belongs to another era of directing. Mr. Ansermet is quite reserved, sufficiently liquid and flowing in his beat to create necessary effects, and above all, one who refuses to be carried away either with his importance or whatever inspiration the music might cast upon him.

His Brahms, on this occasion the "Symphony No. 2," was smooth, beautifully phrased, but on the other hand, somewhat held back and never reaching in its search for complete expression. However, his Brahms carried a great deal of dignity and unfolded with sufficient interpretative line.

Being heard for the first time in Boston was "Four Etudes for String Orchestra" by Frank Martin, a European composer who can say many things as he reaches into the spaces of yesterday's type of composition as well as today's. The Etudes are quaint, imaginative, pleasant and wonderfully outspoken in their endeavors. Such movements as those played entirely by the first strings, 'cellos, a piece that unfolded completely with plucking effects, and a grand get-together at the end, provided the best "new" music we have heard in many a season in Boston.

As the final part of the program the Suite from Falla's ballet music, "The Three Cornered Hat" proved to be just the right touch for the evening's closing. The orchestra wended their way through the different phases with every bit of technical skill one could hope for. The great orchestra responded perfectly to the conductor, who in these moments proved himself a first rank artist when it comes to making ballet music something more than just another title on a program. This was no fill-in number, but something that shared the evening's glory with both the contemporary and the classic realm of Brahms.

It was most pleasant to watch the conductor perform, and it was equally gratifying to see him share his welcome with his orchestral members. Especially gracious was his recognition of a young member of his orchestra who in our opinion turned in a tremendous performance.

Plans have been completed for the annual Christmas concert by the Greater-Lowell Choral society which will be presented tomorrow afternoon in the Little Theater at Lowell State college. The Choral society has contributed tremendously to music in this community in the few short seasons of its revival and at present numbers a membership of many of the areas best known vocalists. Dr. Dominic Procopio will conduct and he will be assisted by Priscilla Taggart as accompanist and the following soloists: Octavia Vanlotis and Sarah Sprouse, sopranos; Melba Leite, mezzo-soprano; Kathleen Murray and Alice Rodger, contraltos; Daniel Fuscon and Richard Lathan, tenors; and Emil Myskowski and Henry Sills, baritones.

Musical highlight for next week on the local scene will be the program next Tuesday observing the golden jubilee of the Hadassah. Featured artist will be the gifted soprano, Phyllis Howes, who has been heard both in this country and in Italy. She will be assisted at the electric organ by Bob Phillips.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

DEC 9 1961

Ansermet Introduces Martin String Etudes

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the ninth program of the Friday-Saturday series. Guest conductor Ernest Ansermet conducted Brahms' Symphony No. 2, in D major; Frank Martin's Etudes for String Orchestra (first performance in Boston), and the Suite from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat," by Manuel de Falla.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Frank Martin is a Swiss composer, now 71, who for most of his creative span has gone his own independent way. His music, of which only a little has been heard in Boston, is distinctive and intelligible as well as contemporary. It is expertly wrought and it has beauty.

These terms fully apply to the Etudes for String Orchestra which Ernest Ansermet introduced to this city at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon. They are most ingratiating pieces and ought to enter the repertory—wherever there are first-rate string sections to play them!

Orchestral etudes are rare but not unknown, and these were composed with a practical purpose beyond the usual ones of musical construction and communication. This is, of course, assuming there is as yet no law against being communicative in music. But you never know. The serial and electronic boys may pull a coup d'etat some morning and we'll find ourselves condemned to parsing their technic and subsisting on a thin soup of 12-tone crab canons.

Martin's practical purpose was exercise in various aspects of collective string playing. After a brisk Overture, the first study passes musical figures from one section to another. The second is a study in pizzicato, no doubt the best plucked string movement since Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony.

Etude No. 3, "for expression and 'sostenuto'" is a slow, sustained and very expressive episode for violas and cellos alone. Among its features is very clever contrast between the tonal colors of the two sets of instruments.

The final study is in counterpoint—"for fugal play, or 'each person or thing in its place'"—and it works up to a choral with instruments dancing figures around it. There is a great deal of logic in these Etudes; neither harmony nor counterpoint, though often raising a dissonance from the moving voices, ever sounds queer, and through all is that evident and unmistakable, if indefinable quality which for want of a specific term, we call emotional feeling.

As with much of Martin's music when the motion is fast, there is a certain sense of restlessness, a trifle neurotic, perhaps, which is one of the qualities peculiar to his scores. I find it attractive.

Brahms' D major Symphony was gloriously sonorous and satisfying, exceedingly clear in most pages, unaccountably clouded in some of the finale. Why Ansermet made the first violins end phrases with a staccato accent, when their rhythm crosses the bar lines in the recapitulation of the first movement, only he can explain. It merely sounded like a mannerism.

We really heard two Suites from Falla's "Three-Cornered Hat," for to the customary one, the Introduction and ensuing dances were added. This made, without the visual effect of the ballet, rather much of a much of the same thing. They were admirably played, however, and like the Moussorgsky "Pictures" a week ago, quite straight, without showmanship or voluptuous rubato.

There will be no Friday-Saturday concerts until Dec. 29 and 30, when Dr. Munch will conduct a chamber orchestra of about 50 players in a Bach-Mozart program. Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in Mozart's E-flat Piano Concerto (K. 482).

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

DEC 9 1961

Boston Première Shared With Brahms and Falla

By Harold Rogers

Whenever a guest conductor comes to town—and Ernest Ansermet is here for a second week of concerts with the Boston Symphony—one usually expects an interesting change of fare from the regular conductor's programs. The guest usually shows off his best wares.

But M. Ansermet's programs have been on a par with Dr. Munch's. He has obviously been playing things he enjoys, things that he hopes we, too, will enjoy regardless of the number of times we have heard them.

"One can't get too much of a masterpiece." So we have been told in scolding tones; but one can get too much of a masterpiece when its performance is undistinguished, and, surely M. Ansermet's reading of the Brahms Second Symphony yesterday afternoon must be said to have been on the routine side—open-faced, honest, filled with sunshine, it's true, but routine. Little poetry, few insights, rare nuances.

* * *

He opened with the Brahms and closed with Falla's ballet suite from "El Sombrero de Tres Picos." Here we had the same kind of traversal, though the mood, of course, was different. One yearned for a deepening of the Andalusian romance, for an occasional indolent rubato, or merely a musical sigh to temper the speed of the stamping rhythms.

No, plainly M. Ansermet has been letting the mathematical side of his nature take precedence over the artistic, the pedantic over the musical.

But sandwiched between these two gray areas was the first Boston performance of Frank Martin's Etudes for String Orchestra. And at this point M. Ansermet truly rendered a service to the cause of contemporary music. Not half enough music by this eminent Swiss composer is played where it should be played—this is, before listeners whose tempers have been tested by inferior modernists and who thus have ruled against the entire trend of music today.

* * *

But Martin is a man who gives the weary listener courage, who can spin as fine a melody as you please without letting it fall in conventional patterns, who can construct harmonies that intrigue the ear without alienating it—in short, a man whose music is eminently musical though modern.

His Etudes open with a bouncing overture, which is then followed by four studies of contrasting natures. One needs little more than the composer's headings to see how the whole thing goes: Etude I—for the sequence of features (the tossing of a motif from voice to voice); Etude II—for pizzicato (a rhapsodical plucking of strings in syncopated rhythms); Etude III—for expression and "sostenuto" (employing only violas and cellos divisi); and Etude IV—for fugal play, or "each person or thing in its place."

The movements are short, sweet, thoroughly appealing. These Etudes indeed saved M. Ansermet's day.

93

Second New York Tour

Hartford

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088

DEC 1961

Ansermet to Lead Boston Symphony

SINCE Maestro Ernest Ansermet reached his 78th birthday last month and since his visits to America are rare and brief, it is quite possible that next Tuesday's concert at the Bushnell by the Boston Symphony will be Connecticut's only chance to hear music directed in person by this world famous conductor.

Originally a mathematics teacher, he began conducting at 29 but after three years as a symphony conductor he turned to ballet and toured Europe, North and South America as musical director of the Diaghileff Ballet. His reputation as an interpreter of modern music began then and will be demonstrated Tuesday in Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements.

Ansermet founded the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande in 1918 and 43 years later is still its permanent conductor. He has conducted it at all the leading European festivals and concert halls, and its recordings are highly prized.

Tuesday's program will include, besides the Stravinsky, Bach's Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; Debussey's Prelude a l'Apresmidi d'un Faune; Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition.

ERNEST ANSERMET

A second Boston Symphony concert with Charles Munch conducting is in this season's Bushnell Series which also has still ahead the Cleveland and Philadelphia orchestras.

A limited number of tickets for Tuesday night are still available at the Bushnell.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

NOV 26 1961

Ansermet Concert Dec. 12 Part of Brief U.S. Tour

Hartford will entertain one of Europe's foremost conductors on Dec. 12, when Switzerland's Ernest Ansermet comes to the Bushnell Memorial as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This noted musician will spend only three weeks in the United States, guest-conducting upon invitation of Charles Munch in Boston's Symphony Hall, New York's Carnegie Hall, and the Bushnell.

Hartford's single concert under the Ansermet baton is scheduled for 8:15 p.m., the second event in this season's Bushnell Symphony series. Tickets are still available in limited number for the remaining four concerts in the series, two by the Boston, one by Cleveland and one by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Tickets for the Dec. 12 concert are now on sale.

Ansermet's 78th birthday was noted earlier this month but despite his advancing years he continues as one of Europe's busiest conductors. His has been an unusual career, for he started his working life as a professor of mathematics. Turning from numbers to music, he studied in Paris, Lausanne and Geneva, and became conductor of the Montreux Kursaal. Beginning in 1915 he toured the world as musical director of Diaghileff's celebrated ballet. In 1918 he founded the orchestra of which he is still the permanent conductor, the Suisse Romande, which he conducts in Europe's leading concert halls.

Suisse Romande recordings made under his direction are highly prized. Ansermet is acclaimed as a foremost interpreter of Modern music, especially that of Stravinsky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

DEC 10 1961

Ansermet's Selections Announced

Works of Bach, Stravinsky, Debussy and Moussorgsky will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of guest-conductor Ernest Ansermet in the second concert of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series next Tuesday night. The Bach work is his Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings, and one of America's foremost flautists, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, will be the soloist.

Mrs. Dwyer is a native of Streator, Ill. She studied at the Eastman School of Music with Joseph Mariano and elsewhere with William Kincaid and Ernest Liegl. She was a member of the National Symphony in Washington, the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra before joining the Boston Symphony as principal flute nine years ago.

The Stravinsky work to be performed in his Symphony in Three Movements, which had its first performance some 16 years ago. It is considered a particularly appropriate work for the concert because of Ansermet's international reputation as an interpreter of Stravinsky's music.

Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" is based on a poem by Stephane Mallarme, and is a favorite work with symphony audiences. The final work of Tuesday's program will be Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in which the composer describes in music a dozen pictures by his friend, Victor Hartmann, the pictures arranged in a posthumous exhibition. Written originally for piano, the composition was arranged by Maurice Ravel.

Remaining tickets for the Tuesday night concert are available in the Bushnell box office, opening at 10 a.m. Monday.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 113,846

DEC 13 1961

Ansermet And Boston At Bushnell

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Ernest Ansermet, was presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. The program:

Suite No. 2 — Bach
Doriot Dwyer, flute
Symphony in 3 Movements — Stravinsky
"Afternoon of a Faun" — Debussy
"Pictures at an Exhibition" — Moussorgsky

Everyone who had heard the many fine recordings of L' Orchestre de la Suisse Romande must have looked forward to the appearance of its noted conductor, Ernest Ansermet, with the Boston Symphony here last night.

Mr. Ansermet took the podium, a white-bearded, grave and reverend man slightly stooped under many years of musicmaking. As he conducted he hovered over the players, giving only secondary attention to measuring out the time but a world of care to trimming the dynamic balance of the orchestra. He was most meticulous in setting out the details of the music, and a severe taskmaster in guiding the performance. Time and again his face flushed with impatience as he tried to quiet one section of the players who he plainly felt were crowding another, and who did not respond alertly to his shushing gesture. And it was with imperious command that he summoned up the great power of the orchestra, or cued in the separate choirs or solo players. No one can fail to see who's boss when Mr. Ansermet is on the stand.

Mixed Performance

Nevertheless, the musical and performing results were mixed last evening. It is difficult of course for an orchestra accustomed to the concert ways and interpretative temper of one conductor week in and week out, to have to adjust to another for a handful of performances. Mr. Ansermet's general views of the music last night were no great departure from standard interpretation. He likes a big, full orchestral sound, he reads the composers traditionally, and he did not seem to have any personal idiosyncracies. But there were many matters of detail which the players had to observe in works like the Debussy "Prelude a l' Apres-midi d'un Faune" and the Moussoursky "Pictures at an Exhibition" that were different from those to which they were accustomed under Charles Munch. They did not always remember.

The very bad start in the Bach Suite was of course their own inability to get together, and no one else's fault. And there were many places across the program that lacked the usual Boston poise and polish. In the Bach and in the Debussy, the flute solos were taken with her long-familiar elegance and style by Doriot Anthony Dwyer. And in the Moussorosky, Mr. Anserment and the orchestra got together for some ringing performance. On the whole, however, it was a rather uncertain evening.

Stravinsky A La Stravinsky

The Stravinsky Symphony in Three Movements stirred considerable audience discussion. I myself like a bit here and one there as it goes along. Its champions say that in this work all the "apparent Stravinskys" meet each other through a new Stravinsky in a concentrated, creative harmony. Those who don't like it find it a chicken croquette warmed over from leavings of "Petrouchka," "Rite of Spring," "Story of a Soldier," Oedipus" and other familiar previous compositions. I enjoy these many references and old friends in last night's symphony, but I fail to see that a new, imaginative work has emerged from them. To me, the Symphony in Three Movements is Stravinsky arr. Stravinsky.

T. H. P.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

DEC 15 1961

SYMPHONY ON TOUR

Ernest Ansermet, founder and permanent conductor of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest conductor this month, will conduct the orchestra next week in Hartford, Englewood (N. J.) and New York. Mr. Ansermet's final concert with the orchestra in Boston is scheduled for Monday evening, Dec. 18.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

DEC 3 1961

Program for Concert By Ansermet Released

Remaining tickets for a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Bushnell Memorial Dec. 12 are now on sale in the Bushnell Memorial box office. New England's most famous orchestra will appear here twice in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, on Dec. 12 and Feb. 19.

The first concert will be conducted by the distinguished Swiss musician, Ernest Ansermet, the second by Charles Munch who will have France's noted 'cellist Andre Navarra as assisting artist.

For the Dec. 12 concert Ansermet has selected the following works: Bach's Suite No. 2 in B minor, for flute and strings, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun;" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," composed originally for piano but arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

94

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
DEC 13 1961

In Review

Boston Symphony Performs Here

By DON O. NOEL JR.

Swiss Conductor Ernest Ansermet, making one of his few appearances outside Boston and New York in his current three-week guest stint with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presented an emphatic, sharply-defined concert at the Bushnell Memorial Tuesday night

The program:

Bach, Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings.
Stravinsky, Symphony in Three Movements.
Debussy, Prelude to the Afternoon of a Fawn.
Moussorgsky, Pictures at an Exhibition.

M. Ansermet presents a rather sharp contrast on the podium to the Boston's usual conductor, Charles Munch (who will lead the orchestra when it returns later this Winter).

* * *

THE CONTRAST is both visual and aural. M. Ansermet, white-bearded and large, seems to hulk over his players, shaping the music with great clumsy motions; it is only on close observation that one sees the rigorous precision of beat he maintains for his players, and the insistent demands he makes of them to follow his will.

The music he produces is therefore meticulously constructed; but more important, it seems much less restrained than Mr. Munch's style, and at times last night was overwhelming in sheer volume and color.

This was most apparent in the final piece of the evening, the Moussorgsky. It was a brassy reading from the first measure, and the final movement was a crashing affair which was perfectly controlled, a marvelous demonstration of the orchestra's precision, tone, and color, but nonetheless deafening.

* * *

THIS APPROACH was somewhat more successful in the second work on the program. This listener confesses no great love for much of Stravinsky, including this symphony. But if we must have Stravinsky, it is at least pleasant to have the richness of orchestra color and precision of rhythm which M. Ansermet and the Boston gave him.

The opening work of the evening, the Bach suite, also did well under M. Ansermet's firm treatment. Flutist Doriot Dwyer produced, as she always does when called on, a brilliant, breathtaking performance.

The suite leaves little room for the flutist to rise alone above the orchestra in sustained demonstrations of tone. But Miss Dwyer took magnificent advantage of her one brief opportunity in the minuet movement, and M. Ansermet brought the orchestra to an almost-stiff tempo which beautifully set off the flowing lines of the flute passage.

The Debussy, on balance, was the best of the evening. Here the guest conductor abandoned his emphasis of measure in favor of a smooth, dramatic reading which beautifully matched the romantic mood of the piece. He took full advantage of the tonal ability of the Boston, and achieved a dramatic modulation.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W- 9,200
DEC 8 1961

BURRELLE'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

Ansermet To Guest Conduct Boston Concert

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, December 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the December 15 concert with Brahms' Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat," a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Ansermet's first appearance in the United States, like the American debut of Pierre Monteux, was with the Ballet Russe. Ansermet had only one year's experience as a conductor when Diaghilev named him to the ballet's musical staff, and he accompanied the dance troupe on tours to the United States, South America, Spain, Italy and England.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 113,846
DEC 12 1961

Ansermet Here Today For Bushnell Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, will return tonight for a Bushnell Symphony Series performance at 8:15. This second concert in the current Bushnell series will have as guest conductor the celebrated Swiss musician Ernest Ansermet, making his first Hartford appearance.

For his program Maestro Ansermet has selected: Bach's Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Orchestra, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; Stravisnky's Symphony in Three Movements; Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun;" Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" as arranged by Ravel.

A limited number of tickets are available at the Bushnell box office, opening today at 10 a.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
DEC 12 1961

Boston Symphony Is Here Tonight

With Europe's distinguished Ernest Ansermet as guest conductor, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform a concert of works by Bach, Stravinsky, Debussy and Moussorgsky in the Bushnell Memorial tonight at 8:15.

Tonight's concert, second in this season's Bushnell Symphony Series, will include the following compositions: Suite No. 2 for Flute and Orchestra by Bach, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist; Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky; "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy; "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky, as arranged by Ravel. Tickets are available at the box office.

Englewood, N.J.

ENGLEWOOD, N.J.
PRESS-JOURNAL
W- 7,826
DEC 7 1961

Boston Symphony Here Dec. 14

ENGLEWOOD — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the great Swiss conductor and musician, Ernest Ansermet, will make its second appearance in Englewood on Thursday evening, December 14, at 8:30 p.m. at the Dwight Morrow High School. The concert, sponsored by John Harms, is completely sold out.

The program for the evening consists of the Brahms Second Symphony, as well as music by DeFalla and Martinu.

BERGENFIELD, N.J.
TIMES-REVIEW
W- 4,508
DEC 21 1961

Boston Symphony Orchestra Enthralls Capacity Crowd

ENGLEWOOD — The Boston Symphony Orchestra enthralled 1800 persons in the Dwight Morrow High School gymnasium Thursday night in the very same program that charmed the Carnegie Hall audience in New York on Saturday night.

The gymnasium rang with thunderous applause as Ernest Ansermet conducted this immense grouping of fine musicians, which seemed as thoroughly under the control of his baton as under that of Charles Munsch who was here last year.

It was, of course, a John Harms presentation and as such Mr. Harms, credited with bringing the greatest of the greats here, won new acclaim.

In fact, last night Mr. Harms scored again with his presentation of Sandor Konya, leading tenor of the Metropolitan, in a concert at the Hackensack First Presbyterian Church.

And his wide following expects another big score on Monday night Jan. 22, in Englewood's new Academic Hall, with George London, sensational Metropolitan baritone and Jorge Bolet, celebrated pianist.

The orchestra began its performance under M. Anseret's direction with a lovely performance of Brahms Second Symphony, the orchestra stressing details of phrasing and contrasting moods of the Allegro, adagio, allegretto grazioso, and the final allegro con spirito.

The second work on the program was a novelty to this country — written in 1957 by Frank Martin, Swiss composer, and entitled "Etudes for String Orchestra". First performed in this country in 1959, the work has since been played at Brooklyn College under the direction of Siegmund Levarie. Like the best of Martin's music, the Etudes are beautifully crafted, and the Boston Symphony did full justice to them in Englewood.

The third and final work of the evening's program was selected from the Spanish ballet, "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" and included not only the standard selections — The Neighbors, Dance of the Miller and Final Dance, but the seldom-employed Introduction and Dances, which added novelty to the repertoire.

95

Brooklyn

BROOKLYN GRAPHIC
Wednesday, December 13, 1961

Brooklyn Academy of Music to Present Boston Symphony and Hansel & Gretel

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, Dec. 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the Dec. 15 concert with Brahm's Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra", a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat", a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39,650

DEC 8 1961

Ansermet Leads Boston Symphony At Acad. Dec. 15

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, December 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the December 15 concert with Brahm's Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat," a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50. $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,2 5

DEC 9 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, December 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the December 15 concert with Brahms' Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat," a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Ansermet's first appearance in the United States, like the American debut of Pierre Monteux, was with the Ballet Russe. Ansermet had only one year's experience as a conductor when Diaghilev named him to the ballet's musical staff, and he accompanied the dance troupe on tours to the United States, South America, Spain, Italy and England. During this period, Ansermet, conducted the world premieres of many new works by Stravinsky, who became one of his closest friends.

In 1918, Ansermet founded the orchestra with which his name has been associated — L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. His intention was to give Geneva a full-size symphony orchestra which could perform concerts and also be used for radio broadcasts, stage productions and other musical projects. The orchestra now is under the patronage of the Swiss government, but its policies are determined by Ansermet in consultation with representatives of the public as members of "Friends of the Orchestra" committees.

These committies assist him in planning programs and selecting the soloists. Over the years, Ansermet has influenced the growing taste and interests of these committees so that they are responsive to new works. As a result, L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under Ansermet has premiered works by Ravel, Debussy, Bloch, Berg, Honegger, Hindemith, Martinu and many others.

On previous visits to the United States, Ansermet appeared twice on television with Edward R. Murrow.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

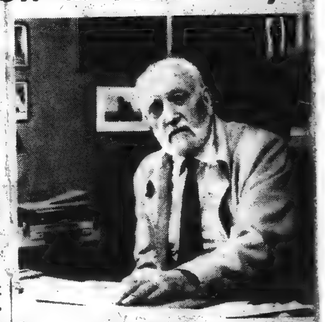
[illegible] HEIGHTS PRESS
[illegible] ber 14, 1961

Boston Symphony to Be Under Ansermet's Baton at Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Brooklyn Opera Company will share the billing at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., this weekend.

The Boston Symphony will be under the baton of the noted Swiss conductor, Ernest Ansermet, tomorrow evening. On Saturday afternoon the Brooklyn operatic troupe will present Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" in the Academy's opera house.

In his appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, M. Ansermet will open tomorrow's concert at 8:30 with Brahms' Second Symphony. After the intermission, M. Ansermet will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin. The program concludes with the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat."



Ernest Ansermet

M. Ansermet in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, which since has advanced to the top echelon of orchestral groups.

The success of Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" has far outstripped the composer's original purpose in writing the piece — to amuse his sister's children. Since its debut in 1895 in the Metropolitan Opera House, it has become a favorite of children and adults alike.

Saturday's performance is set for 2:30. The libretto will be sung in English, as the familiar characters of Hansel, Gretel, the Witch, the Sandman and the Dew Fairy come alive in the ageless tale.

On Saturday night at 8:15, there will be a showing of the motion picture, "Raisin in the Sun," starring Sidney Poitier, at the Academy.

Brooklyn

BROOKLYN GRAPHIC
Wednesday, December 13, 1961

Brooklyn Academy of Music to Present Boston Symphony and Hansel & Gretel

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, Dec. 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the Dec. 15 concert with Brahm's Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra", a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat", a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39,650

DEC 8 1961

Ansermet Leads Boston Symphony At Acad. Dec. 15

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, December 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the December 15 concert with Brahm's Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat," a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215

DEC 9 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Ernest Ansermet, the noted Swiss conductor who, in 1918 founded L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, will be the guest-conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, December 15, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Although this is his first Brooklyn appearance, his great reputation has preceded him here from earlier American tours and his numerous superb recordings with his own orchestra.

Ansermet's program is typical of his taste and background in music. He will open the December 15 concert with Brahms' Second Symphony. After intermission, he will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin, one of the most important among contemporary composers. Following the Martin work, he will conduct the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat," a composition linked to his early career as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe.

Ansermet's first appearance in the United States, like the American debut of Pierre Monteux, was with the Ballet Russe. Ansermet had only one year's experience as a conductor when Diaghilev named him to the ballet's musical staff, and he accompanied the dance troupe on tours to the United States, South America, Spain, Italy and England. During this period, Ansermet, conducted the world premieres of many new works by Stravinsky, who became one of his closest friends.

In 1918, Ansermet founded the orchestra with which his name has been associated — L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. His intention was to give Geneva a full-size symphony orchestra which could perform concerts and also be used for radio broadcasts, stage productions and other musical projects. The orchestra now is under the patronage of the Swiss government, but its policies are determined by Ansermet in consultation with representatives of the public, as members of "Friends of the Orchestra" committees.

These committees assist him in planning programs and selecting the soloists. Over the years, Ansermet has influenced the growing taste and interests of these committees so that they are responsive to new works. As a result, L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under Ansermet has premiered works by Ravel, Debussy, Bloch, Berg, Honegger, Hindemith, Martinu and many others.

On previous visits to the United States, Ansermet appeared twice on television with Edward R. Murrow.

Tickets for Ansermet's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on December 15 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and are on sale at the box office of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, December 14, 1961

Boston Symphony To Be Under Ansermet's Baton at Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Brooklyn Opera Company will share the billing at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., this weekend.

The Boston Symphony will be under the baton of the noted Swiss conductor, Ernest Ansermet, tomorrow evening. On Saturday afternoon the Brooklyn operatic troupe will present Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" in the Academy's opera house.

In his appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, M. Ansermet will open tomorrow's concert at 8:30 with Brahms' Second Symphony. After the intermission, M. Ansermet will introduce "Etudes for String Orchestra," a work by his compatriot, Frank Martin. The program concludes with the Suite from de Falla's ballet, "Three-Cornered Hat."

Ernest Ansermet

M. Ansermet in 1918 founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, which since has advanced to the top echelon of orchestral groups.

The success of Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" has far outstripped the composer's original purpose in writing the piece — to amuse his sister's children. Since its debut in 1895 in the Metropolitan Opera House, it has become a favorite of children and adults alike.

Saturday's performance is set for 2:30. The libretto will be sung in English, as the familiar characters of Hansel, Gretel, the Witch, the Sandman and the Dew Fairy come alive in the ageless tale.

On Saturday night at 8:15, there will be a showing of the motion picture, "Raisin in the Sun," starring Sidney Poitier, at the Academy.

96

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 430,594

DEC 23 1961

MUSICAL EVENTS

Worthwhile Week

"La Forza del Destino," at the Metropolitan Opera House on Tuesday evening of last week, was a special pleasure, partly because the opera is, of course, one of Verdi's greatest (despite those naïve coincidences in its plot) and partly because on this occasion every one of its major roles was sung by an artist of distinction. The artists were Eileen Farrell, Robert Merrill, Richard Tucker, Jerome Hines, and Fernando Corena, and the result was one of those evenings of beautiful singing that are presumably the main reason people go to opera. Perhaps owing to the dampness of the weather, which seemed to be causing throat difficulties for a good many people on both sides of the footlights, Miss Farrell had a little trouble with one or two of her high notes (they were not quite as limpid as they might have been), but the general quality of her vocalism was fine indeed, combining limitless power with an emotional absorption in the drama that is typical of her, and that was very satisfying in its effect. Mr. Tucker gave one of his outstanding performances, and brought the house down several times with the beauty of his voice and the masterly authenticity of his Italian vocal style. If there have been any doubts recently about his eminence as one of the great tenors of Metropolitan history (there have never been any such doubts on my part), they should have been quickly dispelled by his singing the other night. George Schick conducted the performance, and though he failed to reach the dramatic intensity that the finest Verdi conductors sometimes achieve, his work in the orchestra pit was superior to most of the Italian-opera conducting we have been exposed to lately.

LASZLO

On Wednesday night, in Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony gave a performance under the distinguished seventy-eight-year-old Swiss conductor Ernest Ansermet. Because of the strongly individual character of his baton technique, Mr. Ansermet has a way of looking like a patriarchal surgeon engaged in a very intricate operation, but what emerges from the orchestra under his scalpel is always welcome for its remarkable lucidity. The program was one that called for this sort of lucidity—Bach's B-Minor Suite for Flute and Strings, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy's "Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition"—and if it was, on the whole, a pretty lightweight affair, one could at least admire the veteran maestro's workmanship. The Debussy number struck me afresh as being one of the masterpieces of its period. (My feeling is that Debussy never equalled it elsewhere. It is a work in which his exquisitely contrived impressionist textures are set forth in perfect classical form—something he did not always achieve.) Otherwise, except for the Bach suite (which is, after all, fairly routine stuff), I did not find the program particularly interesting.

Josef Krips' reading of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Philharmonic on Friday afternoon was one of the finest we have heard hereabouts in recent years. It may not have been up to the standard of the age of giants; Toscanini's interpretation will probably never again be approached in suavity, intensity, and dramatic vigor, and Furtwängler's had a special kind of eloquence that has also disappeared. But as today's Ninths go, this was a beauty—as clear as crystal, with a wonderful balancing of the relative weight of its various complicated sequences, and coming to an inspired and ringing finish. In general, Mr. Krips chose somewhat speedy tempos, taking both the scherzo and the slow movement at a rather brisk clip. But tempos are, after all, a matter of proportion within the total framework of a composition of this sort, and I found his tasteful and convincing. Unfortunately, the quartet of solo singers, who shall be nameless here, were not up to the terrible demands made upon them by Beethoven in the last movement. The Westminster Symphonic Choir sang the final chorus ably.

—Winthrop Sargeant

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,283,658
THU DEC 14 1961

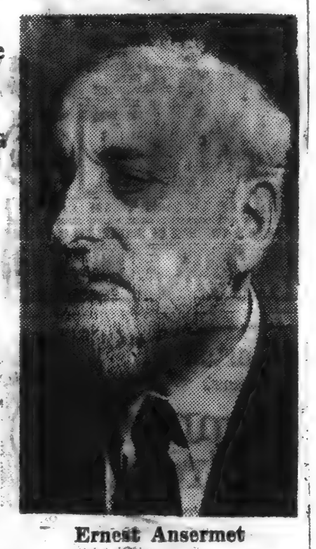
Music: Ansermet Is Back

Directs Program Here of Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THE celebrated Ernest Ansermet, 78 years old and oak-sturdy, made his first New York appearance since 1958 last night in Carnegie Hall. He directed the Boston Symphony in a program that had several of his specialties. Ansermet and Stravinsky are never far apart; neither are Ansermet and French music. And so we had Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel orchestration of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

But there was Bach to open the program. Mr. Ansermet here had an unconventional idea or two. Instead of cutting down the orchestra in the familiar B minor Suite for Flute and Strings, he kept the strings pretty nearly at full strength and increased the flutes. There were three on stage, with the solos being played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the first flutist of the Boston Symphony.



Ernest Ansermet

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 2in B minor, for flute and strings ..... Bach
Symphony in Three Movements ..... Stravinsky
Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun ..... Debussy
Pictures at an Exhibition ..... Mussorgsky-Ravel

Thus the flute sound came through at all times, and in the solo sections the other two men put down their instruments while Miss Dwyer tootled away prettily. It was a clear, sensible performance, with tempos on the deliberate side. Even in the concluding "Badinerie," that showpiece for flute, the tempo was moderate.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements (1945) is not played very often. It is complicated, often enigmatic and even dry, though the opening of the slow movement is certainly a charming and—for Stravinsky—melodic conception. It probably will be called, in the future, a transistional work, for it has sections that seem deliberately to recall "Le Sacre du Printemps" and other sections that all but anticipate the composer's growing interest in post-Webern techniques.

In some respects it is an exasperating work. At times the listener can swear that in this symphony Stravinsky is written out and is working by formula. Then comes a passage so ingenious, so full of concentration and power, that all oaths are rescinded. In any case, the symphony is pure Stravinsky—Stravinsky in meter, Stravinsky in orchestration, Stravinsky in texture and harmony. Which means that, like it or not, it exists on its own as a typical product of one of the germinal musical forces of the century.

The score is extremely complicated, despite the many patches of writing that call for small groups in combination. Mr. Ansermet did not altogether avoid giving the impression that a few more rehearsals would have helped the cause. Yet the logic of his conducting, plus his superb feeling for balance, made an absorbing experience of the music. Mr. Ansermet, whose experience with the scores of Stravinsky goes back almost to the beginning, has formidable authority.

In the last half of the program, emotion superseded intellect. The sensuous measures of the "Afternoon of a Faun" (with Miss Dwyer's lovely flute solos; she had a busy evening) sounded with all the subtlety one could have desired, and in the Mussorgsky-Ravel the decibel count soared. As long as there are great orchestras, Ravel's tricky and juicy — and, one must say, rather boring — orchestration of the "Pictures" will remain in the repertory. Still one wished that the great Ansermet had turned his attention to something more vital.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D 317,264 S. 257,580
WED DEC 13 1961

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor; Bach Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, soloist, Stravinsky Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Ravel, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

TOZZI

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D 618,802 S. 812 836
THU DEC 14 1961

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Superb Music by Bostonians

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ERNEST ANSERMET CONDUCTED THE BOSTON SYMPHONY concert in Carnegie Hall last night. A self-effacing musician with impeccable taste, he presented an old-fashioned program in a series of performances more notable for superb musicianship and the texture of sound he drew from the orchestra than for the emotional intensity of his interpretations.

The program opened with a relaxed, refined, and refreshing performance of Bach's Suite No. 2 played in chamber-orchestra style. Doriot Anthony Dwyer was featured as solo flute, thus highlighting its role and causing a flurry because Ansermet used three flutes instead of two. He did not choose to let the music breathe much or to point up its flavor. The result was a well-bred rather than exhilarating account of the work, with expert playing by Mrs. Dwyer.

Color Needed

Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements" presented a startling contrast and emerged as a far less interesting work because of its rhythmic monotony. Part of this impression stemmed from a performance needing more bite and color; part from the nature of the music itself. Could it be that Stravinsky's Ostinato victimizes itself? Possibly it requires choreographic treatment.

Dubussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" profited from Ansermet's patrician fire. He molded it beautifully. Incidentally this performance won the audience completely. It had deserved its approbation before this.

Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" completed the program. What I heard of it disclosed a mastery of musical punchtuation quite distinctive, but the orchestra could have sounded better at the start.

96

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 430,594

DEC 23 1961

MUSICAL EVENTS

Worthwhile Week

"La Forza del Destino," at the Metropolitan Opera House on Tuesday evening of last week, was a special pleasure, partly because the opera is, of course, one of Verdi's greatest (despite the naïve coincidences in its plot), and partly because on this occasion every one of its major roles was sung by an artist of distinction. The artists were Eileen Farrell, Robert Merrill, Richard Tucker, Jerome Hines, and Fernando Corena, and the result was one of those evenings of beautiful singing that are presumably ably the main reason people go to opera. Perhaps owing to the dampness of the weather, which seemed to be causing throat difficulties for a good many people on both sides of the footlights, Miss Farrell had a little trouble with one or two of her high notes (they were not quite as limpid as they might have been), but the general quality of her vocalism was fine indeed, combining limitless power with an emotional absorption in the drama that is typical of her, and that was very satisfying in its effect. Mr. Tucker gave one of his outstanding performances, and brought the house down several times with the beauty of his voice and the masterly authenticity of his Italian vocal style. If there have been any doubts recently about his eminence as one of the great tenors of Metropolitan history (there have never been any such doubts on my part), they should have been quickly dispelled by his singing the other night. George Schick conducted the performance, and though he failed to reach the dramatic intensity that the finest Verdi conductors sometimes achieve, his work in the orchestra pit was superior to most of the Italian-opera conducting we have been exposed to lately.

On Wednesday night, in Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony gave a performance under the distinguished seventy-eight-year-old Swiss conductor Ernest Ansermet. Because of the strongly individual character of his baton technique, Mr. Ansermet has a way of looking like a patriarchal surgeon engaged in a very intricate operation, but what emerges from the orchestra under his scalpel is always welcome for its remarkable lucidity. The program was one that called for this sort of lucidity—Bach's B-Minor Suite for Flute and Strings, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy's "Prélude à l'Après-Midi d'un Faune," and the Mussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition"—and if it was, on the whole, a pretty lightweight affair, one could at least admire the veteran maestro's workmanship. The Debussy number struck me afresh as being one of the masterpieces of its period. (My feeling is that Debussy never equalled it elsewhere. It is a work in which his exquisitely contrived impressionist textures are set forth in perfect classical form—something he did not always achieve.) Otherwise, except for the Bach suite (which is, after all, fairly routine stuff), I did not find the program particularly interesting.

Josef Krips' reading of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Philharmonic on Friday afternoon was one of the finest we have heard hereabouts in recent years. It may not have been up to the standard of the age of giants; Toscanini's interpretation will probably never again be approached in suavity, intensity, and dramatic vigor, and Furtwängler's had a special kind of eloquence that has also disappeared. But as today's Ninths go, this was a beauty—as clear as crystal, with a wonderful balancing of the relative weight of its various complicated sequences, and coming to an inspired and ringing finish. In general, Mr. Krips chose somewhat speedy tempos, taking both the scherzo and the slow movement at a rather brisk clip. But tempos are, after all, a matter of proportion within the total framework of a composition of this sort, and I found his tasteful and convincing. Unfortunately, the quartet of solo singers, who shall be nameless here, were not up to the terrible demands made upon them by Beethoven in the last movement. The Westminster Symphonic Choir sang the final chorus ably.

—Winthrop Sargeant

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
THU DEC 14 1961

Music: Ansermet Is Back

Directs Program Here of Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

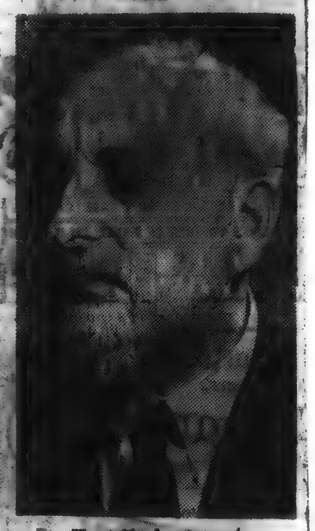
The celebrated Ernest Ansermet, 78 years old and oak-sturdy, made his first New York appearance since 1958 last night in Carnegie Hall. He directed the Boston Symphony in a program that had several of his specialties. Ansermet and Stravinsky are never far apart; neither are Ansermet and French music. And so we had Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel orchestration of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

But there was Bach to open the program. Mr. Ansermet here had an unconventional idea or two. Instead of cutting down the orchestra in the familiar B minor Suite for Flute and Strings, he kept the strings pretty nearly at full strength and increased the flutes. There were three on stage, with the solos being played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the first flutist of the Boston Symphony.

Thus the flute sound came through at all times, and in the solo sections the other two men put down their instruments while Miss Dwyer tootled away prettily. It was a clear, sensible performance, with tempos on the deliberate side. Even in the concluding "Badinerie," that showpiece for flute, the tempo was moderate.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements (1945) is not played very often. It is complicated, often enigmatic and even dry, though the opening of the slow movement is certainly a charming and—for Stravinsky—melodic conception. It probably will be called, in the future, a transistional work, for it has sections that seem deliberately to recall "Le Sacre du Printemps" and other sections that all but anticipate the composer's growing interest in post-Webern techniques.

In some respects it is an exasperating work. At times the listener can swear that in this symphony Stravinsky is written out and is working by formula. Then comes a passage so ingenious, so full of concentration and power, that all oaths are rescinded. In any case, the symphony is pure Stravinsky—Stravinsky in meter, Stravinsky in orchestration, Stravinsky in texture and harmony. Which means that, like it or not, it exists on its own as a typical product of one of the germinal musical forces of the century.



Ernest Ansermet

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist. At Carnegie Hall.

Suite No. 2in B minor, for flute and strings ..... Bach
Symphony in Three Movements...Stravinsky
Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun ..... Debussy
Pictures at an Exhibition, Mussorgsky-Ravel

The s[illegible] is extremely complicated, despite the many patches of writing that call for small groups in combination. Mr. Ansermet did not altogether avoid giving the impression that a few more rehearsals would have helped the cause. Yet the logic of his conducting, plus his superb feeling for balance, made an absorbing experience of the music. Mr. Ansermet, whose experience with the scores of Stravinsky goes back almost to the beginning, has formidable authority.

In the last half of the program, emotion superseded intellect. The sensuous measures of the "Afternoon of a Faun" (with Miss Dwyer's lovely flute solos; she had a busy evening) sounded with all the subtlety one could have desired, and in the Mussorgsky-Ravel the decibel count soared. As long as there are great orchestras, Ravel's tricky and juicy — and, one must say, rather boring — orchestration of the "Pictures" will remain in the repertory. Still one wished that the great Ansermet had turned his attention to something more vital.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D 317,284 S. 257,590
WED DEC 13 1961

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor; Bach Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, soloist, Stravinsky Symphony in Three Movements, Debussy "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Mussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Ravel, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

TOZZI

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D 618,802 S. 812,836
THU DEC 14 1961

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Superb Music by Bostonians

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Ernest Ansermet conducted the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night. A self-effacing musician with impeccable taste, he presented an old-fashioned program in a series of performances more notable for superb musicianship and the texture of sound he drew from the orchestra than for the emotional intensity of his interpretations.

The program opened with a relaxed, refined, and refreshing performance of Bach's Suite No. 2 played in chamber-orchestra style. Doriot Anthony Dwyer was featured as solo flute, thus highlighting its role and causing a flurry because Ansermet used three flutes instead of two. He did not choose to let the music breathe much or to point up its flavor. The result was a well-bred rather than exhilarating account of the work, with expert playing by Mrs. Dwyer.

Color Needed

Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements" presented a startling contrast and emerged as a far less interesting work because of its rhythmic monotony. Part of this impression stemmed from a performance needing more bite and color, part from the nature of the music itself. Could it be that Stravinsky's Ostinato victimizes itself? Possibly it requires choreographic treatment.

Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" profited from Ansermet's patrician fire. He molded it beautifully. Incidentally this performance won the audience completely. It had deserved its approbation before this.

Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" completed the program. What I heard of it disclosed a mastery of musical punctuation quite distinctive, but the orchestra could have sounded better at the start.

New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
FRI DEC 15 1961

MUSIC

Boston Symphony

CARNEGIE HALL

[illegible] conductor, Ernest Ansermet; soloist: [illegible] Anthony Dwyer, flutist. The program:

[illegible] No. 2, in B minor, for Flute and [illegible] ..... Bach
[illegible] Symphony in Three Movements ..... Stravinsky
[illegible] Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune" ..... Debussy [illegible] at an Exhibition" ..... Moussorgsky-Ravel

By Ronald Eyer

The seventy-eight-year-old Swiss, Ernest Ansermet, took charge of the Bostonians as guest conductor for this second evening concert of their New York season with the alertness and firm grasp of a man half his years. Innumerable recordings over the years with his Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, which he still conducts, have made him as widely known as many of our own conductors in this country and certainly as highly esteemed.

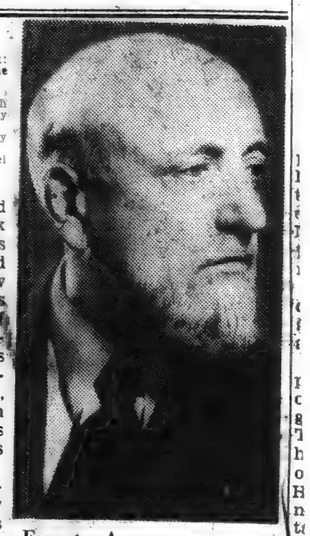
Like many Swiss, he combines in his artistic personality native qualities of steadiness and practicality with a distinctly French sophistication and nicety of taste. The combination was especially notable in Debussy's "Faun" which was performed with infinite sensitivity yet was not overdone in the direction of mysticism and half-lights. Everything was clear and forthright, and there was more innocence than lechery in the little beast who dreamed away his desires on a hot afternoon.

Though Ansermet does not hold with the latter-day manifestations of Stravinsky's creative genius, he is a famous champion of that composer's earlier work and it was a valuable experience to hear the Symphony in Three Movements from his hand. It is a strange, complicated work which has defied description even by literary interpreters of Stravinsky's music who have been closest to him. They cannot agree whether it is even a symphony in the classical meaning of the word.

Mainly, like so much of Stravinsky, it is an exercise to rhythm—all kinds of rhythm. Sometimes it chugs forward like a locomotive; sometimes the entire orchestra slashes and bangs away at a huge kind of unison syncopation; sometimes at seems to lope along like a wild prairie horse. But, with hurdy-gurdy tags and patches of melody, the music always is in motion, always being propelled insistently by the rhythm within, like a dance. In fact, almost everything Stravinsky ever wrote seems to turn out to be some kind of dance, and this symphony is no exception. Ansermet's deep penetration of the work appeared to lend credence to this view.

The concert began rather stiffly with a performance of the well-known second Suite for Flute and Strings by Bach. The orchestra, which sounded top-heavy with violins, was slow-footed and ponderous in this music and none too delicate in its phrasing. The flute ornamentations, however, by Miss Dwyer, the Boston Symphony's first flutist, were beautifully played.

The effect probably would have been better if she had played standing instead of seated behind a music rack where her tone occasionally was almost blotted out by the weight of the strings and by two other flutes which, for no pressing reason, were assigned to play with her in the routine passages.



Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
MON DEC 11 1961

Footlights and Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Ansermet to Conduct

Other holiday visitors to the borough this weekend will be the Boston Symphony and Ernest Ansermet, the 78-year-old Swiss who will be guest conductor.

Mr. Ansermet will conduct the first New York performance of Frank Martin's "Etudes for String Orchestra" at 8:30 p.m. Friday at the Academy. The conductor and composer are both Swiss and their names have long been linked, with notations like "arranged by Ansermet" appearing on programs where Martin is listed as composer.

Mr. Ansermet first came to this country as conductor of Diaghilev's Ballet Russe in 1916. Two years later he founded l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and didn't return to the United States for 30 years.

On his first tour here 45 years ago, however, Mr. Ansermet gave premieres of several works by Stravinsky—another composer with whom his name is often associated. Some music critics now feel that perhaps only Stravinsky shows as much authority over his own scores as Mr. Ansermet.

Brahms' Second Symphony and the Suite from de Falla's "Three Cornered Hat" also are on Friday's program.

The Brahms work will get another playing at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at Brooklyn College's Whitman Auditorium, where Myron Levite will conduct the Boro Park YM & YWHA Symphony Orchestra.

This is Mr. Levite's 32nd year with the orchestra he helped found when he was 14. Marion Graves will perform Wieniawski's Second Violin Concerto with the orchestra.

Also on the program, which will benefit the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, is Weber's "Der Freischutz."

ERNEST ANSERMET.
From Ballet Russe to Boston Symphony.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
THU DEC 14 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Ansermet Leads Boston Symphony

The star athlete often wears out young, but the sprinter on the podium is among the most indestructible of musicians.

Pierre Monteux at 86 has the edge on Ernest Ansermet, who is only 78, for perennial youthfulness. But the Swiss maestro, who appeared last night at Carnegie Hall as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony, gives every indication of continuing to follow Monteux's energetic, steady footsteps.

His distinguished result with the Bostonians in Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, in Debussy's Prelude to "Afternoon of a Faun," and in the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition," was a harbinger of good tidings. Musically, the holiday season has arrived.

Walking with the lively gait of a track man out for his daily constitutional, tall, erect Ansermet not only looked like a scientist, but eminently applied the scientific method to music. His discipline was exemplary. The orchestra was precise in attacks and excellently integrated in tone.

His wintry white hair and beard may make him look like an indoor snowman, but his musical projection of Stravinsky's Symphony was volcanic enough to melt a glacier or fire a rocket. Despite its conservative instrumentation, the Symphony, especially in the Con moto final movement, sounded barbaric and frenzied enough to be "Le Sacre de Printemps."

Languid 'Afternoon of a Faun'

Then came the misty, languid world of "Afternoon of a Faun," to which Ansermet gave the sensuousness of a Monet canvas.

The high point for this listener, however, was the performance of Moussorgsky's "Pictures"—he made the fascinating panorama of alternating caricatures, pastels and rich oils the liveliest of animated aural cartoons. Each of the descriptive miniatures sounded with rare imagination. Ansermet demonstrated with each, consummate understanding of orchestral color and balance.

The sound of the luscious strings contrasting with the muted, nasal sound of the trumpet in "Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle" was only one among a succession of pictorial gems.

Bach's Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings, with the Bostonians' virtuoso distaff first flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, as soloist, opened the program.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN DEC 17 1961

ANSERMET LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Martin's Etudes for String Orchestra on Program

As part of his second program with the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall this season, Ernest Ansermet yesterday afternoon conducted a novelty by his Swiss countryman, Frank Martin, called Etudes for String Orchestra.

Written in 1957 for the famous Kammerorchester of Basel and its conductor, Paul Sacher, it was first performed in America two years later by William Steinberg and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

The work was played at Brooklyn College by an orchestra under the direction of Siegmund Levarie in 1960, but the Boston Symphony performance was the first in Manhattan.

The subtitles of the Etudes virtually describe the work. After an Overture comes Etude I, "for the sequence of features," then Etude II, "for pizzicato," Etude III, "for expression and sostenuto" scored for violas and 'cellos only, and finally Etude IV, "'For fugal play, or 'each person or thing in its place.'"

Like the best of Martin's music, the Etudes are beautifully crafted. If they seem on first hearing, modest in intent and effect, this is characteristic, for the composer does not strike highly expressive attitudes, but presents a refined statement of ideas that are mor personal than outspoken.

The sound of the Boston Symphony strings in the Etudes was warmly elegant, but the work might have had more clarity and finesse in the playing with a smaller complement of players.

Mr. Ansermet began his program with a lovely performance of Brahms' Second Symphony. This is a congenial work to start with, but the conductor and orchestra gave the score a gleaming tone it seldom gets. Mr. Ansermet stressed details of phrasing, sometimes in an unconventional way, so that the music had a light, limpid and relaxed atmosphere.

The third and final work on the program was a suite drawn from Falla's famous ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat." It is a score with which Mr. Ansermet is well acquainted, since he conducted the ballet's première in London in 1919.

Perhaps because he remembers the initial conception of the music, his reading seemed like a refresher course. Instead of the razzle-dazzle that afflicts today's interpretations, Mr. Ansermet gave it a low-keyed performance. This made the brief solo flights of the wind instruments doubly effective and when the conductor came to the lively finale, it became doubly vivid. Because the conductor did not force the dance rhythms, they, too, took on an impressive incisiveness.

The performance was original in moer than one sense, and the orchestra responded with beautifully sensitive playing.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

98

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
THU DEC 14 1961

ANSERMET LEADS BOSTONIANS' CONCERT HERE

By Ronald Eyer

The seventy-eight-year-old Swiss, Ernest Ansermet, took charge of the Bostonians as guest conductor for this second evening concert of their New York season with the alertness and firm grasp of a man half his years. Innumerable recordings over the years with his Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, which he still conducts, have made him as widely known as many of our own conductors in this country and certainly as highly esteemed.

Like many Swiss, he combines in his artistic personality native qualities of steadiness and practicality with a distinctly French sophistication and nicety of taste. The combination was especially notable in Debussy's "Faun" which was performed with infinite sensitivity yet was not overdone in the direction of mysticism and half-lights. Everything was clear and forthright, and there was more innocence than lechery in the little beast who dreamed away his desires on a hot afternoon.

Though Ansermet does not hold with the latter-day manifestations of Stravinsky's creative genius, he is a famous champion of that composer's earlier work and it was a valuable experience to hear the Symphony in Three Movements from his hand. It is a strange, complicated work which has defied description even by literary interpreters of Stravinsky's music who have been closest to him. They cannot agree whether it is even a symphony in the classical meaning of the word.

Mainly, like so much of Stravinsky, it is an exercise to rhythm—all kinds of rhythm. Sometimes it chugs forward like a locomotive; sometimes the entire orchestra slashes and bangs away at a huge kind of unison syncopation; sometimes at seems to lope along like a wild prairie horse. But, with hurdy-gurdy tags and patches of melody, the music always is in motion, always being propelled insistently by the rhythm within, like a dance. In fact, almost everything Stravinsky ever wrote seems to turn out to be some kind of dance, and this symphony is no exception. Ansermet's deep penetration of the work appeared to lend credence to this view.

The concert began rather stiffly with a performance of the well-known second Suite for Flute and Strings by Bach. The orchestra, which sounded top-heavy with violins, was slow-footed and ponderous in this music and none too delicate in its phrasing. The flute ornamentations, however, by Miss Dwyer, the Boston Symphony's first flutist, were beautifully played.

The effect probably would have been better if she had played standing instead of seated behind a music rack where her tone occasionally was almost blotted out by the weight of the strings and by two other flutes which, for no pressing reason, were assigned to play with her in the routine passages.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 430,594
NOV 25 1961

THE Third Symphony of the Russian-American composer Alexei Haieff, which was brought to Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night by the Boston Symphony, under Charles Munch, offered an interesting contrast to the Milhaud work. I am not particularly fond of the type of music that this symphony represents. It is as desiccated as a salt mine, and invites you to admire the intricacy of the composer's technique rather than to feel anything. But it is expertly written, and has a sort of coherence that the Milhaud piece conspicuously lacks. It was preceded on Mr. Munch's program by an "Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky," by Howard Hanson. Mr. Hanson had obviously got himself a subject that called for sincerity instead of technical display, and his "Elegy" turned out to be a moving, poetic work, a bit Wagnerian in the good sense of the word, and communicating some dignity of feeling. It was by far the finest of the contemporary compositions I heard during the week.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN DEC 17 1961

Boston Symphony Heard With Ansermet Conducting

By Francis D. Perkins

Under the guest conductorship of Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon to play a program including a work by another noted Swiss musician, Frank Martin. The two other items in Mr. Ansermet's list, Brahms' Symphony No. 2 and a suite from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat," are regular members of the standard repertory, but the seventy-eight-year-old conductor brought an element of novelty by adding the introduction and other excerpts to the usually played three dances in the Falla ballet score.

This was the first Manhattan performance of Mr. Martin's Etudes for String Orchestra but, besides its appearance in the Bostonians' Friday night concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it had had an earlier hearing in a concert by the Brooklyn College orchestra. Composed four years ago, it includes an overture and etudes featuring sequence of features, pizzicato, expression and sostenuto, and fugal play.

Each in Its Place

As a whole, it can be described by the latter part of the designation of the closing etude, "each thing or person in its place," and its performance was equally well ordered. With a discreet degree of pungency, it is conservative while not suggesting conscious retrospect; with considerable animation, it has a prevailing sobriety, but it also has enough melodic persuasion and range of musical colon to avoid a sense of grayness and to make it more than a dextrous workout for symphonic strings.

It called for and received absolutely lucid playing; the span of string timbres was wide and finely graded, and there was corresponding subtlety in the dynamics of an interpretation under a conductor who obtains a realization of its ideas with completeness and without superfluous motion.

The full orchestra was in admirable form in the Brahms symphony except for early in the first movement, when there was a shade less of the clearness of detail which marked the rest of its performance. One debatable point in the opening section was the clipping of certain phrases for the upper strings in a few measures. Otherwise the interpretation was rewarding in a tone which was engaging in its array and quality of instrumental color, and an emotional range which fully disclosed the resources of the music in a convincing, while again well-ordered way.

The less familar parts of "The Three Cornered Hat" which Mr. Ansermet and the orchestra added to the well-known dances had an expected Spanish savor and much, in tunes and their scoring, which one would like to hear more regularly. Mr. Ansermet, who conducted the first performance of this score with full orchestra forty-two years ago, evoked a convincing disclosure of its atmosphere, its moods and rhythms, combining spirit with the neatness of execution which is one of the characteristics of performances under his direction.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU DEC 14 1961

Music

Stravinsky Symphony Reborn

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

The celebrated Swiss master of the baton—Ernest Ansermet—took over the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a consummate show of power and musicianship at Carnegie Hall last night.

This was as evident in Bach as it was in Debussy and Moussorgsky, but most compelling of all was the reading of Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements." Here was both a revelation and a rebirth.

Much as I had tried in the past to fathom this strange score, its secret had eluded me and its charm had been nonexistent. Mr. Ansermet showed me how wrong I was. This may well be Stravinsky's most challenging score.

Symphony Reborn.

So in that sense the symphony enjoyed a "rebirth" last night, thanks to the vision of this 78-year-old Swiss conductor whose visits here have been all too brief, but always inspiring.

Written during the last war, the symphony undoubted reflects some of its pressures and tensions. Where they appear Stravinsky leaves to others to judge. There is no given program, only a throbbing system of crisis and agitation.

The method of composition will throw off many first listeners—the block and plane formation, the absence of typical organic development. But a giant pulsation is at work—and in the end we know it is the throb of life itself.

Parallel Forces.

What was so striking about Mr. Ansermet's performance was the way the music was made to generate its own momentum, as if from some concealed master gland. Parallel forces of outer and inner tension seemed in motion.

Complete though it is by and in itself, the symphony, perhaps because of its very procedure, is potentially one of the greatest ballet scores ever written. Given that added dimension, it should prove a knockout.

A performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," exquisite in its dreamlike poetry of mood, reaffirmed the French genius for suggestion and subtlety. That was followed by Ravel's sumptuous arrangement of the "Pictures at an Exhibition."

His Magic Wand.

To open the concert Mr. Ansermet, with his magic wand, conjured up the lost world of grace that is the early 18th century of the B minor Suite of Bach for flute and strings.

All was refreshingly clear and right—the strings, the impeccable flute of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, even the two other flutes, added as "ripieni"—as Bach himself probably did—to strengthen the contrast.

When asked between numbers last night, "Why three flutes?" Mr. Ansermet, with the wisdom and finality of a man wholly free of pedantry, replied, "Why not?" Touche, monsieur!

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1961

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony will be starting its annua... gie
Hall series this month. There will be, as usual, 5 ... day evening concerts and 5 Saturday afternoon con... The Orchestra will also give 5 Friday evening conce... the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The first concert is ... led for Wednesday evening, Nov. 15.

Since Oct. 7, WQXR has been broadcasting the ... rams of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evenings fr... 5 to 10 p.m. (E.T.) These stereophonic tape transcription ... casts will include all the programs of the regular series ... Symphony Hall, and will continue in the Spring with th... certs of the Boston Pops and from the Berkshire Festival. ... programs go out on AM and FM channels as well as in ... ltiplex
Stereo. We have been hearing the broadcasts in ... tiplex
Stereo, and it is indeed (this is not a commercial!) ... wonderful experience in radio listening.

98

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
THU DEC 14 1961

ANSERMET LEADS BOSTONIANS' CONCERT HERE

By Ronald Eyer

The seventy-eight-year-old Swiss, Ernest Ansermet, took charge of the Bostonians as guest conductor for this second evening concert of their New York season with the alertness and firm grasp of a man half his years. Innumerable recordings over the years with his Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, which he still conducts, have made him as widely known as many of our own conductors in this country and certainly as highly esteemed.

Like many Swiss, he combines in his artistic personality native qualities of steadiness and practicality with a distinctly French sophistication and nicety of taste. The combination was especially notable in Debussy's "Faun" which was performed with infinite sensitivity yet was not overdone in the direction of mysticism and half-lights. Everything was clear and forthright, and there was more innocence than lechery in the little beast who dreamed away his desires on a hot afternoon.

Though Ansermet does not hold with the latter-day manifestations of Stravinsky's creative genius, he is a famous champion of that composer's earlier work and it was a valuable experience to hear the Symphony in Three Movements from his hand. It is a strange, complicated work which has defied description even by literary interpreters of Stravinsky's music who have been closest to him. They cannot agree whether it is even a symphony in the classical meaning of the word.

Mainly, like so much of Stravinsky, it is an exercise to rhythm—all kinds of rhythm. Sometimes it chugs forward like a locomotive; sometimes the entire orchestra slashes and bangs away at a huge kind of unison syncopation; sometimes it seems to lope along like a wild prairie horse. But with hurdy-gurdy tags and patches of melody, the music always is in motion, always being propelled insistently by the rhythm within, like a dance. In fact, almost everything Stravinsky ever wrote seems to turn out to be some kind of dance, and this symphony is no exception. Ansermet's deep penetration of the work appeared to lend credence to this view.

The concert began rather stiffly with a performance of the well-known second Suite for Flute and Strings by Bach. The orchestra, which sounded top-heavy with violins, was slow-footed and ponderous in this music and none too delicate in its phrasing. The flute ornamentations, however, by Mary Dwyer, the Boston Symphony's first flutist, were beautifully played.

The effect probably would have been better if she had played standing instead of seated behind a music rack where her tone occasionally was almost blotted out by the weight of the strings and by two other flutes which, for no pressing reason, were assigned to play with her in the routine passages.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 430,594
NOV 25 1961

THE Third Symphony of the Russian-American composer Alexei Haieff, which was brought to Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, offered an interesting contrast to the Milhaud work. I am not particularly fond of the type of music that this symphony represents. It is as desiccated as a salt mine, and invites you to admire the intricacy of the composer's technique rather than to feel anything. But it is expertly written, and has a sort of coherence that the Milhaud piece conspicuously lacks. It was preceded on Mr. Munch's program by an Elegy to the Memory of My Friend, Serge Koussevitzky, by Howard Hanson. Mr. Hanson had obviously got himself a subject that called for sincerity instead of technical display, and his "Elegy" turned out to be a moving, poetic work, in Wagnerian in the good sense of the word, that communicating something. Why it should be two of the finest of the contemporary compositions I heard during the week is—WINTHROP SARGEANT

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN DEC 17 1961

Boston Symphony Heard With Ansermet Conducting

By Francis D. Perkins

Under the guest conductorship of Ernest Ansermet, the Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon to play a program including a work by another noted Swiss musician, Frank Martin. The two other items in Mr. Ansermet's list, Brahms' Symphony No. 2 and a suite from Manuel de Falla's "The Three Cornered Hat," are regular members of the standard repertory, but the seventy-eight-year-old conductor brought an element of novelty by adding the introduction and other excerpts to the usually played three dances in the Falla ballet score.

This was the first Manhattan performance of Mr. Martin's Etudes for String Orchestra but, besides its appearance in the Bostonians' Friday night concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it had had an earlier hearing in a concert by the Brooklyn College orchestra. Composed four years ago, it includes an overture and etudes featuring sequence of features, pizzicato, expression and sostenuto, and fugal play.

Each in Its Place

As a whole, it can be described by the latter part of the designation of the closing etude, "each thing or person in its place," and its performance was equally well ordered. With a discreet degree of pungency, it is conservative while not suggesting conscious retrospect; with considerable animation, it has a prevailing sobriety, but it also has enough melodic persuasion and range of musical color to avoid a sense of grayness and to make it more than a dextrous workout for symphonic strings.

It called for and received absolutely lucid playing; the span of string timbres was wide and finely graded, and there was corresponding subtlety in the dynamics of an interpretation under a conductor who obtains a realization of its ideas with completeness and without superfluous motion.

The full orchestra was in admirable form in the Brahms symphony except for early in the first movement, when there was a shade less of the clearness of detail which marked the rest of its performance. One debatable point in the opening section was the clipping of certain phrases for the upper strings in a few measures. Otherwise the interpretation was rewarding in a tone which was engaging in its array and quality of instrumental color, and an emotional range which fully disclosed the resources of the music in a convincing, while again well-ordered way.

The less familar parts of "The Three Cornered Hat" which Mr. Ansermet and the orchestra added to the well-known dances had an expected Spanish savor and much in tunes and their scoring, which one would like to hear more regularly. Mr. Ansermet, who conducted the first performance of this score with full orchestra forty-two years ago, evoked a convincing disclosure of its atmosphere, its moods and rhythms, combining spirit with the neatness of execution which is one of the characteristics of performances under his direction.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU DEC 14 1961

Music

Stravinsky Symphony Reborn

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI

The celebrated Swiss master of the baton—Ernest Ansermet—took over the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a consummate show of power and musicianship at Carnegie Hall last night.

This was as evident in Bach as it was in Debussy and Moussorgsky, but most compelling of all was the reading of Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements." Here was both a revelation and a rebirth.

Much as I had tried in the past to fathom this strange score, its secret had eluded me and its charm had been nonexistent. Mr. Ansermet showed me how wrong I was. This may well be Stravinsky's most challenging score.

Symphony Reborn.

So in that sense the symphony enjoyed a "rebirth" last night, thanks to the vision of this 78-year-old Swiss conductor whose visits here have been all too brief, but always inspiring.

Written during the last war, the symphony undoubted reflects some of its pressures and tensions. Where they appear Stravinsky leaves to others to judge. There is no given program, only a throbbing system of crisis and agitation.

The method of composition will throw off many first listeners—the block and plane formation, the absence of typical organic development. But a giant pulsation is at work—and in the end we know it is the throb of life itself.

Parallel Forces.

What was so striking about Mr. Ansermet's performance was the way the music was made to generate its own momentum, as if from some concealed master gland. Parallel forces of outer and inner tension seemed in motion.

Complete though it is by and in itself, the symphony, perhaps because of its very procedure, is potentially one of the greatest ballet scores ever written. Given that added dimension, it should prove a knockout.

A performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," exquisite in its dreamlike poetry of mood, reaffirmed the French genius for suggestion and subtlety. That was followed by Ravel's sumptuous arrangement of the "Pictures at an Exhibition."

His Magic Wand.

To open the concert Mr. Ansermet, with his magic wand, conjured up the lost world of grace that is the early 18th century of the B minor Suite of Bach for flute and strings.

All was refreshingly clear and right—the strings, the impeccable flute of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, even the two other flutes, added as "ripieni"—as Bach himself probably did—to strengthen the contrast.

When asked between numbers last night, "Why three flutes?" Mr. Ansermet, with the wisdom and finality of a man wholly free of pedantry, replied, "Why not?" Touche, monsieur.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
NOV 1961

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony will be starting its annual Carnegie Hall series this month. There will be, as usual, 5 Wednesday evening concerts and 5 Saturday afternoon concerts. The Orchestra will also give 5 Friday evening concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The first concert is scheduled for Wednesday evening, Nov. 15.

Since Oct. 7, WQXR has been broadcasting the programs of the Boston Symphony on Saturday evenings from 8:05 to 10 p.m. (E.T.) These stereophonic tape transcription broadcasts will include all the programs of the regular series in Symphony Hall, and will continue in the Spring with the concerts of the Boston Pops and from the Berkshire Festival. The programs go out on AM and FM channels as well as in Multiplex Stereo. We have been hearing the broadcasts in Multiplex Stereo, and it is indeed (this is not a commercial!) a wonderful experience in radio listening.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1962

Boston

Scholar and Gentleman

Ernest Ansermet made his fourth visit to this city as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. The white-bearded Swiss, a scholar and a gentleman in every respect, including his musical approach, gave us at his first pair of concerts the Bach Suite in B minor, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer, first flute, as soloist; Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; Debussy's Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun; and the Mussorgsky-Ravel Pictures At An Exhibition.

The following week, Mr. Ansermet introduced the Overture and Four Etudes by his Swiss colleague, Frank Martin, which were preceded by Brahms's Symphony No. 2 and followed by Falla's Three-Cornered Hat Suite.

The Symphony No. 6, by Karl Amadeus Hartmann, who writes with tremendous drive and passion, bending serial devices to his own distinctive use, was given its local premiere. The Symphony is wild in dynamics, tempos and rhythm, but also highly organized, with a great deal more logic and expressive power than a good many other contemporary pieces. It was conducted by Richard Burgin, making his first appearances of the season as conductor. The program was given entirely to 20th-century music, including the first Boston performance of Bartok's splendid Four Orchestral Pieces, Op. 12, and Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony. With the composer conducting, Boston also heard for the first time Lukas Foss's Time Cycle, with Adele Addison as soloist.

Mr. Munch presented the Boston premiere of Alexei Haieff's Symphony No. 3, with the composer present. Though the piece has substance and a certain style, the big moment of the concert occurred in Berlioz' Harold in Italy, with Joseph dePasquale, the Orchestra's first viola, as soloist. He played it superbly, with enchanting richness and variety of tone.

Vlado Perlemuter, French pianist, made his American debut at the season's second Tuesday evening concert, with Mr. Munch and the Orchestra, playing Ravel's Concerto for the Left Hand and the Franck Symphonic Variations. Perlemuter is a poetic rather than brilliant pianist. He made a favorable impression, even in the faded French

Herbert von Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic gave us a truly great performance of the Eroica Symphony, in a program including Bach's B minor Suite, with Karl-Heinz Zoeller as soloist, and Stravinsky's Symphony in C.

Frederick Prausnitz, formerly of New York's Juilliard School, conducted the student orchestra of the New England Conservatory in his debut with the orchestra at Jordan Hall, Oct. 26. Mr. Prausnitz, better-known in Europe than in this country, obviously is a professional who expects professional response. He drove his players, and the sound was rather tight and strained at times. But there is no question of his ability. The music included Schumann's Overture to Genoveva, Strauss's Don Juan, William Schuman's New England Tryptich and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

Paul Paray and the Detroit Symphony appeared at Symphony Hall in the Boston University Celebrity Series. He played the D major Symphony of Sibelius, and Glenn Gould was soloist in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 and Strauss's Burlesque. The afternoon ended with a beautifully executed Daphnis and Chloe.

No less than a reputed United States premiere of a Mozart symphony, No. 20 in D major (K. 133), graced a concert by New England Conservatory Orchestra, ably conducted by Jerome D. Cohen, in Jordan Hall. It is a delectable, characteristically youthful Mozart work. Mr. Cohen also presented Hindemith's Five Pieces for String Orchestra, Wagner's Siegfried Idyll, in the original orchestration, and Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto.

Alfred Nash Patterson conducted Chorus Pro Musica in a performance of the Verdi Requiem, Nov. 12, which was chorally electrifying but not so satisfactory in the work of the soloists: Mary Curtis Verna, soprano; Elena Nikolaidi, contralto; Vincenzo Siviero, tenor, and Louis Sgarro, bass.

That same afternoon, the Budapest Quartet made one of their regular visits to Jordan Hall. Their fare was Haydn's D major Quartet, Op. 50; the 12th Quartet of Milhaud; and the vast, romantic C minor Quartet of Brahms.

The Amadeus Quartet, on the Boston University Celebrity Series concert at Jordan Hall, was a decided success. They introduced Matyas Seiber's Quartetto Lirico (1948-50), a lyrical work in the 12-tone manner but not slavishly strict; Mozart's last Quartet (K. 590); and Schubert's Death and the Maiden Quartet.

The first of four pre-Christmas performances of Messiah by the Handel and Haydn Society went well enough in conductor Edward Gilday's quiet, clean and clear approach. Soloists were Alice Farnsworth Boffetti, soprano; Rosalind Hupp, contralto; Edward Munro, tenor; and Howard Kahl, bass.

First local production of Command Performance, an opera commissioned by Vassar College and first performed there a week earlier, was given by Sarah Caldwell's Opera Group. Howard Wendell Smith's libretto is based on a lively episode during the reign of Queen Elizabeth I, who gave a Turkish Sultan a fantastical pipe organ in return for a trading agreement. Robert Middleton, the composer, conducted his dry and wiry music. Blanche Thebom, as Elizabeth, Ezio Flagello, as the Sultan, and a cast of able performers in lesser roles gave good account of themselves. The performance was at Kresge Auditorium of M.I.T.

Kalman Novak made his debut as conductor of the Civic Symphony, presenting Toch's Pinocchio Overture, a fine performance of Beethoven's Second Piano Concerto, with Bruce Simonds as an excellent soloist, and Brahms's Symphony No. 2. —Cyrus Durgin

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Dec. 13—Boston Symphony, Ernest Ansermet conducting. BRAHMS: Suite No. 2. STRAVINSKY: Symphony in Three Movements. DEBUSSY: Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune. MUSSORGSKY: Pictures at an Exhibition.

Dec. 16—BRAHMS: Symphony No. 2. MARTIN: Etudes for String Orchestra. FALLA: Suite from El Sombrero de Tres Picos.

There was nothing startling or world-shaking in this pair of concerts. The Boston demonstrated that it is still a great orchestra, albeit not so great as in the Koussevitzky period. It sounded like its old self in the Brahms Second Symphony. Mr. Ansermet was at his best in the Debussy and Mussorgsky works.

Frank Martin's Etudes may be good practice for the strings, but they are tiresome listening. And the Boston strings don't really need that kind of practice. —Everett Helm

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 1962

Boston Symphony

At the second Carnegie Hall concert of the Saturday afternoon series by the Boston Symphony, Dec. 16, Ernest Ansermet was the guest conductor. The program included Brahms' Second Symphony, Frank Martin's "Etudes for String Orchestra," and Falla's Suite from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat." It is always surprising how different the same orchestra can sound under different leadership. Surely it is not our imagination that the visitors from Boston had greater sweetness and warmth than usual, rather than the sharp brilliance with which we usually associate its quality. The Brahms was a thing of great loveliness, marked by balance, strength, and personal appeal. Frank Martin, who is a Swiss countryman of Ansermet's, has written a very interesting series of short movements in his "Etudes," and they exploit the various string qualities to good effect: Etude I "for the sequence of features"; Etude II "for pizzicato"; Etude III "for expression and sostenuto"; Etude IV "for fugal play." Mr. Ansermet conducted the premiere of the ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" in 1919. Perhaps that is why his present reading sounded so authentic yet so fresh. Of course, the splendid manner in which the orchestra responded to his directions had much to do with the excellent results.

Programs for the four Sunday Symphony Hall organ concerts of the 1961-62 season have been announced by Thomas D. Perry, Manager of the Boston Symphony and sponsor of the series. E. Power Biggs opened the series on Dec. 17. The second concert will be given Jan. 7 by Ray Ferguson, the third by Pierre Cochereau on Feb. 18, and the final by Catharine Crozier on March 25.

100

Providence

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
DEC 2 0 1961

Music Last Night

Symphony in Providence, Yule Singers in Barrington

By RUTH TRIPP

Orchestras are made up of people who can play musical instruments with perfection of technique and warmth of heart. The listeners who heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium were thoroughly appreciative of this fact as Ernest Ansermet, their guest conductor, guided the musicians through the interesting program.

What the listeners did not know is, that, for the first time in the 81-year history of the orchestra, the entire group will have a week-long Christmas vacation. They have had an unusually busy year during which the 102 men and three women have played 221 concerts. Ours was the last one. The members of the orchestra have not exchanged gifts this year, but, instead, have adopted two little Asiatic orphans and have given a gift to CARE.

There was certainly an abundance of some magic quality at work which seemed to bring out unexpected delicacy of tone and the most discerning exposition of the structure of every composition. Ernest Ansermet seemed absorbed in how best to display total beauty of organized sound, and after the program he was recalled time after time. The listeners went away happy, as the musicians must have done.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer was soloist in the Bach Suite in B minor, and the group of strings with harpsichord for the continuo gave her every opportunity to thread the silvery notes of her solo through the neatly planned fabric of the Bach music. The tempos were exactly to my liking, and the audience showed its appreciation heartily. The final Badinerie always brings an audience up to the point of hearty applause, and if there is any other flutist around who can play this music any better, I have not heard the news. Doriot Anthony heads the list.

Musical structure of another sort was afforded in the Stravinsky Symphony in Three Movements. Here, the form of the work seemed not so important as the manner in which the themes were built. Ansermet is a genius for keeping choirs in balance within their own areas and setting one against another with the most advantageous effect possible. The middle movement of this seldom heard score was truly fascinating. It seemed to be additional evidence of the magnitude of Stavinsky's contribution to contemporary music.

The second half of the program began with a most artistic interpretation of Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune." This score can be weak and sugary when it is overdone but as we heard it, the freshness and delicacy of shading made it seem like a new score. For the first time in years, I remembered having seen this ballet.

The final number on the program was Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." We saw them all, vividly. The brass and percussion sections were magnificent. So were the reeds and strings, and with the final glorious chord the orchestra was truly saying "Merry Christmas to all, and to all, a good-night."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 28,133
DEC 2 0 1961

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Concert Featured By Flute Soloist

Ernest Ansermet, guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its many and varied paces in a splendid concert last night in the Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist, was soloist and played an exciting and admirable performance of Bach's "Suite No. 2 in B-Minor For Flute and Strings."

Miss Dwyer's crisp articulation and eloquent phasing made her performance not only endearing but enduring. She was exact in the measured dances of the swifter tempos; in her expressive passages, her pauses and rubatos were given with a delicate balance of impulse and restraint that bespoke the artist in all phrases. The strength and animation in the final dance of the suite, the Badinerie, won her a flood of applause and three curtain calls. ✦✦✦

ANSERMET CONDUCTED with a gentle persuasion, and without flourishes that brought out the best in his musicians. His reading of Stravinsky's collection of sound effects, commonly and euphoniously titled "Symphony In Three Movements," was a masterpiece of precision. The snap and clarity of his cue calls produced decisive responses among the musicians. Evidently they enjoyed it as did some of the audience. But as a symphony, it is misnamed and follows no recognizable symphonic form. It was as though Stravinsky wandered all over the city picking up the noises of traffic, industry and commerce and ending up at a Twist marathon. However, it gave every musician with a loud instrument a chance to shout, including two harps, a piano, a contra bassoon and a slack-skinned bass drum. ✦✦✦

HIS PLAYING of Debussy's "Prelude to Afternoon of A Fawn" was a dream and the following collection, Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" arranged by Ravel, was realistically painted and thought provoking. The finale, "The Great Gate of Kiev," as usual brought a salvo of acclamation from the crowded house. C.H.L.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
DEC 17 1961

DORIOT DWYER, flutist, will be featured soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra when they play at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium on Tuesday at 8:15 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times
BARRINGTON, R. I.
Weekly Circ. 2,275
DEC 14 1961

FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA'S third concert of the season, Tuesday evening at 8:15 in Veterans' Memorial Auditorium, vacationing Charles Munch has invited the internationally known Ernest Ansermet of Switzerland to be guest conductor. In turn, Mr. Ansermet has invited the orchestra's noted Doriot Anthony Dwyer to be soloist on the Providence program.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
DEC 17 1961

Ansermet to Conduct Symphony Orchestra

ERNEST ANSERMET of Switzerland will be guest conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it makes its third appearance in Providence on Tuesday evening at 8:15 at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Ansermet, who was appointed permanent conductor of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande of Geneva in 1918, last conducted the Boston Symphony in 11 concerts during the 1955-56 season. His appearances with the Boston orchestra will be his only engagements in the United States this year.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist, will be soloist at Tuesday's concert. Miss Dwyer has been principal flutist with the Boston Symphony since 1952.

The program:

Suite No. 2, in B minor, for Flute and Strings ..... Bach
- Overture
- Rondo
- Bourrees I and II
- Polonaise and Double
- Badinerie

Flute solo, Doriot Anthony Dwyer

Symphony in Three Movements, Stravinsky
- I Allegro
- II Andante
- III Con moto

"Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune" ..... Debussy
(Eclogue by Stephane Mallarme)

"Pictures at an Exhibition" .. Moussorgsky
(Piano pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel)

Promenade—Gnomus—Promenade—Il vecchio castello—Tuileries—Bydlo—Promenade—Ballet of Chicks in their Shells—Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle—Limoges: The Marketplace—Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua)—The Hut on Fowls' Legs—The Great Gate of Kiev

Christmas Vacation

BOSTON, Dec. 29 ---- ~~"School's out"~~ for Christmas for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, starting today. For the first time in the 81 years' history of the famous ensemble, a ~~week-long~~ Christmas vacation has been awarded the musicians as a gift of the Trustees. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~for~~ for some years, has been the busiest symphony orchestra in the country. This season it became even busier, with the addition of a new Monday evening series of concerts, to take care of a long waiting list of would-be subscribers.

Now, the 102 men and 3 ladies play 221 concerts ~~(~~ (to say nothing of the many rehearsals involved) in a season of fifty weeks. ~~This~~ This includes the regular symphony concerts in Boston and on tour, the Pops, the Esplanade Concerts, and the Berkshire Festival.

In the Christmas spirit, the musicians have renounced gifts among themselves in order to provide a fund for the adoption of two little Asiatic orphans-- a boy and a girl. Also, the executive staff has done similarly to make a ~~week~~ gift to CARE.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

DEC 21 1961

Symphony Vacation

"School's out" for Christmas for the Boston Symphony musicians. For the first time in 81 years a mid-winter vacation of one week has been granted the musicians by the orchestra's trustees. For some years the Boston Symphony has been the busiest symphony orchestra in the United States. This season, with the addition of a new Monday evening series, it became even busier.

Now the 102 men and three ladies play 221 concerts (to say nothing of the many rehearsals involved or the recording sessions) in a season of 50 weeks. These include the regular symphony concerts in Boston and on tour, the Pops season, the Esplanade concerts, and the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

This Christmas the musicians have renounced gifts to one another in order to provide a fund for the adoption of two little Asiatic orphans, a boy and a girl. Also the executive staff has followed the same plan in order to make a gift to CARE.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 53,559

DEC 20 1961

Hub Orchestra On Christmas Vacation

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — If the Boston Symphony Orchestra put more lilt into its performance Tuesday night than customarily there was good reason.

When the lights dimmed, the members embarked on the first weeklong Christmas vacation in the 81-year history of the famous ensemble.

The 102 men and 3 women had played in 221 concerts and countless rehearsals during an unusually busy year.

The musicians renounced gifts among themselves to provide funds for adoption of two little Asiatic orphans and a gift to CARE.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

DEC 20 1961

Boston Symphony Starts First Long Yule Vacation

PROVIDENCE (AP) — If the Boston Symphony Orchestra put more lilt into its performance Tuesday night than customarily there was good reason.

When the lights dimmed, the members embarked on the first weeklong Christmas vacation in the 81-year history of the famous ensemble.

The 102 men and three women had played in 221 concerts and countless rehearsals during an unusually busy year.

The musicians renounced gifts among themselves to provide funds for adoption of two little Asiatic orphans and a gift to CARE.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

DEC 21 1961

PERSONAL POSTCARD

BOSTON SYMPHONY:

So you're having your first Christmas-week vacation in the orchestra's 81 years? Nothing could be more in tune with what you deserve.

BOSTON COMMON

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

DEC 20 1961

~~Symphony~~ Pitched To Yule Holiday

By the Associated Press

Providence, R.I.

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra put more lilt into its performance Tuesday night than customarily, there was good reason.

When the lights dimmed, the members embarked on the first week-long Christmas vacation in the 81-year history of the famous ensemble.

The 102 men and 3 women had played in 221 concerts and countless rehearsals during an unusually busy year.

The musicians renounced gifts among themselves to provide funds for adoption of two little Asian orphans and a gift to CARE.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933

DEC 20 1961

Boston Symphony Starts Vacation

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Tuesday night began its first Christmas vacation in the 81-year history of the orchestra.

Following a concert here, the musicians do not play again until Dec. 29 in a regular weekend pair of programs at Boston.

Trustees arranged for the vacation as a gift for the 104 players who now have a 50-week season, including extra concerts at Boston and an expanded schedule at the Berkshire Music Festival in the summer.

Members of the orchestra relinquished gifts to one another, earmarking the funds instead for support of boy and girl orphans in Asia.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 63,288
DEC 20 1961

Orchestra Rests

PROVIDENCE Dec. 20 (AP)— If the Boston Symphony Orchestra put more lilt into its performance last night than customarily there was a good reason. When the lights dimmed, the orchestra embarked on its first weeklong Christmas vacation in its 81-year history.

102

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

DEC 25 1961

Merry Christmas to All

ON THIS THE DAY of peace on earth
Please let there be but words of mirth
To wish the season's best to such
As Cincy's Broz and also Hutch.
To Fred B. Cole our greetings go,
To Maestro Munch—to friend and foe.
Ring out the old, ring in the new
With Gordon and Anita Chue—that's who!
With Sup'rintendent Fred'rick Gillis
And Eddie Condon's lady, Phyllis!

Come drink to Greens, both Grace and Abel,
And Doctor William T. with hand so stable;
To, yes, the Jacobs known as Indian Jack.
To Louis Armstrong's song concerning Mack;
To Teddi Gerber and her Josh,
To Charlie Weatherill's suits so posh;
To the Goodmans, Benny as well as Alice,
And the crowd that's Twisting at the Palace.

Come, landlord, fill the flowing bowl,
Let only friendship be our goal!
Now toast good Chester at the Ritz,
Marguerite Nolan, Ella Fitz,
And both the Altmans, Kip and Roger,
And every man who is a Dodger,
And Georgie Wein and Padre Norm O'Connor,
Each investing jazz with heated honor.

A Yuletide yell for Clem the Riley,
For scribe Joe Dever, too; for Miss Lee Wiley!
Now let us not neglect to thank
The Sullivan, that witty Frank,
Who this verse form did first create
To wish Noel, Noel, to man and mate.
So bottoms up to Dr. Keyes,
The Bob who's wed to Jean of Fees;
To all good folk in old Fort Wayne
Like Billie Strauss and Ella Kelly.
I would right now I had her jelly!

Now raise your glasses high to drink
To Gilbert Steele and Taylor Spink,
To Doctor Juan Negrin and Fred'rick Nack,
To Stanley Warren, Muzak's flack:
To all the Richards known as Rocket—
Rocket, Pocket, and Vest Pocket Rocket;
To Nathan Pusey—ask not "Who's he?"
For he is famed as famed Bob Cousy!
Now madrigals for Peg and her Bill Barber

As well as Jimmy's place beside the harbor.
Such Davidsons as Charles and John and Terry,
Join in with Clinton Hebberd's choir so merry!
And you, Bill Snelling, Bob Ohanian,
And Arthurs, Fiedler and Abrahamian,
Ted the Kid and Alan Frazer,
And Ramsay Wood, whose Dad knows Asia.
Catinella, Doctor Paul,
Help us with boughs of holly deck the hall!

Jim—oh, Jimmy Redican, now raise your voice
To Watson, Phil, the Bruins' choice!
Joyeux Noel to Mrs. Godfrey's daughter Deegee
As well as photographs by Weegee!
Link arms with Floyd, the gladiator gentle,
Whose blows can make your mental troubles dental;
With Captain Al Murray and Alfred of the Statler,
And Tom McNeeley, gallant, gallant battler!

Lorenzes, John and Tasha, please don't hide out!
For it's down the hatch to E. B. Rideout!
To Pfeffers, Paul and Pauline, too!
If some names omit I seem to, I don't mean to—
Bill Baldwin not, nor Teddy Rathbun's brood.
For this is a time of festive not forgetul mood.
Sing tra-la-la to Stanley Blinstrub, McGeorge Bundy,
And cheerful chanteys to fishers in the Bay of Fundy;
To Jimmies named Hennelly and Durante,
And duo pianists Teicher and Ferrante!

So here's to Rocco and his brothers,
To mothers too—Anna's and others,
To Charles Bourgeois, John Yovicsin,
Who for a drink this day would have us in;
To Ruby Newman, Jack in his rocker,
Edwin Orlando, Mrs. Fred'rick Crocker;
To Harold Hayes, who edits Esky,
And such as Duke and Count and Peter Pesky;
To Joseph Morgen, Eddie Jaffe—each a publicist,
And Mayor John, the Hublicist;
To Art Walsh, Eula Leininger,
Sally Kopplow, Andreas Feininger!
To Janis Day and Betty Adams, cheers!
Let's get under the mistletoe, my dears.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

DEC 30 1961

Evelyne Crochet Soloist With Munch on Podium

By Harold Rogers

Charles Munch has recalled a smaller group of Boston Symphony musicians, classical in size, from their mid-winter vacation and has set up a Bach-Mozart program for the weekend concerts similar to those now traditional during the opening weeks of the Berkshire Music Festival.

It's a pleasant idea, one that doubtless found favor with the listeners yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. If it lacked the excitement of the unusual, it compensated by offering the solid satisfaction of friendly masterworks, masterfully played.

Dr. Munch opened with his own arrangement of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," long since a favorite at the year-end concerts. Meditative and devotional, the music wended its reflective way under Dr. Munch's tender guidance. From this he plunged into the bright colors of the Overture to Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major, the suite that includes the familiar and beloved air.

Evelyne Crochet, the petite French pianist now on the Brandeis faculty, came forward to participate in the first of the two Mozart works, the Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482. She is a Mozart player par excellence, the phrases elegantly turned, the notes purling forth with radiant clarity. The cadenzas of her own composition were held in the mainstream of Mozartean style and exhibited her skill in weaving thematic material together in an interesting exposition. She was warmly applauded.

Dr. Munch closed with a vivid and profound reading of the great G minor Symphony of Mozart, illuming its poignance, underlining its strength, revealing its heart

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,488

DEC 28 196

French Pianist Again Soloist With Symphony

Miss Evelyne Crochet, young French concert pianist and instructor in music at Brandeis University, will return to Symphony Hall Friday afternoon as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The 27-year-old musician, who was soloist with the Boston Symphony last January, will perform Mozart's Piano Concerto in E Flat, K. 482, under conductor Charles Munch. She will repeat her performance Saturday and Tuesday evenings.

Miss Crochet, a graduate of the National Conservatory in Paris, came to Brandeis in 1959 after winning the First Medal at the Geneva International Music Competition and the Diploma of Honor at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. Under a scholarship given to her by the French Government, she studied music in Switzerland with the late Edwin Fischer, noted pianist and conductor.

In 1960, Miss Crochet was soloist at the Boston Pops, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, and with the Berne Philharmonic Orchestra in Switzerland. Earlier this year the Cambridge resident performed again at the Boston Pops.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

JAN 4 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: EVELYNE CROCHET IS SOLOIST

Last week the orchestra returned from the first mid-season vacation in its history for a Bach-Mozart concert in a program a la Tanglewood.

The rehearsal week was necessarily foreshortened to four days, and Mr. Munch listed works which, with one exception, the men could perform in their sleep. They included Mr. Munch's personal "Auld Lang Syne", his own arrangement of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past"; Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major; and Mozart's G minor Symphony. The exception was Mozart s Piano Concerto in E flat, K 482, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist.

Unhappily the program was performed as if a number of the men were in fact in their sleep. The Chorale we can pass off as a holiday observance. As for the D major Suite and the G minor Symphony, magnificent though they both undoubtedly are, it takes a fairly inspired reading of both of them to penetrate the inevitable languour engendered by over-familiarity. This kind of reading they scarcely received. The heavy dotted rhythm of the "French overture" that begins the Suite lacked the necessary sense of stateliness, the "Air" dragged interminably, the Dance movements were wanting in crispness and the orchestral sound in general was thick. As for the Symphony, I know that its restrained sense of foreboding and agitation and its exalted passion make it one of the highest achievements in its form. But whether it was the week's accumulation of eggnog, the prolonged bitter chill or something else, the performance managed to make little impact upon me.

The Concerto was something again. This beautiful work, with its warmth of coloring, delicate embellishments, lovely woodwind combinations and subtle thematic contrasts, is, even as Mozart concertos go, rarely performed. Possibly the lack of bravura material in the passagework, or the quiet of its ending, or the challenge of the lovely slow movement accounts for this. Whatever it is, the present performance was only the third in the orchestra's history and the first time in over twenty-one years that it had been played at these concerts.

All the more kudos, then to Evelyne Crochet who played the piano magnificently. Mlle. Crochet, a native of France who now resides in Cambridge and teaches at Brandeis University, demonstrated as impeccable a touch, beautiful a tone, and as much refinement of style and musical intelligence as one is likely to encounter in many a day. She employed her own cadenzas, rather early Beethovenesque in manner, which set extremely well in their context. These qualities were sufficiently impressive to ignite a few, not too many, sparks among the accompanying forces and rouse them out of their generally logy vein. It is fair to say that it was Mozart and Mlle. Crochet who between them managed to keep the year's end from being a decided anticlimax.

This week's performance will be conducted by William Steinberg. He will conduct the orchestra in the respective Eighth Symphonies of Beethoven and Anton Bruckner.

103

Tenth Week

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past"
(Arranged by Charles Munch)

BACH ..... Suite No. 3, in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavotte I; Gavotte II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegro; Andante cantabile; Allegro

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Symphony in G minor, K. 550

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
DEC 30 1961

The Symphony

Poignant Concert Of Bach, Mozart

By GEOFFREY BUSH

Dr. Munch's last program of the year, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, had an air of classical melancholy.

The program was Bach and Mozart. The melancholy was established at the beginning by the traditional performance of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," arranged for orchestra by Dr. Munch, slow and somber, once drawing its forces together, but ending on a deep organ note of time and mutability, like its unheard words: "The old year is past—we thank Thee, Lord Jesus, that through the long year Thou hast protected us in such great danger."

The Bach Suite seemed to begin where the Prelude had ended. It had its gay moments. There were two short gavottes, a short bouree and a short gigue. In the middle of the overture there was a driving vivace section.

But the slow sections of resignation that surrounded it were what stayed in the mind. The entrance of the trumpets made it a noble resignation, but resignation was what it was.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the tenth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Evelyne Crochet, pianist, was the soloist in the Mozart concerto. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past"...Bach, arr. by Charles Munch
Suite No. 3, in D major, for orchestra ...Bach
Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482...Mozart
Symphony in G minor, K. 550...Mozart

Delicate Soloist

The soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto, which concluded the first half of the program, was Evelyne Crochet, a very pretty young woman with high black hair and a black dress, who graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris, won the First Medal at the Geneva International Music Competition, played last January with the Boston Symphony and teaches music at Brandeis.

She played the Concerto delicately. It was light, precise and graceful playing; when she played heavily, it was not heavy at all, it was still graceful and precise. Her part, as the program notes remarked, was a little showy, and the cadenzas she composed had more intensity than the score. But so much exact fragility seemed to carry its own pathos with it; it was, again, a little sad.

The saddest part was the exchange in the slow movement between the piano and the orchestra. The piano was wistful, as if there were something unfinished. The orchestra was elegaic, as if it had been finished long ago. At the end the question was unresolved; it was as if neither one had heard the other.

There was a difference, after the intermission, in Mozart's Symphony in G minor. It was its familiar self, self-contained self-controlled and self-sufficient; it left no loose ends; it was formal, controlled and clear. But the question set by the program, like the question in the slow movement of the Concerto, had not been resolved.

The melancholy at the bottom of classicism, time and its great danger, had not been triumphed over; it had been ignored, by a triumph of form and control and clarity. It was a brave conclusion to a polite and poignant concert.

Next week William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
DEC 30 1961

Bach and Mozart Heard As Dr. Munch Returns

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA presented at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 10th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Music director Dr. Charles Munch conducted. Bach–Munch: Prelude and Chorale, "The Old Year Is Past"; Bach: Suite in D major, No. 3; Mozart: Piano Concerto in E-flat major (K. 482); Mozart: Symphony in G minor (K. 550). The piano soloist was Evelyne Crochet.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Things got part-way back to normal at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, after two weeks while the Orchestra was on tour and vacation. Dr. Munch returned from a holiday in France, and conducted about 50 members of the Boston Symphony in a Bach-Mozart program. Fittingly, it began with Munch's arrangement of the Bach Prelude and Chorale, "The Old Year Is Past;" next week, after all, is next year.

Even with Bach and Mozart, we have a novelty on this program, the E-flat Piano Concerto (K. 482), which was performed by the Orchestra in 1933 with Egon Petri as soloist, and with George Copeland in 1940. Since then, silence, unless there have been lesser, and unrecorded, presentations.

A work of late 1785, this is a "light" concerto, light and consistently songful, fastidiously wrought in a style of jeweled detail, with a rondo finale, whose jigging joy is interrupted briefly by a reflective andante cantabile.

As soloist, Evelyne Crochet played cleanly and dexterously, the best music-making this chronicler has heard from her. It was dainty work, too, but strong; beautifully articulated if now and again somewhat over-pedalled, rhythmically delectable and singing all the way. To be sure, her admirable instrument let out with a bit of a roar when two f's raised their double blackness in the score, but she had to match. Dr. Munch's orchestral fortissimi, which for Mozart are very loud. Either one swims or is drowned-out.

Bach's familiar D major Suite went fine, the noble "Air on the G String" a superb and measured flow of melody, the gavottes and the bourree admirably accentuated in rhythm, and the gigue fleet and nimble. One could wish, however, that the three high trumpets had been in tune with each other and with the strings, which they stridently were not.

Mozart's monumental masterpiece, the "Great" G minor Symphony, began with such a beautiful, unforced phrasing of the principal theme in the first violins, that one thought this might be one of those rare occasions when all is well in Heaven and on stage at Symphony Hall, with cause for rejoicing through the Universe. The slow movement proceeded in like fashion.

But Dr. Munch, as if annoyed by the spectacle of early departures among the audience, launched into the menuet with furious tempo, and much too loud; the finale, though powerful, was unclean of detail. The horns and woodwinds upon two entrances seemed intent upon assaulting the strings.

Next week William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony will return as guest conductor. He has chosen two Eighth Symphonies, those of Beethoven and Bruckner.

Tenth Week

103

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 29, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 30, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past"
(Arranged by Charles Munch)

BACH ..... Suite No. 3, in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavotte I; Gavotte II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Allegro; Andante cantabile; Allegro

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Symphony in G minor, K. 550

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
DEC 30 1961

The Symphony

Poignant Concert Of Bach, Mozart

By GEOFFREY BUSH

Dr. Munch's last program of the year, yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, had an air of classical melancholy.

The program was Bach and Mozart. The melancholy was established at the beginning by the traditional performance of Bach's Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," arranged for orchestra by Dr. Munch, slow and somber, once drawing its forces together, but ending on a deep organ note of time and mutability, like its unheard words: "The old year is past—we thank Thee, Lord Jesus, that through the long year Thou hast protected us in such great danger."

The Bach Suite seemed to begin where the Prelude had ended. It had its gay moments. There were two short gavottes, a short bouree and a short gigue. In the middle of the overture there was a driving vivace section.

But the slow sections of resignation that surrounded it were what stayed in the mind. The entrance of the trumpets made it a noble resignation, but resignation was what it was.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the tenth program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Evelyne Crochet, pianist, was the soloist in the Mozart concerto. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past"... Bach, arr. by Charles Munch
Suite No. 3, in D major, for orchestra ... Bach
Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482 ... Mozart
Symphony in G minor, K. 550 ... Mozart

Delicate Soloist

The soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto, which concluded the first half of the program, was Evelyne Crochet, a very pretty young woman with high black hair and a black dress, who graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris, won the First Medal at the Geneva International Music Competition, played last January with the Boston Symphony and teaches music at Brandeis.

She played the Concerto delicately. It was light, precise and graceful playing; when she played heavily, it was not heavy at all, it was still graceful and precise. Her part, as the program notes remarked, was a little showy, and the cadenzas she composed had more intensity than the score. But so much exact fragility seemed to carry its own pathos with it; it was, again, a little sad.

The saddest part was the exchange in the slow movement between the piano and the orchestra. The piano was wistful, as if there were something unfinished. The orchestra was elegaic, as if it had been finished long ago. At the end the question was unresolved; it was as if neither one had heard the other.

There was a difference, after the intermission, in Mozart's Symphony in G minor. It was its familiar self, self-contained self-controlled and self-sufficient; it left no loose ends; it was formal, controlled and clear. But the question set by the program, like the question in the slow movement of the Concerto, had not been resolved.

The melancholy at the bottom of classicism, time and its great danger, had not been triumphed over; it had been ignored, by a triumph of form and control and clarity. It was a brave conclusion to a polite and poignant concert.

Next week William Steinberg will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
DEC 30 1961

Bach and Mozart Heard As Dr. Munch Returns

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA presented at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 10th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Music director Dr. Charles Munch conducted. Bach–Munch: Prelude and Chorale, "The Old Year Is Past"; Bach: Suite in D major, No. 3; Mozart: Piano Concerto in E-flat major (K. 482); Mozart: Symphony in G minor (K. 550). The piano soloist was Evelyne Crochet.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Things got part-way back to normal at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, after two weeks while the Orchestra was on tour and vacation. Dr. Munch returned from a holiday in France, and conducted about 50 members of the Boston Symphony in a Bach-Mozart program. Fittingly, it began with Munch's arrangement of the Bach Prelude and Chorale, "The Old Year Is Past," next week, after all, is next year.

Even with Bach and Mozart, we have a novelty on this program, the E-flat Piano Concerto (K. 482), which was performed by the Orchestra in 1933 with Egon Petri as soloist, and with George Copeland in 1940. Since then, silence, unless there have been lesser, and unrecorded, presentations.

A work of late 1785, this is a "light" concerto, light and consistently songful, fastidiously wrought in a style of jeweled detail, with a rondo finale, whose jigging joy is interrupted briefly by a reflective andante cantabile.

As soloist, Evelyne Crochet played cleanly and dexterously, the best music-making this chronicler has heard from her. It was dainty work, too, but strong; beautifully articulated if now and again somewhat over-pedalled, rhythmically delectable and singing all the way. To be sure, her admirable instrument let out with a bit of a roar when two f's raised their double blackness in the score, but she had to match. Dr. Munch's orchestral fortissimi, which for Mozart are very loud. Either one swims, or is drowned-out.

Bach's familiar D major Suite went fine, the noble "Air on the G String" a superb and measured flow of melody, the gavottes and the bourree admirably accentuated in rhythm, and the gigue fleet and nimble. One could wish, however, that the three high trumpets had been in tune with each other and with the strings, which they stridently were not.

Mozart's monumental masterpiece, the "Great" G minor Symphony, began with such a beautiful, unforced phrasing of the principal theme in the first violins, that one thought this might be one of those rare occasions when all is well in Heaven and on stage at Symphony Hall, with cause for rejoicing through the Universe. The slow movement proceeded in like fashion.

But Dr. Munch, as if annoyed by the spectacle of early departures among the audience, launched into the menuet with furious tempo, and much too loud; the finale, though powerful, was unclean of detail. The horns and woodwinds upon two entrances seemed intent upon assaulting the strings.

Next week William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony will return as guest conductor. He has chosen two Eighth Symphonies, those of Beethoven and Bruckner.

104

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
DEC 24 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch returns to Boston this week from his mid-winter holiday in Paris and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday in a concert of music by Bach and Mozart.

The concerts will include Dr. Munch's arrangement of Bach's Choral Prelude, "The Old Year is Past," the Bach Suite No. 3 for Orchestra, Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor and the Mozart Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482. Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the piano concerto.

This program will also be given Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, 8:30 p.m. at Symphony Hall, as the fourth concert of the Tuesday series.

William Steinberg, permanent conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony concerts on Jan. 5, 6 and 9 plus an Open Rehearsal on Jan. 4.

Ray Ferguson will give the second recital of the Organ Concert series at Symphony Hall Sunday, Jan. 7, at 6 p.m.

Also on the music calendar this week:

Today

CHRISTMAS EVE SERVICE — Lessons, carols, Bach, Gibbons and Vittoria, by the Guild for the Arts of Old North Church and the Old North Singers. Old North Church at 10:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
DEC 23 1961

...ella, Prokofiev's ballet featuring the Bol- | vard Square T

Symphony Programs

Charles Munch is returning to Boston this week from his mid-winter holiday in Paris and will conduct the Boston Symphony Friday (Dec. 29, 2:15) and Saturday (Dec. 30, 8:30) in a concert of music by Bach and Mozart.

The concerts will include Dr. Munch's arrangement of Bach's Choral Prelude, "The Old Year Is Past," the Bach Suite No. 3 for Orchestra, Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, and the Mozart Piano Concerto in E flat, K. 482. Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the piano concerto.

This program will also be given Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, 8:30 at Symphony Hall as the fourth concert of the Tuesday series.

William Steinberg, permanent conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Boston Symphony concerts on Jan. 5, 6, and 9, plus an Open Rehearsal on Jan. 4.

Ray Ferguson will give the second recital of the Organ Concert series at Symphony Hall Sunday, Jan. 7, at 6 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
DEC 24 1961

Bach-Mozart Concerts By Munch

Charles Munch returns to Boston this week from his Midwinter holiday in Paris, and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at ~~2:15~~ and Saturday at 8:30 in a concert of music by Bach and Mozart. The concerts will include Dr. Munch's arrangement of Bach's Choral Prelude, "The Old Year is Past," the Bach Suite No. 3; Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G minor, and the Mozart Piano Concerto in E-flat (K. 482). Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the Concerto.

This program will also be given Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, 8:30 p.m. at Symphony Hall, as the fourth concert of the Tuesday series.

William Steinberg, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, will guest-conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts on Jan. 5, 6 and 9 plus an Open Rehearsal Jan. 4. His program will consist of two Eighth Symphonies, those of Beethoven and Bruckner.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,172
DEC 21 1961

* * *

Thanksgiving Week of 1962 promises to be a week of top observance in Plymouth. Among the many programs for the week will be a concert in Memorial Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Application for use of the hall on Monday, Nov. 19 was granted last night upon application. There will be no charge to the public, the occasion being programmed under the terms of the will of of the late James Spooner.

* * *

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
JAN 4 1962

Steinberg Named Guest Conductor For Hub Symphony

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts tomorrow at 2:15 p.m. Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Sunday at 3 p.m. and at Sanders Theatre, Cmbridge, Tuesday, Jan. 9. These concerts will be preceded by an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. this evening in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Steinberg, who last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in January 1960, has chosen one program for his four concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner.

Ray Ferguson, of the faculty of the University of Michigan, will give an organ concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday. Tickets for Mr. Ferguson's one-hour recital of German organ music are available at Symphony Hall. All tickets re unreserved and $1.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
DEC 31 1961

MUSICAL CALENDAR

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday, Jan. 9. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. this Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Steinberg, who last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in January, 1960, has chosen one program for his four concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner.

Ray Ferguson, of the faculty of the University of Michigan, will give an organ concert at Symphony Hall next Sunday. Tickets for Mr. Ferguson's one-hour recital of German organ music are available at Symphony Hall. All tickets are unreserved and $1.

Charles Munch will conduct the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series at Symphony Hall on Tuesday. Pianist Evelyne Crochet will be his soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482. At this concert Dr. Munch will also conduct his own arrangement of the Bach Chorale Prelude, "The Old Year is Past," Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major, for Orchestra and the Symphony in G minor, No. 40, by Mozart.

Wednesday

"GREAT MUSIC"—An illustrated lecture by Dr. James R. Houghton on Mendelssohn's oratories, in Room 12, B.U. College of Liberal Arts, 725 Commonwealth Ave., at 7:15 p.m.

Saturday

YOUTH CONCERT — Members of the Boston Symphony and the New England theater in a program from "Don Giovanni" and Menotti's "The Telephone" on the theme "What is opera?" Symphony Hall at 11 a.m.

VAN CLIBURN, who returns to Symphony Hall for a solo recital on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JAN 7 1962

Calendar

German Music Today

Ray Ferguson has selected a program of German organ music for his one-hour organ concert at 6 p.m. today in Symphony Hall. The program will include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G major, Bach's "Wenn wir in hochsten Noten sein," a Partita by Hugo Distler, Nicolaus Bruhns' Prelude and Fugue in E minor. Passamezzo d'Angleterre by Elias Nikolaus Ammerbach, and Franz Liszt's ad salutarem undam.

William Steinberg will conclude his appearances as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor with two concerts this week. His program for the Symphony Hall concert at 3 p.m. today and for the concert at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday will consist of the Symphony No. 8 by Beethoven and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8.

Charles Munch has invited violinist Erica Morini to be his guest for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts on Jan. 12, 13, 15 and 16. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall on Thursday, Jan. 11.

Eleventh Week

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 6, at 8:30 o'clock

WILLIAM STEINBERG, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di minuetto
IV. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 8 in C minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Scherzo
III. Adagio
IV. Feierlich (nicht schnell)

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JAN 7 1962

Steinberg To Conduct Symphony, Jan. 9, Ch. 2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is on stage at Sanders Theatre . . . and Channel 2 captures every note Tuesday (Jan. 9) at 8:30 p.m.

COLOR ON TV THIS WEEK SUNDAY

Simulcast with WGBH-FM this Boston Symphony program is much more than an orchestra on a television screen. For the audience at home it's the best concert seat at any price. No season ticket holder can walk about the orchestra and watch each soloist at close range—

Even the conductor is face to face, smiling when the music is happy, eyes snapping as the tempo mounts. Channel 2 has added a fourth camera behind the orchestra to capture these revealing facial expressions.

This week while Charles Munch is on his annual winter holiday guest conductor William Steinberg will be on the podium. An enthusiastic supporter of Anton Bruckner, the director of The Pittsburgh Symphony has chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 and has coupled with it the Eighth Symphony of another German composer, Beethoven.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JAN 11 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO GUEST CONDUCTOR

William Steinberg has just completed an all too short one-week visit. It was lengthy enough, however, for his performance of the Eighth Symphony of Beethoven followed by the Eighth Symphony of Bruckner to mark the pinnacle of the symphony season to date.

The piece-de-resistance, of course, was the Bruckner. There is no useful purpose served in yet again laboring the Bruckner issue here. On the relatively few occasions that opportunities have arisen in this area over the years to hear Bruckner I have made my position clear. The diffuseness, the awkwardness, the rhetoric of the man no one can deny. But it is the ineffable tenderness of the theme clusters, the shattering climaxes, the luminosity of the modulations, and, most of all, the directness and the natural beauty with which he speaks that on balance make Bruckner so epochal a composer. The Eighth Symphony, for all its vast length — the almost uncut version Mr. Steinberg used took more than an hour — in the right hands can prove an overpowering experience. Its crown is the Adagio, which is not only Bruckner's greatest slow movement but whose second subject surely must constitute one of the more exalted reaches of music in all the literature. Bruckner is one of Mr. Steinberg's specialities and he certainly demonstrated how a master by the proper emphasis can splice the disjointed segments of this sprawling work into a deliberate and majestic unity.

The orchestra's response to his conducting, as two years ago, was electric. It was hard to believe that this was the same jaded organization to which we had listened the previous week. The crispness of the attacks, the warmth and richness and balance of the orchestral choirs, and the general feeling of elan was evident from the first few bars of the Beethoven which opened the program.

As for Beethoven's Eighth, it seems fated to be always a curtain raiser for some larger attraction — a guest soloist, a gigantic rare work like this Bruckner Symphony or the like. And consequently one becomes accustomed to paying it little heed. On this occasion the Eighth for once proved astonishingly compelling in its own right, and I can scarcely recall a time when either in its over-al conception or in its detail it stood to finer advantage.

May Mr. Steinberg return soon and stay long.

HOMAGE TO ERNST LEVY

Last Sunday evening at Kresge Auditorium several hundred friends and admirers of Ernst Levy were guests of the student music organization, the Baton Society, in a concert of Mr. Levy's works. The occasion was Mr. Levy's sixty-fifth birthday.

It was an affecting tribute. Mr. Levy was Visiting Carnegie Professor in the MIT Department of Humanities from 1954 to 1959. During his sojourn here in a series of stunning piano recitals he amply confirmed some rumors that had preceded his coming, namely, that here was one of the most arresting pianists of this day. When he left, it was commonly agreed that an epoch had come to an end.

Mr. Levy's music has been performed here several times. Its idiom is that of restrained austire romanticism couched in a highly polyphonic mold, a little like the Hindemith of the early twenties but with even a more spare vocabulary. It has garnered affirmative critical response. At this concert Harry Ellis Dickson, violin, Eugene Lehner, viola, Mary Johnson, cello, Ralph Pottle, French horn, Gregory Tucker, piano, and some trumpeters from the MIT band performed chamber works and several fanfares with skill and con amore.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, January 2, 1962

Steinberg to Conduct Boston Symphony

William Steinberg will serve as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a pair of concerts broadcast on FM station WAMC (90.7 mc.), Friday, Jan. 5, at 2:10 p.m., and Tuesday, Jan. 9, at 8:30 p.m.

Steinberg, who is music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony orchestra, has chosen one program for his two concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner. Both concerts will be broadcast "live."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
JAN 2 1962

Upcoming BSO Concerts

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Charle Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30 and Sunday at 3 p. m., and at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday, Jan. 9. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p. m. Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Steinberg, who last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Jan., 1960, has chosen one program for his four concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner.

Charles Munch will conduct the fourth concert of the Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. Pianist Evelyne Crochet will be his soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482.

Eleventh Week

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 5, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 6, at 8:30 o'clock

WILLIAM STEINBERG, Guest Conductor

BEETHOVEN ..... *Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93

I. Allegro vivace e con brio
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Tempo di minuetto
IV. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 8 in C minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Scherzo
III. Adagio
IV. Feierlich (nicht schnell)

These concerts will end about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JAN 11 1962

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO GUEST CONDUCTOR

William Steinberg has just completed an all too short one-week visit. It was lengthy enough, however, for his performance of the Eighth Symphony of Beethoven followed by the Eighth Symphony of Bruckner to mark the pinnacle of the symphony season to date.

The piece-de-resistance, of course, was the Bruckner. There is no useful purpose served in yet again laboring the Bruckner issue here. On the relatively few occasions that opportunities have arisen in this area over the years to hear Bruckner I have made my position clear. The diffuseness, the awkwardness, the rhetoric of the man no one can deny. But it is the ineffable tenderness of the theme clusters, the shattering climaxes, the luminosity of the modulations, and, most of all, the directness and the natural beauty with which he speaks that on balance make Bruckner so epochal a composer. The Eighth Symphony, for all its vast length — the almost uncut version Mr. Steinberg used took more than an hour — in the right hands can prove an overpowering experience. Its crown is the Adagio, which is not only Bruckner's greatest slow movement but whose second subject surely must constitute one of the more exalted reaches of music in all the literature. Bruckner is one of Mr. Steinberg's specialities and he certainly demonstrated how a master by the proper emphasis can splice the disjointed segments of this sprawling work into a deliberate and majestic unity.

The orchestra's response to his conducting, as two years ago, was electric. It was hard to believe that this was the same jaded organization to which we had listened the previous week. The crispness of the attacks, the warmth and richness and balance of the orchestral choirs, and the general feeling of elan was evident from the first few bars of the Beethoven which opened the program.

As for Beethoven's Eighth, it seems fated to be always a curtain raiser for some larger attraction — a guest soloist, a gigantic rare work like this Bruckner Symphony or the like. And consequently one becomes accustomed to paying it little heed. On this occasion the Eighth for once proved astonishingly compelling in its own right, and I can scarcely recall a time when either in its over-al conception or in its detail it stood to finer advantage.

May Mr. Steinberg return soon and stay long.

HOMAGE TO ERNST LEVY

Last Sunday evening at Kresge Auditorium several hundred friends and admirers of Ernst Levy were guests of the student music organization, the Baton Society, in a concert of Mr. Levy's works. The occasion was Mr. Levy's sixty-fifth birthday.

It was an affecting tribute. Mr. Levy was Visiting Carnegie Professor in the MIT Department of Humanities from 1954 to 1959. During his sojourn here in a series of stunning piano recitals he amply confirmed some rumors that had preceded his coming, namely, that here was one of the most arresting pianists of this day. When he left, it was commonly agreed that an epoch had come to an end.

Mr. Levy's music has been performed here several times. Its idiom is that of restrained austire romanticism couched in a highly polyphonic mold, a little like the Hindemith of the early twenties but with even a more spare vocabulary. It has garnered affirmative critical response. At this concert Harry Ellis Dickson, violin, Eugene Lehner, viola, Mary Johnson, cello, Ralph Pottle, French horn, Gregory Tucker, piano, and some trumpeters from the MIT band performed chamber works and several fanfares with skill and con amore.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JAN 7 1962

Steinberg To Conduct Symphony, Jan. 9, Ch. 2

COLOR ON TV THIS WEEK

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is on stage at Sanders Theatre . . . and Channel 2 captures every note Tuesday (Jan. 9) at 8:30 p.m.

Simulcast with WGBH-FM this Boston Symphony program is much more than an orchestra on a television screen. For the audience at home it's the best concert seat at any price. No season ticket holder can walk about the orchestra and watch each soloist at close range—

Even the conductor is face to face, smiling when the music is happy, eyes snapping as the tempo mounts. Channel 2 has added a fourth camera behind the orchestra to capture these revealing facial expressions.

This week while Charles Munch is on his annual winter holiday guest conductor William Steinberg will be on the podium. An enthusiastic supporter of Anton Bruckner, the director of The Pittsburgh Symphony has chosen Bruckner's Symphony No. 8 and has coupled with it the Eighth Symphony of another German composer, Beethoven.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SCHENECTADY GAZETTE
Tuesday, January 2, 1962

Steinberg to Conduct Boston Symphony

William Steinberg will serve as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a pair of concerts broadcast on FM station WAMC (50 mc.), Friday, Jan. 5, at 2:10 p.m., and Tuesday, Jan. 9, at 8:30 p.m.

Steinberg, who is music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony orchestra, has chosen one program for his two concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner. Both concerts will be broadcast "live."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m - e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
JAN 2 1962

Upcoming BSO Concerts

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30 and Sunday at 3 p. m., and at Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on Tuesday, Jan. 9. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 p. m. Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Steinberg, who last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Jan., 1960, has chosen one program for his four concerts. It will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner.

Charles Munch will conduct the fourth concert of the Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. Pianist Evelyne Crochet will be his soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in E-flat, K. 482.

106

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

JAN 6 1962

Magnificent Bruckner From Guest Steinberg

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 11th program of the Friday—Saturday series. William Steinberg, as guest conductor, presented the Eighth Symphony of Beethoven and the Eighth Symphony of Anton Bruckner.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Some occasions there are which for definition require the word Experience — and with the upper-case E. The performance of Bruckner's Eighth Symphony which William Steinberg, as guest, conducted with the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon, was one such.

This was an Experience of so exalted a beauty and profound emotion, of blazing splendors of orchestral sound, and so masterful a uniting of imagination, execution and conducting technic, that it must be called magnificent.

Having utilized most of the appropriate transcendental words in the first paragraph, we must be satisfied with austerity in the second. For Bruckner's Eighth Symphony is no vast and unflawed masterpiece. It is big, and very long, and most demanding. It is exhausting to musicians and audience alike, and to many sets of muscles, not least among them the gluteus maximus. Even with cutting, the work ran one hour and three minutes.

That is too long for sustained concentration of ears and mind, a matter probably not even considered by the devoted, naive Bruckner, in his leisurely and spacious time. Perhaps on the theory that of beauty there can not be too much, he spun and woven his episodes in what Felix Weingartner termed "their terrace progression," far too long.

Bruckner in his art was governed by single-minded dedication; there was no wordly sense of proportion, let alone of dramatic effect or humor, to curb his length. That is why having made his point, he says it all over again, and why, in the wake of moments that discloses apocalyptic solemnity and grandeur, he could descend into that banal form of repetition which musicians call the sequence.

But the grandeur, mystery, solemnity are there, in a luminous beauty of orchestral usage—including the Wagner tubas; in extraordinary invention and powerful play of rhythm and counterpoint, and of melody almost without end. There they are, sounding in a glory that nearly obscures the flaws.

Music and interpretation in this case are not separable. To make the most of Bruckner, a conductor must be a zealot. That Mr. Steinberg was yesterday, conducting with a brilliance and felicity that I found matchless. There has been no such Bruckner conducting here in my time.

It was, beyond the undefinable quality of concept, technical expertise in setting just the right pace, keeping the beat free and a bit loose for the flexible phrasing Bruckner requires. Above all, it was a matter of keeping the massive sounds clear and balanced, and setting into sculptural relief, one above another, those layers of instrumental color and resonance peculiar to this composer.

The way Steinberg launched into the slow movement, with a beat all adagio and two yards wide, was breath-taking. As a result, that melody sang as I never have heard it sing before, above the rhythmically shimmering harmony luminous as dust in an autumn sunset sky. As memorable was his muscular but curved and unforced guiding of the scherzo and its long trios. The finale was all rich tonal splendor.

No wonder the "Bravos!" and applause burst like a victory yell, and brought Steinberg three times back to the stage, to share acclaim with the Orchestra which had served him so well.

For once, Beethoven was overshadowed. In case you have forgotten, the concert began with his Eighth Symphony, given a very strong-armed performance.

Next week Dr. Munch will return, to present Debussy's "Printemps"; Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, and the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Erica Morini as soloist.

STAGE IN TOWN

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211

DEC 31 1961

Steinberg Invited to Conduct

William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by Charles Munch to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Symphony Hall concerts on Friday afternoon, Saturday evening (8:30) and Sunday afternoon (3 o'clock) and at Sanders Theater, Cambridge on Tuesday, January 9. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at 7:30 on Thursday in Symphony Hall.

Mr. Steinberg, who last conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in January, 1960, has chosen one program for his four concerts—Beethoven's No. 8 and the Symphony No. 8 by Bruckner.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

JAN 6 1962

Music

Boston Audiences Welcome Steinberg

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — The occasion of William Steinberg appearing as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony orchestra, both at the week's open rehearsal, and at the concerts of yesterday afternoon and this evening, is indeed a happy affair.

William Steinberg

Mr. Steinberg, who is regarded highly by his fellow musicians wherever he appears, certainly explained all of this at the opening event. The informality that marks an open rehearsal was certainly missing as a capacity audience sat enraptured during an evening of Beethoven and Bruckner .

The composers represented by their Symphonies No. 8, received a tremendous technical and interpretative welcome by all concerned. The orchestra certainly was in rare form and as for Mr. Steinberg, he stood as a leader in his field today as he graced the conductor's stand.

Beethoven's "Little Symphony" as he chose to call the F Major, definitely is one of his monumental works. This writing is a gracious and warm Beethoven and one that produces so many moments of sheer genius in composing, such as the manner in which he returns to the original key of the score, following a magnificent harmonic tour of the realm of composing wonders.

The various sections responded to the deisres of the conductor in such a manner that the listener might feel as though he were being treated to a moment of decision proving that Beethoven was beyond doubt the greatest of writers.

Even more imposing was the Bruckner C minor symphony. Again the musical wizards on stage followed their conductor superbly in what was a strong willed and polished reading. Surely this was another of the great moments of the orchestra's season.

I MUSICI, the world famous instrumental ensemble from Italy will appear in the second concert of the current series of Community concerts here on Monday evening, Jan. 15. This group is the only ensemble of its kind free of a conductor during a performance. It also specializes in music of the classic Italian period, namely, 17th and 18th centuries. Everywhere I Musici has appeared, response has been tremendous and today the group is regarded as one of the foremost musical organizations of our time.

The second program in the 1962 series of the Groton Music association will be presented in Groton school Sunday evening, Jan. 14. Featured will be Janos Starker, cellist, who will make his only New England concert appearance of the season in this event.

In a few short weeks the now famous Parade of Bands will hold the spotlight at this season's major sporting event in Lowell, the Golden Gloves. For the past several years bands representing both the field of education and the military have appeared in the series. Again, and in order, the following bands will play at the Lowell Memorial Auditorium: Lowell high school band, AFROTC band from Lowell Technological Institute; the Boston Naval Base band, 18th Army band from Fort Devens, and on the evening of Feb. 21, the world famous Harvard university band.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
1962

The Symphony

The Lyric and the Epic In Fascinating Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Eight and Eight. Beethoven and Bruckner. The classic and the romantic. The lyric and the epic. It was a fascinating program that William Steinberg arranged as the conductor of The Pittsburgh Symphony returned here yesterday to enhance the brilliance of first impressions.

The conception and execution of the program was almost flawless. Mr. Steinberg might have taken a leaf from Irving Kolodin's study, "The Musical Life," which appeared three years ago; for in the liveliest chapter of the book, devoted to the art of the concert program, the author plays around -- rather wistfully, since he realizes such personal wishes are seldom [illegible] a catalogue of "half a dozen programs I would relish hearing." The two Eighth Symphonies are third on the list.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg conducting, presenting the 11th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Symphony No. 8, in F major, Op. 93 ..... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 in C minor ..... Bruckner

Feel the Same

Most professional reviewers would feel the same, and for the same reason: proportion, balance and coherence. The principal element here is the one of contrast. And yet the two 8's are related by more than a numeral and their position in the master symphonist's output.

The kinship is most readily apparent in technique. For his Eighth Symphony Beethoven employs the "motto" device of all his work in this form. So does Bruckner—but in a way less readily apparent: the motto has been absorbed into the "endless melody" system of Wagner, and what emerges is a new sum. Thus the listener is able to hear, at once, how the music of the past merges with the music that anticipates the future.

The repeated, stabbing note groups and silences of Bruckner's first movement serves the function of the motto and, simultaneously, by its contrasts of weight and spareness, predicts the stylistic character of today.

Moves with Speed

Mr. Steinberg's treatment of the Beethoven Eighth was properly traditional in concept, cleanly articulated, the tempos moving with a speed that was blithe and quicksilver.

He did not try to whip up the symphony into a fustian gait, with the "unbuttoned" Beethoven roaring like a turtledove and reeling like a peasant in one of the earthier Breughel scenes. The conducting had the speed of spontaneity and the symmetry of a delicate order.

Beethoven's Eighth was the essence of grace and brightness; but I was even more impressed by the Bruckner of Mr. Steinberg, because I have a disposition, alas, to be impressed by baroque grandeur—which is the tragedy of those who work in the field of comedy. They are both great scores, of course, as realized by this conductor.

He made cuts, again alas, in the development of the Adagio, though presenting the recapitulation complete. This is less drastic than Dr. Koussevitzky's surgical procedure, but not as devoted as Dr. Von Karajan, who believes in letting the patient go forth without benefit of scalpel. It may be argued that Bruckner's Eighth is too long—just as Homer is too long, and the plays of O'Neill, and "The Brothers Karamazov," and the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel. But not by me.

Dine with Taste

In any case, Mr. Steinberg's abridgement failed to deface the grand edifice, and was accomplished with taste. The rhythmical insistence of the scherzo and the complicated maze of its Trio emerged as clear detail. The outer movement unfolded with the inner tensions complete.

As for the lovely Adagio, despite the incisions, Mr. Steinberg offered its rapturous echoes, the murmur of the gently syncopated strings and the slow unfolding of the colors of full orchestra, so that, as always, it seemed to me one of the tranced and glorious limits of art. There is nothing like it in music. It is music beyond time, belonging to eternity, and merely to speak of it seems a profanement. The last movement, I'm afraid strikes me as afterthought, but what could act as completion after that? Mr. Steinberg may be thanked for his own skill, his insight and originality. The rest is silence.

Next week Dr. Munch returns with Erica Morini as soloist in Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61; Debussy's "Printemps" suite and Piston's Symphony No. 6 complete the program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JAN 6 1962

Beethoven's Eighth Heard With Bruckner's Eighth

By Louis Chapin

William Steinberg, returning yesterday as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, brought along two Eighth Symphonies, written by German composers at opposite ends of the 19th century. As they faced each other across the intermission, these works and their composers—Beethoven and Bruckner—were indeed fellow-countrymen, but their dialects seemed worlds apart.

The differences would have been less striking, of course, if we had heard Bethoven's Ninth (or even the "Eroica") and one of the earliest of Bruckner's; but this juxtaposition of the next-to-last of each composer told much of the story of 19th-century romanticism.

* * *

The Symphony Hall audience listened to Mr. Steinberg closely from beginning to end, and gave him their roaring approval over the echoes of Bruckner's final climax. But of these two composers the conductor seemed most in command of Beethoven. As we were taken from the concise authority of the opening Allegro, by way of the ensuing spare study of meter and the spiralling minuet, to the Allegro which forms a brisk closing counterpart to the first, we could enjoy a conducting style in touch at all times with the essential economies of the work.

Mr. Steinberg does wonderful things with his wrists and fingers; if a life of music hadn't called him, he might have delighted his audiences as a magician with quick surprises up his sleeve. His Beethoven was springy and meticulous, receiving the orchestra's productive attention. Only a few details—such as the horn trio in the third movement—might have been noticeably clarified by longer collaboration.

* * *

But the other half of the program—and of the 19th century—presented some rather different demands. The most fervent Bruckner admirer would hardly claim economy as one of the composer's strong features. From the first of many slow-breathed string tremulandos, even during the lively dances that later jump up from the landscape, the music expects whatever time it needs to announce, ponder, explore, and apotheosize its weighty subjects.

Details are there in abundance, of course, and Mr. Steinberg dealt with them assiduously. It was generally successful, too, in drawing out the orchestral color into the particular slightly opaque shade made possible at any given moment. Notable was the rich sound of strings stitched together by the harps during the long Adagio, and the conductor's command rode the last-movement climaxes into moments of genuine glory.

Between these moments of concentration, even so, there are stretches in this landscape that expect of the conductor what might be termed a sense of the horizon. Mr. Steinberg's very success with the immediate business occasionally deprived his interpretation of the largest view.

108

Twelfth Week

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 12, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 13, at 8:30 o'clock

DEBUSSY ..... "Printemps," Suite symphonique
- I. Très modéré
- II. Modéré

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 6
- I. Fluendo espressivo
- II. Leggerissimo vivace
- III. Adagio sereno
- IV. Allegro energico

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61
- I. Allegro ma non troppo
- II. Larghetto
- III. Rondo

SOLOIST
ERICA MORINI

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

FEB 8 1962

BSO In Program of French Masters

By ALLAN SLY

As the present regime at Symphony Hall draws inexorably to its close, a nostalgically inclined listener is a sitting duck for such a program as was delivered last weekend—all very typical of Dr. Munch—showing strength through contrast, virtuosic, subjective, gallant and indeed as a Frenchman might say, brave.

In memory of Fritz Kreisler the strings first played, very tenderly, the slow movement of Beethoven's last quartet. Then entered the remainder of the orchestra and the sirens (Webster: "minor divinities") of Lorna Cooke deVaron's New England Conservatory Chorus. Debussy's three Nocturnes (Clouds, Festivals, Sirens) then received a traversal we shall not easily forget. It was as though a lifetime's experience nay, the long course of Mediterranean history and culture were being mirrored for our review. Our enjoyment might serve as an index on how well we have been doing our homework all these years. I would say that a goodly proportion of B.S.O. subscribers came off with high marks.

Then came a quite terrible awakening: Honegger's fifth and last symphony, informed with an heroic recognition of today's frustrations, possibilities, challenges, portents, premonitions. While the smart set were throwing their Doomsday parties, we culture-addicts were going back to 1950 to share the solemn thoughts of a latter-day Amos, for so Honegger now appears. His musical language seems to have been hewn out of intractable materials as the vehicle of strong and profound convictions. He seems to have been a great humanist, who having obtained mastery of the symphonic art, ennobled it in making it serve his purpose.

After intermission came a surprise package: Jeanne Marie Darre, a supernova among concerto pianists. This will certainly prove to be the opening chapter of a brilliant American career. In fact, we shall have to redefine the term "Conservatoire Professor." Never were we further from the academic; in fact the entertainment index ran off the top of the scale round where I sat. I confess never to have been able to see Saint-Saens for little apples; but Mme. Darre changed all this for one glorious half-hour of heroics, siren-singing, larking (in the Scherzo), speeding, sound-barrier crashing and all other imaginable delights and excitements. What a Gallic package! Dr. Munch was in his element, of course, as was the Saturday night audience.

Ravel's La Valse pulled us away from the dalliance of the 1860's to that of recent times. But now there was a note of ultimate negation; the final measures packed a sense of tragedy not often revealed in Ravel.

Dr. Munch reveals a great deal in the course of an evening, but all with the savoir faire and wit of a grand seigneur. With quick rapier thrusts he goes right to the vital nerve centers. Boston has been very fortunate these past 13 seasons. Inevitably one peers into the future quizzically. Tidier strings, more trip-hammer precision, perhaps? Maybe so. But some will miss the shatteringly bright flashes of revelation, the occasional stretches of inner serenity, the deep resignation, the leaping resolve, the heaven-storming aspirations which have been our fare as part of Dr. Munch's family. It is good that he may return as a guest.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JAN 27 1962

At the Symphony

Jeanne-Marie Darré will make her North American debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra next weekend. Mme Darré will be soloist in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday (Feb. 2, 2:15), Saturday (Feb. 3, 8:30), Sunday (Feb. 4, 3:00) and in Providence (Feb. 6).

At these concerts Dr. Munch will conduct Honegger's Symphony No. 5, "La Valse" by Ravel, and Three Nocturnes by Debussy. The New England Conservatory Chorus, of which Lorna Cook de Varon is the conductor, will participate in the performance of the Debussy Nocturnes at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

* * *

Much of Mme Darré's musical career has centered around the National Conservatory in Paris. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Isidore Philipp, she is now professor of piano there and a member of the conservatory jury. In addition to her conservatory duties Mme Darré has performed throughout Europe in recital and as soloist with orchestras conducted by Charles Munch, Sir Henry Wood, Paul Paray, André Cluytens, and others. In 1950 Mme Darré was awarded France's Legion of Honor, and in 1960 she received the Chevalier des Arts et Lettres.

Richard Burgin will conduct the sixth concert of the orchestra's Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall on Jan. 30. Florence Kopleff, contralto, and the Chorus pro Musica will participate in Stravinsky's "The Star-Faced" and the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler.

Rudolph Serkin will be Dr. Munch's guest at the orchestra's concerts Feb. 9, 10, 12, and 13. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall on Feb. 8.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JAN 7 1962

Erica Morini Violin Soloist At Symphony

William Steinberg will conclude his appearances as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor with two concerts. His program for Symphony Hall at 3 p.m. today, and for Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30 will consist of the Symphony No. 8 by Beethoven and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8.

Charles Munch has invited violinist Erica Morini to be s oloist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts Jan. 12, 13, 15 and 16. At these concerts, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall Jan. 11, Miss Morini will be heard in the Violin Concerto by Beethoven. Dr. Munch's program will include Debussy's Suite Symphonique, "Printemps," and the first performance in Boston of the Symphony No. 7 by Walter Piston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JAN 21 1962

Symphony On Tour

There will be no Boston Symphony concerts here this week, since the Orchestra will be on tour in New York and other cities.

The 14th program of the Friday — Saturday series at Symphony Hall, Feb. 2 and 3, will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, and will bring the Boston debut of Jeanne Marie Darre, who will be soloist in Saint-Saens' Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor.

The remainder of an all-French program will consist of the Symphony No. 5 by Honegger; Three Nocturnes by Debussy, with the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, assisting in "Sirenes," and Ravel's "La Valse."

108

Twelfth Week

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 12, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 13, at 8:30 o'clock

DEBUSSY ..... "Printemps," Suite symphonique

I. Très modéré
II. Modéré

PISTON ..... Symphony No. 6

I. Fluendo espressivo
II. Leggerissimo vivace
III. Adagio sereno
IV. Allegro energico

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... *Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61

I. Allegro ma non troppo
II. Larghetto
III. Rondo

SOLOIST
ERICA MORINI

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
FEB 8 1962

BSO In Program of French Masters

By ALLAN SLY

As the present régime at Symphony Hall draws inexorably to its close, a nostalgically inclined listener is a sitting duck for such a program as was delivered last weekend—all very typical of Dr. Munch—showing strength through contrast, virtuosic, subjective, gallant and indeed as a Frenchman might say, brave.

In memory of Fritz Kreisler the strings first played, very tenderly, the slow movement of Beethoven's last quartet. Then entered the remainder of the orchestra and the sirens (Webster: "minor divinities") of Lorna Cooke deVaron's New England Conservatory Chorus. Debussy's three Nocturnes (Clouds, Festivals, Sirens) then received a traversal we shall not easily forget. It was as though a lifetime's experience nay, the long course of Mediterranean history and culture were being mirrored for our review. Our enjoyment might serve as an index on how well we have been doing our homework all these years. I would say that a goodly proportion of B.S.O. subscribers came off with high marks.

Then came a quite terrible awakening: Honegger's fifth and last symphony, informed with an heroic recognition of today's frustrations, possibilities, challenges, portents, premonitions. While the smart set were throwing their Doomsday parties, we culture-addicts were going back to 1950 to share the solemn thoughts of a latter-day Amos, for so Honegger now appears. His musical language seems to have been hewn out of intractable materials as the vehicle of strong and profound convictions. He seems to have been a great humanist, who having obtained mastery of the symphonic art, ennobled it in making it serve his purpose.

After intermission came a surprise package: Jeanne Marie Darre, a supernova among concerto pianists. This will certainly prove to be the opening chapter of a brilliant American career. In fact, we shall have to redefine the term "Conservatoire Professor." Never were we further from the academic; in fact the entertainment index ran off the top of the scale round where I sat. I confess never to have been able to see Saint-Saens for little apples; but Mme. Darre changed all this for one glorious half-hour of heroics, siren-singing, larking (in the Scherzo), speeding, sound-barrier crashing and all other imaginable delights and excitements. What a Gallic package! Dr. Munch was in his element, of course, as was the Saturday night audience.

Ravel's La Valse pulled us away from the dalliance of the 1860's to that of recent times. But now there was a note of ultimate negation; the final measures packed a sense of tragedy not often revealed in Ravel.

Dr. Munch reveals a great deal in the course of an evening, but all with the savoir faire and wit of a grand seigneur. With quick rapier thrusts he goes right to the vital nerve centers. Boston has been very fortunate these past 13 seasons. Inevitably one peers into the future quizzically: Tidier strings, more trip-hammer precision, perhaps? Maybe so. But some will miss the shatteringly bright flashes of revelation, the occasional stretches of inner serenity, the deep resignation, the leaping resolve, the heaven-storming aspirations which have been our fare as part of Dr. Munch's family. It is good that he may return as a guest.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JAN 27 1962

At the Symphony

Jeanne-Marie Darré will make her North American debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra next weekend. Mme Darré will be soloist in the Saint-Saëns Piano Concerto No. 2 at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday (Feb. 2, 2:15), Saturday (Feb. 3, 8:30), Sunday (Feb. 4, 3:00) and in Providence (Feb. 6).

At these concerts Dr. Munch will conduct Honegger's Symphony No. 5, "La Valse" by Ravel, and Three Nocturnes by Debussy. The New England Conservatory Chorus, of which Lorna Cook de Varon is the conductor, will participate in the performance of the Debussy Nocturnes at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

* * *

Much of Mme Darré's musical career has centered around the National Conservatory in Paris. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Isidore Philipp, she is now professor of piano there and a member of the conservatory jury. In addition to her conservatory duties Mme Darré has performed throughout Europe in recital and as soloist with orchestras conducted by Charles Munch, Sir Henry Wood, Paul Paray, André Cluytens, and others. In 1950 Mme Darré was awarded France's Legion of Honor, and in 1960 she received the Chevalier des Arts et Lettres.

Richard Burgin will conduct the sixth concert of the orchestra's Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall on Jan. 30. Florence Kopleff, contralto, and the Chorus pro Musica will participate in Stravinsky's "The Star-Faced" and the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler.

Rudolph Serkin will be Dr. Munch's guest at the orchestra's concerts Feb. 9, 10, 12, and 13. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall on Feb. 8.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 7 1962

Erica Morini Violin Soloist At Symphony

William Steinberg will conclude his appearances as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor with two concerts. His program for Symphony Hall at 3 p.m. today, and for Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30 will consist of the Symphony No. 8 by Beethoven and Bruckner's Symphony No. 8.

Charles Munch has invited violinist Erica Morini to be s oloist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts Jan. 12, 13, 15 and 16. At these concerts, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall Jan. 11, Miss Morini will be heard in the Violin Concerto by Beethoven. Dr. Munch's program will include Debussy's Suite Symphonique, "Printemps," and the first performance in Boston of the Symphony No. 7 by Walter Piston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 21 1962

Symphony On Tour

There will be no Boston Symphony concerts here this week, since the Orchestra will be on tour in New York and other cities.

The 14th program of the Friday — Saturday series at Symphony Hall, Feb. 2 and 3, will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, and will bring the Boston debut of Jeanne Marie Darre, who will be soloist in Saint-Saens' Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor.

The remainder of an all-French program will consist of the Symphony No. 5 by Honegger; Three Nocturnes by Debussy, with the New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, assisting in "Sirenes," and Ravel's "La Valse."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JAN 13 1962

Music

Concert Chosen For Tune Lovers

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A conceit of modern critics—as Nicolas Slonimsky shrewdly observes—is to dub a musical spade a rectangular ferreous lamina socketed on a ligneous handle. To call a spade a spade, yesterday's Symphony concert was full of good rousing tunes.

The ability to create these is often considered an inferior talent these days. Anyone, it seems, can write tunes. Turn a crank, and out comes a tune. But, alas, now one seems willing. There is a dearth of tunes as of the well-made play, and novels with plot, two commodities also considered trifling.

A work of art must yield something more than the sum of its parts. At least this appears the tastemakers' feeling. Meanwhile the blebs who hunger for the lower product are the bulk of audiences at concerts, playgoers and the people who buy books. Perhaps they suspect that craftsmanship is not lightly acquired.

With Debussy's "Printemps" such an audience must be happy, for the fabric glows with rich, impressionistic melody anticipating the composer's future—the nooptide of the afternoon of a faun, as it were.

And Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony virtually corners the tuneful contemporary market. As for the Beethoven Concerto, the themes, though not properly tunes, send even the most inert listener this side of tone deafness humming into the street.

Erica Morini, the Viennese-born American soloist, appeared in the Concerto and gave a performance of sedate deliberation as she returned to the Boston Symphony spotlight after an absence of some 15 years. She was greeted warmly. I'm afraid, however, that I found her sober treatment of the Beethoven, wanting in personality.

Creditable Tone

Four-square describes Miss Morini's approach. The notes were in place, the musicianship straighforward. She possesses a fluent bowing technic and a tone that is creditable, though thin at the edges. She plays with magisterial calm.

Hers is not an approach to Beehoven's Violin Concerto designed for excitment. Now and then, I found myself wishing that the artist might indulge in some venal sin of virtuosity, drive a tone sharp or betray uninhibited ardor.

But the interpretation proceeded with grave detachment. Aside from minor problems of intonation, the technique of the violinist was precise; and I thought the overall effect stolid, though the audience liked it very much.

The highlight of the afternoon, for me, was Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, at the top of his output, a score superbly organized and conceived. It is relaxed and lyrical, simple in design, contemporary without pretense. The atmosphere exhibits a subdued geniality. The Symphony has wit, warmth, constructional logic and a total absence of glib fabrication.

Dr. Munch's reading, like his conducting of the entire program, showed that he was at home here. His interpretation proved delicate, unmannered, vital.

The first movement received scrupulous attention to fragile instrumental timbres; the splendid scherze took on aerial gaiety; the adagio was strongly outlined, and the finale sustained to a lively conclusion.

Next week Richard Burgin will conduct. He has scheduled Stravinsky's Zvezdoliki ("The Star-Faced) Cantata; and Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor. The Chorus Pro Musica will appear in the first complete Boston performance of the latter.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 12th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Erica Morini, violin, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

"Printemps," Suite symphonique ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 6 ..... Piston
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 61 ..... Beethoven

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
L'Action
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,400
FEB 7 1962

Honneur insigne à maestro Munch

BOSTON — Le vendredi 12 janvier, à l'issue de son concert habituel avec l'Orchestre symphonique de Boston — au cours duquel l'extraordinaire violoniste Erica Marini se fit acclamer pour une interprétation profonde et aristocratique du Concerto de Beethoven — le Maître Charles Munch reçut la première Médaille Albert Schweitzer.

En la lui remettant dans le Salon vert de Symphony Hall, Mme Rogers fit remarquer qu'il la méritait pour au moins deux raisons: M. Munch est, en effet, président honoraire des Amis d'Albert Schweitzer de Boston depuis la formation de ce groupe en 1950; il est aussi le beau-frère "de cet homme bon et grand qu'est Albert Schweitzer".

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
JAN 13 1962

Erica Morini Soloist In Beethoven Concerto

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 12th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the Symphonic Suite "Printemps," by Debussy; the Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston, and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Erica Morini as soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Erica Morini is a master musician of the violin who comes to Boston all too seldom. Yesterday, after 15 years, she was once more heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in the D major Concerto of Beethoven.

It is quite easy to describe the technical qualities of a Morini performance. The articulation of fingers upon the strings is exceedingly neat, and the play of the bow firmly controlled. The pitch of notes is unerringly accurate, no matter how fast the speed or how wide the leap of interval.

Everything about Miss Morini's playing is fabulously neat and clear. Her rhythm is scrupulously regular and exact, yet not in the least mechanical. Her tone is finely-spun and given just enough vibrato to make it carry without seeming forced either in volume or intensity.

All that Miss Morini does is addressed to musical purposes. But it is not at all easy, in fact it is impossible, to describe the spirit which lights her playing. Yes, it is a matter of style, which means comprehension of how a given composer's music ought to sound. It is also good taste, which Miss Morini possesses to extraordinary degree.

Most of all, since these attributes are fundamental with her, the distinction of a Morini performance is in its sense of flowing song and of expression of tone-poetry. As nearly as can be, the music proceeds directly from the composer to the listening ear and receptive heart; Miss Morini is altogether extraordinary in her self-effacing dedication to music for its sake alone.

In just such beauty and purity the Beethoven Concerto was heard yesterday. What followed was an ovation sustained and wholehearted.

The other two-thirds of the program, not precisely familiar yet of easy and pleasant listening, made the total of a most enjoyable afternoon. Debussy's "Printemps", performed after about nine years, went admirably, its lyrical romanticism giving a lift to a gray Winter day.

Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, which Dr. Munch has performed numerous times in Boston and on tour, is a work which I suspect will live. It is warm, appealing, rich in melodic substance, expertly wrought for orchestra. It has vitality of rhythmic motion and of musical ideas.

Now that we have come to know it quite well, the score seems more straightforward and less complex than it did before. (That is the usual process as a work makes its way from the constraint of strangeness to the ease of recognition, but in this case near-familiarity also results in greater admiration than ever before.) Piston appeared on stage and bowed to cordial applause.

The Boston Symphony and Dr. Munch were in splendid form, apart from a few tiny flaws of ensemble in the Beethoven Concerto.

Next week Richard Burgin, associate conductor, will present the first complete performance in Boston of Mahler's Third Symphony, and first local performance of Stravinsky's Cantata, "The Star-Faced." Florence Kopleff, contralto, and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, will assist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 28 1962

Pianist Darre, Symphony Soloist

Pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre will make her North American debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra next weekend. Mme. Darre will be soloist in the Saint-Saens Piano Concerto No. 2 at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday (Feb. 2, 2:15), Saturday Feb. 3, 8:30), Sunday (Feb. 4, 3:00). Munch will also conduct Honegger's Symphony No. 5, "La Valse" by Ravel and Three Nocturnes by Debussy. The New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon conductor, will participate in the performance of the Debussy Nocturnes at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

Mm. Darre's musical career has centered around the National Conservatory in Paris. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Isidore Philipp, she won first prize at the conservatory. She is now Professor of Piano there and a member of the Conservatory Jury. In addition to her conservatory duties, Mm. Darre has performed throughout Europe in recital and as soloist with the world's leading orchestras. In 1950 she was awarded France's Legion of Honor and in 1960 she received the "Chevalier des Arts et Lettres."

Richard Burgin will conduct the sixth concert of the orchestra's Tuesday evening series at Symphony Hall, Jan. 30. Contralto Florence Kopleff and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conductor, will participate in a performance of Stravinsky's "The Star-Faced" and the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler.

140

—Erica Morini Soloist at Symphony

Violinist Wins Acclaim In Beethoven Concerto

By Harold Rogers

Erica Morini—an extraordinary violinist by any standards you choose—returned to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to play with the Boston Symphony after an interval of almost 16 years. It has been an unjustified absence. One can only hope that her visits will now become more frequent.

She played the Beethoven Violin Concerto and will repeat it for the subscribers tonight, Monday night, and Tuesday night. One had the feeling, before she ever set bow to string, that she would perform with authority, and so she did. With a strong arm she drew a firm, vibrant tone, her intonation clean, her fingering flawless. In the cadenza of the first movement she set forth a stunning display of acceleration, flicking off the double stops with aplomb. She knows how to dramatize the music without dramatizing herself. And regardless of the problems involved, she never lost sight of Beethoven's poetic flow. She moved with it, heightened it, and swept us along in her wake.

♪ ♪ ♪

The Larghetto was something special for its quiet singing, its melody emerging with buoyant ease. In the final Rondo, as in the opening Allegro, she again mixed the qualities of power and grace, concluding with a flourish that won her many rounds of applause.

Her performance from first to last was enhanced by Charles Munch's sensitive accompaniment, skilfully polished as usual. He opened the concert with a shimmering reading of Debussy's "Printemps," aromatic and radiant as a Debussian tone poem should be.

He then conducted Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, rather than the Boston première of Mr. Piston's new Seventh Symphony, as had been announced. (Evidently Dr. Munch preferred to bequeath the chore of learning it to his successor.) Mr. Piston was on hand to receive the homage of the audience after the performance of his Sixth, which continues to impress one for the whimsey of its conception (especially the scherzo) and the boldness of its writing.

♪ ♪ ♪

After the concert a group of notables, flanked by television cameras, gathered in the Green Room to witness a presentation, by Mrs. Miriam Rogers, of the first Albert Schweitzer medal to have been struck off on order by the Friends of Albert Schweitzer, founded 12 years ago by Mrs. Rogers.

Joseph Coletti, the sculptor, said a few words, Mrs. Rogers said a few words, then Joseph Speyer, speaking in French, said a good many well put words. Dr. Munch responded in kind, kissed Mrs. Rogers, and the handshaking began as the television men rushed out to meet their deadlines.

Music

Duquesne Singers In Parker Series

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Hugh Downey, director of the Moses Greeley Parker lecture series, has completed plans for tomorrow afternoon's program in the Lowell Memorial Auditodium featuring the famous Duquesne University Tamburitzans.

This group, that has created the most favorable comments whenever they have appeared, provides a program of exciting appeal and sheer musical pleasure. There is variety, a new type of originality in performing method, and as a final touch, a cast membership suited to the occasion.

The program as announced is as follows: part one: YUGOSLAVIC: Cleo Leto S Dragom Secem — Croatian Folk Song; Songs and Dances from Posavina; Folk Songs from Bosnia; Kopacka - Macedonian Men's Dance; Slovenian Folk Songs; Shepherd's Flute Selections; Suite of Serbian Folk Dances; Noc, Gle, Biage (Lo, the night is sweet); Dalmatian Sea Songs; Vrlicko Kolo; The "Bears" Sing; Slavonian.

Part two — BALKAN and SLAVIC peoples; Gopak; Kolomyka; Greek Instrumental Selections; "Manna Sgouros Vasilikos"; Suite of Greek Folk Dances; Romanian Instrumental Selections; Romanian Fantasy; Oltenian Suite; "Slonoczko"; Two Polish Mountaineer Dances; Russian Dance Aira; Russian Potpourri; "Odnozvuchno Gremit Kolokol'chik"; "U Vorot."

Pianist Jeanne-Marie Darre will make her North American debut with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony orchestra next week-end. Mme. Darre will be soloist in the Saint-Saens "Piano Concerto No. 2" at the programs of Feb. 2, 3, 4, and in Providence, R. I., Feb. 6. At these concerts Dr. Munch will conduct Three Nocturnes by Debussy. The New England Conservatory chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will participate in the performance of the Debussy Nocturnes at the Friday-Saturday concerts.

MUCH OF MME. DARRE'S musical career has centered around the National Conservatory in Paris. A pupil of Marguerite Long and Isidore Phillip, Mme. Darre won first prize at the Conservatory; she is now professor of piano there and a member of the Conservatory Jury. In addition to her Conservatory duties, Mme. Darre has performed throughout Europe in recital and as soloist with orchestras conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, Sir Henry Wood, Paul Paray, Andre Cluytens and others. In 1950 Mme. Darre was awarded France's Legion of Honor and in 1960 she received the "Chevalier de Arts et Lettres."

Thirteenth Week

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 20, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

STRAVINSKY ..... Zvezdoliki (The Star-Faced) Cantata for Male Chorus and Orchestra
(First performance in Boston)

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
III. Comodo; scherzando
IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious)
(with Contralto solo)
V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression)
(with Chorus and Contralto solo)
VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

(First complete performance in Boston)

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor
Contralto Solo: FLORENCE KOPLEFF

These concerts will end about 4:20 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:35 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 14 1962

Mahler Third Symphony By Burgin

Richard Burgin, again appearing in his capacity as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present an extreme rarity at the concerts at Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. This will be the Symphony No. 3, in D minor, by Gustav Mahler, which never before has been performed complete in Boston.

The work was completed in 1895, and calls for contralto soloist and chorus. The latter will be Florence Kopleff and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. They will sing texts from Nietzsche and from "Des Knaben Wunderhorn."

The concerts will begin with first local performances of "Zvezdoliki," by Igor Stravinsky. This is a Cantata for orchestra and male chorus, written in 1911. The title has been variously translated: "The King of the Stars" (Grove's Dictionary), and, for these perfromances, "The Star-Faced."

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Symphony Hall concerts Monday evening at 8:30, and Tuesday evening at 8:30. His program for both will consist of "Printemps," by Debussy; the Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston, and the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Erica Morini as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
JAN 16 1962

Four More Concerts

Violinist Erica Morini concludes her guest appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts today and Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

Charles Munch's program for these concerts will consist of "Printemps" by Debussy, the Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston—rather than Mr. Piston's Symphony No. 7 as originally announced—and Miss Morini as soloist in performances of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Richard Burgin has invited contralto Florence Kopleff and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conducter, to be his guests at the orchestra's concerts this Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

At these concerts, Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of "The Star-Faced" by Igo Stravinsky and the first complete performance in Boston of the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler. Miss Kosleff and the chorus will participate in the Mahler Symphony.

The orchestra will be out of town the week of Jan. 22 to perform in New London, Baltimore, Brooklyn and at Carnegie Hall, New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
JAN 20 1962

Mahler Third Symphony Conducted by Burgin

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 13th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented the Cantata "Zvezdoliki" ("The Star-Faced") by Igor Stravinsky for the first time in Boston, and the first complete performance here of the Symphony No. 3, in D minor, by Gustav Mahler. Florence Kopleff, contralto, and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisted.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Once again we are in the debt of that devoted musician, Richard Burgin. Thanks to him, at long last, we have heard the entire Third Symphony of Gustav Mahler in Boston, and a stupendous occasion it was at Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon. The concert also brought first local hearing of Igor Stravinsky's Cantata of 1911, upon a text by Constantin Balmont, "The Star-Faced."

Since musically this is minor Stravinsky, the work for male chorus and orchestra—instrumentally in the manner of "The Firebird" but wit.. a few anticipations of the quieter portions of "Le Sacre"—need not detain us more than a paragraph. The choral style is undistinguished and the work without power, which may be said also of the obscure Nietzschean adoration of the text. It is nice to have extended our knowledge of early Stravinsky; that accomplished, let us pass on.

Stupendous is none too much a word for Mahler's Third Symphony. It is dimensionally stupendous, likewise in its huge orchestral apparatus, its intensity and its fabulous variegation of manner and substance. It is a tonal planet in itself; Mahler declared with reckless enthusiasm that "the symphony should be the whole world."

And how unlike the world of Bruckner, who also created grand structures and whose name has been joined with that of Mahler by history's unjust shotgun marriage, is that of Mahler's flaming imagination. Mahler the sophisticated, the musical organizer of genius, Mahler the naive who loved fairly tales; the passionate, the lover of theatrical pomps and solemnities, who felt them all seriously and never was able to prevent eloquence from curdling into grandiloquence.

All these are perceived in the Third Symphony, together with a trace of that ironic and somewhat humorous Mahler. From the pre-occupation with drums and kaleidoscopic glints of military marches in the long first movement, through the folkish tunes and bucolic fancies of the second and third, to the profound setting of Nietzsche's "Night Wanderer Song" and the delectable glimpses of Heaven in the fifth movement, we travel a long and complex way with this composer.

Burk in his weekly book quotes the "program" for the Third Symphony that Mahler expressed as his own view and later withdrew. We are fortunate in our hard-boiled world that we no longer bother with "programs". We hear music and either we feel it or we do not. What Mahler originally felt here about the awakening of Pan, what the flowers, animals, men and angels told him, is of no consequence; all that matters is the skill of the music, its power and its beauty, for even in his grotesquerie, Mahler never became separated from beauty.

Nor, it must be admitted, from touches of banality. The explanation of the first movement, and of the hushed trumpet over quiet strings in the third movement, according to our modern rationale, might be echoes from his youth near the army post where his family lived. There is banality in these marches, but also immense vigor.

But the finale, with its wondrous counterpoint of melody from the much-divided strings, is something else again. Here is music of unmistakable greatness, lovely and passionate and exalted, some of the most glorious pages ever conceived.

Burgin achieved a performance of true splendor, from an orchestra which lacked nothing of richness and full-hearted response to his wishes. The Chorus Pro Musica men (in Stravinsky) and women (in Mahler), prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, were at their best, which is notable.

Florence Kopleff sang nobly, her dark voice sounding like velvet. William Gibson, trombone, and Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, were asked by the conductor to rise and acknowledge applause which their solo work thoroughly deserved. Yes, a stupendous occasion!

Thirteenth Week

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 20, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

STRAVINSKY ..... Zvezdoliki (The Star-Faced) Cantata for Male Chorus and Orchestra

(First performance in Boston)

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 3, in D minor, with Women's Chorus and Contralto Solo

I. Kräftig, entschieden (Vigorous, decisive)

INTERMISSION

II. Tempo di Menuetto: Sehr mässig (Very moderately)

III. Comodo; scherzando

IV. Sehr langsam, misterioso (Slow, mysterious) (with Contralto solo)

V. Lustig in Tempo und keck im Ausdruck (Lively in tempo and jaunty in expression) (with Chorus and Contralto solo)

VI. Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden (Slow, peaceful, expressive)

(First complete performance in Boston)

CHORUS PRO MUSICA

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

Contralto Solo: FLORENCE KOPLEFF

These concerts will end about 4:20 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:35 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 14 1962

Mahler Third Symphony By Burgin

Richard Burgin, again appearing in his capacity as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present an extreme rarity at the concerts at Symphony Hall, Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30. This will be the Symphony No. 3, in D minor, by Gustav Mahler, which never before has been performed complete in Boston.

The work was completed in 1895, and calls for contralto soloist and chorus. The latter will be Florence Kopleff and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson. They will sing texts from Nietzsche and from "Des Knaben Wunderhorn."

The concerts will begin with first local performances of "Zvezdoliki," by Igor Stravinsky. This is a Cantata for orchestra and male chorus, written in 1911. The title has been variously translated: "The King of the Stars" (Grove's Dictionary), and, for these performances, "The Star-Faced."

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Symphony Hall concerts Monday evening at 8:30, and Tuesday evening at 8:30. His program for both will consist of "Printemps," by Debussy; the Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston, and the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Erica Morini as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
JAN 16 1962

Four More Concerts

Violinist Erica Morini concludes her guest appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts today and Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

Charles Munch's program for these concerts will consist of "Printemps" by Debussy, the Symphony No. 6 by Walter Piston—rather than Mr. Piston's Symphony No. 7 as originally announced—and Miss Morini as soloist in performances of Beethoven's Violin Concerto.

Richard Burgin has invited contralto Florence Kopleff and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson conductor, to be his guests at the orchestra's concerts this Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

At these concerts, Mr. Burgin will conduct the first Boston performance of "The Star-Faced" by Igo Stravinsky and the first complete performance in Boston of the Symphony No. 3 by Mahler. Miss Kosleff and the chorus will participate in the Mahler Symphony.

The orchestra will be out of town the week of Jan. 22 to perform in New London, Baltimore, Brooklyn and at Carnegie Hall, New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
JAN 20 1962

Mahler Third Symphony Conducted by Burgin

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 13th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin, associate conductor, presented the Cantata "Zvezdoliki" ("The Star-Faced"), by Igor Stravinsky for the first time in Boston, and the first complete performance here of the Symphony No. 3, in D minor, by Gustav Mahler. Florence Kopleff, contralto, and the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, assisted.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Once again we are in the debt of that devoted musician, Richard Burgin. Thanks to him, at long last, we have heard the entire Third Symphony of Gustav Mahler in Boston, and a stupendous occasion it was at Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon. The concert also brought first local hearing of Igor Stravinsky's Cantata of 1911, upon a text by Constantin Balmont, "The Star-Faced."

Since musically this is minor Stravinsky, the work for male chorus and orchestra—instrumentally in the manner of "The Firebird" but with a few anticipations of the quieter portions of "Le Sacre"—need not detain us more than a paragraph. The choral style is undistinguished and the work without power, which may be said also of the obscure Nietzschean adoration of the text. It is nice to have extended our knowledge of early Stravinsky; that accomplished, let us pass on.

Stupendous is none too much a word for Mahler's Third Symphony. It is dimensionally stupendous, likewise in its huge orchestral apparatus, its intensity and its fabulous variegation of manner and substance. It is a tonal planet in itself; Mahler declared with reckless enthusiasm that "the symphony should be the whole world."

And how unlike the world of Bruckner, who also created grand structures, and whose name has been joined with that of Mahler by history's unjust shotgun marriage, is that of Mahler's flaming imagination. Mahler the sophisticated, the musical organizer of genius, Mahler the naive who loved fairly tales; the passionate, the lover of theatrical pomps and solemnities, who felt them all seriously and never was able to prevent eloquence from curdling into grandiloquence.

All these are perceived in the Third Symphony, together with a trace of that ironic and somewhat humorous Mahler. From the pre-occupation with drums and kaleidoscopic glints of military marches in the long first movement, through the folkish tunes and bucolic fancies of the second and third, to the profound setting of Nietzsche's "Night Wanderer Song" and the delectable glimpses of Heaven in the fifth movement, we travel a long and complex way with this composer.

Burk in his weekly book quotes the "program" for the Third Symphony that Mahler expressed as his own view and later withdrew. We are fortunate in our hard-boiled world that we no longer bother with "programs". We hear music and either we feel it or we do not. What Mahler originally felt here about the awakening of Pan, what the flowers, animals, men and angels told him, is of no consequence; all that matters is the skill of the music, its power and its beauty, for even in his grotesquerie, Mahler never became separated from beauty.

Nor, it must be admitted, from touches of banality. The explanation of the first movement, and of the hushed trumpet over quiet strings in the third movement, according to our modern rationale, might be echoes from his youth near the army post where his family lived. There is banality in these marches, but also immense vigor.

But the finale, with its wondrous counterpoint of melody from the much-divided strings, is something else again. Here is music of unmistakable greatness, lovely and passionate and exalted, some of the most glorious pages ever conceived.

Burgin achieved a performance of true splendor, from an orchestra which lacked nothing of richness and full-hearted response to his wishes. The Chorus Pro Musica men (in Stravinsky) and women (in Mahler), prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson, were at their best, which is notable.

Florence Kopleff sang nobly, her dark voice sounding like velvet. William Gibson, trombone, and Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, were asked by the conductor to rise and acknowledge applause which their solo work thoroughly deserved. Yes, a stupendous occasion!

112

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

JAN 20 1962

The Symphony

Inspired Burgin Conducts Classic

By ROBERT TAYLOR

With Gustav Mahler's gigantic Third Symphony —which Richard Burgin presented complete, one hour and a half, for the first time in Boston yesterday—the romantic symphony reaches the frontier of expression.

True, Mahler attempted to go even further, to achieve even vaster effects, to vanquish the impossible; but the principles of style are contained within his first three symphonies.

Personal expression could not be extended beyond this particular type of symphony, and being personal could not be duplicated. Mahler's musical heir, Schoenberg, was forced to invent a completely new musical syntax to do it.

Hearing the colossal statement entire for the first time, and in such a dedicated performance, may be accounted one of the cherishable experiences of a lifetime. The first movement was played here nearly 20 years ago, but in my estimation the first section is the weakest part of the score and in no way serves to adequately represent the whole.

He Was Inspired

Then it was Mr. Burgin who afforded that tantalizing fragment, who now realized his dream of conducting the full work. He was inspired. The orchestra sounded radiant, and in realizing the mammoth complexities of the Third, the devotion, the perception, the absolute identification of the conductor with the music, projected a soaring grandeur.

I consider yesterday's concert one of the handful of unique and indelible impressions of a reviewer's career. Burgin is the man for Mahler.

And this, despite the fact that the Third itself, shows definite weaknesses. The faults are colossal as well as the virtues. For men, Mahler's First and Second are works of a higher order as art, better integrated and developed, and yet the Third ought not be compared, for it is a law unto itself; a symphony that invites no competitors, like Joyce's "Finnegan's Wake."

The symphony is episodic, the parts tremendously related. Each section has an identity of its own; and rather than expanding and exploring ideas within the framework of the symphony, the composer organizes everything he has to say within the episode. It is the sum of this impressionistic structure that stuns and dazles, the power of tensions and contrasts and colors ranging from the sublime to the bombastic.

Sometimes these are intermingled as in the first movement, which discloses the perils of bigness, verging on the coarse banality of a band concert and yet containing a trombone solo of haunting beauty.

The ambiguity of antagonisms between major and minor, of instrumental and vocal, of naive harmony and complex scoring, of solo voice and choruses, of liquid off-stage horn calls with three dimensions and the brazen folk song thumpings on stage with one—all these and a myriad of other elements comprise the Mahler Third, an isolated and enduring splendor.

Enormous Epic

It is an enormous epic of nature poetry, following a misty programmatic path that shouldn't be taken too literally, but as the source of aural images inspiring the composer: a meditation upon the organic cycle of nature that becomes a reflection of the relations of man, nature and God, and ultimately serves as a massive metaphor about creation itself.

Miss Florence Kopleff handled the contralto's solo with a clear, lustrous intelligence; and the Women's Chorus of the Chorus Pro Musica had a fine-grained tonal authority. The Men's Chorus appeared in Stravinsky's mystical "Zvedoliki" Cantata, which was a Boston premiere.

It is a formidably imposing affair from a technical viewpoint, but otherwise a faded curiosity from the same year as "Petrouchka." All honor to Alfred Nash Patterson and his well-disciplined singers; but it was Richard Burgin's moment of glory and he bore it to the heights.

Next week the orchestra tours. On Feb. 2-3, Jeanne Marie Darre will be soloist in Saint-Saens Concerto No. 2, in G minor, for piano, Op. 22; and Dr. Munch has scheduled Honegger's Symphony No. 5, Debussy's "Nocturns," and Ravel's "La Valse."

The Symphony

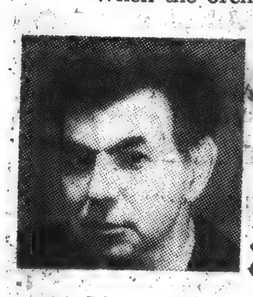
The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the 13th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Alfred Nash Patterson conducted the Chorus Pro Musica, and Florence Kopleff was the contralto soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:
Zvedoliki (The Star-Faced) Cantata, Stravinsky
Symphony No. 3, in D minor...Mahler

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

JAN 18 1962

For Richard Burgin, Music Is Steadfast

TOMORROW NIGHT and the night after, the Boston Symphony concerts will be conducted by Richard Burgin.



When the orchestra performs in Brooklyn on the 26th and Carnegie Hall the 27th, and back here at Symphony Hall the 30th, Richard Burgin will be the conductor.

When the orchestra performs on other dates, Richard Burgin will be on the platform, but he won't be conducting. He'll be sitting in the first chair of the string section, the Concertmaster's seat.

There he has sat for 41 of the Symphony's 81 seasons. For half his stay here, he has been associate director of the orchestra as well, conducting some concerts every season. Next year, when he turns 70, he'll give up playing, but he will stay on as associate director.

SERVING AS musical handmaiden to such towering personalities as Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzkq and presently, Charles Munch, Burgin has not won the public acclaim to which his reputation among musicians indicates he is entitled.

To be sure, members of the orchestra hold him in great esteem, and he has a firm place in the affections of regular symphony goers in Boston.

But from what I gather, here is a man of considerable stature who could be a figure of great eminence in the world of music.

When I talked to him, I could see how it is that despite his talent and technical precision, he has not achieved that eminence.

FIRST, he is a truly modest man. Second, he is genuinely interested in helping others. The world of big-time culture purveyance is a cut-throat world, and Richard Burgin doesn't own a knife.

Born in Russian-occupied Poland, he was a child prodigy. In 1903, when he was 11, he was violin soloist with the Warsaw Symphony. He starred in New York's Carnegie Hall in 1907.

He was a highly honored graduate of the St. Petersburg Conservatory, and at 20 went to Finland as concertmaster for the Helsingfors Symphony, then to Norway with the Christiania Philharmonic.

He had served under Richard Strauss and Jan Sebelius before he was called to Boston to be concert master in 1920.

ST. PETERSBURG is now Leningrad, Helsingfors is Helsinki, Christiania is Oslo. It is an incredibly changed world, but for Richard Burgin the world is music, and the muse of music is steadfast.

After his long stay in Boston as a teacher, performer and conductor, what does he think of Boston music audiences?

"So far as taste and discrimination go, I don't think Boston differs from any other city of similar cultural stature," he said.

What makes for greatness in an orchestra? Is it the conductor? Burgin had two opinions, one as conductor, the other as player.

"A CONDUCTOR, cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear," he said. A gifted conductor can bring out the best, but he cannot bring out what isn't there.

"One of the essential things for a group of musicians is to play together for a number of years, preferably under the same man. When the ensemble feeling is reached, you can start the orchestra on any of the classics and they will go through it without any conductor at all."

Aside from his musical ability and his generosity, Burgin is known for his absent-mindedness. One of his students invented a flip-up mute which even Burgin couldn't mislay, and has made a tidy profit. Burgin doesn't use it, and still never has a mute, even though the orchestra gave him a bagful a few years back.

When asked the proper pronunciation of his wife's professional name (violinist Ruth Posselt), Burgin said, "I really don't know. You see, I just call her Ruth."

Boston Symphony unter Burgin

Eine erhabene Aufführung der 3. Symphonie Mahlers

Die amerikanische Renaissance Gustav Mahlers enthüllt mit jeder neuen Aufführung der Werke des böhmischen Tondichters, wieviel in seinem Schaffen noch zu entdecken, welche Tiefen noch zu ergründen sind. Der schwerste Vorwurf, den die zeitgenössische Kritik seinerzeit gegen Mahler erhob, war der Hinweis darauf, daß er in seine großen symphonischen Schöpfungen die einfachsten, sogar abfällig banal genannten Melodien aufnahm und damit seine zugestandenermaßen imposanten Eingebungen zersplitterte, wenn nicht gar in Nichtigkeiten verkehrte.

Diese verknöcherte Kritik, die nur das Traditionelle gelten lassen wollte, war außerstande, zu erkennen, daß auch das Einfache, ja das Banale Teil des großen Weltbildes ist, wie es in der Musik wie in der übrigen Kunst verkörpert wird. Man denke an die Malerei, an die Dichtung der Zeit, in der die Werke Mahlers entstanden, und wird an vielen Beispielen feststellen können, daß sich durch die Einbeziehung des Simplen die hohe Form der Kunst nicht verengte, sondern weitete.

Das wurde uns in hohem Maße wieder einmal gezeigt, als Richard Burgin in der vergangenen Woche mit dem Boston Symphony-Orchester Mahlers 3. Symphonie in der Carnegie Hall aufführte. Burgin läßt sich in seiner Interpretation streng von der Partitur leiten, deren Kontraste er nie — wie es leider allzu häufig von weniger werktreuen Dirigenten getan wird — zuspitzt und ins Dramatische verfälscht. Immer werden die organischen Zusammenhänge in seiner sorgsamen Ausbreitung des thematischen Gewebes gewahrt, dessen Festigkeit dadurch in bewundernswerter Weise aufgezeigt wird.

*

Das wird ohne jede Pedanterie erreicht. Immer lebt das Werk, immer hat es den großen, den mächtigen Atem. Und zwar ebenso in dem gewaltigen ersten Satz wie in den vorwiegend heiteren, die sich nach der Pause anschließen. Der verhaltene 4. Satz mit dem dunklen Text des "Wanderers Nachtlied" von Nietzche erstand danach wie eine Mahnung zur Einkehr, zur tiefen Besinnung. Das Orchester hatte dabei in der Altistin Florence Kepleff eine mit jeder Silbe verständliche und gesanglich höchst eindrucksvolle Mitgestalterin, die sich auch dem kecken Ton des 5. Satzes gewachsen zeigte.

Es war eine Aufführung wie aus einem Guß, wie man sie selten erlebt.

Hasta

Jugoslawisches Ballett

Third New York Tour

New London, Conn.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 28,084
JAN 24 1962

Boston Symphony Pleases Again at Conn. College

By WILLIAM MEREDITH

The Boston Symphony, which often provided the high point of Connecticut College Concert Series, returned under the baton of Charles Munch to do just that last night at Palmer Auditorium.

Few listeners could recall a more brilliant or finished performance by this famour orchestra and the program they played was as satisfying as their musicianship. The conductor, whose taste and skill are familiar to New Londoners, was assisted on this occasion by a violin soloist who clearly belongs in this company, Erica Morini.

The concert opened with an early and seldom-played work of Claude Debussy, the two-part symphonic suite Printemps. Although revised at the height of his powers, this piece was originally composed when Debussy was only 25, and it has melody and a vigor of a kind we do not usually associate with him. From the opening flute phrases, it was played crisply and with vivid coloring. The energetic second movement, full of the surging effects of Debussy's mature style, was nevertheless compatible with the style of his lucid 19th century French predecessor Berlioz. Recalling the languors of certain late Debussy works, one is tempted to forgive the philistine observaicians (reprinted in the program): "He should beware of the vague impressionism which is one of the most dangerous enemies of artistic truth."

The second work was Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, commissioned by the Boston orchestra seven years ago, and now mastered by these musicians to a perfection rare with comtemporary music. Piston is an American composer who writes with assurance in his own modern idiom, producing music of unusually rich harmonic texture and clear melodic structure. His work is no more unfamiliar, on first hearing, than that of Shostakovich. The present work has more power and control than most of Shostakovich's.

Charles Munch's control of tempo and phrase underlined the traditional design of the several movements, and came to a climax in the splendid third movement marked adagio, sereno. The soaring theme was passed from strings to flute to brasses, concluding in a huge retarding climax and then a dying away that was genuinely serene. The symphony ends with the liveliest movement of all — melodic, strongly rhythmic, with a bright fugal passage at the start. Seldom has an unfamiliar modern composition made such an immediate hit as this work did last night.

The second half of the evening was given over to Beethoven's violin concerto. Erica Morini played this familiar work with a sensitive, intense lyric quality that made it new and dramatized its virtuoso perils. Almost as soon as she started she achieved an assurance of tone and statement. By the middle of the first movement it was a commanding assurance to which Maestro Munch held his orchestra attuned.

The soloist followed the growth of the vast first movement all the way to the cadenza. Here her playing reached an extraordinary lyric excitement, reminiscent of the solo feats of the greatest coloratura sopranos and making one aware of the resources of the apparently very fine instrument she was playing on. In the grave second movement her notes were particularly pure and had a monumental serenity. The final rondo was silvery and accurate (in the first movement, the very nervosity of her playing led to occasional slight errors of pitch). Throughout the work the famous string section of the orchestra provided a sumptuous accompaniment, and the entrances were as fastidious as Mme. Morini's own attacks and phrases. It is not an easy work to lend fresh meaning to but this artist did so. In terms of both music and music-makers, it was a memorable evening.

CHARLES MUNCH

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 28,084
JAN 20 1962

Boston Symphony Plays Tuesday

Erica Morini, violinist, will be heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Palmer Auditorium, Connecticut College, at 8:30 a. m. Tuesday.

Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in a concert which will include: Debussy, Printemps; Piston, Symphony No. 6; and Beethoven, Violin Concerto.

Miss Morini has fulfilled more than 1,000 orchestra engagements throughout Europe, from North America to Australia, and the Orient. She has a precious Davidoff Stradivarius.

The college has announced that latecomers will not be admitted to the auditorium until after the completion of the first number. Also, the Williams St. gate will be open for the convenience of patrons.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 27,703
JAN 24 1962

Boston Symphony Plays Concert

NEW LONDON — The Boston Symphony orchestra with Erica Morini, violinist, as soloist, performed Tuesday night at Palmer auditorium, Connectciut college.

Charles Munch conducted the orchestra in the concert which included: Debussy, Printemps; Piston, Symphony No. 6, and Beethoven, Violin Concerto.

Miss Morini has given concerts throughout Europe, North America, Australia and the Orient.

ANNUAL MEETING

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 201,197 S. 319,025
JAN 21 1962

Music Notes

Three Symphony Programs This Week

By WELDON WALLACE

THREE symphony orchestras —those of Philadelphia, Boston and Baltimore—are booked at the Lyric Theater this week.

Rudolf Serkin will appear as guest pianist with the Philadelphia Orchestra Wednesday night. His contributions are generous for he is to be the soloist in two works, Mozart's "Concerto in B Flat Major, K. 595," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4 in G Major."

Eugene Ormandy will conduct Haydn's "Symphony No. 101" (the "Clock") to open the proceedings.

Mr. Serkin occupies a position in the concert world comparable to that of Artur Rubinstein, a musician of quite different temperament.

Concerts With Son

Both came into prominence in the United States in the 1930's, and both have established a secure place in the affections of the American public.

Mr. Serkin is by far the most distinguished soloist on the Philadelphia Orchestra series this season. Not long ago he filled his one hundredth engagement with that orchestra, playing a Mozart concerto for two pianos in partnership with his 15-year-old son Peter. His last performance in Baltimore with the Philadelphia organization took place in 1959.

Munch To Conduct

The Boston Symphony is playing here Thursday night under auspices of the Baltimore Symphony. This concert is included in the Baltimore orchestra's Wednesday subscription series. A few seats are available for purchase by nonsubscribers, but the demand is such that sales will soon go on a standing-room basis.

This occasion marks the last opportunity for Baltimoreans to hear a Boston Symphony program conducted at the Lyric Theater by Charles Munch, who is retiring at the end of the season.

Mr. Munch took over the Boston Symphony in the 1948-1949 season, succeeding the late Sergei Koussevitsky. The conductor who will assume leadership of the Boston next season is Erich Leinsdorf, now conductor and artistic director for the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The program Mr. Munch has selected for Thursday will be as follows:

Printemps ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 6....Walter Piston
Symphony No. 6....T. chaikovsky

"Printemps" is an early Debussy composition. Written in 1887, it did not receive its premiere until 1913.

Walter Piston, as professor of music at Harvard University, has had a long association with the Boston Symphony, which commissioned his "Symphony No. 3" in 1948.

The Baltimore Symphony's program Saturday night is a popular-priced concert, highlighting hit tunes from six musical successes of recent years.

The evening is titled "Lerner-Loewe, Cole Porter Night." Herbert Grossman is to conduct and there will be two soloists—Jacquelynne Moody, lyric coloratura soprano, and Richard Fredericks, baritone.

Lerner-Loewe will be represented by excerpts from "Gigi," "Camelot," "Brigadoon" and "My Fair Lady."

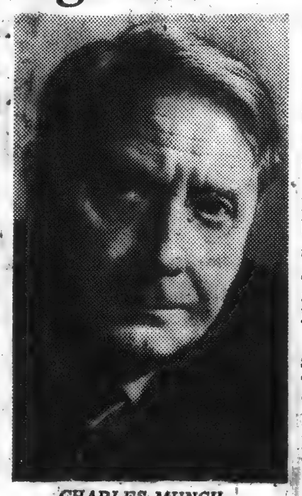
From the works of Cole Porter, "Kiss Me, Kate" and "Can-Can" have been selected.

Jacquelynne Moody made her debut with the Central City (Colo.) Opera Company, after which she became a leading coloratura with the New York City Opera Company. She has sung also with the Fort Worth Opera Association, the Houston Opera Company, the Boston Opera Group and the San Antonio Civic Light Opera.

The debut of Richard Fredericks took place last spring, when he sang the role of Mercutio in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet" with the San Francisco Opera Company.

Since then he has taken part in a production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," by Benjamin Britten, given in Vancouver, and has sung at the Hollywood Bowl.

JACQUELYNNE MOODY



CHARLES MUNCH

115

Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
SUN. 312,266
JAN 21 1962

5 Promising Concerts

This will be a big week of concerts.

Starting Tuesday at the Peabody with "I Musica," the famous Italian string group which performs without a conductor, it will offer a wide variety, concluding with the Baltimore Symphony's Saturday pop concert.

THE GREAT Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, will return to the Lyric on Wednesday, with Rudolf Serkin as soloist in two concertos: the Mozart B-flat and the Beethoven Fourth. The program opens with Haydn's "Clock" Symphony.

The Boston Symphony will perform at the Lyric the following night, with Charles Munch conducting. (For the program, see What's Going On.) This is the Boston's 81st season.

THIS CONCERT will serve as a farewell for Maestro Munch, conductor of the Boston since 1949. He is retiring at the end of this season, his place to be taken by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical advisor of the Metropolitan Opera. Leinsdorf formerly was conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic.

Munch will return to this country, next season, however, as conductor of the French National Orchestra, which will tour the U. S. A. and Canada for several months.

SERKIN has had an unusually long, intimate association with the Philadelphia Orchestra. Early this season he marked his 100 performance with the Philadelphia. This unusual milestone also marked the debut of Serkin's 15-year-old son, Peter with the orchestra. Together the two artists presented the Mozart Concerto No. 10 for Two Pianos and Orchestra, thus opening up the possibilities of a musical dynastic succession.

Serkin first played with the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1937.

SERKIN has played more than 100 times with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

CHARLES MUNCH — His swan-song season.

For Saturday's Baltimore Symphony pop concert to be conducted by Herbert Grossman a program from Broadway musicals has been chosen.

There will be a chamber music concert at the Jewish Community Center tonight at 8.15 conducted by Saul Lilienstein.

LOOKING AHEAD: Maestro Adler will conduct the Baltimore Symphony's next paired concerts Jan. 30-31, with Byron Janis as piano soloist. The B. S. O.'s opera gala will be conducted by Grossman on Feb. 3.

And on Feb. 6-7 the Baltimore Symphony will have Emil Gilels as piano soloist.

— R. P. H.

Playshop Drama

Richard A. Macksey, assistant professor of writing at the Johns Hopkins University, will lecture on "American Drama" at Shriver Hall next Sunday, Jan. 28, at 8.30 P. M. Following his lecture there will be a presentation by the Playshoppers.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (MORNING)
D. 201,197 S. 319,025
JAN 26 1962

Music Notes

Boston Symphony

By WELDON WALLACE

The special tone of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—taut, concentrated and instantly responsive to subtle changes of shading—gave great pleasure at the Lyric Theater last night.

A capacity audience heard this orchestra, which played here under auspices of the Baltimore Symphony. It was conducted by Charles Munch, an impressive figure, tall, broad-shouldered, silver-haired, with the face of a Roman emperor.

For this listener, the tones produced by the Bostonians were more enjoyable than the music itself.

Student Piece Played

The first selection, entitled "Printemps," was a student work of Debussy. It is quite airy and melodious, as its phrases swirl, pirouette and coast along in a shimmering play of tone. Yet it would be too much to call it a distinctive piece.

Actually it sounds a good deal like the music of Delius, which is about the most uncomplimentary thing one could say of any work. At the end it suddenly begins to move jauntily in the music-hall manner of Saint-Saens.

But enough about the music. As for the performance, that was every way persuasive. The strings had unusual luster, and the other sections joined in very smoothly.

Sound Appropriate

The flexible, det, polished sounds of the Boston organization wre as a appropriate for Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 6," a composition in so-called neo-classic style, as they were for the filminess of Debussy.

Piston's music is carefully chiselled, artfully planned so that all lines of the scoring are clear of smudges. There is an emotional economy about this score, and its effect depends less on qualities of feeling, which are rather self-contained, than on balance and precision of craftsmanship.

It is a work in a modern idiom, not sweet, but not harsh or grating. It was recreated in flowing lines of sound, carefully carved.

The concert ended with Tcaikovsky's "Pathetique Symphony." The kind of tone that characterizes the Boston Symphony kept this music from overflowing too much, so that there was charm in the French accent given to the Russian score.

Actually, though, the movement that came off particularly well was the march-like Scherzo, which was presented with light, firm, swashbuckling tread — a French military band, and very fine.

BALTIMORE, MD.
SUN (EVENING)
D. 219,463
JAN 25 1962

Boston Due At Lyric

Charles Munch will make his final appearance here tonight as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony, when the orchestra returns to the Lyric.

The Strasbourg-born maestro plans to retire from the Boston Symphony at the end of the season. He was appointed music director in 1949.

The Boston Symphony is appearing here as the second bonus concert of the Baltimore Symphony's midweek, pair-concert series.

Wednesday Subscribers

Tonight's performance is for Wednesday subscribers. The Berlin Philharmonic, under Dr. Karl Boehm, presented the first bonus concert for Tuesday subscribers November 21.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 101 men and 3 women, will play Debussy's "Printemps," "Symphony No. 6," by the American composer Walter Piston and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6 [The Pathetique]."

Dr. Munch, one of France's leading musicians, succeeded the late Serge Koussevitzky, who served 25 years as conductor of the orchestra, now in its eighty-first season. Koussevitzky retired in 1948, died June 4, 1951, and is buried at Lenox, near the Boston Symphony's summer home, Tanglewood.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
D. 230,204 SAT. 21,343
JAN 26 1962

At the Lyric

Boston Symphony Cures the Toothache

By R. P. HARRISS

Along with a big audience that included standers, your humble listener last night partook of an exceedingly cheerful evening at the Lyric with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch.

Was this ambiance the result of an excellent program, with a brilliant guest artist? No. The program was far from ideal and there was no guest artist.

Had your man just come into a fortune? Emphatically not, and besides that, I had the toothache.

Then why in Tophet this cheerfulness? The reason, pure and simple, was orchestral excellence. The Boston and Maestro Munch gave a superb performance.

THE PROGRAM opened with an early, indeed a student, work by Debussy, his "Printemps" symphonic suite. While it foreshadowed his future successes, it is by no means a great work. Still it seemed remarkably good.

Next came Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, which was commissioned by the Boston and the Koussevitsky Foundation in 1955. In the opening movement Piston demonstrates, for the benefit of any other contemporary composer, and conservatory heads and tone-deaf longhairs who may be listening, that he can compose music just as stylish, dry, nervous and hard to listen to, as anybody in the business.

HAVING DONE so, he then relents and gives some consideration to the ordinary customers. The second movement opens with a rattle of dried peas in the timpani, and other odd effects, plus gruff comment from the bull fiddles; but melodic themes soon make themselves heard, with some enchanting development (unfortunately not enough) by the violins.

The Adagio sereno was just that, and the final movement's all-too-brief solo part for the first cello was pure pleasure. The excellent cellist was Samuel Mays, a former member of the Baltimore Symphony, I believe. There was also some fine work by first harpist Bernard Zighera.

Impeccable musicianship could not hide the essentially superficial character of this work, but it did make most of it very listenable.

TCHAIKOVSKY'S Sixth or "Pathetic" Symphony is so emotional, it really can be dreadful when given a second-rate performance. Even Munch and the Boston could not hide the banality of its 3rd movement.

But Munch's rare taste and the orchestra's polish made all else sound far better than it usually does. Indeed, the Final Adagio Lamentoso, usually s flooded with Tchaikovsky's self pity, was exquisite. As th sound died it was received wit dead silence for several second before the audience broke into a storm of applause.

A POSSIBLE contributing factor to the general Lyric bonhomie: the B. & O. clock tower, thanks to the efforts of Douglas Gordon's improvement association, was brightly lit again. Huzzah!

Upon leaving the Lyric, I found my toothache gone.

116

Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3 500
JAN 18 1962
PAGE ONE

Boston Symphony to Play Mahler's Monumental '3d'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor--one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer--on Friday evening, Jan. 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the Jan. 26 performance are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box - office is open daily, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BULLETIN
W CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 18 1962

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor - - one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer - - on Friday evening, Jan. 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 aLfayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to patricipate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 12.500
JAN 27 1962

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor --one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer --on Friday evening, January 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra;s associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

* * *

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15,370
JAN 20 1962
1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Ferruccio Tagliavini will give his first New York concert of the season, Friday, January 19, 1962 at 8:30 P.M. at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. His program will consist of operatic arias and songs and is arranged by Erberto Landi and the Meyer Management, Mr. Tagliavini's U. S. representative.

Tagliavini who has been absent from the U. S. musical scene for several seasons arrived here January 7, directly from a triumphant success in the leading opera and concert houses of Italy, Germany, Bulgium and England.

His latest RCA recording of Italian songs "Le canzoni di ieri" has just been released.

●

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor — one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer — on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearences in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The

MUSIC • ART • DRAMA

(Continued from Page 7)

Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 17.420
JAN 24 1962

Boston Symphony To Offer Mahler

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustave Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor—one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer—on Friday evening, Jan. 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston comes to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. The box-office is open daily, 10 A. M. to 9 P. M.

116

Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3,500
JAN 18 1962
PAGE ONE CERTIFIED

Boston Symphony to Play Mahler's Monumental '3d'

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor—one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer—on Friday evening, Jan. 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the Jan. 26 performance are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box - office is open daily, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370
JAN 20 1962
1961

MUSIC • ART • DRAMA

Ferruccio Tagliavini will give his first New York concert of the season, Friday, January 19, 1962 at 8:30 P.M. at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. His program will consist of operatic arias and songs and is arranged by Erberto Landi and the Meyer Management, Mr. Tagliavini's U. S. representative.

Tagliavini who has been absent from the U. S. musical scene for several seasons arrived here January 7, directly from a triumphant success in the leading opera and concert houses of Italy, Germany, Bulgium and England.

His latest RCA recording of Italian songs "Le canzoni di ieri" has just been released.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor — one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer — on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearences in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The

MUSIC • ART • DRAMA

(Continued from Page 7)

Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BULLETIN
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JAN 18 1962

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor - - one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer - - on Friday evening, Jan. 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 aLfayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to patricipate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 12,500
JAN 27 1962

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor—one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer—on Friday evening, January 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

* * *

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 17,420
JAN 24 1962

Boston Symphony To Offer Mahler

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustave Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor—one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer—on Friday evening, Jan. 26, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston comes to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. The box-office is open daily, 10 A. M. to 9 P. M.

...LTY NEWS BUREAU
...BANY, N.Y.
...WSPAPER
...PPINGS
... NEW YORK
...ERVICE

...LYN RECORD
... 19, 1962

Boston Symphony Invites Burgin To Boro Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor —one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer— on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Ricard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39,650

JAN 22 1962

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy On January 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor — one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer — on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearences in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 27, 2:15—Boston Symphony, Richard Burgin conducting. MAHLER: Symphony No. 3. (Chorus Pro Musica and Florence Kopleff, contralto).

Richard Burgin, a familiar and beloved figure at the concertmaster's desk of the Boston Symphony for the past 42 years, besides being assistant conductor since 1935 and associate conductor since 1943, has always made interesting programs. It was characteristic of him to bring us Mahler's gigantic Third Symphony, instead of reaping cheaper rewards with sure-fire favorites.

This work is a marvelous paradox—an enormous musical fresco which nonetheless contains pages of the most tender and introspective intimacy. It is as if a Tiepolo ceiling had been painted by Rembrandt.

Mr. Burgin's interpretation was exemplary as far as clarity and integration were concerned. The Tempo di Menuetto movement and the following one were exquisitely played. But this profoundly intelligent conception did have one major drawback. It failed to communicate the spectacular, the theatrical character of much of the music.

The proclamatory first movement should be circusy at times, in grandiose fashion; and the final pages should reach an intensity that leaves one fully spent. Here the instinctive showmanship of a Mitropoulos or a Bernstein is preferable to dignity and reserve (and I do not mean to imply that their interpretations were not also musically profound).

But, even with these reservations, this was an excellent and most welcome performance. It will help to establish Mahler on this side of the ocean in his rightful place as one of the most fascinating and influential composers of modern times. —Robert Sabin

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
WED JAN 24 1962

Footlights And Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Mahler Program Friday

Some critics say that Gustav Mahler's symphonies are overblown affairs, but nearly all agree that he was the last in a line of great Austrian composers.

A chance to judge whether Mahler's greatness is inflated will be afforded Friday at the Academy of Music, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs his Third Symphony, a lengthy work that also calls for a contralto soloist and a women's choir.

FLORENCE KOPLEFF.
Soloist with Boston.

This symphony is divided into six sections, with intermission after the 45-minute first section. It is the only work on the program which starts at 8:30 p.m.

Conducting the orchestra will be Richard Burgin, its associate conductor and concert master since 1920. Also appearing will be Florence Koploff as soloist and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston.

Mahler, who died in 1911, composed the third of his nine symphonies (a 10th is partially scored) in 1895. He was a conductor and chorus master in various European cities, seldom staying at one post as long as musicians with less voluble personalities.

He directed the New York Philharmonic Society a few years before his death, leading performances at the Academy of Music during the 1908-1909 season.

His symphonies have received public esteem only in recent years. The composer heard but one of his works acclaimed during his lifetime. It is no small thing, however, when a composer is hailed as a descendant of the Austrian symphonists; this line includes Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert and Bruckner.

165 Church Street — New York
MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

FEB 1962

Boston Symphony

The big sprawling Third Symphony by Mahler made up the entire program of the Boston Symphony, Saturday afternoon Jan. 27 at Carnegie Hall, with Richard Burgin on the podium. The first movement, which was the only part played before intermission, is a whole symphony in itself—or perhaps one could describe it more accurately as a tone poem. It ranges through the full gamut of emotions, tempi, dynamics. The other five movements are shorter, and each one quite individual. The second movement, Tempo di Menuetto, is charming and light in texture. The third movement, comodo: scherzando, is a little longer and more varied. The fourth movement, Sehr langsam, misterioso, features contralto solo (Florence Kopleff was excellent); it is a rather brief movement, somewhat like a recitative. The fifth movement, Lustig in Tempo, boasted both women's chorus and contralto solo. The Chorus Pro Musica joined Miss Kopleff and the Orchestra in this lively, joyful movement. And finally, Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden, an expressive, lyrical farewell. Frankly, we think this symphony tries to say too much: it is too long and has too many ideas for just one work. Moreover, there doesn't seem to be anything holding the various movements together. Mr. Burgin held the different forces together competently. He is an authoritative and musicianly conductor.

Charles Munch was guest of honor at a banquet, Jan. 21, in New York City given by "The Bohemian"—the New York musicians' club which endows the Musicians Foundation Fund. Four former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductors —Nikisch, Munch, Monteux and Koussevitzky—have been among those honored by the 55-year-old organization. Other honored guests have also included Mahler, Toscanini, Kreisler, Paderewski, Hofmann, Busoni, Sembrich, Casals, Heifetz, Rachmaninoff, Prokofieff, Caruso, Walter, Spalding, Mitropoulos, Villa-Lobos, Hess, Rubinstein, Bernstein and Ormandy.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, January 19, 1962

Boston Symphony Invites Burgin To Boro Academy

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor —one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer— on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Ricard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearances in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 39,650
JAN 22 1962

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy On January 26

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3, in D minor — one of the monumental works by the great Austrian composer — on Friday evening, January 26th, at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, has invited Richard Burgin, the Orchestra's associate conductor, to present his interpretation of the Mahler work, a seldom-heard masterpiece requiring a large instrumental ensemble, an alto soloist and a women's chorus.

Florence Kopleff, well-known for her numerous appearences in oratorio, will sing the solo part and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston will come to Brooklyn to participate in this performance.

Mahler is one of the great composer-conductors of Central Europe who made an indelible impression on music in the United States. He studied philosophy at the Vienna University and music at the Vienna Conservatory. A series of assignments as chorus master and conductor in Prague, Leipzig, Budapest and Hamburg finally led to his engagement as director of the Vienna Court Opera, a post he held for ten years and during which time he elevated the Opera to new standards of excellence. In 1907, he came to New York as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House, and the following year, he became the conductor of the New York Philharmonic Society. He directed Philharmonic performances at The Brooklyn Academy of Music in the 1908-1909 season.

Mahler composed nine symphonies, which in recent years are rising in the esteem of the American musical public. His "Lied von der Erde" (Song of the Earth) now is in the repertory of major symphony orchestras and his songs frequently are heard on recital programs.

Tickets for the performance of Mahler's third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 and may be ordered by mail. All mail orders must include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The box-office is open daily, 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
WED JAN 24 1962

Footlights And Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Mahler Program Friday

Some critics say that Gustav Mahler's symphonies are overblown affairs, but nearly all agree that he was the last in a line of great Austrian composers.

A chance to judge whether Mahler's greatness is inflated will be afforded Friday at the Academy of Music when the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs his Third Symphony, a lengthy work that also calls for a contralto soloist and a women's choir.

FLORENCE KOPLEFF.
Soloist with Boston.

This symphony is divided into six sections, with intermission after the 45-minute first section. It is the only work on the program which starts at 8:30 p.m.

Conducting the orchestra will be Richard Burgin, its associate conductor and concert master since 1920. Also appearing will be Florence Koploff as soloist and the Chorus Pro Musica of Boston.

Mahler, who died in 1911, composed the third of his nine symphonies (a 10th is partially scored) in 1895. He was a conductor and chorus master in various European cities, seldom staying at one post as long as musicians with less voluble personalities.

He directed the New York Philharmonic Society a few years before his death, leading performances at the Academy of Music during the 1908-1909 season.

His symphonies have received public esteem only in recent years. The composer heard but one of his works acclaimed during his lifetime. It is no small thing, however, when a composer is hailed as a descendant of the Austrian symphonists; this line includes Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert and Bruckner.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 27, 2:15—Boston Symphony, Richard Burgin conducting. MAHLER: Symphony No. 3. (Chorus Pro Musica and Florence Kopleff, contralto).

Richard Burgin, a familiar and beloved figure at the concertmaster's desk of the Boston Symphony for the past 42 years, besides being assistant conductor since 1935 and associate conductor since 1943, has always made interesting programs. It was characteristic of him to bring us Mahler's gigantic Third Symphony, instead of reaping cheaper rewards with sure-fire favorites.

This work is a marvelous paradox—an enormous musical fresco which nonetheless contains pages of the most tender and introspective intimacy. It is as if a Tiepolo ceiling had been painted by Rembrandt.

Mr. Burgin's interpretation was exemplary as far as clarity and integration were concerned. The Tempo di Menuetto movement and the following one were exquisitely played. But this profoundly intelligent conception did have one major drawback. It failed to communicate the spectacular, the theatrical character of much of the music.

The proclamatory first movement should be circus at times, in grandiose fashion; and the final pages should reach an intensity that leaves one fully spent. Here the instinctive showmanship of a Mitropoulos or a Bernstein is preferable to dignity and reserve (and I do not mean to imply that their interpretations were not also musically profound).

But even with these reservations, this was an excellent and most welcome performance. It will help to establish Mahler on this side of the ocean in his rightful place as one of the most fascinating and influential composers of modern times.

—Robert Sabin

165 Church St. — New York
MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 1962

Boston Symphony

The big sprawling Third Symphony by Mahler made up the entire program of the Boston Symphony, Saturday afternoon Jan. 27 at Carnegie Hall, with Richard Burgin on the podium. The first movement, which was the only part played before intermission, is a whole symphony in itself—or perhaps one could describe it more accurately as a tone poem. It ranges through the full gamut of emotions, tempi, dynamics. The other five movements are shorter, and each one quite individual. The second movement, Tempo di Menuetto, is charming and light in texture. The third movement, comodo; scherzando, is a little longer and more varied. The fourth movement, Sehr langsam, misterioso, features contralto solo (Florence Kopleff was excellent); it is a rather brief movement, somewhat like a recitative. The fifth movement, Lustig in Tempo, boasted both women's chorus and contralto solo. The Chorus Pro Musica joined Miss Kopleff and the Orchestra in this lively, joyful movement. And finally, Langsam, ruhevoll, empfunden, an expressive, lyrical farewell. Frankly, we think this symphony tries to say too much: it is too long and has too many ideas for just one work. Moreover, there doesn't seem to be anything holding the various movements together. Mr. Burgin held the different forces together competently. He is an authoritative and musicianly conductor.

Charles Munch was guest of honor at a banquet, Jan. 21, in New York City given by "The Bohemian"—the New York musicians' club which endows the Musicians Foundation Fund. Four former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductors —Nikisch, Munch, Monteux and Koussevitzky, have been among those honored by the 55-year-old organization. Other honored guests have also included Mahler, Toscanini, Kreisler, Paderewski, Hofmann, Busoni, Sembrich, Casals, Heifetz, Rachmaninoff, Prokofieff, Caruso, Walter, Spalding, Mitropoulos, Villa-Lobos, Hess, Rubinstein, Bernstein and Ormandy.

118

New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN JAN 21 1962

MUSIC WORLD: SERIES IS SAVED

1 Boston Symphony

By ROSS PARMENTER

LAST summer Max Pollikoff threw up his hands in despair. For six seasons the violinist had been knocking himself out arranging the concerts of "Music in Our Time" and, as far as he was concerned, the effort no longer seemed worth it. The final straw was the expiration of the concert series' chief source of financial support, a three-year grant of $5,000 a year from the Martha Baird Rockefeller Aid to Music Program.

Mr. Pollikoff was at the Composers Conference in Bennington, Vt., when he decided to quit. His decision distressed the composers there who had either benefited by his series or believed in its worth. They decided to do what they could to salvage them. They enlisted the help of other composers, too, and twenty-four of them wrote to newspapers saying the series must not be allowed to die.

Their efforts produced results. People and institutions began to send in gifts, hoping such donations would help insure further series. Richard Rodgers, for instance, was one who sent in some money. Leonard Bernstein was another who made an unsolicited gift. Morton Gould got the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to chip in $500.

Changed His Mind

By this time, Mr. Pollikoff was beginning to reconsider. The money, of course, was a help, but even more important to him was that so many composers had shown so decisively that they wanted the series to go on. Mr. Pollikoff began to do some figuring. He has always been able to operate on a shoestring because there are many skilled instrumentalists who are willing to aid the cause of contemporary music by performing for small fees. And Mr. Pollikoff calculated that seven programs could be presented if $7,500 could be scraped up.

Gifts continued to come in. Some were for $50, some were for more, some for less. It was enheartening, but still it was not enough. Finally a well-to-do young couple desiring to be anonymous came through with an unexpected gift of $4,000.

Mr. Pollikoff says the emergency almost killed him and he swears he can never go through such a crisis again, but, with the money safely in hand, and so many people having faith in the worth of the series, he felt he had no alternative but to take on the burden again. He began selecting the works and performers.

With less advance time for planning than usual, he thought that the series would be upon him before he could announce its details. However, he made his schedule in time—but only just. The first concert is on Wednesday, and it was only last week that Mr. Pollikoff could produce his programs in their final form.

Those programs show the extent to which composers are aiding the violinist with the series. Thirty-three of them, besides providing fresh pieces, will come to speak at the concerts at which their works will be played. Many of them will be young men whose reputations have not yet been made. For one factor influencing Mr. Pollikoff against dropping the series was his awareness of the number of talents he feels deserve hearings.

Pollikoff Concerts Are Rescued by Efforts Of Composers

These are the lesser-known composers who will be heard in the series for the first time: Alden Ashforth, Edward Bogagni, Keith Robinson, Frank Campo, David Davis, Michael Colgrass, M. William Karlins, James Tenney, Elliot Kaplan, Harvey Sollberger, Robert Stewart, Barney Childs, Mike Stoller, Charles Whittenberg and Salvatore Martirano.

As usual, the concerts will be at the Lexington Avenue Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association. They will be on Wednesday evenings and all seats will be $1.50 each. Nearly every work performed will be new to New York.

LOCAL PRIDE: One of the most intensive talent hunts for American conductors recently came to an end in Baltimore. After the twelve leading contenders had led the Baltimore Symphony in four sessions, the judges decided on the five it felt were most worthy of the three months' training that is being offered at the Peabody Conservatory with Ford Foundation financing.

Shortly after the five winners were announced, a spokesman from the Mannes College telephoned to report proudly that three of the winners had studied at the college under Carl Bamberger. The next day there was an equally proud call from the Juilliard. It claimed three of the winners as students of Jean Morel. As it turned out, two men were in both claims: Stefan Bauer-Mengelberg and Frahz Bibo. The Mannes alumnus not claimed by Juilliard was George Cleve; the Juilliard alumnus not claimed by Mannes was Elyakum Shapira.

The New York Philharmonic was too modest to claim its share of the winners, but it could rightfully have come forward and said that two of the winners were its former assistants: Mr. Bauer-Mengelberg and Mr. Shapira. The man escaping all three nets of pride was 32-year-old Robert La-Marchina, a former 'cellist who has conducted the Santa Fe Opera.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Arthur Berger's Quartet (1957-58), which was the only American chamber work chosen for last year's festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music, will have its New York première at Friday's I.S.C.M. concert at the New School. . . . Richard Bonynge, coach, accompanist and husband of Joan Sutherland, is embarking on a conducting career. On Thursday he will lead an orchestra in Italy for the first time. It will be a concert with the Orchestra of Santa Cecilia in Rome, with Miss Sutherland as the soloist. . . . When Charles Munch leads Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6 at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday it will be his fortieth performance of the work with the Boston Symphony.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

THU JAN 25 1962

Erica Morini, Violinist, at Carnegie Hall

A WOMAN violinist, a living composer and a composer born a hundred years ago had heartening successes last night at Carnegie Hall when the Boston Symphony opened its third New York visit of the season.

Erica Morini was the violinist, and, although she has long been one of the great figures in the violin world, this was her first engagement in New York with the Boston. One of the heartening elements here was that at last the famous orchestra presented her in this city.

Her concerto was the Beethoven, and another heartening element was that she played it with such mastery. It was a performance in which the nobility and intensity of her interpretation was matched by execution of such splendor that the listener hung on each note.

Her vigorous and yet beautifully controlled playing of the cadenzas was especially brilliant. Yet even though these unaccompanied sections stood out, they did not overshadow the commanding and musicianly playing of the passages with orchestra. And since Charles Munch led a pulsing and warm accompaniment, the whole performance was on a high level.

Walter Piston was the living composer, and what was particularly heartening in his case was that the audience so obviously liked his Sixth Symphony. Mr. Munch brought the composer to the stage the moment it was finished, and thereafter the applause, joined by the members of the orchestra, was so prolonged that the composer had to return for three further bows.

The symphony was written for the Boston Symphony in 1955 and this was Mr. Munch's fortieth performance of the work. It wears very well, with its witty second movement contrasting nicely with the broad first movement, and the rousing finale making an equally happily conceived contrast with the long, rather melancholy tihrd movement. Perhaps it is on its way to being a classic. Last night it was received as one.

•

The composer of the past who had the nice success was Debussy. And it came about because the piece of his that was received so well is a youthful essay that at first seemed a failure and that is very seldom performed. It was his symphonic suite, "Printemps," which he wrote in 1887. Especially in the first movement, it prefigures the genius of the later works and it was both interesting and a pleasure to hear it in place of those works of his that have been done over and over. Since there were only three selections on the program, Mr. Munch and his orchestra scored an all-round success.

ROSS PARMENTER.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836

THU JAN 25 1962

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Morini Wins Plaudits

By MILES KASTENDIECK

ALTHOUGH ERICA MORINI'S playing Beethoven's Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony practically eclipsed whatever had gone before, Charles Munch had introduced a provocative element earlier into the program presented in Carnegie Hall last night.

It consisted of an early Debussy work and Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony. Hearing them inclined this listener toward intolerance of the former and continued respect for the latter.

Debussy's "Printemps" has faded noticeably. While it may be interesting historically for containing the germs of his later development, its obvious and sentimental material palls. That it is infrequently played is hardly surprising.

Transient Work

The Piston leaves no salient impression. His Gossamer Scherzo with its ingenious ending wins audible expressions of delight from an audience. His energetic finale (reminiscent of Ives at the start) pursues a thoroughly professional course. Only from the point where the brasses take hold does the adagio acquire well-defined personality.

Respect for the craftsmanship of the opening movement opens speculation as to the significance of the "Espressivo" marking. Piston is true to his solid and frequently beautiful workmanship, but the impact of the work is transient. Nonetheless, the audience recalled the composer for several bows.

Classic was the word for Miss Morini's performance and interpretation. In spirit, in purity of tone, and in style she had both the requisite control and the necessary expressivity. While not flawless in intonation, her playing had the essence of perfection with a communicative warmth rarely experienced. Her performance became beauty personified in lovely sound.

Munch revealed almost too much mellowness for some of the Debussy and Piston. His incisive treatment of Beethoven resulted in more impressive stylistic delineation. The orchestra sounded good but not so distinguished as expected.

On Third

"A Majority of One," starring Rosalind Russell and Alec Guinness in the Mervyn LeRoy motion picture production for Warner Bros., is in its third week at Radio City Music Hall.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
THU JAN 25 1962

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist: Erica Morini, violinist. The program:

Printemps ..... Debussy
Symphony No. 6 ..... Piston
Concerto in D, Op. 61 ..... Beethoven

By Ronald Eyer

It is not often that a Carnegie Hall audience reacts audibly to a piece of contemporary music. But last night's Boston Symphony audience did to the second movement, a Scherzo, of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony.

The last staccato notes of this bright bit of whimsy was followed by a gentle sigh of pleasure from all over the house and some small exclamations like "Charming!" "Delightful!" "Very good!" This conveyed the most significant thing we know about the Harvard professor-composer and that is that he knows how to write music that people like to listen to. This symphony, written on commission from the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Foundation a few years ago, may not be a great work, nor even a very important one ultimately, but it does what so much contemporary music does not do—it communicates easily and quickly with the listener.

Mr. Piston goes about the business of his four movements (characterized simply as expressive, fast, serene and energetic) with unexcelled craftsmanship, a true feeling for past as well as present concepts of harmonic and melodic movement in a free-flowing, inventive style that presents a lot of easily assimilable ideas in attractive and colorful language. This kind of music in the long run may prove more viable than the more venturesome, but still highly academic, work of the avant-garde.

The evening held even more easy listening. The two-movement symphonic suite, "Printemps," dating from Debussy's youthful Prix de Rome days, proved a microcosm of almost everything that was to come in the world of impressionism of which he was to be virtually the sole master. The first movement, which opens with a flute solo strikingly similar to the one that begins "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," is the most unconventional and prophetic of the two. In the second, he makes shameless obeisances to the Rome judges, including Masseanet, and some of it sounds like a parody of the latter.

Throughout, however, there are anticipations of the composer of "La Mer," "Images," and "Pelleas." There are the modal feeling of the harmony, experiments with the whole-tone scale, lush division of the strings and characteristic arabesques in the winds. Altogether a splendid period piece that doesn't get played nearly as much as it should.

Erica Morini, soloist in the Beethoven concerto, remains one of our most distinguished violinists, and not only among women. The famous old piece was putty in her hands, but it was not just another tired performance. She brought freshness and glow to it and set one to marveling once more at that marvelously aristocratic tone which is flawless in intonation and never marred by flaws of miscalculation. The orchestra has much to say in this concerto and Mr. Munch and his Bostonians said it beautifully.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317 264 S 257,590
THU JAN 25 1962

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Morini Plays Beethoven at Carnegie

A concert to a musician can be a lesson as well as a pleasure and last night's Carnegie Hall program by the Boston Symphony, viewed in perspective, provided food for thought as well as aural ambrosia.

In time and nationality, the music, respectively, spanned 150 years and three countries, France, the United States, and Germany. Debussy's "Printemps," "Suite Symphonique," was composed in 1887, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, in 1955, and Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Major, in 1806. "Printemps," in its original form, was scored for chorus, but the voices were eliminated from the definitive version published in 1913.

With Charles Munch on the podium, Erica Morini, the eminent soloist, played the Concerto with impeccable style and admirable restraint. The damp night was not sympathetic to strings and Miss Morini had some minor trouble with intonation. Her judicious use of vibrato, however, her notable lack of manenerisms, her mastery and her eloquence made her interpretation a lofty re-creation.

Original Review Unfavorable

The orchestra's beginning attack was not precise, and there were other technical lapses from grace. But in conveying the work's ideas and emotions, Munch was in gracious rapport with his soloist.

The Concerto's serene beauty unfolds effortlessly from the simplest ideas—the kind of invention that genius alone can create.

With chagrin, one reads in a foreward to the orchestral score, nonetheless, that after its premiere, the Vienna Theater newspaper reported ". . . it contains beautiful passages but the context often seems broken and the endless repetition of unimportant passages produces a tiring effect."

Judgment of Debussy

For many years after its premiere the concerto was, except for intermittent performances, relegated to the shelf. Not until 1844, when the celebrated violinist, Joachim, a boy of 13, performed it with Mendelsson conducting, did it begin to be truly appreciated. Miss Morini played the Joachim cadenzas which he published in 1853.

The Debussy "Printemps," whose misty first movement is a sensuous harbinger of the languorous "Afternoon of a Faun" that came seven years later, exhibits the unmistakable originality of genius. But the official report of the Secretary of the Academic des Beaux-Arts said this about it: ". . . He is apt to forget the importance of accuracy of line and form. He should beware of this vague impression which is one of the most dangerous enemies of artistic truth The academy awaits and expects something better from such as gifted a musician as Debussy."

As my deadline nears, I am pleased to report that I liked Piston's Symphony very much. I just hope I felt the same way at it's premiere here six years ago.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 4 1962

REPRISE

OPERA: The new production of "Un Ballo in Maschera" ranked with "the Metropolitan's best of recent years." Successful debuts were made by Anita Valkki as Bruennhilde and Margherita Roberti as Tosca.

ORCHESTRAS: Thomas Schippers led "trim, lithe, superbly organized performances" with the New York Philharmonic. Richard Burgin's conducting of Mahler's Third Symphony with the Boston Symphony was a "superb accomplishment."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU JAN 25 1962

Music

Erica Morini Soloist At Carnegie Concerto

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

The season's violin-playing, already at a high peak, reached a new summit with the performance of the Beethoven Concerto by Erica Morini in Carnegie Hall last night.

Appearing as soloist of Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the long-reigning queen of the bow gave what to me was the greatest performance of her career.

A great many others must have agreed, for when the performance ended, the applause and cheering were an emphatic token of gratitude and excitement. This was a memorable and moving experience.

Marvel of Beauty.

What made it so was a combination of many factors, technical and tonal, all of them fused into a single marvel of beauty by the warm and lavish personality of Miss Morini.

It was an intensely poetic Beethoven, for one thing, spun out with a mellowness of phrase and depth of expression that evoked an atmosphere of almost religious awe.

But for a few minor lapses, the tone was fresh and silken, responsive to every shift of mood, and in the tender musings of the Larghetto of an unearthly repose.

One scarcely thought of technic as such last night, so deeply embedded was it in larger plan of feeling and poetry. It was Miss Morini's springboard for a flight into space. Once there, all was luminous ease.

Supernatural Violin.

Many moments of last night's performance will remain fixed like jewels in the memory. For me the moment of moments came after the staggering Joachim cadenza. The hushed return of the violin was supernatural.

There were other matters on last night's program—brilliant readings of Debussy's early, sentimental, but prophetic "Printemps" suite and of Walter Piston's sonorous Sixth Symphony.

The second and fourth movements of this symphony are among Mr. Piston's most cogent utterances. But for me last night was the night that Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony accompanied Erica Morini in the Beethoven concerto.

A 135-year-old classic became the fresh and ageless miracle it is in the inspiring hands of a great artist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 24—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. DEBUSSY: Printemps. PISTON: Symphony No. 6. BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto (Erica Morini, violin).

Although it was gratifying to have Erica Morini as soloist with the Boston Symphony for the first time after all these years, it was the Piston Symphony rather than the Beethoven Concerto that distinguished this evening. The Symphony, commissioned by this orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, has been performed 40 times by Mr. Munch and his Bostonians. They gave a bright, authoritative performance, and Mr. Piston was called to the stage four times.

In the Beethoven, Miss Morini was in top form. It was an intense performance, full of marvelous detail and stunning virtuosity, with the orchestra supplying an equally graphic accompaniment.

The prophetic little two-movement suite of Debussy was an attractive opener.

—Wriston Locklair

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
THU JAN 25 1962

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist: Erica Morini, violinist. The program:

"Printemps," Suite symphonique.....Debussy
Symphony No. 6.....Piston
Violin Concerto in D, Op. 61....Beethoven

By Ronald Eyer

It is not often that a Carnegie Hall audience reacts audibly to a piece of contemporary music. But last night's Boston Symphony audience did to the second movement, a Scherzo, of Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony.

The last staccato notes of this bright bit of whimsy was followed by a gentle sigh of pleasure from all over the house and some small exclamations like "Charming!" "Delightful!" "Very good!". This conveyed the most significant thing we know about the Harvard professor-composer and that is that he knows how to write music that people like to listen to. This symphony, written on commission from the Boston Symphony and the Koussevitzky Foundation a few years ago, may not be a great work, nor even a very important one ultimately, but it does what so much contemporary music does not do—it communicates easily and quickly with the listener.

Mr. Piston goes about the business of his four movements (characterized simply as expressive, fast, serene and energetic) with unexcelled craftsmanship, a true feeling for past as well as present concepts of harmonic and melodic movement in a free-flowing, inventive style that presents a lot of easily assimilable ideas in attractive and colorful language. This kind of music in the long run may prove more viable than the more venturesome, but still highly academic, work of the avant-garde.

The evening held even more easy listening. The two-movement symphonic suite, "Printemps," dating from Debussy's youthful Prix de Rome days, proved a microcosm of almost everything that was to come in the world of impressionism of which he was to be virtually the sole master. The first movement, which opens with a flute solo strikingly similar to the one that begins "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," is the most unconventional and prophetic of the two. In the second, he makes shameless obeisances to the Rome judges, including Massenet, and some of it sounds like a parody of the latter.

Throughout, however, there are anticipations of the composer of "La Mer," "Images," and "Pelleas." There are the modal feeling of the harmony, experiments with the whole-tone scale, lush division of the strings and characteristic arabesques in the winds. Altogether a splendid period piece that doesn't get played nearly as much as it should.

Erica Morini, soloist in the Beethoven concerto, remains one of our most distinguished violinists, and not only among women. The famous old piece was putty in her hands, but it was not just another tired performance. She brought freshness and glow to it and set one to marveling once more at that marvelously aristocratic tone which is flawless in intonation and never marred by flaws of miscalculation. The orchestra has much to say in this concerto and Mr. Munch and his Bostonians said it beautifully.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
THU JAN 25 1962

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Morini Plays Beethoven at Carnegie

A concert to a musician can be a lesson as well as a pleasure and last night's Carnegie Hall program by the Boston Symphony, viewed in perspective, provided food for thought as well as aural ambrosia.

In time and nationality, the music, respectively, spanned 150 years and three countries, France, the United States, and Germany. Debussy's "Printemps," "Suite Symphonique," was composed in 1887, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 6, in 1955, and Beethoven's Concerto for Violin in D Major, in 1806. "Printemps," in its original form, was scored for chorus, but the voices were eliminated from the definitive version published in 1913.

With Charles Munch on the podium, Erica Morini, the eminent soloist, played the Concerto with impeccable style and admirable restraint. The damp night was not sympathetic to strings and Miss Morini had some minor trouble with intonation. Her judicious use of vibrato, however, her notable lack of mannerisms, her mastery and her eloquence made her interpretation a lofty re-creation.

Original Review Unfavorable

The orchestra's beginning attack was not precise, and there were other technical lapses from grace. But in conveying the work's ideas and emotions, Munch was in gracious rapport with his soloist.

The Concerto's serene beauty unfolds effortlessly from the simplest ideas—the kind of invention that genius alone can create.

With chagrin, one reads in a foreward to the orchestral score, nonetheless, that after its premiere, the Vienna Theater newspaper reported ". . . it contains beautiful passages but the context often seems broken and the endless repetition of unimportant passages produces a tiring effect."

Judgment of Debussy

For many years after its premiere the concerto was, except for intermittent performances, relegated to the shelf. Not until 1844, when the celebrated violinist, Joachim, a boy of 13, performed it with Mendelsson conducting, did it begin to be truly appreciated. Miss Morini played the Joachim cadenzas which he published in 1853.

The Debussy "Printemps," whose misty first movement is a sensuous harbinger of the languorous "Afternoon of a Faun" that came seven years later, exhibits the unmistakable official report of the Secretary of the Academie des Beaux-Arts said this about it: ". . . He is apt to forget the importance of accuracy of line and form. He should beware of this vague impression which is one of the most dangerous enemies of artistic truth. The academy awaits and expects something better from such as gifted a musician as Debussy."

As my deadline nears, I am pleased to report that I liked Piston's Symphony very much. I just hope I felt the same way at it's premiere here six years ago.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN FEB 4 1962

REPRISE

OPERA: The new production of "Un Ballo in Maschera" ranked with "the Metropolitan's best of recent years." Successful debuts were made by Anita Valkki as Bruennhilde and Margherita Roberti as Tosca.

ORCHESTRAS: Thomas Schippers led "trim, lithe, superbly organized performances" with the New York Philharmonic. Richard Burgin's conducting of Mahler's Third Symphony with the Boston Symphony was a "superb accomplishment."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU JAN 25 1962

Music

Erica Morini Soloist At Carnegie Concerto

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

The season's violin-playing, already at a high peak, reached a new summit with the performance of the Beethoven Concerto by Erica Morini in Carnegie Hall last night.

Appearing as soloist of Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the long-reigning queen of the bow gave what to me was the greatest performance of her career.

A great many others must have agreed, for when the performance ended, the applause and cheering were an emphatic token of gratitude and excitement. This was a memorable and moving experience.

Marvel of Beauty.

What made it so was a combination of many factors, technical and tonal, all of them fused into a single marvel of beauty by the warm and lavish personality of Miss Morini.

It was an intensely poetic Beethoven, for one thing, spun out with a mellowness of phrase and depth of expression that evoked an atmosphere of almost religious awe.

But for a few minor lapses, the tone was fresh and silken, responsive to every shift of mood, and in the tender musings of the Larghetto of an unearthly repose.

One scarcely thought of technic as such last night, so deeply embedded was it in larger plan of feeling and poetry. It was Miss Morini's springboard for a flight into space. Once there, all was luminous ease.

Supernatural Violin.

Many moments of last night's performance will remain fixed like jewels in the memory. For me the moment of moments came after the staggering Joachim cadenza. The hushed return of the violin was supernatural.

There were other matters on last night's program—brilliant readings of Debussy's early, sentimental, but prophetic "Printemps" suite and of Walter Piston's sonorous Sixth Symphony.

The second and fourth movements of this symphony are among Mr. Piston's most cogent utterances. But for me last night was the night that Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony accompanied Erica Morini in the Beethoven concerto.

A 135-year-old classic became the fresh and ageless miracle it is in the inspiring hands of a great artist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

Carnegie Hall, Jan. 24—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, conductor. DEBUSSY: Printemps. PISTON: Symphony No. 6. BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto (Erica Morini, violin).

Although it was gratifying to have Erica Morini as soloist with the Boston Symphony for the first time after all these years, it was the Piston Symphony rather than the Beethoven Concerto that distinguished this evening. The Symphony, commissioned by this orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, has been performed 40 times by Mr. Munch and his Bostonians. They gave a bright, authoritative performance, and Mr. Piston was called to the stage four times.

In the Beethoven, Miss Morini was in top form. It was an intense performance, full of marvelous detail and stunning virtuosity, with the orchestra supplying an equally graphic accompaniment.

The prophetic little two-movement suite of Debussy was an attractive opener.

—Wriston Locklair

Bohemian Club Dinner- Dr. Munch

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

JAN 2 0 1962

MUSIC

Dr. Munch to Be N. Y. Dinner Guest

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be the guest of honor tomorrow night at a banquet in New York City given by "The Bohemians"—the New York musicians' club which endows The Musicians Foundation. Dr. Munch has made exception to his preference against personal honors and agreed to tomorrow night's dinner because of the money which will be raised from admissions to the banquet and given to indigent musicians. It is expected that Dr. Munch will address the audience and an entertainment by well-known musicians is planned in his honor.

Four former Boston Symphony orchestra conductors — Nikisch, Muck, Monteux, and Koussevitzky — have been among those honored by the 55-year - old organization. Other honored guests have been Mahler, Toscanini, Kreisler, Paderewski, Hofmann, Busoni, Sembrich, Casals, Heifitz, Rachmaninoff, Prokofieff, Caruso, Walter, Spalding, Mitropoulos, Villa-Lobos, Hess, Rubinstein, Bernstein and Ormandy.

Dr. Charles Munch

One concert remains in the current series being conducted by the Groton Music association, but already, the community has experienced some of the finest programs heard anywhere along the New England musical scene. The general committee is deserving of praise for their untiring efforts in behalf of fine music and the quality of events that have graced the stage at Groton school. It is hoped that next year the organization will find the series attracting more and more concert goers from far away cities and towns. The one remaining program this year will be announced shortly and from indications the quality and standard already achieved is definitely assured.

AN UNUSUAL AND exciting program is in prospect when the Moses Greeley Parker lecture series presents the colorful and talented Duquesne university Tamburitzans on Sunday afternoon, January 28, at 3:00 o'clock. This group that combines a chorus, instrumental ensemble and dance ensembles has gained a bright spot in the field of folklore entertainment. This event should be a seasonal highlight and again Hugh Downey, manager of the Parker series, has proven his ability at selecting the finest in entertainment for the Lowell area. The long tradition of the Moses Greeley Parker lecture series is being splendidly upheld.

Fifty members of the Lexington Choral society have been selected to sing in the Boston Opera group's production of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" which will be presented March 13 and 16, Under the direction of Allan C. Lannom, assistant professor at Boston university school of fine and applied arts, choral music department, the Lexington Choral society's membership is composed of people from every walk of life who give one evening each week for rehearsal and contributes much to the cultural life of their community.

Special rehearsals are now under way and the Choral society members plans to join the Opera group's cast two weeks prior to the opera's presentation.

Other operas during the Boston Opera group's winter season include "Manon," Feb. 28 and March 2; and "Rigoletto" March 28 and 30.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

JAN 2 0 1962

'The Bohemians' Honor Dr. Munch

Charles Munch will be guest of honor at a banquet tomorrow night in New York City given for him by "The Bohemians"—the New York musician's club which endows The Musicians Foundation Fund.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor made exception to his preference against personal honors and agreed to the dinner because of the money raised for indigent musicians.

Four former Boston Symphony conductors — Nikisch, Muck, Monteux and Koussevitsky—have been among those honored by the 55-year-old organization. Others have been Mamler, Toscanini, Kreisler, Paderewski, Caslas, Caruso, Villa-Lobos, Bernstein and Ormandy.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JAN 22 1962

Munch Honored

Charles Munch was guest of honor at a banquet last night in New York City, given for him by "The Bohemians," the New York musicians' club which endows the Musicians Foundation Fund. Dr. Munch made exception to his preference against personal honors and agreed to the dinner because of the money raised from admissions to the banquet and given to indigent musicians.

Four former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductors — Nikisch, Muck, Monteux, and Koussevitzky — have been among those honored by the 55-year-old organization. Other honored guests have been Mahler, Toscanini, Kreisler, Paderewski, Hofmann, Busoni, Sembrich, Casals, Heifetz, Rachmaninoff, Prokofiev, Caruso, Walter, Spalding, Mitropoulos, Villa-Lobos, Hess, Rubinstein, Bernstein, and Ormandy.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,910
JAN 2 0 1962

Musicians Club To Honor Munch

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Bohemians, a New York musicians' club, will honor Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a banquet Sunday night.

Funds raised from admissions to the dinner here will be used to assist indigent musicians.

The 55-year-old club previously had honored Boston Symphony conductors Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JAN 27 1962

Dr. Munch Honored At New York Dinner; Local Persons Attend

Dr. Charles Munch, who will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer, was honored at the annual Bohemians' dinner this week at the Hotel Aster, New York.

Among those who attended the event were Mr. and Mrs. Jay C. Rosenfeld of 173 South Mountain Road and Mrs. Willem Willeke of South Mountain and Mr. and Mrs. Mac Morgan of Stockbridge. Also at their table were Mr. and Mrs. William Kroll of New York.

Others present included Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony manager, and Mrs. Perry; Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the BSO conductor; Richard Burgin, who will retire this year as BSO concertmaster, and Mrs. Burgin; and Erich Leinsdorf, who will take over as BSO conductor next fall at Symphony Hall, Boston.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

JAN 21 1962

Honor to Munch

Charles Munch will be guest of honor at a banquet tonight in New York city given for him by "The Bohemians" — New York musicians' club which endows The Musicians Foundation Fund. Dr. Munch has made exception to his preference against personal honors, and has agreed to tonight's dinner because of the money which will be raised from admissions to the banquet and given to indigent musicians. It is expected that Doctor Munch will address the audience and an entertainment by well-known musicians is planned in his honor.

Four former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductors—Nikisch, Muck, Monteux and Koussevitzky — have been among those honored by the 50-year-old organization.

121

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

JAN 22 1962

N.Y. Bohemian Dinner Honors Conductor Munch

By CYRUS DURGIN

NEW YORK, Jan. 21—Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was honored tonight with a dinner given in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor by the Musicians' Club The New York Bohemians. Approximately 500 guests attended, including a large number of the world's leading musicians.

The occasion was remarkable in that Dr. Munch made one of the few public speeches he has been willing to venture in his 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony. It is well known among his friends and colleagues that the French conductor shuns a personal limelight and, feeling insecure in the English language, is reluctant to speak in public.

He does it better than he realizes, however. Tonight he was simple, brief and direct:

"It is difficult to express my feelings, and to tell you how deeply I am moved, and to express my gratitude. If during my 13 years I have had a chance to render service to American music and musicians, then that will have been the greatest award of my life."

"I shall never forget the kindness and the friendship, and humanity I found in Boston and the United States. I am happy that I can come back as guest conductor next year, and can continue to give America music. Vive America! Vive Boston!"

This dinner was one of various salutes to Dr. Munch which will be tendered to him during the remainder of this season, after which he will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony.

Head Table Guests

Among the head table guests were a associate conductor Richard Burgin (will retire as concert master of the orchestra) and Mrs. Burgin; Talcott M. Banks, vice president of the Symphony's Board of Trustees; Thomas Z. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and Mrs. Perry, and Leonard Burkat, musical administrator, and Mrs. Burkat.

Edwin Hughes, president of The Bohemians, as master of ceremonies, explained that the club, which dates from 1907, established in 1914 a Musicians Foundation, Inc., a charitable organization. Since then the foundation has given financial help to professional musicians of both sexes who are in need. Among these have been the aged daughters of Robert Schumann, the composer, in the last years of their lives.

Today, between 60 and 70 musicians receive money from the foundation each month. The Bohemians' dinners are given to raise funds for the foundation, and it is this fact, primarily, that pursuaded Dr. Munch to accept the honor.

Several of his friends and colleagues, unable to attend due to professional engagements telegraphed regrets—Pierre Monteux, who is conducting in San Francisco last night; Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Composer Walter Piston and Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, also sent messages.

Likewise unable to be present, since he is bedded with a virus infection and high fever, was Alec Templeton, the blind pianist, who ought to have taken a considerable share in the program of music that followed dinner.

After Thomas Z. Perry had spoken briefly, Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano Mildred Miller, with John Wustman at the piano, sang music of Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Debussy and Faure.

The section announced in the program as "Music by Friends of Dr. Munch" proved to be the Beethoven C minor Sonata, performed by violinists Isaac Stern and pianist Eugene Istomin. It was a superb performance although, as Stern explained, this was "unrehearsed anl unplanned." They began with a bit of a gag, and both were discovered on stage as the curtain partted, each wearing wig and whiskers of what looked like cotton batting. Dr. Munch was asked if he could recognize his friends and he said yes he did immediately. Only the joke was that Istomin held Stern's fiddle.

To end Messrs. Stern and Istomin gave an encore which proved the perfect conclusion —"Auld Lang Syne!"

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

JAN 20 1962

New York Musicians Will Honor Munch

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Bohemians, a New York musicians' club, will honor Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a banquet tomorrow night.

Funds raised from admissions to the dinner here will be used to assist indigent musicians.

The 55-year-old club previously had honored Boston Symphony conductors Serge Koussevitsky and Pierre Monteux.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211

JAN 21 1962

To Honor Dr. Munch

Charles Munch will be guest of honor at a banquet tonight in New York City given for him by "The Bohemians," the New York musicians' club which endows the Musicians Foundation Fund. Dr. Munch has made exception to his preference against personal honors and agreed to tonight's dinner because of the money which will be raised from admissions to the banquet and given to indigent musicians. It is expected that Dr. Munch will address the audience and an entertainment by well-known musicians is planned in his honor.

122

Fourteenth Week

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 3, at 8:30 o'clock

In Memory of
FRITZ KREISLER
February 2, 1875 – January 29, 1962

the slow movement (Lento assai e cantante tranquillo) from Beethoven's last Quartet, op. 135, will be played by the string orchestra.

DEBUSSY ..... Three Nocturnes
Nuages
Fêtes
Sirènes

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Director

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 5
I. Grave
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro marcato

INTERMISSION

SAINT-SAËNS ..... Concerto No. 2, in G minor, for Pianoforte, Op. 22
I. Andante sostenuto
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Presto

RAVEL ..... *La Valse, Choreographic Poem

SOLOIST
JEANNE MARIE DARRÉ
Mme. DARRÉ plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 3 1962

Jeanne Marie Darré's U.S. Debut

By Harold Rogers

The entire program, in a sense, is Charles Munch's tribute to old friends—friends we have all known and loved, even if not personally. He is opening the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend with the slow movement of Beethoven's last quartet, played by the string orchestra in memory of Fritz Kreisler. Then his program ranges from the poesies of Debussy to the corruscations of Saint-Saëns, from the prophetic warnings of Honegger to the embittered social commentary of Ravel.

* * *

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall Dr. Munch infused their scores with a sense of vitality surpassing the usual. He called upon Lorna Cooke de Varon and the girls of her New England Conservatory Chorus to provide the beguiling voices for Debussy's "Sirènes," heard along with "Nuages" and "Fêtes" of the Three Nocturnes. Though no way of scoring music existed in Ulysses' day, we can thank Debussy for his imaginings of what Ulysses heard.

In Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La Valse" we find two kinds of social commentary — Honegger with an ear to the future; Ravel with an ear to the past. In Honegger's symphony "di tre re" — the cryptic subtitle referring to the timpani's D that ends each of the three movements, rather than to three kings—we again marvel at the composer's ability to speak as openly as if he had written a broadside in words: a call to humanity to beware lest it happen again, and for the last time.

In "La Valse" Ravel was simply decrying what had already happened: the great Viennese era, beginning like a dream in a magnificent waltz, builds to a climax of nightmarish horror as all is lost. Ravel wept at the passing of an era; Honegger raged over the possible loss of mankind.

In the Honegger Dr. Munch again gave a trenchant, heartfelt reading that matched his performance of the world première in March, 1951. In the Ravel he seemed to exceed anything he had ever done with it; he was dynamic beyond all belief, visibly lashing the orchestra to take the hurdles at a fantastic pace.

* * *

But this was not all. Dr. Munch also arranged a respite of purest delight—Saint-Saëns' Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Jeanne Marie Darré of Paris made her American debut in a stunning performance that embodied masculine command, feminine delicacy, and French élan.

She can dazzle the ear by her power at one instant, challenging the whole orchestra itself by thunderous chords, struck off like hammers on an anvil. She can charm the ear the next by liquid rivulets of scales, arpeggios, trills. With enormous poise and an outgoing personality she enchanted her listeners and lifted them to cheering enthusiasm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
FEB 3 1962

Symphony Soloist Darre In Her American Debut

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 14th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Beethoven: Lento assai from String Quartet in F major, Op. 135 (played by the massed strings in memory of Fritz Kreisler); Debussy: Three Nocturnes (women from New England Conservatory Chorus assisting); Honegger: Symphony No. 5; Saint-Saens: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor (Jeanne Marie Darre, soloist, American debut); Ravel: "La Valse."

By CYRUS DURGIN

French pianist Jeanne Marie Darre proved two points as she made her American debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. One, that she is a fine musician and a glittering virtuoso; two, that the feminine professor at the Paris Conservatoire, where she teaches, must have taken on a New Look.

Trim in a chic, short-skirted blue-and-gold lame sheath dress, her very light blonde hair in a poodle cut, Mme. Darre suggested anything but the popular notion of a professor as she sat down to play Saint-Saens' G minor Concerto. Nor, from the first grandiose chord, did she sound like a professor.

Here is a first-rate temperament applied to art, one of imagination, vigor and musical sensitivity. A born pianist, she has tremendous technic characterized by a finger articulation X-ray clear, the ability to play exceedingly fast and with a wide dynamic range, use of the pedal so deft you are hardly aware it is being pressed. Further, the finest sense of rhythm one could conceive, and the gift of making her instrument manifest, even in the staccato effects which this Concerto exploits, the illusion of song.

One concerto does not proclaim the whole musician, and this by Saint-Saens is a gaudy and pretentious affair. Nonetheless the evidence all indicates that we have made the acquaintance of a first-rank artist of the keyboard. Mme. Darre received a full-scale ovation after her electrifying performance, and was called back to bow repeatedly. Her management will do well to arrange some solo concerts for her in this country.

Dr. Munch amplified his program to include, at the beginning, the slow movement from Beethoven's last Quartet, played by most of the string sections in memory of Fritz Kreisler, who died last Monday. No finer tribute to the memory of a great musician, than this elegiac song, could be found. For the record, let it be added that no one applauded, mirable dictu.

As the season advances, it becomes evident that Dr. Munch to a degree is reviewing the more notable works he has conducted during his Boston years. The French music this week continues that admirable idea, and yesterday's performance will reinforce the memories we shall cherish. Ravel's "La Valse", bringing an orgiastic conclusion, was a marvel of rhythmic drive and tonal splendor—and at the end, as usual with Munch, clear as no other conductor has made it to my ears. "La Valse" has been a Munch specialty; we are not likely to hear it again so wondrously set forth.

Debussy and Honegger and Saint-Saens were as vividly and nobly done, and as richly colored. The Three Nocturnes — melodic traceries in "Clouds", the processional approach and evanescence of "Festivals" and the impressionist montage of "Sirenes" —were unflawed beauty. The 41 women of the New England Conservatory chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon for "Sirenes", sang with mundane enthusiasm, but that apparently was the way the conductor wanted it.

There could have been no other place on the list for Honegger's astringent and mechanistic Fifth Symphony, than the one it occupied, just before intermission, but it was poorly placed for its own good. This is a dramatic work that puts dissonance and angular rhythm to the uses of modern musical logic, and of its kind, it is excellent if too long. But the Symphony really needs to be heard when one's attention is fresh.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Franck's "Le Chasseur Maudit," the B-flat Symphony by Chausson, and the "Emperor" Piano Concerto of Beethoven, with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

Fourteenth Week

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 3, at 8:30 o'clock

In Memory of
FRITZ KREISLER
February 2, 1875 – January 29, 1962
the slow movement (Lento assai e cantante tranquillo) from Beethoven's last Quartet, op. 135, will be played by the string orchestra.

DEBUSSY ..... Three Nocturnes
Nuages
Fêtes
Sirènes

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Director

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 5
I. Grave
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro marcato

INTERMISSION

SAINT-SAËNS ..... Concerto No. 2, in G minor, for Pianoforte, Op. 22
I. Andante sostenuto
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Presto

RAVEL ..... *La Valse, Choreographic Poem

SOLOIST
JEANNE MARIE DARRÉ
Mme. DARRÉ plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 3 1962

Jeanne Marie Darré's U.S. Debut

By Harold Rogers

The entire program, in a sense, is Charles Munch's tribute to old friends—friends we have all known and loved, even if not personally. He is opening the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend with the slow movement of Beethoven's last quartet, played by the string orchestra in memory of Fritz Kreisler. Then his program ranges from the poesies of Debussy to the corruscations of Saint-Saëns, from the prophetic warnings of Honegger to the embittered social commentary of Ravel.

* * *

Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall Dr. Munch infused their scores with a sense of vitality surpassing the usual. He called upon Lorna Cooke de Varon and the girls of her New England Conservatory Chorus to provide the beguiling voices for Debussy's "Sirènes," heard along with "Nuages" and "Fêtes" of the Three Nocturnes. Though no way of scoring music existed in Ulysses' day, we can thank Debussy for his imaginings of what Ulysses heard.

In Honegger's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "La Valse" we find two kinds of social commentary—Honegger with an ear to the future; Ravel with an ear to the past. In Honegger's symphony "di tre re"—the cryptic subtitle referring to the timpani's D that ends each of the three movements, rather than to three kings—we again marvel at the composer's ability to speak as openly as if he had written a broadside in words: a call to humanity to beware lest it happen again, and for the last time.

In "La Valse" Ravel was simply decrying what had already happened: the great Viennese era, beginning like a dream in a magnificent waltz, builds to a climax of nightmarish horror as all is lost. Ravel wept at the passing of an era; Honegger raged over the possible loss of mankind.

In the Honegger Dr. Munch again gave a trenchant, heartfelt reading that matched his performance of the world première in March, 1951. In the Ravel he seemed to exceed anything he had ever done with it; he was dynamic beyond all belief, visibly lashing the orchestra to take the hurdles at a fantastic pace.

* * *

But this was not all. Dr. Munch also arranged a respite of purest delight—Saint-Saëns' Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor. Jeanne Marie Darré of Paris made her American debut in a stunning performance that embodied masculine command, feminine delicacy, and French élan.

She can dazzle the ear by her power at one instant, challenging the whole orchestra itself by thunderous chords, struck off like hammers on an anvil. She can charm the ear the next by liquid rivulets of scales, arpeggios, trills. With enormous poise and an outgoing personality she enchanted her listeners and lifted them to cheering enthusiasm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
FEB. 3 1962

Symphony Soloist Darre In Her American Debut

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 14th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted this program: Beethoven: Lento assai from String Quartet in F major, Op. 135 (played by the massed strings in memory of Fritz Kreisler); Debussy: Three Nocturnes (women from New England Conservatory Chorus assisting); Honegger: Symphony No. 5; Saint-Saens: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor (Jeanne Marie Darre, soloist, American debut); Ravel: "La Valse."

By CYRUS DURGIN

French pianist Jeanne Marie Darre proved two points as she made her American debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. One, that she is a fine musician and a glittering virtuoso; two, that the feminine professor at the Paris Conservatoire, where she teaches, must have taken on a New Look.

Trim in a chic, short-skirted blue-and-gold lame sheath dress, her very light blonde hair in a poodle cut, Mme. Darre suggested anything but the popular notion of a professor as she sat down to play Saint-Saens' G minor Concerto. Nor, from the first grandiose chord, did she sound like a professor.

Here is a first-rate temperament applied to art, one of imagination, vigor and musical sensitivity. A born pianist, she has tremendous technic characterized by a finger articulation X-ray clear, the ability to play exceedingly fast and with a wide dynamic range, use of the pedal so deft you are hardly aware it is being pressed. Further, the finest sense of rhythm one could conceive, and the gift of making her instrument manifest, even in the staccato effects which this Concerto exploits, the illusion of song.

One concerto does not proclaim the whole musician, and this by Saint-Saens is a gaudy and pretentious affair. Nonetheless the evidence all indicates that we have made the acquaintance of a first-rank artist of the keyboard. Mme. Darre received a full-scale ovation after her electrifying performance, and was called back to bow repeatedly. Her management will do well to arrange some solo concerts for her in this country.

Dr. Munch amplified his program to include, at the beginning, the slow movement from Beethoven's last Quartet, played by most of the string sections in memory of Fritz Kreisler, who died last Monday. No finer tribute to the memory of a great musician, than this elegiac song, could be found. For the record, let it be added that no one applauded, mirable dictu.

As the season advances, it becomes evident that Dr. Munch to a degree is reviewing the more notable works he has conducted during his Boston years. The French music this week continues that admirable idea, and yesterday's performance will reinforce the memories we shall cherish. Ravel's "La Valse", bringing an orgiastic conclusion, was a marvel of rhythmic drive and tonal splendor—and at the end, as usual with Munch, clear as no other conductor has made it to my ears. "La Valse" has been a Munch specialty; we are not likely to hear it again so wondrously set forth.

Debussy and Honegger and Saint-Saens were as vividly and nobly done, and as richly colored. The Three Nocturnes — melodic traceries in "Clouds", the processional approach and evanescence of "Festivals" and the impressionist montage of "Sirenes" —were unflawed beauty. The 41 women of the New England Conservatory chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon for "Sirenes", sang with mundane enthusiasm, but that apparently was the way the conductor wanted it.

There could have been no other place on the list for Honegger's astringent and mechanistic Fifth Symphony, than the one it occupied, just before intermission, but it was poorly placed for its own good. This is a dramatic work that puts dissonance and angular rhythm to the uses of modern musical logic, and of its kind, it is excellent if too long. But the Symphony really needs to be heard when one's attention is fresh.

Next week Dr. Munch will present Franck's "Le Chasseur Maudit," the B-flat Symphony by Chausson, and the "Emperor" Piano Concerto of Beethoven, with Rudolf Serkin as soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
FEB 4 1962

French Program Planned

PIANO SOLOIST Jeanne-Marie Darre will be featured when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presents an all-French program on Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

Madame Darre, who recently made her North American debut with the orchestra in Boston, is known throughout Europe as a concert pianist and as a teacher at the Ecole Nationale.

Tuesday's program will be conducted by Dr. Charles Munch.

The program:

Debussy: Two Nocturnes ..... Nuages, Fetes
Honegger: Symphony No. 5
I. Grave
II. Allegretto
III. Alegro marcato
Saint-Saens: Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22
I. Andante sostenuto
II. Allegretto scherzando
III. Presto
Soloist: Jeanne-Marie Darre
Ravel: "La Valse," Choreographic Poem

AN EVENING of Jewish music, and an explanation of its characteristics will be presented in Alumnae Hall of the Pembroke College campus on Thursday at 8:15 p.m. The Rhode Island Chapter of the American Guild of Organists is sponsoring the program in honor of National Jewish Music Month.

Herbert Fromm, music director and organist at Temple Israel in Boston will discuss Jewish music and introduce the musical portion of the program, which will include works by Arthur Einstein, Isadore Freed and Lazare Saminsky.

Participating in the program will be Joseph Conte, violinist; George Tinker, tenor; Dr. Jacob Hohenemser and Prof. David Laurent, baritones; Frank Bartlett, organist, and members of the Brown Convocation Choir, directed by Prof. William Dineen.

THE LINCOLN SCHOOL Glee Club and the Yale University Freshman Glee Club will present a joint music program on Friday at 8 p.m. in the Lincoln School gymnasium on Butler Avenue, Providence.

The Yale group will sing compositions by Dello Joio, Schubert and Christiansen. Compositions by Hassler, Monteverdi, Hutchison, Fine and Revieki will be presented by the Lincoln School. The two groups will combine their talents to sing four Bartok Folk Songs.

JEANNE-MARIE DARRE, pianist, will be featured when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presents a concert at the Veterans Auditorium on Tuesday evening at 8:15.

The public is invited to the [illegible] presented by Mildred [illegible]

124

Fifteenth Week

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

FEB 10 1962

Munch Revives Chausson, Serkin Plays 'Emperor'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 15th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Franck: "Le Chasseur Maudit"; Chausson: Symphony in B-flat major; Beethoven: "Emperor" Piano Concerto. Rudolf Serkin soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The B-flat Symphony of Ernest Chausson, revived by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony yesterday after an interval of nearly nine years, proved the musical high point of the concert. To be sure, there were excitements and alarums (but no excursions) in "Le Chasseur Maudit" and Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, but in terms of performance, as well as of novelty, Chausson won my vote.

Great distinction attaches to this work, so personal despite the inescapable influences of Chausson's teacher, Cesar Franck. It is polished music and eloquent, warmly romantic without straining for effect, preserving freshness and appeal.

Quite remarkable is its essentially French character, to be perceived as much in the contours of melody and phrase as in harmonic basis and the colors of orchestration. Those curves of melody, sometimes posing a challenge even to the best orchestras for accurate statement of them, are never really simple, and some are decidedly complicated by tied notes and triplet figures.

Chausson avoided the buttery convention of symmetrical tunes, and managed unusual shape and a spicy, offbeat flavor. Offbeat, that is, in the metrical sense, not the slang we use when we mean peculiar. Yet the tunes always sing, and in vivacious beauty.

Another intrinsic merit of the B-flat Symphony, beyond the worth of its basic material, is the fastidious workmanship. Chausson was an aristocratic spirit with instinctive self-criticism and a sense of proportion. Anything commonplace was alien to him. He knew the value of comparative brevity and the power of "nothing too much." All these are reflected in the strength and the sculptured form of his Symphony.

Charles Munch is a superb conductor of Chausson. His performance yesterday was notably plastic in its observance of the composer's numerous modifications of speed, yet the work was held nicely together. The orchestra was rich, and deep and clear. All had poetic, loving care.

Bearing this in mind, one can only ask without expecting answer, why the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto went so poorly as it did. From the first chord, it was prevailingly coarse and careless, often too loud. Not every page was bad, but too many were. Certain beauties were brought forth, but this was not a performance in which either soloist or conductor could take pride.

Serkin and Munch were at odds over tempo most of the way. All too frequently, when orchestra and piano should have sounded simultaneously, you heard the one or the other just a shade ahead.

Serkin at his best is a great, if, nervous artist, a true poet of the keyboard, and a musician of intellectual breadth. Yesterday he was far from best form. The introduction of the first movement was a jumble of noisy resonance, not even with precise note values. In solo passages he suddenly and for no apparent reason would increase his speed—something Munch also did with the orchestra. This "Emperor" reminded me of Ophelia's lament for Hamlet's mind, "like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh . . ."

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct the Suite from Handel's "Water Music"; the Symphonic Fantasies by Martinu, and the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto. Andre Navarra, as soloist, will make his United States debut.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

FEB 8 1962

RUDOLF SERKIN, piano soloist in the "Emperor" Concerto at this weekend's symphony concerts and tonight's open rehearsal.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

FEB 8 1962

OPEN REHEARSAL

Pianist Rudolf Serkin rehearses the Beethoven Piano certo No. 5 ("Emperor") tonight in Symphony Hall at an open rehearsal with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Doors of the auditorium open at 6:45 and the rehearsal, for which seats are unreserved, is at 7:30.

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 10, at 8:30 o'clock

FRANCK . . . . . "Le Chasseur maudit," Symphonic Poem

CHAUSSON . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, Op. 20

I. Lent; Allegro vivo
II. Très lent
III. Animé

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 73

I. Allegro
II. Adagio un poco mosso
III. Rondo: Allegro ma non tanto

SOLOIST
RUDOLF SERKIN
Mr. SERKIN plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

FEB 8 1962

Serkin Symphony Guest At Open Rehearsal Tonight

Pianist Rudolf Serkin will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest at an open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall today (Feb. 8) at 7:30 p.m. and at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (Feb. 9, 2:15)—Saturday (Feb. 10, 8:30), Monday (Feb. 12, 8:30) and Tuesday (Feb. 13, 8:30). At these concerts Mr. Serkin will perform the Piano Concerto No. 5 by Beethoven. Charles Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur maudit" by Franck and Chausson's Symphony in B-flat at the Friday-Saturday concerts. At the concerts on Monday and Tuesday Doctor Munch has scheduled Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel plus the Concerto with Mr. Serkin.

An Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall is also scheduled for Thursday, February 15, when cellist Andre Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on February 16-17. At these concerts Mr. Navarra will be heard in Dvorak's Cello Concerto and Doctor Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu.

At Symphony Hall Sunday, February 18, Isaac Stern will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Orchestra in a Pension Fund concert. A few tickets for this concert, to be given at 3 p.m., are still available. Pierre Cochereau, organist at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, will give the third of the current Sunday evening Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m. February 18.

Fifteenth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
FEB 10 1962

Munch Revives Chausson, Serkin Plays 'Emperor'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 15th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Franck: "Le Chasseur Maudit"; Chausson: Symphony in B-flat major; Beethoven: "Emperor" Piano Concerto, Rudolf Serkin soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The B-flat Symphony of Ernest Chausson, revived by Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony yesterday after an interval of nearly nine years, proved the musical high point of the concert. To be sure, there were excitements and alarums (but no excursions) in "Le Chasseur Maudit" and Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, but in terms of performance, as well as of novelty, Chausson won my vote.

Great distinction attaches to this work, so personal despite the inescapable influences of Chausson's teacher, Cesar Franck. It is polished music, and eloquent, warmly romantic without straining for effect, preserving freshness and appeal.

Quite remarkable is its essentially French character, to be perceived as much in the contours of melody and phrase as in harmonic basis and the colors of orchestration. Those curves of melody, sometimes posing a challenge even to the best orchestras for accurate statement of them, are never really simple, and some are decidedly complicated by tied notes and triplet figures.

Chausson avoided the buttery convention of symmetrical tunes, and managed unusual shape and a spicy, offbeat flavor. Offbeat, that is, in the metrical sense, not the slang we use when we mean peculiar. Yet the tunes always sing, and in vivacious beauty.

Another intrinsic merit of the B-flat Symphony, beyond the worth of its basic material, is the fastidious workmanship. Chausson was an aristocratic spirit with instinctive self-criticism and a sense of proportion. Anything commonplace was alien to him. He knew the value of comparative brevity and the power of "nothing too much." All these are reflected in the strength and the sculptured form of his Symphony.

Charles Munch is a superb conductor of Chausson. His performance yesterday was notably plastic in its observance of the composer's numerous modifications of speed, yet the work was held nicely together. The orchestra was rich, and deep and clear. All had poetic, loving care.

Bearing this in mind, one can only ask without expecting answer, why the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto went so poorly as it did. From the first chord, it was prevailingly coarse and careless, often too loud. Not every page was bad, but too many were. Certain beauties were brought forth, but this was not a performance in which either soloist or conductor could take pride.

Serkin and Munch were at odds over tempo most of the way. All too frequently, when orchestra and piano should have sounded simultaneously, you heard the one or the other just a shade ahead.

Serkin at his best is a great, if nervous artist, a true poet of the keyboard, and a musician of intellectual breadth. Yesterday he was far from best form. The introduction of the first movement was a jumble of noisy resonance, not even with precise note values. In solo passages he suddenly and for no apparent reason would increase his speed—something Munch also did with the orchestra. This "Emperor" reminded me of Ophelia's lament for Hamlet's mind, "like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh . . ."

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct the Suite from Handel's "Water Music"; the Symphonic Fantasies by Martinu, and the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto. Andre Navarra, as soloist, will make his United States debut.

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 10, at 8:30 o'clock

FRANCK . . . . . "Le Chasseur maudit," Symphonic Poem

CHAUSSON . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, Op. 20

I. Lent; Allegro vivo
II. Très lent
III. Animé

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 73

I. Allegro
II. Adagio un poco mosso
III. Rondo: Allegro ma non tanto

SOLOIST
RUDOLF SERKIN
Mr. SERKIN plays the Steinway Piano

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 8 1962

RUDOLF SERKIN, piano soloist in the "Emperor" Concerto at this weekend's symphony concerts and tonight's open rehearsal.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
FEB 8 1962

OPEN REHEARSAL

Pianist Rudolf Serkin rehearses the Beethoven Piano certo No. 5 ("Emperor") tonight in Symphony Hall at an open rehearsal with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony. Doors of the auditorium open at 6:45 and the rehearsal, for which seats are unreserved, is at 7:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
FEB 8 1962

Serkin Symphony Guest At Open Rehearsal Tonight

Pianist Rudolf Serkin will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest at an open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall today (Feb. 8) at 7:30 p.m, and at the Orchestra's concerts Friday (Feb. 9, 2:15)—Saturday (Feb. 10, 8:30), Monday (Feb. 12, 8:30) and Tuesday (Feb. 13, 8:30). At these concerts Mr. Serkin will perform the Piano Concerto No. 5 by Beethoven. Charles Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur maudit" by Franck and Chausson's Symphony in B-flat at the Friday-Saturday concerts. At the concerts on Monday and Tuesday Doctor Munch has scheduled Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel plus the Concerto with Mr. Serkin.

An Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall is also scheduled for Thursday, February 15, when cellist Andre Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on February 16-17. At these concerts Mr. Navarra will be heard in Dvorak's Cello Concerto and Doctor Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu.

At Symphony Hall Sunday, February 18, Isaac Stern will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Orchestra in a Pension Fund concert. A few tickets for this concert, to be given at 3 p.m., are still available. Pierre Cochereau, organist at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, will give the third of the current Sunday evening Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m. February 18.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 10 1962

Serkin and 'The Emperor'

Dynamism Beyond Challenge

By Harold Rogers

It didn't really matter, of course, what came in the first half of the program, because we all knew that Rudolf Serkin would play the "Emperor" Concerto in the last half. Knowing this, one could, if necessary, mark time; and as things turned out, it was.

But it was a pleasant way of marking time. Charles Munch opened with a dramatized reading of César Franck's "Le Chasseur maudit," replete with its clanging church bells, imprecations, and hellfire itself; and he then sailed blithely into the overwrought romanticism of Ernest Chausson's Symphony in B-flat major. There was some consolation in the fact that the watery lines of the Chausson would soon be dispelled by Beethoven's clear definition of form,

♪ ♪ ♪

Should one question Dr. Munch's choice of the Chausson, the answer might be found in his apparent decision to give us in this, his final season as music director of the Boston Symphony, a distillation of his past 12 years in Boston. He is playing his favorites, and we are fortunate that he plays his favorites so brilliantly. The Chausson, too, was brilliant in its rapturous way, but it still wasn't enough. It gave one so little to take home—a blurred memory, perhaps, of charming background music for one's thoughts. When the music invites the listener to abandon it for his own thinking, it is hardly worth the playing.

When it comes to a concerto, there is nothing that can challenge the combination of a dynamic composer, a dynamic conductor, and a dynamic performer. This is the charmed circle that united Symphony Hall listeners in an ecstasy of musical joy at the concert yesterday afternoon, and it awaits the subscribers who will attend tonight, Monday, and Tuesday nights.

♪ ♪ ♪

The composer, of course, is Beethoven, with his scintillating Piano Concerto No. 5; the conductor is Charles Munch, whose sensitivity as an orchestral accompanist is unchallenged; and the performer is Rudolf Serkin, whose dedicated artistry has long since elevated him into the realm of the elect.

How quickly the Franck and the Chausson paled when these three elements were brought into focus of fire! Serkin himself is a complete artist; he has achieved the hardwon ability to hold thought and feeling—the two governing factors in a great performance—in perfect balance. Thought without feeling is the letter without the spirit. Feeling without thought is uncontrolled emotion. Both are needed, and Serkin possesses them in an enviable measure.

Keen intelligence reigned throughout his performance yesterday, and every fiber of his being responded to the musical substance of Beethovian grandeur. The playing was brilliant without being dazzling; brilliance was never set forth as a thing in itself. It was always embraced by the poetry, always tempered by the heart. The middle Adagio, as would be expected, was a marvel of reflective grace; yet the end movements, though infused with speed and prestidigitation, never descended to the level of mere acrobatics.

A musician's heart must overflow if he would reach his listener's heart. Serkin has such a heart.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 10 1962

The Symphony

Serkin Redeems Torpid Afternoon

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The eloquent playing of Rudolf Serkin in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto redeemed a torpid afternoon at Symphony yesterday.

Mr. Serkin gave a blazing grand performance of the heroic score, which he must have been presenting in public for at least the umpteenth time. He was a living refutation of the law of diminishing returns. He might have been making his debut.

So impetuous and dramatic an utterance can be anticipated from a much younger artist, but Rudolf Serkin sustains in his pianism the intense ardor of his juniors. It is actually the result of a maturity that refuses to be bored with the classics, finding renewal and refreshment in familiar terrain.

Not only was his spirit fiery, yet the notable comprehension of the colossal style and structure of the "Emperor" embraced its contemplative passages, too. Save for a fleeting moment in the opening movement when I felt the soloist was everweighting the clamorous, heaven-soaring measures, he integrated his materials into persuasive design.

Even his weight proved valid in terms of contrast. My own preference is for a less gigantic opening because the tornado force of Beethoven's idea has a tendency to flatten the delicate inner part. This, however, did not happen; indeed, the skillful contrasts were executed so that Mr. Serkin's accent on bold line enabled him to mould the tender songfulness of the second movement into a lyric of absorbing beauty, and then plunge crisply into the rondo.

In short, Mr. Serkin's treatment of the "Emperor" displayed breadth, virility and harmonious architecture. His tone sang. His rhythmic sensibility was keen. His clarity of dynamics astonished. But most of all, the resolute spaciousness of feeling inspired one to marvel at his vital intellect behind the interpretation. Watching the interplay of emotions on the soloists face was an experience in itself. His wholly musical art found total expression in this distinguished reading.

Dr. Munch and the orchestra supplied tactful partnership, and their scrupulous treatment of the Franck and Chausson declared the refinement of the Gallic style. I'm afraid both composers made flaccid listening nevertheless.

Smother of Dust

Franck's accursed huntsman rode again and stirred up a great smother of dust. The pseudo-Lisztian narrative style of writing creates longing for the von Suppe simplicities of the Lone Ranger, and I hope the huntsman was finally glimpsed heading for the last roundup. The Chausson B-flat symphony is rarely done, contains felicitous parts and strives for more than it can deliver.

It's a typical late romantic score, vibrant with echoes of Franck, Tchaikowsky and Liszt, and, occasionally, Chausson himself. The extended chromaticism and starchy scoring for brass, which verges on the banal, debilitates the slender melodic charm also evident. Moreover, the symphony is padded to inordinate length, not justified by its content. Rudolf Serkin ought to make you feel the stage wait worthwhile.

Next week Andre Navarra will be soloist in Dvorak's Cello Concerto, in B minor, Op. 104; and Charles Munch lists also Handel-Harty's "Water Music" Suite, and the Symphony No. 6, "Fantaisies symphoniques," of Martinu.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 15th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Rudolf Serkin, piano, was the soloist. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Le Chasseur maudit," Symphonic Poem
Franck
Symphony in B-flat major, Op. 20
Chausson
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 5, in E-flat major, Op. 73
Beethoven

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
FEB 4 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Pianist Rudolf Serkin will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest at an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. and at the Orchestra's concerts Friday, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday.

At these concerts Mr. Serkin will perform the Piano Concerto No. 5 by Beethoven. Charles Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur maudit" by Frank and Chausson's Symphony in B-flat at the Friday-Saturday concerts. At the concerts on Monday and Tuesday Dr. Munch has scheduled Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel plus the Concerto with Mr. Serkin.

An Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall is also scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 15, when cellist Andre Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Feb. 16-17. At these concerts mr. Navarra will be heard in Dvorak's Cello Concerto and Dr. Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu.

At Symphony Hall Sunday, Feb. 18, Isaac Stern will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Prchestra in a Pension Fund concert. A few tickets for this concert, to be given at 3 p.m., are still available. Pierre Cochereau, organist at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, will give the third of the current Sunday evening Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m. Feb. 18.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 3 1962

Symphony Programs

Rudolf Serkin will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest at an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday (Feb. 8) at 7:30 p.m. and at the concerts Friday (Feb. 9, 2:15), Saturday (Feb. 10, 8:30), Monday (Feb. 12, 8:30), ahd Tuesday (Feb. 13, 8:30). At these concerts Mr. Serkin will perform the Piano Concerto No. 5 by Beethoven.

Charles Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur maudit" by Franck and Chausson's Symphony in B-flat at the Friday-Saturday concerts. At the concerts on Monday and Tuesday he has scheduled Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel, plus the concerto with Mr. Serkin.

An Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall is also scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 15, when André Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony on Feb. 16-17. At these concerts Mr. Navarra will be heard in Dvořák's Cello Concerto, and Dr. Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 4 1962

Serkin Symphony Soloist

Rudolf Serkin, pianist, will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra's guest artist at the Friday and Saturday concerts at Symphony Hall. He will perform the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 5. Dr. Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur maudit" by Franck and Chausson's Symphony in B-flat. The entire program will be presented at an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Serkin will play the Beethoven Concerto at the Monday and Tuesday concerts, Feb. 12 and 13. Dr. Munch has phony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel for those programs.

An Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall is also scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 15, when cellist Andre Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony on Feb. 16-17. At these concerts Navarra will be heard in Dvorak's Cello Concerto and De Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies symphoniques" by Martinu.

At Symphony Hall Sunday, Feb. 18, Isaac Stern will and the Orchestra in a Pension Fund concert, at 3 p.m.

126

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 8 1962

Joe Petrovec

Charles Munch and Rudolf Serkin will collaborate in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 at the Boston Symphony's Open Rehearsal tonight at 7:30, and at the concerts Friday, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday at Symphony Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
FEB 3 1962

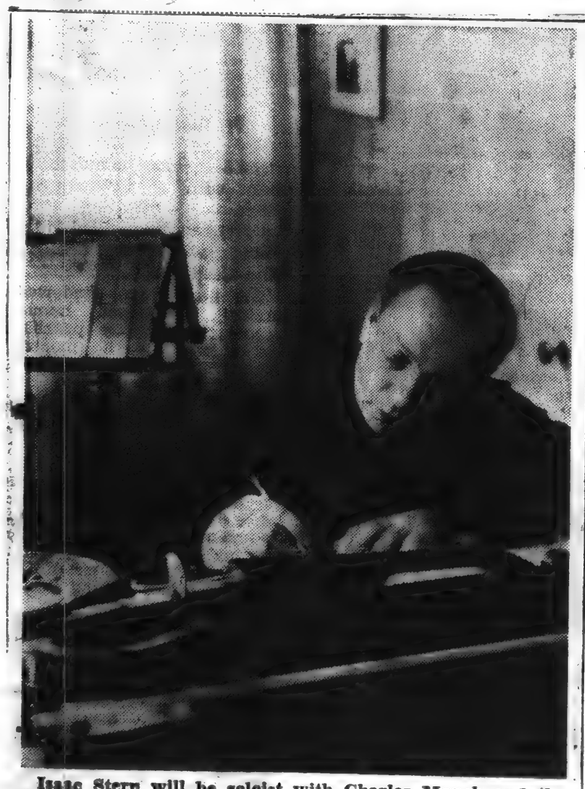
Pianist Rudolf Serkin will be the Boston Symphony orchestra's guest at an open rehearsal in Symphony hall Thursday, Feb. 8, at 7:30 o'clock; and at the orchestra's concerts of Friday, Feb. 9, Saturday, Feb. 10, Monday, Feb. 12, and Tuesday, Feb. 13. At these concerts Mr. Serkin will perform the "Piano Concerto No. 5" by Beethoven. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct "Le Chasseur Maudit" by Franck and Chausson's "Symphony in B-flat," at the Friday-Saturday concerts. At the concerts on Monday and Tuesday, Dr. Munch has scheduled Schubert's "Symphony No. 5" and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite by Roussel plus the Concerto with Mr. Serkin. An open rehearsal at Symphony hall is also scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 15, when 'cellist Andre Navarra will prepare for his American debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra on Feb. 16-17. At these concerts Mr. Navarra will be heard in Dvorak's 'Cello Concerto and Dr. Munch will conduct Handel's "Water Music" and the "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Martinu.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record-American (m-e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000
FEB 10 1962

Cellist Navarra In U. S. Debut Here

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 2:15 p. m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. At these concerts Doctor Much will conduct the Handel-Harty "Water Music," Martinu's "Fantaisies Symhponiques" and the Cello Concerto by Dvorak in which Mr. Navarra will be soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 17 1962



Isaac Stern will be soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony for the orchestra's Pension Fund concert on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

French Cellist Featured In Concerto by Dvořák

By Louis Chapin

Yesterday's Boston Symphony subscription audience was treated to an afternoon of warmly affectionate sound. It opened and closed with the familiar phraseology of Handel and Dvořák, the latter introducing a French cellist of mature eloquence, and at the center was a relatively new work by Bohuslav Martinů (1890-1959), with its equally friendly reasons for being.

There are composers who manage to say more about their music than they say in it. Martinů was not one of these; but he did respond helpfully when asked by John N. Burk about certain aspects of his "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6), commissioned for the orchestra's 75th anniversary and first played in 1955. Some of his comments, in these performing circumstances, can serve as a review. After mentioning the difficulties of a composer's self-analysis, he went on as follows:

"There is one reason for this work which is clear and certain for me: I wished to write something for Charles Munch. I am impressed and I like his spontaneous approach to the music where music takes shape in a free way, flowing and freely following its movements. An almost imperceptible slowing down or rushing up gives the melody a sudden life." And so Martinů was moved to write his new work to connect with Dr. Munch's "conception and conducting."

* * *

This he distinctly did; the result abounds with appreciation toward everything involved —toward the conductor, the orchestra, the size of a symphony (if not its form), and toward the composer himself, as he quotes a few bars from his 1938 opera "Juliet." "Thinking that I shall never hear my opera again," he wrote, "I could listen once more to these few bars, which I rewrote by memory."

One is tempted to identify this transplanted treasure at many points during the Czech composer's three movements. There is a characteristic murmuring of woodwinds at the opening, which reappears in various forms to evoke the "bee-loud glade" of Yeats's Innisfree. Or it might be a passage in the second movement where the resonances of orchestral sections compare their colors with intriguing effect. But it doesn't really matter, because the symphony is fairly permeated with Martinů's feelings about the few bars in "Juliet."

There are occasional harmonic chordal passages that verge toward the banal, among them the ending, but they are saved by their overwhelming and spaciously fresh context of broad melody, spare rhythm, and legible counterpoint. As for Dr. Munch and the orchestra, Martinů was right. Their music did take shape "in a free way, flowing and freely following its movements."

* * *

The same could be said for their generally firm accompaniment of André Navarra in Dvořák's Cello Concerto. M. Navarra, a well-seasoned performer who is beginning his first United States tour, brought to the work's melodic riches a gently modulated interpretive sense whose restraint was matched with deft, undemonstrative technique and a tone with plenty of butter to it. But his instrumental voice (joined at certain benign moments by Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute) was quick with needed accents, and filled out almost startlingly in the concerto's last descending stretch of melody.

The afternoon was begun with the six movements which Sir Hamilton Harty derived from Handel's "Water Music." They seemed to have forgotten the barges and breezes of the Thames, until in the final Allegro deciso Dr. Munch opened the windows and invited his music outdoors. And the brass led the way.

Sixteenth Week

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 17, at 8:30 o'clock

HANDEL — Suite for Orchestra, from "The Water Music" (Arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty)

I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Bourrée
IV. Hornpipe
V. Andante espressivo
VI. Allegro deciso

MARTINU — "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6)

I. Lento; Allegro; Lento
II. Allegro
III. Lento; Allegro

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK — *Concerto for Cello, in B minor, Op. 104

I. Allegro
II. Adagio ma non troppo
III. Finale: Allegro moderato

SOLOIST
ANDRÉ NAVARRA

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

FEB 17 1962

Cellist Navarra Hailed As Soloist at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 16th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Handel: "Water Music" Suite, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty; Martinu: "Symphonic Fantasies" (Symphony No. 6); Dvorak: Cello Concerto in B minor, Andre Navarra (American debut), soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Andre Navarra proved himself a most sensitive and poetic cellist, yesterday afternoon, as he played the Dvorak B minor Concerto with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He was rewarded by the sort of hearty ovation that Friday subscribers can muster when they really are pleased and moved.

Navarra was called back several times to continuing applause. It was plain that he had triumphed in his American debut.

Said to be of Basque ancestry, though born in Biarritz 51 years ago, Navarra is a French-trained musician and he exhibits the tidy articulation and the stylistic elegance proverbial of the French string player. He is, moreover, a virtuoso in his technical equipment, although that side of him was strictly subordinated to Dvorak's musical purpose.

The B minor Concerto, despite its figural conventions and the usual run of challenge to fingers and bowing arm, has its pages of pure poetry and rhapsody. These tempt a player to fuss up the tempo, finesse the note values and stretch out the phrases. But not Andre Navarra..

The rhapsody and poetry were there, carried upon a golden satin tone from a Januarius Gagliano instrument of 1740, but they were comparative, within bounds of good taste and what Dvorak had written upon his pages. No striving for the big sound, the spurious dramatic effect. Instead, one encountered musicianship of the highest order.

Martinu's work which he composed at the behest of Dr. Munch, continues to wear well. It contains abstract beauty of sound as well as logic of organization. It is music with rhythmic life, and its pallette of colors is unusual as the work flows from one group of instruments to another. There are places, in fact, when the texture and the contours of the "Symphonic Fantasies" appear to take on, for the moment, the quality of somewhat enlarged chamber music.

This work impressed me as genuine, pure musical art upon its first performance seven years ago, and it still does. You do not receive any impression of its having been written to fit the notions of preconceived theory, which is the curse of a good deal of academic so-called music that is turned out today. While it is complex, the score is not of those synthetic involvements which suggest that a composer never really heard the sounds in his head before he penned the notes.

Martinu was a creative artist, not a doctrinal fabricator, and I would be certain that every note he composed was part of a musical plan conceived in his brain and heard by his inner ear before the manuscript paper was touched by ink.

Sir Hamilton Harty's modern scoring of six movements from Handel's "Water Music" made a brave sound and vigorous beginning for this concert. The quality of playing and the nature of Dr. Munch's conducting were first-rate through the afternoon. The orchestral share of Dvorak's Concerto was firm but refined.

Next week the Orchestra will be out of town. On Mar. 2 and 3, Carlo Maria Giulini, as guest conductor, will make his Boston debut. His program of Rossini, Ghedini, Tchaikovsky and Verdi looks on paper like a hodgepodge, but perhaps it will prove better in actual performance.

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Department of Agriculture was established as a separate government agency in 1862.

AMUSEMENTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

FEB 11 1962

Andre Navarra Cello Soloist At Symphony

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut as soloist in the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30.

Dr. Munch further will conduct the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" in the arrangement by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Symphonic Fantasies."

Born in Biarritz in 1911, Navarra first studied at the Conservatory at Toulouse, and graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris in 1927. His European solo career was launched in 1937 after he won first prize in the International Violoncello Competition at Vienna. Although he has not been heard previously in the United States, Navarra has performed in Canada and Mexico.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist at the concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Serkin will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5. Dr. Munch also will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suit No. 2 by Roussel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

FEB 11 1962

Week's Music Calendar

ANDRE NAVARRA will make his United States debut as Boston Symphony soloist in the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto, Feb. 16 and 17.

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday. At these concerts Dr. Munch will conduct the Handel-Harty "Water Music," Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" and the Cello Concerto by Dvorak in which Mr. Navarra will be soloist.

Born in Biarritz in 1911, Mr. Navarra first studied at the Conservatory at Toulouse and graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris in 1927. His European solo career was launched in 937 after he won first prize in the International Violoncello Competition at Vienna. Although he has not been heard previously in the United States, Mr. Navarra has performed in Canada and Mexico.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist at the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow and Tuesday. At these programs Mr. Serkin will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2 by Roussel.

Two events are scheduled for Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon: a Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund concert with Isaac Stern at 3 p.m. and at 6 p.m. an Organ Concert by Pierre Cochereau.

Sixteenth Week

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 17, at 8:30 o'clock

HANDEL . . . . . Suite for Orchestra, from "The Water Music"
(Arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty)

I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Bourrée
IV. Hornpipe
V. Andante espressivo
VI. Allegro deciso

MARTINU . . . . . "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6)

I. Lento; Allegro; Lento
II. Allegro
III. Lento; Allegro

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK . . . . . *Concerto for Cello, in B minor, Op. 104

I. Allegro
II. Adagio ma non troppo
III. Finale: Allegro moderato

SOLOIST
ANDRÉ NAVARRA

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
FEB 17 1962

Cellist Navarra Hailed As Soloist at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 16th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Handel: "Water Music" Suite, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty; Martinu: "Symphonic Fantasies" (Symphony No. 6); Dvorak: Cello Concerto in B minor, Andre Navarra (American debut), soloist.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Andre Navarra proved himself a most sensitive and poetic cellist, yesterday afternoon, as he played the Dvorak B minor Concerto with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He was rewarded by the sort of hearty ovation that Friday subscribers can muster when they really are pleased and moved.

Navarra was called back several times to continuing applause. It was plain that he had triumphed in his American debut.

Said to be of Basque ancestry, though born in Biarritz 51 years ago, Navarra is a French-trained musician and he exhibits the tidy articulation and the stylistic elegance proverbial of the French string player. He is, moreover, a virtuoso in his technical equipment, although that side of him was strictly subordinated to Dvorak's musical purpose.

The B minor Concerto, despite its figural conventions and the usual run of challenge to fingers and bowing arm, has its pages of pure poetry and rhapsody. These tempt a player to fuss up the tempo, finesse the note values and stretch out the phrases. But not Andre Navarra.

The rhapsody and poetry were there, carried upon a golden satin tone from a Januarius Gagliano instrument of 1740, but they were comparative, within bounds of good taste and what Dvorak had written upon his pages. No striving for the big sound, the spurious dramatic effect. Instead, one encountered musicianship of the highest order.

Martinu's work which he composed at the behest of Dr. Munch, continues to wear well. It contains abstract beauty of sound as well as logic of organization. It is music with rhythmic life, and its pallette of colors is unusual as the work flows from one group of instruments to another. There are places, in fact, when the texture and the contours of the "Symphonic Fantasies" appear to take on, for the moment, the quality of somewhat enlarged chamber music.

This work impressed me as genuine, pure musical art upon its first performance seven years ago, and it still does. You do not receive any impression of its having been written to fit the notions of preconceived theory, which is the curse of a good deal of academic so-called music that is turned out today. While it is complex, the score is not of those synthetic involvements which suggest that a composer never really heard the sounds in his head before he penned the notes.

Martinu was a creative artist, not a doctrinal fabricator, and I would be certain that every note he composed was part of a musical plan conceived in his brain and heard by his inner ear before the manuscript paper was touched by ink.

Sir Hamilton Harty's modern scoring of six movements from Handel's "Water Music" made a brave sound and vigorous beginning for this concert. The quality of playing and the nature of Dr. Munch's conducting were first-rate through the afternoon. The orchestral share of Dvorak's Concerto was firm but refined.

Next week the Orchestra will be out of town. On Mar. 2 and 3, Carlo Maria Giulini, as guest conductor, will make his Boston debut. His program of Rossini, Ghedini, Tchaikovsky and Verdi looks on paper like a hodgepodge, but perhaps it will prove better in actual performance.

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Department of Agriculture was established as a separate government agency in 1862.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 11 1962

Andre Navarra Cello Soloist At Symphony

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut as soloist in the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30.

Dr. Munch further will conduct the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" in the arrangement by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Symphonic Fantasies."

Born in Biarritz in 1911, Navarra first studied at the Conservatory at Toulouse, and graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris in 1927. His European solo career was launched in 1937 after he won first prize in the International Violoncello Competition at Vienna. Although he has not been heard previously in the United States, Navarra has performed in Canada and Mexico.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist at the concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Serkin will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5. Dr. Munch also will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suit No. 2 by Roussel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
FEB 11 1962

Week's Music Calendar

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday and Saturday. At these concerts Dr. Munch will conduct the Handel-Harty "Water Music," Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" and the Cello Concerto by Dvorak in which Mr. Navarra will be soloist.

Born in Biarritz in 1911, Mr. Navarra first studied at the Conservatory at Toulouse and graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris in 1927. His European solo career was launched in 937 after he won first prize in the International Violoncello Competition at Vienna. Although he has not been heard previously in the United States, Mr. Navarra has performed in Canada and Mexico.

Rudolf Serkin will be soloist at the Orchestra's concerts in Symphony Hall tomorrow and Tuesday. At these programs Mr. Serkin will be heard in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5 and Dr. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and the "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2 by Roussel.

Two events are scheduled for Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon: a Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund concert with Isaac Stern at 3 p.m. and at 6 p.m. an Organ Concert by Pierre Cochereau.

ANDRE NAVARRA will make his United States debut as Boston Symphony soloist in the Dvorak B minor Cello Concerto, Feb. 16 and 17.

128

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
FEB 15 1962

Andre Navarra Makes U. S. Debut With Symphony Fri.

Andre Navarra will make his United States debut with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday, Feb. 16, 2:15) and Saturday Feb. 17, 8:30). At these concerts Doctor Munch will conduct the Handel - Harty "Water Music," Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" and the Cello Concert by Dvorak in which Mr. Navarra will be solosist.

Born in Biarritz in 1911, Mr. Navarra first studied at the Conservatory at Toulouse and graduated from the National Conservatory in Paris in 1927. His European solo career was launched in 1937 after he won first prize in the International Violoncello Competition at Vienna. Although he has not been heard previously in the United States, Mr. Navarra has performed in Canada and Mexico.

Two events are scheduled for Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon (February 18): a Boston Symphony Orchestra Pension Fund concert with Isaac Stern at 3 p.m. and, at 6 p.m. an Organ Concert by Pierre Cochereau.

Thursday, February 15, 7:30, Symphony Hall: Open Rehearsal.

Friday, Feb. 16, 2:15; Saturday, Feb. 17, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Charles Munch Conducting: Handel-Harty, "Water Music" Suite; Martinu, "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6); Dvorak, Concerto for Cello, in B minor, Op. 104 (Andre Navarra).

Sunday, Feb. 18, 3:00 p.m. Symphony Hall: Pension Fund Concert Charles Munch Conducting. Isaac Stern, Soloist. Bach, Concerto for Violin in A minor. Mozart, Adagio for Violin and Orchestra in G major, K. 261. Mozardt, Rondo for Violin and Orchestra in C major, K. 373. Brahms, Violin Concerto in D. Major, Op. 77.

Sunday, Feb. 18, 6:00 p.m., Symphony Hall: Organ Recital Pierre Cochereau. Anonymous, Ancient Dances; Bach, Prelude and Fugue in E flat major. Mozart Fantasy in F minor. Franck, Fantaisie in E major; Messiaen, "God among Us"; Improvisations

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
FEB 14 1962

'Cello Solo

ANDRE NAVARRA, French 'cellist, will be soloist in the Dvorak Concerto Friday afternoon and Saturday night with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 16 1962

MC

André Navarra will make his United States debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon and Saturday night, Feb. 16-17, playing the Dvořák Cello Concerto.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 17 1962

The Symphony

Dvorak Concerto Lyrical, Fragile

By ROBERT TAYLOR

In Andre Navarra, who is making his first appearances in the United States, yesterday's Symphony was graced by one of the contemporary masters of the violoncello.

To say this on the basis of the Dvorak Concerto may seem overstatement perhaps. The paltry literature devoted to the noble 'cello (and when one exhausts the Haydn, Schumann, Lalo and Saint-Saens Concertos, one is hard put to remember others) contains demands of a craggier technical order. But Dvorak's B minor looms as the most difficult in which to make a pronounced virtuoso effect.

The work, lyrical and fragile, threaded by sweet legato melody, masks an exceedingly formidable challenge. The soloist is compelled to venture into the upper harmonics of the 'cello, to observe the most scrupulous stops and to produce a flowing freshet of song—and all the while the orchestral dialogue, as prominent as the performer, threatens to trim the latter into an accessory.

Display Piece

This is proper, of course, a musicianly reaction against the display piece in favor of an integrated statement; but requires a soloist of refined powers. Mr. Navarra at no time lost a judicious sense of outline. The emotional warmth of his rhapsodic playing blended with a clear intellectual attack.

In short, the concerto sang. The 'cellist displayed a large, haunting tone. The exactness of his intonation must have brought despair to anyone who has ever tried the instrument. The character of his tone seems slightly Gallic, yet the lustre of the dark lower strings is striking, and his bow a marvel of co-ordinated skill.

Dr. Munch's relaxed leisurely tempos and the response of the orchestra, who after all support an equal role, turned this into a memorable account, too. The vintage instrumentalists in the world have offered the Dvorak here; and they range from Samuel Mayes within the BSO, to the imposing Piatagorsky. The interpretation by Andre Navarra — who is, incidentally, a stocky man of 50, with a square face and a grizzled thatch of wavy hair — ranks with the finest.

Kinetic Score

Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" came as an agreeable stroke of programming at this concert. It is a kinetic score, episodically developed, and extending the principles of French impressionism in an original and colorful design.

Fantasy, the composer explains, motivates the symphony, not the "fantastic" a la Berlioz. And the orchestral timbres are surely among the most sensual of this century, as opulent as a Bohemian fete day. There is a pronounced Czech folk mood to the melodic content, and part of the piquancy of the music derives from the rural allusions expressed in the spare but brilliant French idiom.

Mostly, though, this uniqueness springs from profoundly felt emotion. Martinu constructs many sources into a personal form: it stays his own. From the sinuous woodwind ripples that establish a mysterious atmosphere at the onset, to the contrasts of weight and color as soloists from the several choirs glitter briefly then disappear into the ensemble, the surprising dissonances, the harmonic and rhythmic motifs, the music sustains a bright spontaneity. The creator borrows from the past to illumine the present.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 16th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The soloist was Andre Navarra, violincello. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

"Water Music" Suite for Orchestra — Handel-Harty
"Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) — Martinu
Concerto for 'Cello, in B minor, Op. 104 — Dvorak

Played Crisply

I wish I could feel the same about Harty's arrangement of Handel's "Water Music." The music is lovely, of course, and like the "Fantasies," was played crisply. Handel wrote other things, one may venture to point out, than this divertimento. Too much repetition adulterates any masterpiece. One "Water Music" is an enchantment; one too many, an ocean.

Next week the orchestra goes on tour, and returns March 2-3 with Carlo Maria Giulini as guest conductor. Ghedini's Sonata da Concerto will have its American premiere, Doriot Dwyer as flute soloist; and the Harvard-Radcliffe singers will appear in Verdi's "Three Sacred Pieces." Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 2, in C minor, Op. 17, and Rossini's overture to "The Italian in Algiers," are also listed.

Pension Fund Concert

129

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

Stern, Munch, Symphony Play for Pension Fund

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, music director, gave a concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to benefit the pension fund of the orchestra. Isaac Stern was violin soloist in each number of the following program: Concerto in A minor, Bach; Adagio in E major (K. 261), Rondo in C major (K. 373), Mozart; Concerto in D major, Brahms.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Only one word, and that word is magnificent, can describe my notion of the concert that Isaac Stern, Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony gave yesterday afternoon for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Listening to those wonderful performances of Bach, Mozart and Brahms, it was evident that the heavenly bodies all were in conjunction, all was well in the best possible world of music.

It really was that good. Dr. Munch and the orchestra were in the best of form; their accompaniment of the solo artist was down to split-second precision, and if there is perfection in this world, it dwelled yesterday in the music-making of a truly great violinist, Isaac Stern.

Of extraordinary fascination was the ease with which Stern moved from Bach to Mozart to Brahms, and the unblemished polish of each composer's style.

It may be that, under the spell of Stern's glittering virtuosity, we are inclined to overlook his prodigious musicianship. Even the sheer sonority of his instrument differed among the three composers.

The Mozart pieces were rarities — each having been composed for the Salzburg violinist Gaetano Brunetti; the E major Adagio in 1776 as an alternate slow movement for the Mozart Violin Concerto in A (K. 219); the C major Rondo in 1781 as, evidently, a separate piece.

You are not likely to hear them with orchestral accompaniment except upon a special occasion like this. The passionate feeling of the Adagio is inescapable, and so is the franquil utter naivete of the Rondo.

Bach and Mozart went gloriously, but it was Brahms, I think, which constituted the medium of the most intimate collaboration between soloist, conductor and orchestra.

Here was close joining of Stern's cosmopolitan manner of performance and the orchestral manner, also cosmopolitan, which derives in good part from so many American musicians, plus its overlay of French sound and manner that comes from Munch.

At any rate, they were as professionally unanimous as the Yankees; the performance was "big", and the music sang with warm beauty.

This was the last pension fund concert that Dr. Munch will conduct, since he retires next Summer. Mr. Stern contributed his services. Although it gave him a severe afternoon's workout, the program was admirably planned to include him in each of the four numbers. At the end . . . a real, rousing ovation!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
FEB 19 1962

THE SYMPHONY

Stern, Munch Excel At Pension Concert

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A hurricane of appleause swept Symphony Hall yesterday as Isaac Stern and Charles Munch came forward after the Brahms Violin Concerto, and the audience stood cheering, visibly moved by a glorious musical experience.

It was in a way, a recital by Mr. Stern accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this 128th Pension Fund Concert before a sold-out house. But it was also something which everyone had long since perceived — a rare collaboration between a great virtuoso, a great conductor, a great orchestra.

Highest Plane

These elements, so seldom realized in such ideal proportion, informed yesterday's program. The major role belonged to Mr. Stern, and he proved prodigious as an advocate of the baroque, the classic and the romantic. But this was a tactful partnersip, too, and the extraordinary sympathy that existed between the soloist, Dr. Munch and the musicians, raised the work to the highest plane.

Indeed so headlong a program is beset with pitfalls. Had Mr. Stern been less of a virtuoso he could not have undertaken it at all; but had he been less of a musician it might have evolved into mere display. His restraint and skill were reflected by his colleagues, and the result, a full-fledged act of communication, touched the limits of art.

One scarcely needs to know that the soloist possesses the eloquent technique of a master. As the interpretive intelligence of the concert, however, he exhibited a warmth and emotional understanding that projected instantly, and always in terms of music.

Impeccable Style

The style was impeccable; the awesome challenge of two complete concertos and parts of two others, conquered with deceptive ease. The Bach held dynamic vigor, with its lyrical passages kindled by tenderness, and the lively tempos of the conductor. And while I am no enthusiast for concertos in part, Mozart's E major adagio and Rondo in C took on a transparent tonal delicacy.

Nevertheless it remained for the Brahms Concerto to provide the ultimate statement, and no matter how familiar the work may be, in such a reading fresh beauties emerge. The songfulness of the second subject has infrequently been so intense, I think; and the rapt reverie of the adagio, where the violin muses on the melody without taking it up. Perhaps the Hungarian rhythms of the finale were on the "troppo vivace" side, but what may have been sacrificed was trifling compared to the passion attained. At the close Mr. Stern shook hands with Harold Gomberg, who had played the oboe threnody exquisitely, then joined Charles Munch, and the two men, acknowledging the thunders, symbolized the inspired forces of an inspired afternoon.

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, offered the 128th Pension Fund concert of its history yesterday in Symphony Hall. Isaac Stern, violin, was the soloist.

Violin Concert in A minor ..... Bach
Adagio for Violin and Orchestra in E major (K.261); Rondo for Violin, in C major (K.373) .... Mozart
Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77 ..... Brahms

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 18 1962

Pension Fund Concert Today

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct a concert in Symphony Hall at 3 this afternoon, to benefit the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Isaac Stern will appear as violin soloist—contributing his services — in all four numbers of the program.

They will be the A minor Concerto of Bach, Mozart's Adagio in G. major (K. 261) and Rondo in C major (K.373,) and the D major Violin Concerto of Brahms.

There will be no Friday, Saturday Symphony concerts this week. The Orchestra will be on tour in New York and other cities.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JAN 21 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Violinist Isaac Stern has offered his services as soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orcestra for a Pension Fund concert at Symphony Hall, Sunday, Feb. 18 at 3 p.m.

This concert, the Orchestra's 127th Pension Fund concert, will mark Mr. Stern's only appearance in Boston this season and it will be the last Pension Fund concert conducted by Dr. Munch before his retirement.

Mr. Stern will be soloist in Bach's Concerto in A minor, in the Brahms Concerto and in two concerto movements by Mozart.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert with Issac Stern will be available at Symphony Hall box office beginning at 10:00 a.m. tomorrow. Tickets for this benefit concert are $10, $8, $6, $5, $4 and $3.

There will be no Boston Symphony Orchextra corcerts at Symphony Hall this week. The Orchestra will be absent from the city to give concerts in New London, Baltimore, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 28 1962

VIOLINIST ISAAC STERN has volunteered his services as soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony for the Pension Fund concert on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18, at Symphony Hall. He will play the Brahms Concerto, the Bach A minor, and two concerto movements by Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 11 1962

Isaac Stern Soloist For Pension Fund

Isaac Stern, the great violinist, will be soloist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony in a concert to benefit the orchestra's pension fund, at Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon at 3, Feb. 18. Stern will play in all four numbers of the program: Bach's A minor Concerto; Mozart's Adagio in G major (K. 261) and C major Rondo (K. 373), and the Brahms' Violin Concerto.

130

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 19 1962

Violinist Teams With Munch In Concerto Sequence

By Louis Chapin

The Boston Symphony pension fund was the beneficiary of a sold-out Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and its happy benefactors enjoyed their musical reward—a violin and orchestra concert conducted by Charles Munch for which Isaac Stern contributed his services as soloist.

The program, with probably little time for rehearsal, was sublimely safe. It consisted of Bach's A minor concerto, two isolated movements by Mozart, and the Brahms in D major. With the exception of an imprecision or two near the beginning of the Brahms, the solo performances were impeccable, musicianly, and probably as fast, in a couple of cadenza flashes, as a violin will ever need to be played. Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony attended closely to their work as accompanists.

The Bach Andante movement, between his two Allegros, was played with poised gravity, but a harpsichord was needed to nail down its contemplations. Mozart was represented by an Adagio in E major (K.261) and a Rondo in C major (K.373). The Adagio, written as an alternate for an earlier concerto movement, was delicately spun over the muted orchestra tone, and the Rondo made it a slight but pleasing companion.

Mr. Stern's playing of the Brahms had everything in abundance that this concerto demands — singing tone, the sensitive attenuation of phrases, and an acrobatic way with the passage-work. But the roar of approval that overlapped his last chords was for me one of the few stirring moments of the occasion. Another was the way he moved out of an angry, bristling cadenza into the ineffably serene passage that spreads open the first-movement coda.

Brahms indeed wrote a splendid concerto. But it was tempting to wish either that Mr. Stern and his accompanists had played it less often, or that I had heard it less often.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
JAN 28 1962

Pension Fund Soloist To Be Isaac Stern

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is giving concerts in New London, Baltimore, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York this week with Mr. Richard Burgin conducting the concert in Brooklyn and one of the two Carnegie Hall concerts.

Violinist Isaac Stern has offered his services as soloist with Dr. Charles Munch and the Orchestra for a Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday, February 18 at 3 o'clock. This will mark Mr. Stern's only appearance in Boston this season and as soloist he will play Bach's Concerto in A minor, in the Brahms Concerto and in two concerto movements by Mozart.

Tickets for the Pension Fund Concert (the 127th one and the last one conducted by Dr. Munch before his retirement) will be available at Symphony Hall beginning tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 10 1962

Pension Fund Seats

Tickets for Isaac Stern's special concert with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18, at 3 o'clock, are still available at $6 and $3. All tickets at other prices have been sold for this special program, the last Pension Fund concert to be conducted by Dr. Munch in Boston before his retirement and Mr. Stern's only appearance in Boston this season.

The program for this concert, Mr. Stern's twenty-seventh with the Boston Symphony, will consist of Bach's Concerto in A minor, Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, and two concerto movements for violin and orchestra by Mozart.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JAN 21 1962

ISAAC STERN, celebrated violinist, who is giving his services to Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra as soloist at the Orchestra's Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 18.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
FEB 16 1962

Society: Virtuoso Isaac Stern to Play For B.S.O. Pension Fund

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

When violin virtuoso Isaac Stern joins the Boston Symphony Orchestra as its Pension Fund Concert soloist on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, he will be helping to carry on a tradition of 128 concerts in 59 years.

Started by conductor William Gericke in 1903, the concerts helped to make pensions for Boston Symphony musicians a reality. Three years later, the Boston artists were giving their proceeds to victims of the San Francisco earthquake. Musicians in straightened circumstances after World War I, including founder Gericke himself, were aided by later concerts.

Privileged ticket holders at this Sunday's concert at Symphony Hall will include Mrs. George B. Dabney of Dedham, Dr. Charles D. J. Regan of Boston, who is taking South American colleagues; and Wellesley students Susan Stewart and Jane Griffith, who have invited half a dozen friends.

Cambridge Symphony goers on Sunday will number Mrs. Roy Elliott Bates, Mrs. Edwin Pratt, Mrs. T. H. Ward, Mrs. Roger T. Hagan and Edward L. Mark. Heading for Symphony Hall from Beacon Hill and Back Bay will be William Magill, Miss Dianna R. Brown, Miss Laurie Plesser, Mrs. Richard Southgate, Miss E. Florence Greenough, Mrs. Richard Sears, Miss Anne Van Winkle, Miss Eleanor Humphries, Miss Margot Miller and Peter Brandt.

Also shharing in the special excitement of a Pension Fund benefit Sunday will be and Alexander B. Porter, of Chestnut Hill.

Coming from Bethesda, Md., especially for the concert is Dr. Walter W. Boyd. Robert S. Davis will arrive with guests from Little Compton, R.I. Others planning to take guests Sunday include William Helm of Weston, Rev. John M. Hebert of North Easton, Mrs. Richard De Lancie of Wellesley Hills, John E. Andrews of Norwell, H. F. Pereira of Dedham, Miss R. Frances Neal of Boston, Mrs. William Dexter of Louisburg sq., Miss Alice Farnum of Watertown, and Mrs. Paul Bartlett of Weston.

FIRST WOMAN ever named to the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood.

biochemist Montserrat Tetas and colleagues at Brandeis University; Richard M. Whitney of West Roxbury, Robert Severance of Arlington, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Mrs. Stephen Wheatland, Mrs. James Gamble and Mrs. John E. Boit of Brokoline; and Dr. and Mrs. Keith H. Lamont, Miss Judith White, Mrs. Howard T. Kingsbury.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
JAN 21 1962

Special Concert

Boston — (UPI) — Violinist Isaac Stern will be featured soloist Feb. 18 in a special pension fund concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will perform in each of four numbers on the program comprising music by Bach, Mozart and Brahms.

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
JAN 18 1962

Isaac Stern Featured Solist At Symphony Pension Concert

Violinist Isaac Stern has offered his services as soloist with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a Pension Fund concert at Symphony Hall, Sunday February 18 at 3 p.m. This concert, the Orchestra's 127th Pension Fund concert, will mark Mr. Stern's only appearance in Boston this season and it will be the last Pension Fund concert conducted by Doctor Munch before his retirement. At this concert Mr. Stern will be soloist in Bach's Concerto in A minor, in the Brahms Concerto and in two concerto movements by Mozart.

Charles Munch first invited Isaac Stern to make music with him and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in February 1950, Doctor Munch's first season as the Orchestra's Music Director. Since then these two great artists have collaborated in twenty - seven concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this country, at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland and in Tel Aviv when Doctor Munch was guest conductor of the Israel Philharmonic. Out of this musical association has grown a warm friendship between Charles Munch, Isaac Stern and the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert with Isaac Stern will be available at Symphony Hall box office beginning at 10:00 a.m. Jan. 22nd. Tickets for this benefit concert are $10, $8, $6, $5, $4 and $3.

There will be no Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Symphony Hall next week. The Orchestra will be absent from the city to give concerts in New London, with Miss Morini as soloist, in Baltimore, Brooklyn and Carnegie Hall, New York. Mr. Burgin will conduct the concert in Brooklyn and one of the two Carnegie Hall concerts.

Program for the Pension Fund concert:

Sunday, February 18, 3:00 p.m., Symphony Hall, Charles Munch conducting: Bach, Violin Concerto in A Minor; Mozart, Adagio in G Major, K. 261; Mozart, Rondo in C Major, K. 373; Brahms, Violin Concerto: Soloists: Isaac Stern.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JAN 21 1962

Stern Soloist For Pension Fund

Violinist Isaac Stern will contribute his services as soloist for a Boston Symphony pension fund concert to be given by Dr. Charles Munch and the Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Sunday at 3 p.m., Feb. 18.

Mr. Stern will be heard in two Concertos, Bach's A minor and the D major by Brahms. The program otherwise will consist of two works by Mozart — the Adagio in G major (K. 261) and the Rondo in C major (K. 373).

This concert will mark Mr. Stern's only appearance in Boston this season, and the last pension fund program Dr. Munch will conduct before he retires as music director of the Boston Symphony.

Fourth New York Tour
Hartford, Conn.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 5 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088

Munch's Farewell

Boston Symphony Heard Monday

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Charles Munch gave his valedictory concert at the Bushnell last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra but the wintry weather outside played havoc with the attendance. I cannot remember a smaller audience for one of our visiting orchestras.

It was a pity for this was one of Mr. Munch's more imaginative programs, consisting of the Handel "Water Music" Suite, Martinu's "Fantasies Symphoniques," and the Dvorak Cello Concert in B Minor with Andre Navarra as the soloist.

* * *

THE HANDEL, in the familiar Hamilton Harty arrangement, started off in a routine, business-like fashion but at the half-way mark it gained considerably in expressivity. The Andante Espressivo was the interpretative highlight, beautifully contoured, a vivid contrast to the buoyant, concluding Allegro.

In the Martinu Sixth Symphony Mr. Munch chose a work that was commissioned for the 75th anniversary of the orchestra, a composition that was honored in 1956 by the Music Critics Circle as "the best orchestral work" of that year.

It is a favorite of Mr. Munch's, a work for which he is temperamentally attuned. Martinu's orchestral mastery, his colorful tonal palette and his perfervid "romanticism" are qualities that strike a sympathetic chord in this conductor.

* * *

LAST NIGHT these qualities were generally well-realized, although I have heard the orchestra play this work with a little more fire and passion. Even so, it was an exhilarating experience to hear this dramatic score again.

If the Dvorak Cello Concerto has little currency today, it is not because it lacks melodic content. It fairly bubbles over with ingratiating melodies and invigorating themes.

Anyone who essays the solo part today automatically stands comparison with the legendary Casals interpretation. In appraising the performance by Navarra last night, the predominant quality was fluency, rather than fire.

* * *

MR. NAVARRA draws a beautiful tone from his instrument, rich and full, although last night it was not always unblemished. He does not effect the whiplash attack Casals favored in this work but there is more than enough compensation in the poetic orientation of his playing.

For this reason the second movement was the most successful realization. However, there is no denying the effectiveness of the finale, which almost invariably draws an ovation from the audience.

It did not seem quite right tha Mr. Munch in this, his last Hartford concert, did not include something by Berlioz, for which he is noted. Perhaps this is something he is saving for his last season in Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 113,846
FEB 20 1962

Brilliant Farewell By Munch

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the Memorial auditorium Monday night. Andre Navarra, 'cello, was guest artist. The program:

"Water Music" Suite	Handel
Fantaisies Symphoniques	Martinu
'Cello Concerto, B Minor	Dvorak
Mr. Navarra, Soloist

Since it was a time of parting for Charles Munch and Hartford audiences, it was comforting to have so resplendent a concert by the Boston Symphony as a keepsake last night.

Mr. Munch appeared in the best of spirits, and he was certainly at the top of his form. There was a stamp of noble authority on all he did. The music was big and rich with life, and the performance itself had what can most easily be described as that old, Boston brilliance. It was one of those occasions when an orchestra, after looking over the house, decides to play this one for itself instead. That's when a concert becomes something special. So it was last night.

Eloquent 'Cello Playing

This was also one of those rare times when the Boston Symphony has brought a soloist. Andre Navarra was heard in Dvorak's B Minor 'Cello Concerto. The French virtuoso clothed the score in an eloquence that came as much from reserve as anything else. The Concerto is ornate and wearying in its sentiment. But Mr. Navarra took it in neat, firm style, both in the execution and for what it had to say. He refused to let it run away with him as it did with Dvorak. The playing was clear and clean. Mr. Navarra's 'cello tone at times seemed a bit small for the rousing mood the orchestra was in. But it was sweet and accurate in all the many singing pages of the Concerto. Some of the passage work sounded a little thin, but there was not too much of that anyhow.

Brilliant Fantasy

The audience was greatly fetched by Mr. Navarra's performance and made it plain to him. They seemed less taken by the dazzling reading and playing of Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which was really the evening's big event. My recollection was that I had heard the score before. But I did not recall the sheer wealth of orchestral invention in it that welled up last night. It is not without a certain contrived quality as it seeks to be fantastic. There is a musical tradition and method for this sort of thing that makes Mr. Martinu's composition sound like a set of tales Hoffmann had not gotten around to write. But the whole mosiac of the music as such is pretty distinctive and imaginative, and the final selection has an almost apocalyptic vision and span. Mr. Munch read the score in a completely inspired fashion, and the orchestra delivered it up in one long, smash effect.

The evening opened with a big and affectionate playing of the Handel "Water Music" Suite. It was the way Mr. Munch and the orchestra put themselves to this work they have played so often — the freshness and zest with which they addressed themselves to it all over again — that signaled the fine evening of music to come. They never let down on the promise. It made it both easier and harder to say goodbye to Mr. Munch.

— T. H. P.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Chronicle
HAMDEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,534
FEB 8 1962

Boston Symphony Due At Woolsey Hall Soon

Charles Munch, who retires at the close of the current season, appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Woolsey Hall in New Haven Tuesday, Feb. 20, at eight o'clock. Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony during his 13 year tenure as director.

Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which he introduced to New York. The orchestra has received two American International Music Fund Awards; Doctor Munch was awarded the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Orchestra of Debussy's "Images." During his tenure the Orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

For the Orchestra's 75th anniversary season Charles Munch and the Orchestra commissioned works from Barber, Bernstein, Copland, Dutilleux, von Einem, Hanson, Ibert, Martinu, Milhaud, Petrassi, Schuman, Sessions and Villa-Lobos. In Charles Munch's first ten years, the Orchestra gave forty-eight United States premieres, thirty-two world premieres and performed works by thirty-one American composers.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Charles Munch has taken the Orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952, a second European tour in 1956 when the Orchestra was the first western orchestra to perform in the Soviet Union, and an eight-week tour of the Far East in Japan, Taiwan, The Philippines, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

CHARLES MUNCH

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
FEB 19 1962

Symphony Concert On as Scheduled

Despite the weather, the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert goes on as scheduled tonight (8:15 curtain) at Bushnell Memorial, Managing Director William H. Mortensen said at early afternoon.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 100,394
FEB 20 1962

Boston Symphony To Give Woolsey Concert Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance of the season here tonight to give the sixth concert of the current Woolsey Hall Series. Always a prime feature concert-wise in New Haven, this Boston Symphony appearance takes on unusual importance by marking the final appearance here of Conductor Charles Munch as head of the 105-piece symphonic body. Mr. Munch will be succeeded next season by Erich Leinsdorf.

An additional feature of tonight's concert will be soloist, Mme. Jeanne Marie Darre, noted French pianist who is making her first visit to America to appear with the Boston Symphony in Boston, New York and New Haven. Widely known in Europe as a recitalist and soloist with leading orchestras, the artist has just now found time to come to this country. A winner of first prize at the Paris Conservatory, Mme. Darre is now professor of piano there and a member of the Conservatory Jury. She has played under such conductors as Mr. Munch, Sir Henry Wood, Paul Paray and Andre Cluytens. In 1950 Mme. Darre was awarded France's Legion of Honor and in 1960 she received the "Chevalier des Arts et Lettres."

Tonight's program will be a notable one. Opening with Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B-flat, it will continue with Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43, Saint Saens' Piano Concerto in G minor, Op. 22, and conclude with Ravel's Choreographic Poem, "La Valse."

132

New Haven Conn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle
HAMDEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,534

FEB 15 1962

Boston Orchestra Concert Tuesday At Woolsey Hall

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Woolsey Hall Tuesday to give the sixth concert of the current Woolsey Hall Series under the auspices of the Yale School of Music, this important musical event will mark the final appearance on the podium with the orchestra of Music Director Charles Munch.

Munch will continue with the orchestra until the end of the summer season at Tanglewood next August, and then be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, who will start the fall season in Symphony Hall, Boston, in October.

A notable program has been arranged for the forthcoming concert. Four distinguished works will be presented in the following order; Symphony No. 5 in B-flat—Schubert; "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43—Roussel; Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 22—Saint Saens; "La Valse," Choreagraphic Poem —Ravel. The soloist in the Saint Saens work will be Jeanne Marie Darre, who will be making her first appearance in New Haven.

The concluding event of the 1961-62 Woolsey Hall Series will be the appearance of the duo-pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, on Tuesday, March 13.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
FEB 18 1962

Munch Will Conduct Boston Symphony For Last Time Here Before Retirement

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its second and final Woolsey Hall concert of the season here Tuesday evening. Jeanne-Marie Darre, right, will be piano soloist with the orchestra.

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The Boston Symphony will make its second and final Woolsey Hall appearance of the season on Tuesday evening. At this late date it is generally known that conductor Charles Munch and concertmaster Richard Burgin are retiring at the end of this year's Berkshire Music Festival. So it is that Tuesday's audience will be saying "hail and farewell" to these two great musicians whom we have come to admire and respect over the years.

A Woolsey Hall audience had its first acquaintance with Dr. Munch in 1948, the year before he took over the conductor's post of the Boston orchestra. He made his debut here in a concert by the Orchestre National of France, a superb ensemble which made an American tour at that time. There was, of course, unusual interest in that concert since listeners were aware that Dr. Munch had already been appointed as the new conductor to succeed the late Serge Koussevitzky. The brilliant performance by the French musicians was both rewarding and reassuring, leaving no doubt in any listener's mind that the Boston Symphony was to continue under virtuosic leadership.

No one needs to be told that the present Boston conductor took up where his predecessor left off and that he has maintained the orchestra in its long entrenched position as one of the world's great symphonic aggregations. Despite their different approach to musical preparation and performance, Koussevitzky and Munch had much in common, including a flair for the dramatic and a consuming interest in the music of our time. We were sorry to see the former conductor go and now, regretfully, the time has come to say goodbye to Dr. Munch.

As for the veteran concertmaster, we may be more fortunate since his severance will not have been a complete one—he will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor. Some will remember that he conducted a concert in the 1950-51 Woolsey series, when Dr. Munch was ill. And I am told that he conducted the Bostonians in several previous concerts here during the reign of Koussevitzky. Burgin's association with the orchestra actually predated the start of the latter's 25-year tenure. Burgin has been with the Boston Symphony during half of its existence—he was engaged by Pierre Monteux in 1920! The orchestra just won't seem the same without this dedicated and accomplished musician in its "first chair."

Tuesday's concert will introduce the celebrated French woman pianist, Jeanne-Marie Darre, who made her American debut three weeks ago with the orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston. She gave three performances (Feb. 2, 3 and 4) of the Saint-Saens Concerto No. 2, the work which she is to perform in her Woolsey Hall debut.

Mlle. Darre is a professor of piano at the National Conservatory in Paris where she was once a pupil of Marguerite Long and Isadore Phillip. She won the coveted First Prize as a student and during her subsequent professional career Mlle. Darre has been awarded France's Legion of Honor and the Chevalier des Arts et Lettres. A pianist with a distinguished record of recital and orchestral appearances throughout Europe, Tuesday's guest artist holds the distinction of membership in the Conservatory's Jury.

By something of a coincidence, the orchestral offerings in Tuesday evening's sixth program of the Woolsey series will include a work which Dr. Munch conducted in the program here by the Orchestre National of France 14 years ago. This is Albert Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane". Suite No. 2, a colorful work which he has conducted here since then. Schubert's Symphony No. 5 and Ravel's "La Valse" will round out a most interesting program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 25,933

FEB 20 1962

Munch Gives Last Concert Here Tonight

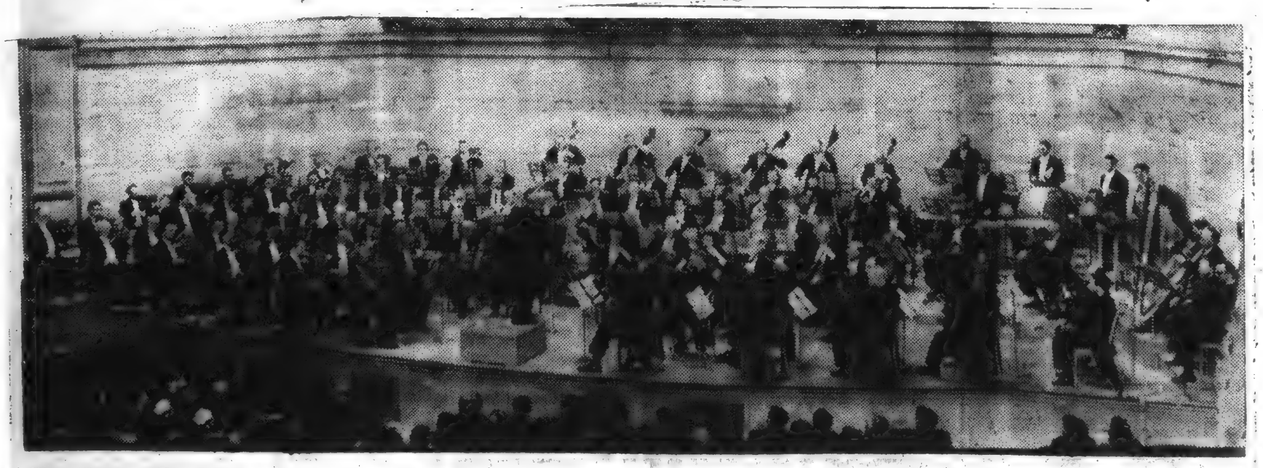
Charles Munch makes his final appearance before New Haven audiences tonight. The famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will give the sixth concert of the Woolsey Hall series, retires at the end of this season. His successor is Erich Leinsdorf.

An additional feature tonight will be Jeanne Marie Darre, distinguished French piano soloist, who is making her first visit to this country.

The evening will open with Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B-flat, this to be followed by Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," Suite No. 2, Op. 43. The second half will present Saint-Saens Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 22, and Ravel's Choreographic Poem, "La Valse."

Chronicle
HAMDEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,534

FEB 15 1962



The Boston Symphony Orchestra, will present a concert on Tuesday evening at 8:30 in Woolsey Hall. Under the direction of Charles Munch, it will perform from works of Barber, Bernstein, Copeland, Dutilleux, von Einem, Hanson, Ibert, Martinau Milhuad, Petrassi, Schuman, Sessions and Villa-Lobos. During the 50-week season, the longest season of any privately supported orchestra in the world, 221 concerts are given.

New Brunswick, N.J.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.
HOME NEWS
D. 42 894 S. 42,241
FEB 23 1962

Concert Audience Gets All It Asks for from Munch

By ISABEL BRYLAWSKI

Audiences attending the Rutgers concerts had a long wait to hear the kind of a program they have been longing for but last night at the gymnasium, their desires were more than fulfilled.

The Boston Symphony returned after an absence to give a program replete with all the dramatics possible for a superb symphony orchestra to give.

This year marks the retirement of 70-year-old conductor, Charles Munch, who will be replaced by Erich Leinsdorf, former conductor of the Rochester Symphony but more recently one of the leading lights of the Metropolitan Opera.

Missing also from his accustomed place as concert-master was Richard Burgin, whose retirement was also announced. He will be followed by Joseph Silverstein, who has come up from the ranks of the orchestra. However, Burgin has always been a steadfast foundation for the strings of the orchestra and his golden tone was missing in the solo passages for violin.

Still Vigorous

There was no evidence of the age of the conductor, Charles Munch in last night's performance. His rule over the orchestra has been a stormy one. There has been much controversy involved and he had to have forced absences because of illness but last night he was the peitome of strength and fire.

The program was most satisfying in every way. Consisting of three works, representing classic, romantic and modern, the orchestra maintained a traditionally high standard throughout.

The Suite for Orchestra from "The Water Music" by Handel, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, opened the program. This suite, written at the request of King George I of England, for a concert on the Thames is always a delight to hear. In six parts, interspearsed with dances, it is delicately beautiful in its purity.

In complete contrast was the "Fantasies Symphoniques," Symphony 6, by Bohuslav Martinu, modern Czechoslovakian composer, who died in 1959. This work is dedicated to Charles Munch and to the orchestra. It received an award from the New York Music Critics Circle as the "best new orchestral work in 1955."

It is a completely absorbing work, constantly changing in mood and rhythm. It brings forth all the color available in the different sections of the orchestra. Incredibly difficult to perform, the members of the orchestra gave the conductor all that he asked for. Even when the first cellist broke a string, which he replaced immediately, there was no noticeable gap in the performance.

However, it remained for the playing of the Symphony in C Minor, No. 1, Op. 68 by Johannes Brahms for the orchestra to receive the tremendous ovation by the audience.

This symphony, the most prodigious of the four symphonies of Brahms is so vitally profound. Only a great orchestra and a great conductor can give it the mature force needed. Whether Charles Munch always fits this description is open to discussion but last night he was all that could be wished for in a great musician.

The next concert on April 4, will bring back the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, in the gymnasium. The next concert in the Voorhees Chapel is on March 8 and will present The New York Woodwind Quintet.

PLAINFIELD, N.J.
COURIER-NEWS
D. 40,444
FEB 19 1962

Boston Symphony Due

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be heard at 8:30 p.m. Thursday in the Rutgers University gymnasium in New Brunswick. The orchestra will present selections by Handel, Martinu and Brahms.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.
SPOKESMAN
W 2 220
FEB 16 1962

AT RUTGERS—Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of selections by Handel, Martinu and Brahms next Thursday in the Rutgers University Gymnasium. The fifth program in the university's current concert series will begin at 8:30 p.m.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.
HOME NEWS
D. 42 894 S 42,241
FEB 18 1962

TWO CONCERTS ARE SCHEDULED

Two events of special interest to music lovers will take place on the Rutgers University campus the next nine days.

The first is the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, in one of the offerings of the Rutgers Concert Series next Thursday, 8:30 p.m. in the gymnasium.

The second is a special offering in the gymnasium on Monday, Feb. 26, when the Rutgers Bureau of Concerts and Lectures will present a joint concert by the Yale University Band and the Rutgers University Male Chorus. The Yale group, which received international attention during a recent European concert tour, will be under the direction of Keith Wilson.

The Yale Band-Rutgers Chorus concert will be open to the public without charge. No tickets will be required.

The Boston Symphony program will include "Water Music Suite" by Handel-Harty, "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Martinu, and Brahms, "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor."

The Yale Concert Band program will feature selections by contemporary composers. The Rutgers Male Chorus will join the Yale group in Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom." Composed for wind symphony and male voices, this unusual modern work is based on the writings of Thomas Jefferson.

The Rutgers Chorus will be conducted by F. Austin Walter, associate professor of music The Yale concert, under the sponsorship of Rutgers' Intercollegiate Concert Series, will be held at the Gymnasium at 8:30 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
FEB 11 1962

Munch Says Farewells To Bushnell on Feb. 19

Charles Munch, who has announced plans to retire this Spring, will conduct his final concert in the Bushnell Memorial on Feb. 19, when he brings his Boston Symphony Orchestra here for a concert at 8:15 p.m.

The fourth in a current Bushnell Symphony Series, Andre Navarra, one of Europe's most distinguished 'cellists, will be guest artist with the orchestra, performing the solo parts of Dvorak's Concerto for 'Cello in B minor.

Also on the program will be Handel's Suite for Orchestra from "The Water Music," as arranged by Sir William Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques," which the composer wrote specifically for Dr. Munch.

Succeeding Serge Koussevitzky as the Boston conductor, Maestro Munch has directed a majority of the orchestra's concerts in the Bushnell Memorial during the past dozen years. One of the world's most respected conductors, he had been musical director of several major French orchestras before coming to this country. His work at the annual summer festival in Tanglewood, as well as his conducting in Boston and on tour.

Navarra was born in Biarritz in 1911. He spent his early childhood in Toulouse, attending the Conservatory there, and at 13 was taken to Paris to enter the National Conservatory of Music. For some time he served as first 'cellist of the Opera Comique; in 1937 he took first prize at the International Competition for 'Cellists in Vienna and entered on a career as a virtuoso. He is now professor of 'cello at the Paris Conservatoire and the Academia Chigiana in Siena.

A limited number of seats for the Feb. 19 concert are available.

CHARLES MUNCH

NEWARK, N.J.
NEWS
D. 273,705 S. 379,749
FEB 21 1962

Pair of Concerts Set for Rutgers

NEW BRUNSWICK—Two events of interest to music lovers will take place on the Rutgers University campus within the next nine days.

The first is the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, in one of the offerings of the Rutgers Concert Series next Thursday night. The event is scheduled for 8:30 p.m. in the gymnasium, College Avenue.

The second is a special offering in the gymnasium Monday, Feb. 26, at 8:30 p.m. when the Rutgers Bureau of Concerts and Lectures will present a joint free concert by the Yale University Band and the Rutgers University Male Chorus. The Yale group, which received international attention during a recent European concert tour, will be under the direction of Keith Wilson.

The Boston Symphony program will include "Water Music Suite" by Handel-Harty, "Fantaisies Symphoniques" by Martinu, and Brahms "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor."

ASBURY PARK, N.J.
PRESS
D. 35,771 S. 34,732
FEB 18 1962

2 Concerts Scheduled At Rutgers

NEW BRUNSWICK — Two events of special interest to music lovers will take place on the Rutgers University campus within the next nine days.

The first is the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, in one of the offerings of the Rutgers Concert Series Thursday night. The event is scheduled for 8:30 p.m. in the symnasium on College Avenue.

The second is a special offering in the gymnasium Feb. 26, when the Rutgers Bureau of Concerts and Lectures will present a joint concert by the Yale University Band and the Rutgers University Male Chorus. The Yale group, which received international attention during a recent European concert tour, will be under the direction of Keith Wilson.

The Yale Band-Rutgers Chorus concert will be open to the public without charge. No tickets will be required.

The concert next Thursday is of special interest to admirers of Charles Munch since that artist is completing his final season as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Beginning next fall, the conductor of the Boston musical group will be Erich Leinsdorf who is also well known to Rutgers concert patrons.

134

Brooklyn

165 Church Street - New York

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
FEB 17 1962

MUSIC ART DRAMA

The Brooklyn Philharmonia will present a Bach - Handel program at its fourth subscription concert of the 1961-62 season, on Saturday evening, February 17th, at 8:30 p.m., in the Opera House of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, with Siegfried Landau conducting.

The program will open with the Concerto in C Major for Two Claviers and Strings of Johann Sebastian Bach, featuring Toni and Rosi Grunschlag as soloists.

Renato Bonacini, Concert Master of the Brooklyn Philharmonia will be heard in the Concerto for Violin in E Major of Johann Sebastian Bach.

The Brooklyn Philharmonia Choral Society, now in its fourth season, is composed of 140 members under the direction of Siegfried Landau.

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concero in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

Ania Dorfman, only woman pianist ever to appear as soloist with Toscanini, and Raya Garbousova, acclaimed as "the best 'cellist I've ever heard" by Casals, will appear together on Tuesday evening. February 20th, in the Music Hall of The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. They will perform works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert and Chopin.

The program includes Beethoven's Sonata No. 1, F major, Mendelssohn' Sonata No. 2, D major, Schubert's Sonata, A minor (Arpeggione) and Chopin's Intraduction and Polonaise (Op. 3) Tickets are priced at $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORDER ONE
W. 9,200
FEB 23 1962

BURRELLE'S CERTIFIED

Boston Concert Has Munch On Academy Stage

Returning to the Brooklyn Academy of Music podium for the first time since November, Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program of classic and romantic works tonight. Andre Navarra, noted French 'cellist, will make his New York debut in Dvorak's Concerto in B minor.

Dr. Munch has revised the originally-announced program. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, he will conduct the Suite from Handel's "The Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat. The Schubert symphony replaces the originally scheduled work by the contemporary Czech composer, Martinu.

This will be Dr. Munch's next to last performance in Brooklyn as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, since he is retiring at the end of the current season. Prior to his departure, he will conduct on Friday evening, April 6th, a program made up entirely of French works in which he has no peer as an interpreter. These are Berlioz' Symphony Fantastique, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3 500
FEB 15 1962

'Cellist Hailed by Casals As 'Best' to Perform Here

The penultimate appearance in Brooklyn of Charles Munch leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and recitals by the only woman pianist ever to appear as a soloist with Toscanini and by a performer hailed by Pablo Casals as "the best 'cellist I've ever heard" will mark the coming week's program at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

Charles Munch

Mr. Munch's next-to-last appearance here as musical director of the Boston Symphony will be next Friday night, Feb. 23, at 8:30. He will conduct again on April 6 and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949.

At the Feb. 23 concert he will introduce the French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B Minor in his New York debut.

The balance of the program will include the Sir Hamilton Harty arrangement of the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" and Martinu's Symphony No. 6 ("Fantaisies Symphoniques").

The pianist and the 'cellist with the remarkable backgrounds are Ania Dorfmann and Raya Garbousova. They will appear on Tuesday night's program, which begins at 8:30.

Miss Dorfmann made her solo appearance with the NBC Symphony under Toscanini in 1936. This launched her American career, which subsequently has seen her perform with many major symphony orchestras in the United States.

In addition to being hailed by Casals, Miss Garbousova has appeared with all the major American and European symphony orchestras.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

MAR 4 1962

MUNCH LISTED AS GUEST CONDUCTOR

NEW YORK—A happy note of progress is struck in the report from Philadelphia that the orchestra association of that city has decided to add a new Thursday series to its established pattern of 28 Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings and 14 Monday nights in the Academy of Music. This has been "arranged inview of the heavy demand" for the other series which "are virtually sold out by subscription."

With this announcement comes information that Charles Munch, though retiring from the post as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which he has held for a dozen years, will be active in this country next season nevertheless. He will conduct one of the seven Thursdays, the other six to be conducted by Eugene Ormandy.

I. K.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D 39 650
FEB 19 1962

Charles Munch Conducts Boston Symphony Friday, February 23, At Bklyn Academy

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concero in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

Ania Dorfman, only woman pianist ever to appear as soloist with Toscanini, and Raya Garbousova, acclaimed as "the best 'cellist I've ever heard" by Casals, will appear together on Tuesday evening. February 20th, in the Music Hall of The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. They will perform works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert and Chopin.

The program includes Beethoven's Sonata No. 1, F major, Mendelssohn' Sonata No. 2, D major, Schubert's Sonata, A minor (Arpeggione) and Chopin's Intraduction and Polonaise (Op. 3) Tickets are priced at $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370
FEB 24 1962

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and hen retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6). a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 17,420
FEB 21 1962

Boston Symphony Plays At Brooklyn Academy Under Baton Of Munch

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, Feb. 23, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6 and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the Feb. 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Feb. 23 are priced at $3, $3.50, $4, and $4.50.

NEWS BUREAU
N.Y.
PAPER
INGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE RECORD
16, 1962

Boston Symphony Back At Academy Munch To Direct

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200
FEB 16 1962

Boston Symphony Back At Academy Munch To Direct

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BULLETIN
W. - CIRC NOT AVAIL.
FEB 22 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play Here Again On Friday Eve February 23

Returning to the Brooklyn Academy of Music podium for the first time since November, Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program of classic and romantic works next Friday evening February 23rd. Andre Navarra, noted French 'cellist, will make his New York debut in Dvorak's Concerto in B minor.

Dr. Munch has revised the originally announced program. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, he will conduct the Suite from Handel's "The Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty and Schubert's Symphony No. 5 in B flat.

The concert, originally scheduled [illegible] by the Boston Symphony [illegible]

For tickets [illegible] Brooklyn Academy of Music box office [illegible] Boston Symphonic Pastoral [illegible] Dvorak's Le Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
FRI FEB 16 1962

Munch to Lead At Academy

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, Feb. 23, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will play Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his United States debut.

This will be Mr. Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15,370
FEB 24 1962

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue.

He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and hen retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6). a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
GRAPHIC
W. 17,420
FEB 21 1962

Boston Symphony Plays At Brooklyn Academy Under Baton Of Munch

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, Feb. 23, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6 and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the Feb. 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Feb. 23 are priced at $3, $3.50, $4, and $4.50.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN, RECORD
Friday, February 16, 1962

Boston Symphony Back At Academy Munch To Direct

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct on Friday evening February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
RECORD
BAY RIDGE RECORD
W. 9,200
FEB 16 1962

Boston Symphony Back At Academy Munch To Direct

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, February 23rd, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his New York debut.

This will be Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6th, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949. In addition to the Dvorak concerto, the February 23 program will include the Suite from Handel's "Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6) a work which Munch commissioned during the orchestra's celebration of its 75th anniversary.

Navarra has an international reputation, but has never played in the United States. He comes from a family of musicians and showed talents for the 'cello at an early age. He graduated from the Conservatory of Paris and won first prize in the International Competition of Vienna, after which he toured extensively throughout Europe. He has been soloist with the foremost orchestras of England, Belgium, France, Holland, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Mexico. His native France has designated him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Chevalier of Arts and Letters.

Tickets for Navarra's New York debut, with Munch conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on February 23 are priced at $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50. Tickets may be ordered by mail.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BULLETIN
W. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 22 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play Here Again On Friday Eve February 23

Returning to the Brooklyn Academy of Music podium for the first time since November, Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a program of classic and romantic works next Friday evening, February 23rd. Andre Navarra, noted French 'cellist, will make his New York debut in Dvorak's Concerto in B minor.

Dr. Munch has revised the originally-announced program. In addition to the Dvorak concert, he will conduct the Suite from Handel's "The Water Music," as arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty, and Schubbert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat.

The Schubert symphony replaces the originally scheduled work by the contemporary Czech composer, Martinu.

This will be Dr. Munch's next to last performance in Brooklyn as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, since he is retiring at the end of the current season.

Prior to his departure, he will conduct on Friday evening, April 6th, a program made up entirely of French works in which he has no peer as an interpreter. These are Berlioz's Symphony Fantastique, Debussy's Le Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
FRI FEB 16 1962

Munch to Lead At Academy

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct on Friday evening, Feb. 23, when the Bostonians make their fourth appearance of the 1961-62 season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

He will introduce the distinguished French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will play Dvorak's Concerto in B minor in his United States debut.

This will be Mr. Munch's next-to-last appearance in Brooklyn as musical director of the orchestra. He will conduct again on April 6, and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949.

136

New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
THU FEB 22 1962

Music: French Pianist

Jeanne-Marie Darre Makes U. S. Debut

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

IT has been a week of piano concertos. Monday brought Tamás Vásáry and the Cleveland Orchestra in the Liszt E flat. Tuesday brought Gilels and the Beethoven Second and Fourth with the Symphony of the Air. Last night came Jeanne-Marie Darré and the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch, in the Saint-Saens G minor.

Miss Darré has never before played in America, though her name and her playing are no strangers to record collectors. Before the war some fortunate owners of her Liszt, Chopin and D'Indy disks already were in the know, and word was being passed around about this formidable virtuoso. She was the one who, on graduating from the Paris Conservatoire with every honor in sight, played as her graduation pieces all five Saint-Saens concertos at one sitting.

●

During the war, this writer happened to hear her several times in Paris. One of her programs consisted of the twenty-four Chopin etudes, followed by the twenty-four preludes. She ended up stronger than when she started. Then, after the war, came a few long-playing disks—not too many, but enough to make a big impression.

All this is prelude to the fact that on last night's appearance, Miss Darré—chic, platinum blonde, business-like—not only lived up to her reputation and the memory of this writer, but she also left her audience limp. She is an exciting, formidable, electrical virtuoso, who can do anything at the keyboard and do it with aplomb.

But it is not all technique. She has complete tonal control, and a massive sonority. This slim woman lifts her hands high and produces shattering fortissimos. Then she will play running scale passages with extraordinary velocity in pianissimo. Or she will mold a phrase with a melting quality of nuance.

●

Her playing is definitely French in style, but fortunately she manages to avoid the brittle, percussive approach heard from so many of the French pianists who have come here since the war. And, although she can produce a melting phrase, color is not her strong point. The chances are that metrically she is a little four-square. Most products of the Conservatoire are.

Jeanne-Marie Darré

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor; Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Symphony No. 5 in B flat.....Schubert
Bacchus et Ariane, Suite No. 2...Roussel
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G Minor.....Saint-Saens
La Valse.....Ravel

But she is miles above most products, both in the exuberance of her playing and its tremendous authority. And, it must not be forgotten, the G minor Concerto poses no great musical problems. It is elegant and likable, but scarcely profound.

What the concerto proved was that Miss Darré is technically resplendent and a superb stylist in this repertory. Hers was about the most brilliant and authoritative performance of the work that one can remember. It covered every aspect of the score, from the plastic shape of the Bachian opening, to the rip-roaring chords and octaves of the first movement, to the feathery double notes of the second, to the marvelously-articulated scales of the third. Part of the success of the performance was Mr. Munch's perfect accompaniment. One hopes that Miss Darré will be an annual visitor here. In certain kinds of music she is an extraordinary pianist.

●

It so happened that there were other things on the program. Mr. Munch conducted a rather lackluster performance of the Schubert Fifth Symphony. Then he turned to music that really means something to him—the Roussel "Bacchus et Ariane" Second Suite and Ravel's "La Valse." Both of these scores, especially the Ravel—a little fast but very exciting and virtuosic—show off the conductor and his orchestra at their best. Their considerable best.

Ginastera Hears Paganini Quartet Here

ALBERTO GINASTERA, Argentine composer, is visiting New York, and last night he went to Judson Hall to hear the Paganini Quartet. His presence led to a change of program.

The ensemble from the University of California at Santa Barbara had scheduled Stravinsky's Three Pieces for String Quartet as the first work after the intermission. But in honor of its South American visitor, it replaced the Stravinsky with Señor Ginastero's First Quartet.

Henri Temianka, founder and leader of the quartet, who announced the surprise substitution, said his ensemble had had the honor of introducing the work. The audience showed its please and goodwill by roundly applauding both Señor Ginastera and his quartet when the composer appeared on the stage at the end of the performance.

The Ginastera Quartet is intense and has strong, almost steam engine, rhythms in its first and last movements. This meant the program had two contemporary works of rather similar intensity. The other was the scheduled String Quartet of Priaulx Rainier, a woman composer of South Africa. It is not well known as a concert piece, but persons in the dance world know it as the score for José Limon's "Night Spell."

The quartet played the work with plenty of vigor. In fact, vigor, rather than suavity, was the order of the evening. For the ensemble also gave vigorous performances of its selections from the standard repertory, Schubert's Quartet in A minor and Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95.

This was the quartet's first appearance in two years. Since it last played here it has acquired a new second violinist in Stefan Krayk and a new violist in Albert Gillis. They were expert musicians and blended well with their older colleagues, Mr. Temianka and Lucien Laporte, the 'cellist.

ROSS PARMENTER.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
March 5, 1962

Symphony's 'New Number' a Blonde

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Music Writer

The Boston Symphony, with Charles Munch conducting, had something spectacular to offer in its last concert in New York. It was a person rather than a piece—a slender platinum blonde who played the piano with the strength and endurance of a man twice her heft.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre a distinguished French piano virtuoso and teacher who this season is playing in the United States for the first time. With the Bostonians she played Saint-Saens' 2nd concerto which is not for a pianist who is faint of heart or flabby of muscle.

Miss Darre dazzled with her mighty fortissimos, her long, rapid and beautifully-sustained pianissimos, which were soft as any whisper. She flexed her tone, and colored it superably.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN MAR 4 1962

REPRISE

PIANISTS: Jeanne-Marie Darré, brought here by the Boston Symphony, was "an exciting, formidable, electrical virtuoso." Emil Gilels was "puzzling" playing Beethoven's G major Concerto with the Symphony of the Air, but he played the B flat with "the utmost beauty and refinement." Mendelssohn's A minor Concerto, written at the age of 16, was "gloriously" played by Mieczyslaw Horszowski at the Metropolitan Museum. Anton Kuerti displayed "striking gifts."

OPERA: Joseph Rosenstock's conducting of the first "Macbeth" of the season at the Met was "clear, intelligent and forceful," though there were reservations about the singing. Judith Raskin, "an enchanting Susanna" made a successful Metropolitan debut. The N. B. C. Opera Company's television production of Montemezzi's "L'Amore dei Tre Re" was "good entertainment as well as good music."

ORCHESTRAS: Alfred Wallenstein, leading the New York Philharmonic, made Schubert's Ninth Symphony "move along." André Navarra, 'cello soloist with the Boston Symphony displayed "poetic sensibility and performing mastery."

SINGERS: Those at Ferruccio Tagliavini's recital enjoyed "the style and manner of a marvelous lyric tenor voice." Joanna Owens, soprano, "was a handsome young lady with talent."

ENSEMBLES: The members of the Clarion Wind Quintet proved "among the best of the New York's fine wind players." The Paganini Quartet played "with plenty of vigor." Claude Monteux, flutist, and Walter Trampler, violist, gave a "lively program."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 25 1962

Critics View Recent Music

The young Hungarian Tamas Vasary, making his local debut Monday night with the Cleveland Orchestra, played with a breadth of style and a resilience which must be the envy of older and more experienced pianists. . . . In a New York debut with the Boston Symphony Wednesday, Jeanne Marie Darré revealed all of the power, combined with aristocratic delicacy, which is the peculiar hallmark of the best French school of piano playing. . . . Emil Gilels, playing with the Symphony of the Air on Tuesday, impressed as one of the great artists of our age.

MUSIC TRADES
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 5,298
FEB 1962

WITH BALDWIN IN BOSTON—David W. Rubin, Baldwin artist mgr.; Jeanne Marie Dare, noted pianist; Charles Munch, Boston Symphony conductor; and Robert Cosgrove, mgr. of the Baldwin Piano Co. retail store in Boston. Miss Darré made her American debut with the Boston Symphony on Feb. 2, playing the Saint-Saens G-minor piano concerto.

136

New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
THU FEB 22 1962

Music: French Pianist

Jeanne-Marie Darre Makes U. S. Debut

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

IT has been a week of piano concertos. Monday brought Tamás Vásáry and the Cleveland Orchestra in the Liszt E flat. Tuesday brought Gilels and the Beethoven Second and Fourth with the Symphony of the Air. Last night came Jeanne-Marie Darré and the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Munch, in the Saint-Saens G minor.

Miss Darré has never before played in America, though her name and her playing are no strangers to record collectors. Before the war some fortunate owners of her Lisst, Chopin and D'Indy disks already were in the know, and word was being passed around about this formidable virtuoso. She was the one who, on graduating from the Paris Conservatoire with every honor in sight, played as her graduation pieces all five Saint-Saens concertos at one sitting.

●

During the war, this writer happened to hear her several times in Paris. One of her programs consisted of the twenty-four Chopin etudes, followed by the twenty-four preludes. She ended up stronger than when she started. Then, after the war, came a few long-playing disks—not too many, but enough to make a big impression.

All this is prelude to the fact that on last night's appearance, Miss Darré—chic, platinum blonde, business-like—not only lived up to her reputation and the memory of this writer, but she also left her audience limp. She is an exciting, formidable, electrical virtuoso, who can do anything at the keyboard and do it with aplomb.

But it is not all technique. She has complete tonal control, and a massive sonority. This slim woman lifts her hands high and produces shattering fortissimos. Then she will play running scale passages with extraordinary velocity in pianissimo. Or she will mold a phrase with a melting quality of nuance.

●

Her playing is definitely French in style, but fortunately she manages to avoid the brittle, percussive approach heard from so many of the French pianists who have come here since the war. And, although she can produce a melting phrase, color is not her strong point. The chances are that metrically she is a little four-square. Most products of the Conservatoire are.

Jeanne-Marie Darré

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor; Jeanne-Marie Darre, pianist. At Carnegie Hall.

Symphony No. 5 in B flat.....Schubert
Bacchus et Ariane, Suite No. 2...Roussel
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G Minor.....Saint-Saens
La Valse.....Ravel

But she is miles above most products, both in the exuberance of her playing and its tremendous authority. And, it must not be forgotten, the G minor Concerto poses no great musical problems. It is elegant and likable, but scarcely profound.

What the concerto proved was that Miss Darré is technically resplendent and a superb stylist in this repertory. Hers was about the most brilliant and authoritative performance of the work that one can remember. It covered every aspect of the score, from the plastic shape of the Bachian opening, to the rip-roaring chords and octaves of the first movement, to the feathery double notes of the second, to the marvelously-articulated scales of the third. Part of the success of the performance was Mr. Munch's perfect accompaniment. One hopes that Miss Darré will be an annual visitor here. In certain kinds of music she is an extraordinary pianist.

●

It so happened that there were other things on the program. Mr. Munch conducted a rather lackluster performance of the Schubert Fifth Symphony. Then he turned to music that really means something to him—the Roussel "Bacchus et Ariane" Second Suite and Ravel's "La Valse." Both of these scores, especially the Ravel—a little fast but very exciting and virtuosic—show off the conductor and his orchestra at their best. Their considerable best.

Ginastera Hears Paganini Quartet Here

ALBERTO GINASTERA, Argentine composer, is visiting New York, and last night he went to Judson Hall to hear the Paganini Quartet. His presence led to a change of program.

The ensemble from the University of California at Santa Barbara had scheduled Stravinsky's Three Pieces for String Quartet as the first work after the intermission. But in honor of its South American visitor, it replaced the Stravinsky with Señor Ginastero's First Quartet.

Henri Temianka, founder and leader of the quartet, who announced the surprise substitution, said his ensemble had had the honor of introducing the work. The audience showed its please and goodwill by roundly applauding both Señor Ginastera and his quartet when the composer appeared on the stage at the end of the performance.

The Ginastera Quartet is intense and has strong, almost steam engine, rhythms in its first and last movements. This meant the program had two contemporary works of rather similar intensity. The other was the scheduled String Quartet of Priaulx Rainier, a woman composer of South Africa. It is not well known as a concert piece, but persons in the dance world know it as the score for José Limon's "Night Spell."

The quartet played the work with plenty of vigor. In fact, vigor, rather than suavity, was the order of the evening. For the ensemble also gave vigorous performances of its selections from the standard repertory, Schubert's Quartet in A minor and Beethoven's Quartet in F major, Op. 95.

This was the quartet's first appearance in two years. Since it last played here it has acquired a new second violinist in Stefan Krayk and a new violist in Albert Gillis. They were expert musicians and blended well with their older colleagues, Mr. Temianka and Lucien Laporte, the 'cellist.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
047
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Monday, March 5, 1962

Symphony's 'New Number' a Blonde

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Music Writer

The Boston Symphony, with Charles Munch conducting, had something spectacular to offer on its last concert in New York. It was a person rather than a piece—a slender platinum blonde who played the piano with the strength and endurance of a man twice her heft.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre, a distinguished French piano virtuoso and teacher who this season is playing in the United States for the first time. With the Bostonians she played Saint-Saens' 2nd concerto which is not for a pianist who is faint of heart or flabby of muscle.

Miss Darre dazzled with her mighty fortissimos, her long, rapid and beautifully-sustained pianissimos, which were soft as any whisper. She flexed her tone, and colored it superably.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 25 1962

Critics View Recent Music

The young Hungarian Tamas Vasary, making his local debut Monday night with the Cleveland Orchestra, played with a breadth of style and a resilience which must be the envy of older and more experienced pianists. . . . In a New York debut with the Boston Symphony Wednesday, Jeanne Marie Darré revealed all of the power, combined with aristocratic delicacy, which is the peculiar hallmark of the best French school of piano playing. . . . Emil Gilels, playing with the Symphony of the Air on Tuesday, impressed as one of the great artists of our age.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SUN MAR 4 1962

REPRISE

PIANISTS: Jeanne-Marie Darré, brought here by the Boston Symphony, was "an exciting, formidable, electrical virtuoso." Emil Gilels was "puzzling" playing Beethoven's G major Concerto with the Symphony of the Air, but he played the B flat with "the utmost beauty and refinement." Mendelssohn's A minor Concerto, written at the age of 16, was "gloriously" played by Mieczyslaw Horszowski at the Metropolitan Museum. Anton Kuerti displayed "striking gifts."

OPERA: Joseph Rosenstock's conducting of the first "Macbeth" of the season at the Met was "clear, intelligent and forceful," though there were reservations about the singing. Judith Raskin, "an enchanting Susanna" made a successful Metropolitan debut. The N. B. C. Opera Company's television production of Montemezzi's "L'Amore dei Tre Re" was "good entertainment as well as good music."

ORCHESTRAS: Alfred Wallenstein, leading the New York Philharmonic, made Schubert's Ninth Symphony "move along." André Navarra, 'celio soloist with the Boston Symphony, displayed "poetic sensibility and performing mastery."

SINGERS: Those at Ferruccio Tagliavini's recital enjoyed "the style and manner of a marvelous lyric tenor voice." Joanna Owens, soprano, "was a handsome young lady with talent."

ENSEMBLES: The members of the Clarion Wind Quintet proved "among the best of the New York's fine wind players." The Paganini Quartet played "with plenty of vigor." Claude Monteux, flutist, and Walter Trampler, violist, gave a "lively program."

MUSIC TRADES
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 5,298
FEB 1962

WITH BALDWIN IN BOSTON—David W. Rubin, Baldwin artist mgr.; Jeanne Marie Dare, noted pianist; Charles Munch, Boston Symphony conductor; and Robert Cosgrove, mgr. of the Baldwin Piano Co. retail store in Boston. Miss Darre made her American debut with the Boston Symphony on Feb. 2, playing the Saint-Saens G-minor piano concerto.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
THU FEB 22 1962

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch; soloist: Jeanne Marie Darre, pianist. The program:

Symphony No. 5.....Schubert
"Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2.....Roussel
Piano Concerto No. 2.....Saint-Saens
La Valse.....Ravel

By Ronald Eyer

The petite figure and the fragile feminity of Jean Marie Darré, noted French pianist, fooled you—but not for long. She is a pianist in the grand manner and she has electronic contacts between a precision intellect and the ten fingers of her small lady's hands that one would never have thought were made for such man's work.

Making her American debut with the Boston Symphony, Mme. Darré is known in this country only through her recordings. She is a professor of piano at the Paris Conservatoire and has been highly honored on various occasions by her native France.

She reveals all of the power, combined with aristocratic delicacy, which is the peculiar hallmark of the best of the French school of piano playing. She is, first of all, complete mistress of her instrument. She quite literally can do anything she wants to do with the keyboard, and she romped—there seems to be no other adequate word—through the familiar Saint-Saens concerto with self-assurance and technical security that were awe-inspiring.

She could be poetic, too, as in the opening Andante, and in the Scherzo she brought to bear a true Gallic sense of gaiety and humor with a delightful rhythmic swing that made everything dance, including staccato chords and the delicate traceries of rapid scale runs that were tossed off with the weightlessness of a puff of feathers.

The Boston audience, usually a rather staid crowd, cheered her.

Too bad some of the electricity and elan of this performance could not have been imparted to the first half of the program. The Schubert symphony had the ping and snap of a limp rubber-band. True, it is an early work with constant servile obeisances to the conventions of the classic symphony as Schubert learned them from the models of Haydn and Mozart, and the well-worn melodic contours and harmonic progressions of that era, immediately preceding Schubert's, certainly are all there.

But form could not suppress the natural melodic ingeniousness of the composer, and that makes itself evident too in this work.

The trouble with the performance was that it underscored none of these points incisively nor with much enchantment. The classic mold of the work, with its essential niceties of phrasing and scrupulous punctuation, was largely ignored, and, at the same time, little was made of the lyrical character of the themes which is the characteristically Schubertian ingredient of this music.

The Roussel ballet music sounded like—well, ballet music. And it's no "Petrouchka" nor even "Swan Lake."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D 618,802 S. 812,836
THU FEB 22 1962

AT CARNEGIE HALL

Bostonians Terrific

By MILES KASTENDIECK

FASCINATING, ELECTRIFYING, TERRIFIC: This was the emotional reaction at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night.

Some of it came from sparks shooting off from the orchestra's virtuosity ignited by Charles Munch's fiery conducting. Most of it broke out spontaneously over Jean Marie Darre's scintulating performance of Saint-Saens' Piano Concerto No. 2, for she won an ovation.

She is an incredible pianist. Though widely hailed abroad, she is making her American debut this Winter. What she did with the Saint-Saens concerto will be long remembered. Her performance became the personification of champagne sec.

Blending amazing finger efficiency with the musical bounce of a teenager, she completely rejuvenated the concerto. The authoritative stamp of her opening measures, the elfin lightness of her scherzo playing, the savoir-faire of her timing fused into all-encompassing mastery.

Exhilarating!

Such whirlwind playing easily swept the audience along with her, but it was the precise nature of her pianism that defined her extraordinary achievement. Since Mr. Munch and she were in perfect rapport, the performance was exhilarating.

The concert actually began in tepid fashion. Schubert's Symphony No. 5 sounded so pleasantly relaxed that it hardly prepared the audience for the intensity Mr. Munch generated in Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2. This highly personalized performance was repeated at the end of the program in Ravel's "La Valse."

How remarkably the Boston Symphony responds to Mr. Munch's moments of frenzy attests its stunning virtuosity. In both the barbaric dance of Roussel and the sophisticated irony of "La Valse", he whipped it into breathless performance. Such dramatic impulses sometimes become the antithesis of precision, but the emotional impact and the splashes of color have their compensating values. Only a first-class orchestra could cope with these consuming demands when virtuosity is in the saddle.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
THU FEB 22 1962

Music

Darre Debuts At Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

France's First Lady of the Keyboard—and very possibly the world's—made a sensational New York debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last night.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre, an elegant, shapely little woman with white hair, handsome features, and two of the most extraordinary hands of our time.

To those who hadn't heard Mme. Darre's recordings—among them myself—the performance of Saint-Saens' G Minor Concerto was truly a revelation.

Great Style.

Here was style with a capital S, and class of the same exalted order, backed by one of the most spectacular techniques of the day. Where had Mme. Darre been hiding—and why?

There was something symbolic about the lady's debut on the Boston Symphony program at this time. Conductor Charles Munch is leaving us for good this spring. It was as if Mme. Darre were a farewell gift to his American public.

And what a gift! There is really only one way to play the Saint-Saens concerto and that is Mme. Darre's—with complete conviction, absolute refinement, and the brilliance of diamonds.

From the piano seemed to come clusters of gems, gleaming with a thousand hues. The runs in the slow movement were strings of pearls. The tarantella finale was never so dazzling.

Through it all, the smartly garbed Mme Darre sat there like a queen, her swaying little body a figure of compact grace. When she bowed and walked off she was the epitome of music in motion.

Toast of the Hall.

It was really something to watch her come out, take perfect bows, and trimly weave her way back through rows of dazzled musicians. She was the toast of all Carnegie Hall last night—and a heady one!

After a procession of male dynamos of the keys from all parts of the world, it was about time a little charmer came along from Paris to show, in a witchery of finesse, that it wasn't altogether a man's world.

Mr. Munch is to be thanked and congratulated for his Schubert, Roussel, Saint-Saens, and Ravel—but most of all for the chic little compatriot who made history last night.

....., N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,590
THU FEB 22 1962

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Darre Makes Debut With Bostonians

As the Saint-Saens G Minor Concerto has no words or weapons, French pianist Jeanne Marie Darre could link France and Algeria last night in Carnegie Hall without a single barb. In the final Presto, which tosses off its melodies at tarentella speed, she turned her fingers as lightly and swiftly as a whirling dervish moves its feet.

Blond as Marilyn Monroe, and with as ready a smile, Miss Darre was making her local debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. She projected the concerto so buoyantly, she could have been bringing it to the audience by parachute.

Her agile finger technique was characteristically French, while her Gallic wave and direct proficiency made us forget that French intellectual nihilism had ever confused us.

Tone was Thin

Mme. Darre's tone was light, at times, even thin, also a familiar French pianistic trait. Her double-note technique lacked virtuoso abandon, control and brilliance. Rather, the artist's interpretation was marked by charm and spirit.

Though she didn't—with her model's figure and decollete gown—look like a femme professeur she does teach piano at the Paris Conservatoire. Her bright performance and personality made a hit with the audience and they acclaimed her when she had finished.

Munch, who provided a scintillating accompaniment for the Concerto, opened the program with a sleepy, undistinguished accounting of Schubert's Fifth Symphony. The concert came to life, however, with Roussel's Second Suite from his ballet, "Bacchus et Adriane." Ravel's "Valse" brought the program to a conclusion.

Opening Tonight...

"A GIFT OF TIME," at Barrymore. Adaptation by Garson Kanin of the book, "Death of a Man," by Lael Tucker Wertenbaker. Produced by William Hammerstein in association with David Shaber and William Snyder Jr. Staged by Kanin. Sets by Boris Aronson and costumes by Edith Lutyens Bel Geddes. Co-stars Henry Fonda and Olivia de Havilland. Cast features Marian Seldes, Guy Sorel, Lucretia Gould, Joseph Campanella, Leslye Hunter, Rufus Smith, Gary Morgan and John MacKay. Curtain at 7:30.

138

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN FEB 18 1962

MME. DARRÉ COMES HERE FOR THE FIRST TIME

By RAYMOND ERICSON

WHEN Jeanne-Marie Darré appears as soloist with the Boston Symphony on Wednesday night, New Yorkers will have an unusual experience. They will hear for the first time a pianist who has been well known in Europe for more than thirty years.

Why has she not come to the United States before? Mme. Darré shrugs her shoulders at such a question and answers that it has never been convenient. "I have been asked to come," she says, "but somehow there has always been too much to do."

The reply is characteristic of the woman and of her life. For Mme. Darré is, by her own admission, "wedded to the piano."

A short, trim woman with short-cropped blond hair, the pianist dresses with the chic expected of a Parisian. Except that she speaks little English, she might be a mature successful career woman in New York. Now in her fifties, she looks forty, and, according to reports, plays with the vitality of someone 30 years old.

"When I am not giving a concert," she says in her considered, impersonal manner, "I still practice for four hours in the morning, beginning at 8 o'clock. My afternoons I spend at the Conservatoire, where I teach."

At least an hour of Mme. Darré's practice is devoted to exercises and studies, particularly those she learned from Isidore Philipp, with whom she worked for more than twenty years. And right before a performance she can be heard running through scales on any piano available backstage.

Musical Mother

Mme. Darré was born in Givet, a customs station on the Belgian border in the Ardennes region of France. Her mother, an amateur pianist and singer, was her first teacher.

Although she does not say so, the pianist must have shown unusual talent, for she was taken to Paris at an early age. "I heard there when I was very young," Mme. Darré remembers, "the great pianists of the time—Busoni, Paderewski and Rosenthal—and all I wanted to do was play the piano."

Of Philipp, she recalls that he was "a cold man, very strict." With him she studied technique. Her other leading piano teacher at the Conservatoire was Marguerite Long, who at the age of 87 is still teaching there. That thought spurs an amused comment from Mme. Darré: "People in music live a long time, no?"

Although Mme. Darré has been appearing in concerts since the age of 14, it was in 1926, when she was 21, that she created something of a furore by playing the five Saint-Saëns concertos in one concert. This was with the orchestra of the Concerts Lamoureux, led by Paul Paray, at the Salle Erard. The pianist repeated the feat on two other occasions. In recent years she has recorded the five concertos.

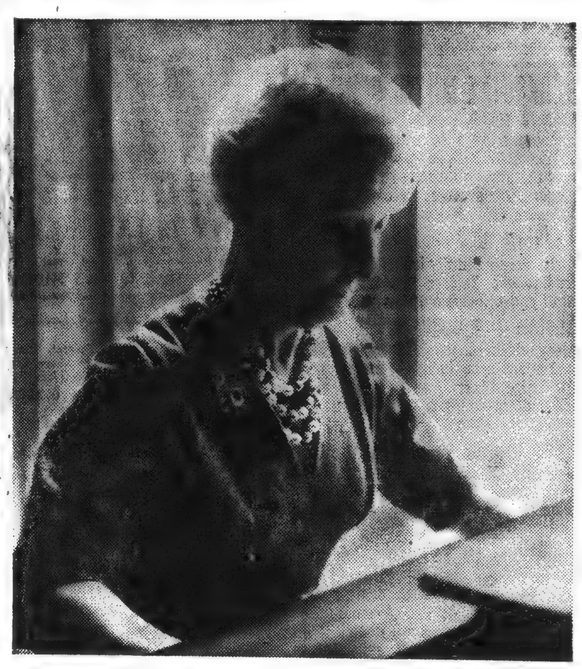
Saint-Saëns, Chopin, Liszt and other composers of the romantic school supply the music in Mme. Darré's repertory. Did she ever play Couperin and Rameau? "When I was a student," she replies with a deprecating gesture. Did she ever play contemporary music? "I am interested to hear it but I do not have the time to learn it."

Now a professor of piano at the Conservatoire where she won first prizes as a student, Mme. Darré was awarded the Legion of Honor in 1950 and made a Chevalier des Arts et Lettres in 1960. She is a frequent judge in international piano competitions.

She was reluctant to single out any young students of hers who showed particular promise. "I have three French girls, in their teens, who have much talent," she said and then added immediately: "I have three young American boys, in their twenties—not at the Conservatoire but studying with me privately. They are so gifted, like so many of your young American pianists!"

What did Mme. Darré think of America, on her first visit? "Things are so easy here," was her first reaction. "You get things done here. You find a way to arrange them. In Europe there are always difficulties."

Mme. Darré's current American visit is a brief one, and she returns to Europe for a concert tour that will take her to Budapest, a city she plays in annually and loves for its musical public. She has no idea when she might return here. She leaves this up to her managers. If the Americans want her back she knows that they will be able to "arrange" it.



Vilem Rosegnal, Harold Bergsohn

BOSTON'S GALLIC TOUCH—French soloists, André Navarra, 'cellist, and Jeanne-Marie Darré, pianist, will appear with the Boston Symphony here this week. Orchestra's regular leader, Charles Munch, also from France, conducts.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

SUN FEB 25 1962

ANDRE NAVARRA, 'CELLIST, IN DEBUT

French Musician Introduced by the Boston Symphony

By ERIC SALZMAN

For the second time in a week, the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch presented an excellent French soloist not previously heard here.

On Wednesday at Carnegie Hall, Jeanne Marie Darré, the pianist, had a successful appearance with the orchestra. Yesterday afternoon, at the same location, André Navarra, the 'cellist, appeared. The musical results were again impressive.

M. Navarra's vehicle was the Dvorak Concerto and the work was perfect for his poetic sensibility and performing mastery. His secret is a kind of easy musical flow, always rich in expressive values, full of lyric phrase but also capable of drive and power. His playing never succumbs to virtuosity and never distorts for mere effect, yet remains flexible and brilliant.

The tone is not lush as 'cello tone qualities go; it tends rather to a reedy sound. But it is always elegant, focused and true; and there is a suppleness and a singing quality that contribute to a deeper sense of musical line and expression.

The program was Dr. Munch's next-to-last in New York as music director of the orchestra. It provided something of a Slavonic afternoon, for, in addition to the Dvorak, Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques" (also called Symphony No. 6) was a feature.

This work, dedicated to the conductor and the orchestra, was played here in 1956 and it was a felicitous idea to bring it around again. Like many of the late composer's works, it is full of reminiscences of other music, stylistic references that run the gamut from Brahms to impressionism to Stravinsky.

It is often mysterious sometimes commonplace, usually colorful; it is romantic, vital, inconsistent, expressive, odd, assertive. It is all these things and more; yet somehow everything is managed together in a work that has very much its own kind of statement and personality.

The symphony had a superbly effective reading, full of the golden glow of Boston tone that also suffused the orchestral part of the Dvorak. The Dvorak had some tiny roughnesses; the Martinu seemed to have almost none. Neither did the Handel-Harty "Water Music" that opened the program. If one didn't mind baroque music bathed in a gorgeous, big-orchestra tapestry of sound, one could rejoice in a reading of 165 Church Street ...

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691

MON FEB 26 1962

Bostonians At Carnegie

Now in his closing months with the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch delivered another memorable farewell flourish at the Saturday afternoon concert in Carnegie Hall.

This time it wis a twofold gift to the American public of whom, after many inspiring years, he will soon take leave. There was the presentation of an accomplished French cellist —and there was his own incisive conducting.

The cellist, Andre Navarra, proved an artist of high musical caliber and poetic distinction. A velvety tone, plus an easy, unobstrusive technic, wove gracefully through his reading of Dvorak's B minor concerto. Thank you, Mr. Munch.

L. B.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

FEB 18 1962

Navarra, Munch Here Monday

Cellist Andre Navarra will be guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, in a Bushnell Symphony Series concert Monday at 8:15 p.m. Navarra will be heard in the solo portions of Dvorak's Concerto for Violoncello, in B minor, a work which Dvorak composed during the several years he lived in this country.

Born in Biarritz in 1911, the son of a bass player, Navarra obtained his early musical education at the Conservatory of Toulouse. After taking the top award at the International Competition for Cellists in Vienna in 1937, he began his career as a virtuoso. He is now professor of violoncello at the Paris Conservatoire and at the Academia Chigiana in Siena. His current tour is his first in this country.

Dr. Munch, who will be conducting his final Hartford concert Monday, He plans to retire soon; has selected for his program, in addition to the Dvorak work, Handel's "Water Music Suite" as arranged by Sir William Harty; Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniques" (Symphony No. 6).

A limited number of tickets will be available at the box office.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON FEB 26 1962

Cellist Navarra Plays, With Munch Directing

By Francis D. Perkins

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth afternoon concert of the season at Carnegie Hall closed Saturday with the Manhattan debut of Andre Navarra, a talented French cellist, who played Dvorak's Concerto in B minor with the musicians under Charles Munch's direction. Another work by a Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniquea," shared the first half of the program with the suite arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty from Handel's "Water Music."

Mr. Navarra, who is fifty years old, made his first New York appearance in this orchestra's Brooklyn concert on Friday. He is a discerning and sensitive musician whose ability, in this performance, was disclosed with increasing persuasiveness during the concerto's first movement. His technique met all of the music's demands, but in an objective rather than a virtuosic manner. His tone, after dispensing with a slightly grainy timbre at the outset, was appealing and lyric in quality.

Fine Shading

While the volume of tone was fully adequate, this was intimate rather than proclamative playing marked by fine distinctions of color and dynamic shading, while Mr. Navarra also conveyed the general atmosphere of the concerto along with subtle distinctions of expressive detail. Although Mr. Munch and the orchestra played the tutti passages with full and imposing sonority, their cooperation with the soloist was expertly balanced and never overbearing.

Martinu's "Fantaisies" had several performances here by the Boston Symphony, for which it was composed, in 1955 and 1956. The Czech savor which pervades much of the Dvorak concerto also is apparent in some of Mr. Martinu's themes, but this is not a major characteristic of a work, which stands the test of repetition successfully in the distinction of its ideas and their treatment; its expert scoring and in an expressive appeal which does not storm the listener's emotions. It has sustained conviction in measures which are often meditative, but also includes livelier and more outspoken episodes.

The conductor and orchestra presented this work with a particularly communicative understanding in playing which possessed what might be described as luminous reflectiveness, along with ample vigor and momentum when these were required. Sweeping sonority and suavity alternated in the performance of the "Water Music."

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, February 15, 1962

'Cellist Hailed by Casals As 'Best' to Perform Here

The penultimate appearance in Brooklyn of Charles Munch leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra at [illegible] recitals by the only woman pianist ever to appear as a soloist with Toscanini and by a performer hailed by Pablo Casals as "the best 'cellist I've ever heard" will mark the coming week's program at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

Mr. Munch's next-to-last appearance here as musical director of the Boston Symphony will be next Friday night, Feb. 23, at 8:30. He will conduct again on April 6 and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949.

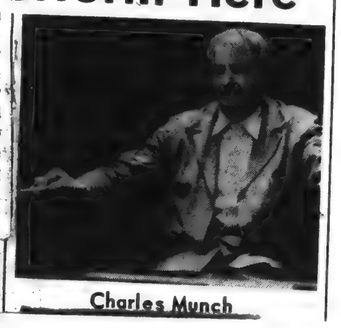
At the Feb. 23 concert he will introduce the French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B Minor in his New York debut.

The balance of the program will include the Sir Hamilton Harty arrangement of the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" and Martinu's Symphony No. 6 ("Fantaisies Symphoniques").

The pianist and the 'cellist with the remarkable backgrounds are Ania Dorfmann and Raya Garbousova. They will sppear on Tuesday night's program, which begins at 8:30.

Miss Dorfmann made her solo appearance with the NBC Symphony under Toscanini in 1936. This launched her American career, which subsequently has seen her perform with many major symphony orchestras in the United States.

In addition to being hailed by Casals, Miss Garbousova has appeared with all the major American and European symphony orchestras.



Charles Munch

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
MON FEB 26 1962

New Cellist Is Pleasing

Charles Muench and the Boston Symphony introduced a new French cellist in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. His name is Andre Navarra. And he promises to be the kind of cellist orchestra managers are looking for.

Playing the Dvorak Cello Concerto, he immediately revealed a big tone, ingratiating style of playing, and admirable technique.

His tone sings richly though it may not be soulfully resonant; his bow is clean and agile; and his phrasing neat and telling.

He caught the spirit of the work invitingly with a touch of showmanship to make his account of it distinctive.

The program included Martinu's "Fantasies Symphoniques" which Mr. Muench had introduced here so successfully six years ago and which may not be heard again soon now that he is retiring. The work sustains the fine impression that made it a prize-winner.

It has personality and vitality, together with a thoroughly individual appeal, recalling the distinctive aspect of Martinu's music. The concert began with Handel's "Mater Music."

—Miles Kastendieck.

165 Chu
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
MON FEB 19 1962

Footlights And Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Cellist to Pay with Symphony

Talk about cello players and you better begin with Pablo Casals, the master soloist who took the instrument to White House recognition.

It is Casals who set the standards for cellist today, both how they play and what they play.

If it hadn't been for him, for example, Andre Navarra might not be making his first New York appearance Friday with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. It was Mr. Casals who sparked what demand there is today for the cello as a solo instrument.

RAYA GARBOUSOVA.
She won the master's praise.

Mr. Navarra, a noted French cellist, will play Dvorak's concerto in B, established in the modern repertory by Casals in a classic recording 25 years ago.

And tomorow night, Raya Garbousova will appear in a cello recital at the Academy. She is a former pupil of Mr. Casals and reputedly won his praise once as "the best cellist I've ever heard." (The remark should furnish a clue as to why Mr. Casal is probably the only string-player all musicians admire without reservation.)

Miss Garbousova, who will play with pianist Ania Dorfmann, has performed with orchestras througout the country. She has introduced contemporary works herself—modern composers write for Casals—but she'll play pieces by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert and Chopin at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Like other female cellists, Miss Garbousova would probably also acknowledge her debt as a musician to the adjustable "tail piece", the mechanical support which replaced the difficult old technique of holding the cello between the knees.

Mr. Navarra's reputation is international, but this is his first trip to the United States. He has taught at the Paris Conservatory and has been soloist with Europe's leading orchestras.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in its fourth appearance here this season. Also on the program are Handel's "Water Music Suite," as arranged by Harty, and Schubert's Fifth Symphony. The concert begins at 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Munch's last appearance as music director of the Boston, from which he retires this season, will be April 6 in an all-French program—Berlizo's "Symphony Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer," and Ravel's Second "Daphnis and Chloe Suite."

165 Church
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 25 1962

Cellist Makes Debut Here With Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth afternoon concert of the season at Carnegie Hall closed yesterday with the Manhattan debut of Andre Navarra, a talented French cellist, who played Dvorak's Concerto in B minor with the musicians under Charles Munch's direction. Another work by a Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniquea," shared the first half of the program with the suite arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty from Handel's "Water Music."

Mr. Navarra, who is fifty years old, made his first New York appearance in this orchestra's Brooklyn concert on Friday. He is a discerning and sensitive musician whose ability, in this performance, was disclosed with increasing persuasiveness during the concerto's first movement. His technique met all of the music's demands, but in an objective rather than a virtuosic manner. His tone, after dispensing with a slightly grainy timbre at the outset, was appealing and lyric in quality.

Fine Shading

While the volume of tone was fully adequate, this was intimate rather than proclamative playing marked by fine distinctions of color and dynamic shading, while Mr. Navarra also conveyed the general atmosphere of the concerto along with subtle distinctions of expressive detail. Although Mr. Munch and the orchestra played the tutti passages with full and imposing sonority, their cooperation with the soloist was expertly balanced and never overbearing.

Martinu's "Fantaisies" had several performances here by the Boston Symphony, for which it was composed, in 1955 and 1956. The Czech savor which pervades much of the Dvorak concerto also is apparent in some of Mr. Martinu's themes, but this is not a major characteristic of a work, which stands the test of repetition successfully in the distinction of its ideas and their treatment; its expert scoring and in an expressive appeal which does not storm the listener's emotions, but has sustained conviction in measures which are often meditative, but also includes livelier and more outspoken episodes.

The conductor and orchestra presented this work with a particularly communicative understanding in playing which possessed what might be described as luminous reflectiveness, along with ample vigor and momentum when these were required. Sweeping sonority and suavity alternated in the performance of the "Water Music."

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

A highly effective program by the Boston Symphony, Feb. 24, under the direction of Charles Munch featured the New York debut of cellist Andre Navarra. Mr. Navarra, who made his United States debut in Boston the week before, played the Dvorak Cello Concerto in an aristocratic, controlled, yet flowing style. The music was never over-sentimental, yet always romantic and emotionally moving. The program opened with a beautiful reading of the well-known Handel-Harty "Water Music." This was followed by a brilliant performance of Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques," which should be played more often.—S. C. C.

* * *

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MON FEB 26 1962

Cellist Navarra Plays, With Munch Directing

By Francis D. Perkins

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth afternoon concert of the season at Carnegie Hall closed Saturday with the Manhattan debut of Andre Navarra, a talented French cellist, who played Dvorak's Concerto in B minor with the musicians under Charles Munch's direction. Another work by a Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniquea," shared the first half of the program with the suite arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty from Handel's "Water Music."

Mr. Navarra, who is fifty years old, made his first New York appearance in this orchestra's Brooklyn concert on Friday. He is a discerning and sensitive musician whose ability, in this performance, was disclosed with increasing persuasiveness during the concerto's first movement. His technique met all of the music's demands, but in an objective rather than a virtuosic manner. His tone, after dispensing with a slightly grainy timbre at the outset, was appealing and lyric in quality.

Fine Shading

While the volume of tone was fully adequate, this was intimate rather than proclamative playing marked by fine distinctions of color and dynamic shading, while Mr. Navarra also conveyed the general atmosphere of the concerto along with subtle distinctions of expressive detail. Although Mr. Munch and the orchestra played the tutti passages with full and imposing sonority, their cooperation with the soloist was expertly balanced and never overbearing.

Martinu's "Fantaisies" had several performances here by the Boston Symphony, for which it was composed, in 1955 and 1956. The Czech savor which pervades much of the Dvorak concerto also is apparent in some of Mr. Martinu's themes, but this is not a major characteristic of a work, which stands the test of repetition successfully in the distinction of its ideas and their treatment; its expert scoring and in an expressive appeal which does not storm the listener's emotions. It has sustained conviction in measures which are often meditative, but also includes livelier and more outspoken episodes.

The conductor and orchestra presented this work with a particularly communicative understanding in playing which possessed what might be described as luminous reflectiveness, along with ample vigor and momentum when these were required. Sweeping sonority and suavity alternated in the performance of the "Water Music."

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, February 15, 1962

'Cellist Hailed by Casals As 'Best' to Perform Here

The penultimate appearance in Brooklyn of Charles Munch leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] recitals by the only woman pianist ever to appear as a soloist with Toscanini and by a performer hailed by Pablo Casals as "the best 'cellist I've ever heard" will mark the coming week's program at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave.

Mr. Munch's next-to-last appearance here as musical director of the Boston Symphony will be next Friday night, Feb. 23, at 8:30. He will conduct again on April 6 and then retire from the orchestra he has led since 1949.

At the Feb. 23 concert he will introduce the French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who will perform Dvorak's Concerto in B Minor in his New York debut.

The balance of the program will include the Sir Hamilton Harty arrangement of the Suite from Handel's "Water Music" and Martinu's Symphony No. 6 ("Fantaisies Symphoniques").

The pianist and the 'cellist with the remarkable backgrounds are Ania Dorfmann and Raya Garbousova. They will appear on Tuesday night's program, which begins at 8:30.

Miss Dorfmann made her solo appearance with the NBC Symphony under Toscanini in 1936. This launched her American career, which subsequently has seen her perform with many major symphony orchestras in the United States.

In addition to being hailed by Casals, Miss Garbousova has appeared with all the major American and European symphony orchestras.

Charles Munch

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
MON FEB 26 1962

New Cellist Is Pleasing

Charles Muench and the Boston Symphony introduced a new French cellist in Carnegie Hall Saturday afternoon. His name is Andre Navarra. And he promises to be the kind of cellist orchestra managers are looking for.

Playing the Dvorak Cello Concerto, he immediately revealed a big tone, ingratiating style of playing, and admirable technique.

His tone sings richly though it may not be soulfully resonant; his bow is clean and agile; and his phrasing neat and telling.

He caught the spirit of the work invitingly with a touch of showmanship to make his account of it distinctive.

The program included Martinu's "Fantasies Symphoniques" which Mr. Muench had introduced here so successfully six years ago and which may not be heard again soon now that he is retiring. The work sustains the fine impression that made it a prize-winner.

It has personality and vitality, together with a thoroughly individual appeal, recalling the distinctive aspect of Martinu's music. The concert began with Handel's "Mater Music."

—Miles Kastendieck.

165 Chu
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
MON FEB 19 1962

165 Church
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
SUN FEB 25 1962

Cellist Makes Debut Here With Boston Symphony

By Francis D. Perkins

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's fourth afternoon concert of the season at Carnegie Hall closed yesterday with the Manhattan debut of Andre Navarra, a talented French cellist, who played Dvorak's Concerto in B minor with the musicians under Charles Munch's direction. Another work by a Czech composer, Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies Symphoniquea," shared the first half of the program with the suite arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty from Handel's "Water Music."

Mr. Navarra, who is fifty years old, made his first New York appearance in this orchestra's Brooklyn concert on Friday. He is a discerning and sensitive musician whose ability, in this performance, was disclosed with increasing persuasiveness during the concerto's first movement. His technique met all of the music's demands, but in an objective rather than a virtuosic manner. His tone, after dispensing with a slightly grainy timbre at the outset, was appealing and lyric in quality.

Fine Shading

While the volume of tone was fully adequate, this was intimate rather than proclamative playing marked by fine distinctions of color and dynamic shading, while Mr. Navarra also conveyed the general atmosphere of the concerto along with subtle distinctions of expressive detail. Although Mr. Munch and the orchestra played the tutti passages with full and imposing sonority, their cooperation with the soloist was expertly balanced and never overbearing.

Martinu's "Fantaisies" had several performances here by the Boston Symphony, for which it was composed, in 1955 and 1956. The Czech savor which pervades much of the Dvorak concerto also is apparent in some of Mr. Martinu's themes, but this is not a major characteristic of a work, which stands the test of repetition successfully in the distinction of its ideas and their treatment; its expert scoring and in an expressive appeal which does not storm the listener's emotions, but has sustained conviction in measures which are often meditative, but also includes livelier and more outspoken episodes.

The conductor and orchestra presented this work with a particularly communicative understanding in playing which possessed what might be described as luminous reflectiveness, along with ample vigor and momentum when these were required. Sweeping sonority and suavity alternated in the performance of the "Water Music."

Footlights And Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Cellist to Pay with Symphony

Talk about cello players and you better begin with Pablo Casals, the master soloist who took the instrument to White House recognition.

It is Casals who set the standards for cellist today, both how they play and what they play.

If it hadn't been for him, for example, Andre Navarra might not be making his first New York appearance Friday with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. It was Mr. Casals who sparked what demand there is today for the cello as a solo instrument.

Mr. Navarra, a noted French cellist, will play Dvorak's concerto in B, established in the modern repertory by Casals in a classic recording 25 years ago.

RAYA GARBOUSOVA.
She won the master's praise.

And tomorow night, Raya Garbousova will appear in a cello recital at the Academy. She is a former pupil of Mr. Casals and reputedly won his praise once as "the best cellist I've ever heard." (The remark should furnish a clue as to why Mr. Casal is probably the only string-player all musicians admire without reservation.)

Miss Garbousova, who will play with pianist Ania Dorfmann, has performed with orchestras througout the country. She has introduced contemporary works herself—modern composers write for Casals—but she'll play pieces by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schubert and Chopin at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Like other female cellists, Miss Garbousova would probably also acknowledge her debt as a musician to the adjustable "tail piece", the mechanical support which replaced the difficult old technique of holding the cello between the knees.

Mr. Navarra's reputation is international, but this is his first trip to the United States. He has taught at the Paris Conservatory and has been soloist with Europe's leading orchestras.

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in its fourth appearance here this season. Also on the program are Handel's "Water Music Suite," as arranged by Harty, and Schubert's Fifth Symphony. The concert begins at 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Munch's last appearance as music director of the Boston, from which he retires this season, will be April 6 in an all-French program—Berlizo's "Symphony Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer," and Ravel's Second "Daphnis and Chloe Suite."

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1962

Boston Symphony

A highly effective program by the Boston Symphony, Feb. 24, under the direction of Charles Munch featured the New York debut of cellist André Navarra. Mr. Navarra, who made his United States debut in Boston the week before, played the Dvorak Cello Concerto in an aristocratic, controlled, yet flowing style. The music was never over-sentimental, yet always romantic and emotionally moving. The program opened with a beautiful reading of the well-known Handel-Harty "Water Music." This was followed by a brilliant performance of Bohuslav Martinu's "Fantaisies symphoniques," which should be played more often.—S. C. C.

* * *

140

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477

FEB 10 1962

MUSIC TO MY EARS

"Ballo" in Sweden—Valkki, Roberti, Mahler No. 3

RULE Number One of the wary impresario is well known: "Don't produce an opera if you can't cast the title part." In this respect at least, the choice of "Un Ballo in Maschera" as the latest in the Metropolitan's lengthy series of Verdi restorations, and the only new production of this austerity season, was reasonable: the "Ballo" which brings it to a close was a brilliantly colorful summation of Ita Maximowna's first scenic venture for this stage, and a neatly satisfactory solution of the operatic problem in this "title part."

Otherwise and elsewhere, the elected choices among possible alternatives ran more to the expedient than the inevitable. Strength was concentrated among the males, with the well-sustained effort of Robert Merrill as Renato the closest approach to a summation of dramatic as well as vocal requirements. It bears honorable scars of a broadcast with the late Arturo Toscanini, and retains more than a few distinctions from that experience beyond a beautifully sung "Eri tu." Whether as Renato of the text (or Captain Anckarström in the pedantic propriety of the "original" Swedish names in the cast listing), Merrill was in and of the scene from his first entrance, a steady fulcrum to some teetering (if not tottering) of the others around him.

Not quite so snug a fit either for Maximowna's carefully tailored costumes or the total requirements of Verdi, was Carlo Bergonzi's King (either as Riccardo or Gustaf III, his subjects were ruthless among the raucous coterie in the standing room than the courtiers on the stage). His is a voice of rare beauty and evenness, now under more consistent control than before, but a shade light, at the full, for the dramatic turn the music takes as the evening progresses. However such flexibility and grace in the Barcarolle and especially in "E scherzo od è follia," in which, with a light stroke of characterization, Verdi illuminated his view of the philandering monarch, are heard infrequently. But voice alone does not make an artist, and Bergonzi is still more enamored of the stage as a platform from which to snare applause than as an area of action.

Not to be ignored among the men of merit was Nello Santi, whose Metropolitan debut as a conductor was much more than merely creditable. Young (thirty-one) and thoroughly indoctrinated in the ways of the Italian theatre in which he grew up, Santi brings with him from Zurich (his present base) one attribute mandatory for a conductor of quality—a discerning ear. The orchestral sound, whether restrained or powerful, was never coarse, and when he had suitable elements at his command (as in the trio of Ulrica, Oscar, and Riccardo in the second scene of Act I) the blend was true and resonant. In addition to sure knowledge of the score (he had one closed before him) and self-possession, he also showed a disposition to quick tempi, which may have been in the nature of his reaction to this occasion. In abeyance was a real surge of leadership, the driving urge to make the performance go his way rather than that of the celebrities before him. But this did not do honor to the greatest of them—Verdi.

Nor, for that matter, did the group of female performers, whose efforts accentuated rather than ameliorated the unevenness of Verdi's own accomplishment. "Ballo," after all, is decidedly a transitional work, in the gray area between Late First Period (it follows the great trio of "Rigoletto," "Trovatore," and "Traviata"), and Early Middle (the time of "Forza," "Don Carlo," and the revised "Boccanegra"). For the true kind of creative fulfillment of Amelia's need to be lyric and dramatic by turns, the present vocal command of Leonie Rysanek is, simply, insufficient. She can sear the ear with a ringing top tone in the climax of the duet with Riccardo, or she can, in a quiet moment, drop to a thin thread, well sustained. In between, the results are more miss than hit, wooly at the bottom, with an uncomfortable tremolo in the middle. Possibly there are some problems of general health involved, but the ability to work a finely graded dynamic line or charm the ear with sheer beauty of sound is not her strong suit.

This is doubly unfortunate because she looks well, and has that surge of theatrical instinct which responds to Verdi's crushing climaxes. Also, in this cast there was not much counterbalance to her sound among that produced by the other women: Jean Madeira's hollow, unlovely [illegible] of making Ulrica impressive was [illegible] with the skimpy flute [illegible] Rothenberger's attempt to deal with the mid music of Oscar. When she had opportunity to curve a solid legato line (as in the trio previously mentioned), Miss Rothenberger's artistry was plain to hear. But too much elsewhere required her to be something she isn't, on the Metropolitan roster, at any rates.

Obviously Herbert Graf approached the intensifying brightness of the last scenes (a beautifully painted backdrop for the King's chamber as prelude to the skilfully chromatic ball scene in the Stockholm Opera where the original ball, and assassination, took place) by way of atmospherically darker ones. But Ulrica's den was ill-defined rather than merely untidy, the "campo abominato" where Amelia goes to find the magic herb overpopulated by not two or three gibbets, but four, with a fifth in disarray. This did not multiply terror, but did subtract credibility. For the most part, Maximowna's palette treated costumes and background as one entity, or fragmented elements of an embracing color scheme both harmonious and elegant, though the bright green gown Amelia wore for herb-hunting was scarcely calculated for anonymity. Günther Rennert's staging was, by dint of the Maximowna decor largely realistic, with some baffling turns to symbolism now and then, as in the large shadows of Sam (Bonaldo Giaiotti) and Tom (Luben Vichey, returned from his Wanderjahre) in the conspiritorial trio with Renato. For all the elaborate allusions to a Swedish locale (which, to be sure, is preferable to a never-never Boston accepted by Verdi at a censor's insistence), "Ballo" remains a singularly Italian opera which urgently requires, for total justice, a higher consistency of vocal art than it is currently receiving at the Metropolitan.

THE NAME of Margherita Roberti is more likely to be heard with frequency in the near future than that of Anita Valkki, but of these two new singers of late January debuts the Finnish soprano who sang a strong Brünnhilde in the season's last Walküre has more for the longer future than the American who offered a rather routine Tosca in her first appearance. Voices that combine size with the beauty of Miss Valkki's are hardly common in the broad range of the operatic repertory, appreciably less so in the specifically Wagnerian one. She is bulky and rather short for the mind's vision of a Valkyrie, but she presented her credentials with a firmly placed, if slightly shrill, "Yo ho to ho" (without benefit of rehearsal, of course), going on to a strong statement of the scene with Siegmund. Some Brünnhildes have made it more ominous, but the pronouncements were carried on a sturdily sustained legato attesting to excellent production and, as yet, no signs of the hard, edgy sound commonly associated with "Wagner soprano." It was an excellent night for Jon Vickers, whose Siegmund was appreciably better than it had been earlier, and a good one for Jerome Hines as Wotan.

Thanks to substantial indoctrination here and abroad, Miss Roberti survived the maelstrom of a debut that also brought Franco Corelli's first Cavaradossi and Anselmo Colzani's initial Scarpia. For it, however, she has paid the price in vocal freshness or real beauty of sound: volume was more conspicuous than quality, though in adaptability alone she will doubtless serve some Metropolitan ends well. Corelli's Cavaradossi was as loud as his Calaf and no more subtle than his Manrico, Colzani's Scarpia a duplicate, in courtlier clothes, of his abrasive Rance in "Fanciulla." Kurt Adler's conducting did little more than adjudicate the conflicting claims of the contestants.

As an incident of its latest visit to Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony offered a chance for revaluation of Mahler's lengthy Third Symphony in the leisurely setting of a Saturday matinee. For the occasion, Charles Munch turned his baton over to his lieutenant, Richard Burgin, who reacted by a rapid accension in rank to the generalship required.

Or nearly. For my tonal tolerance, the first movement begins to fragment and digress and otherwise become diffuse before half of its thirty-minute length is expended. And the last pronouncement of the sixth-movement finale has more the pomp inherent in heavy percussion and brass than the circumstances to justify it. Between, however, there is a considerable total of warmly imagined, aptly expressed music, which Burgin exposed with a strong sense of the singular texture Mahler made of low strings and woodwinds, the melodic rather than the proclamative brass. Among other wind instruments artistically played upon to advance Mahler's interest, were the beautifully controlled, finely tinted mezzo of Florence Kopleff (in the "O Mensch" excerpt from Nietzsche) and the trumpet-in-a-hat skilfully phrased by Armando Ghitalla (a substitute for the fluegelhorn specified by Mahler, and if not quite so brassy, a little more amenable to discipline). The Chorus Pro Musica, of which Alfred Nash Patterson is the conductor, also merits commendation. —IRVING KOLODIN.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC NOT AVAIL.

APR 1962

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Carnegie Hall, February 21—SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major. ROUSSEL: "Bacchus et Ariane" Suite No. 2, Op. 43. SAINT-SAENS: Piano Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Op. 22. RAVEL: La Valse. Jeanne Marie Darré, piano; Charles Munch, conductor.

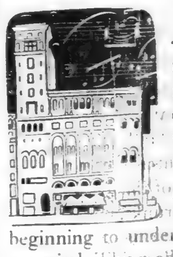
Carnegie Hall, February 24—HANDEL-HARTY: "Water Music" Suite for Orchestra. MARTINU: Symphony No. 6, "Fantaisies symphoniques." DVORAK: Cello Concerto in B Minor, Op. 104. André Navarra, cello; Charles Munch, conductor.

Two New York debuts highlighted the fourth pair of Boston Symphony concerts in New York, Jeanne Marie Darré and cellist André Navarra. Mme. Darré is undoubtedly one of the finest pianists around and it is amazing that it took her so long to reach these shores. Her technique was flawless, her phrasing was perfect and there was a complete unity between soloist and orchestra. In short, I do not expect to hear a performance of the Saint-Saëns work on this level again.

Navarra was almost on a par with his countrywoman in the difficult Dvorak Concerto. He emphasized the lyrical aspects of this nationalistic work and his best moments were in the second movement. Munch is well-known for his affinity for the French school and his performance of La Valse and Bacchus et Ariane was full, sumptuous and quasi-orgiastic. The less said about Harty's arrangement of Handel's Water Music and Munch's interpretation of Schubert the better. —Bernard P. Rabb

MUSICAL EVENTS

Reflections



A CERTAIN amount of rather desultory reading recently has convinced me that the aims and directions that music has pursued during the past fifty years are beginning to undergo some serious reappraisal. This reading has ranged from Mr. Neville Cardus, of the Manchester Guardian who noted not long ago, more in sorrow than in anger, that in musical circles "beauty" has become an unmentionable six-letter word, to Mr. Albert Goldberg, of the Los Angeles Times, who concluded that Stravinsky's "The Rake's Progress" is really a rather poor opera. The most interesting of the statements I have read, however, came not from a critic but from a well-known and respected artist, M. Pierre Monteux, who, a little over a month back, got off some very positive opinions on the subject. The vehicle for these opinions was an Associated Press interview dispatched from London, which, as far as I could determine, was ignored by all the New York newspapers except the Journal-American, though to my mind it was one of the most surprising bits of musical news to be published in a long time. M. Monteux, with admirable candor, stated it as his opinion that of all the "modern" music written in recent decades, only a few works of Stravinsky would "perhaps" turn out to be of any permanent value. He expressed doubt about the staying power of Prokofieff's compositions, dismissed those of Shostakovich completely, and continued, "Berg: He will be finished in ten years. Hindemith: No inspiration. . . . He will not live. Bartók: I give him ten years. Mahler: He will not live. He's not a creator. He's an imitator. . . . I see what is in the interior of the works of all these composers. They have just a little inspiration in one bar of music and then they develop it. They have technique and technique and technique—and that's not interesting." While conceding that "probably one or two works of Debussy and of Ravel will live," M. Monteux added, "But when I play their works so many times, I see how they worked it. You should not see the work when you hear it."

There is no reason to doubt the wise old maestro's sincerity in making these rather sweeping statements. They do not reflect the grumpy reactions of an elderly gentleman complaining about the follies of youth; M. Monteux is talking about his own generation, not the one that came after it. Moreover, the statements are particularly interesting in view of the fact that M. Monteux—conductor of the famous Paris première of "Le Sacre du Printemps," among other things—has been closely identified throughout his life with the propagation of contemporary music.

I present these views of M. Monteux here mainly because so few people have had a chance to read them. I do not agree with his views on Mahler, and I think he is a little hard on Debussy, Ravel, Shostakovich, and Prokofieff. But the basic idea seems to me quite sound, and applicable to a great deal of music besides that which he mentioned. On Wednesday night, for example, I went to Carnegie Hall to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a work that falls neatly into the category of music M. Monteux was talking about. It is perhaps unfair to make Mr. Piston's rather well-constructed composition the target of the whole foregoing dissertation, since, as contemporary American symphonies go, it isn't a bad one. It has a fairly witty scherzo, and it gives its composer a chance to demonstrate his professional mastery of a technique he has invented for himself. But perhaps I can best explain my emotional reaction to it by saying that I could have read a newspaper during its performance without having my mind distracted in the least, and, in case there is any doubt about the point I am trying to make, I might add that this is something I could not do with even so unpretentious a creation of the fairly recent past as one of Saint-Saëns' concertos, or any song by Edvard Grieg. The same program contained Beethoven's Violin Concerto, played by Erica Morini with admirable virtuosity and great insight in respect to style, though the orchestra's performance, again under Mr. Munch, seemed to me quite slipshod by the standards usually maintained in the work of this fine ensemble.

MUNCH GIVEN OVATION AT WOOLSEY HALL

A Woolsey Hall audience was on its feet at both the opening and the conclusion of Tuesday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony. Our national anthem, performed in honor of Col. John Glenn's historic feat, got the program under way. It wound up with a standing ovation for conductor Charles Munch, who conducted for the last time here.

Dr. Munch and concertmaster Richard Burgin are in their last season with the Boston Symphony. Both have handed in their resignations to take effect at the close of this year's Berkshire Music Festival. So listeners at this sixth event of the Woolsey series said "farewell" to Dr. Munch in appropriate fashion.

The veteran concertmaster would have shared in the loud and lengthy applause but he played only the first half of the concert for some reason or other. Perhaps he graciously withdrew in order that his superior might receive "full honors." Burgin is that rare kind of musician!

Patrons of these concerts are indebted to the Boston Symphony for introducing many fine artists here over the years. Among those who made their debut here during the Munch tenure was "The Frail Thunder," Nicole Henriot. The superb artistry of this young French pianist was recalled by the performance of her older confrere, Jeanne Marie Darre, the guest artist in Tuesday's concert.

Mlle. Darre, currently a distinguished faculty member of the Paris Conservatory, made her American debut there weeks ago with the Boston Symphony, playing the Saint-Saens Concerto No. 2. She made her debut here in this work and her scintillating and forceful playing will remain as a memorable feature of the concert. She displayed a technique that made light of the work's virtuosic requirements, with brilliant passage and octave work. Mlle. Darre completely immersed herself in the music which she played with the utmost assurance and understanding of its contents. This was musicianship of a high order, with the artist's lyrical and poetical sensitivity complementing her surprising powers for fiery and powerful statement. The attractive pianist received a rousing reception at the conclusion.

Schubert, whose Symphony No. 5 received a tonally charming performance as the opening work, was the only "interloper" in this otherwise all-French program. The other two works—Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane, No. 2," and Ravel's "La Valse," were given the "typical" Boston treatment. This is to say that all the sonorous resources of this great orchestra were called on to squeeze every last ounce of impact in coloring, dynamics, rhythm, and momentum from these works by two masterful orchestrators. Climaxes were overpowering! A few orchestras may play as well as the Bostonians but they are in a class by themselves in this respect.

G.E.A.

Last Performance In New Haven

NEW HAVEN JOURNAL-COURIER,

Tears, Cheers Bid Munch Adieu

New Haven music lovers bid a fond farewell last night to Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who made his final appearance in Woolsey Hall before his retirement next fall at the end of the Berkshire Music Festival.

It was a long and prolonged farewell, with his audience rising as a single unit to honor the distinguished musician with a standing ovation. He took several bows, acknowledging the deafening applause, the shouts of "bravo" and the cheers, with smiles for everyone, at all times asking his men, and especially concertmaster Richard Burgin to share in the ovation. It was a memorable occasion for audience and musicians alike and there were many eyes that glistened with tears because this was really a "hail and farewell moment." It might also be said that very few such spontaneous standing ovations have been awarded in Woolsey Hall during the years.

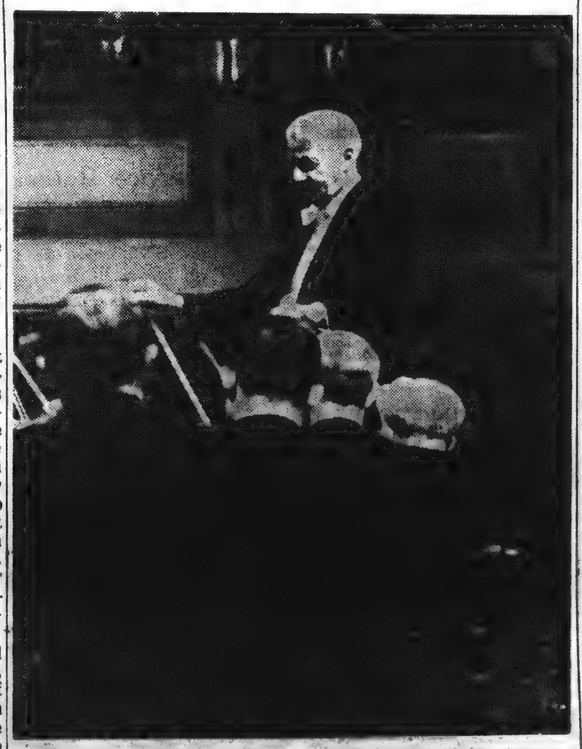
* * *

Munch at 70, has been a part of the New Haven musical picture since he first came here as conductor of the Orchestra National of France, just before he took over the baton of the late Serge Koussevitsky. That was in 1948 and since then fortunate New Haven area music lovers able to subscribe to the Woolsey concert series, have heard the Boston Symphony conducted by Dr. Munch, twice each year, a rather phenomenal achievement engineered by Daggett Lee, impresario of the Woolsey series.

Yesterday being an emotional day all around for Americans, who thrilled to the success of Astronaut John Glenn's flight in orbit, it was only natural that the evening's beautiful program should open with the national anthem. The bold and bracing presentation by the orchestra under Munch's enthusiastic baton, had an almost magical effect upon the audience, many of whom cheered during the applause that followed.

And then the evening's program started with Schubert's cheerful Fifth Symphony setting the mood for the sparkling music that was to follow. This charming idyl, with its captivating meditations in the andante movement, was given the traditional graceful reading that Dr. Munch is noted for.

Then came the French composers, for Dr. Munch, very much of a Frenchman himself, is fond of including work from his native country in all of his programs. Last night's choice included three brilliant works, beginning, curiously enough, with a sparkling piece he had first played in this city with the French musicians.



FAREWELL PERFORMANCE—Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown as he conducted his final program in New Haven at Woolsey Hall last night. He retires next fall.

It was Roussel's ballet, Bacchus et Ariadne, with Dr. Munch giving an altogether refreshing and delightful interpretation to this exotic musical fantasy.

While last night's program will always be remembered as the glorious, last concert of Dr. Munch with the Boston, it will also be remembered for being the occasion of the New Haven debut of the distinguished French pianist, Mlle. JeanneMarie Darre, presenting the altogether spectacular Saint-Saens G minor Piano Concerto. This lithe and lovely French woman, beautiful in a tangerine-colored evening gown which set off her smartly coiffed white hair, performed the celebrated concerto with virtuoso perfection. In this particular work, the piano dominates the orchestra ensemble from start to finish and all eyes were on the flying fingers of the beautiful pianist.

* * *

This "show piece" is entrancing to see performed for it contains much crossing of the hands, and countless breathtaking runs. Mlle. Darre gave three performances of this same concerto at her Boston debut a couple of weeks ago. She graciously attempted to have Dr. Munch share the applause with her but it was so like this old veteran to make her take her bows alone while her audience cried "more, more."

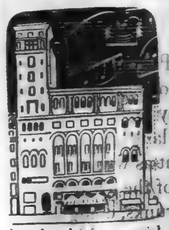
The evening ended with Ravel's expressive "La Valse" which combines the romance and grandeur of a Vienna ballroom with its lovely, pulsating theme, and the tragedy of war, in its strident dischords. Never has it been performed with more electrifying beauty and never has a Woolsey Hall audience responded so quickly by rising immediately as soon as the last note died away to express its appreciation in the only way an audience can—by long and loud applause.

F. R. J.

141

MUSICAL EVENTS

Reflections



A CERTAIN amount of rather desultory reading recently has convinced me that the aims and directions that music has pursued during the past fifty years are beginning to undergo some serious reappraisal. This realling has ranged from Mr. Neville Cardus, of the Manchester Guardian, who noted not long ago, more in sorrow than in anger, that in musical circles "beauty" has become an unmentionable six-letter word, to Mr. Albert Goldberg, of the Los Angeles Times, who concluded that Stravinsky's "The Rake's Progress" is really a rather poor opera. The most interesting of the statements I have read, however, came not from a critic but from a well-known and respected artist, M. Pierre Monteux, who, a little over a month back, got off some very positive opinions on the subject. The vehicle for these opinions was an Associated Press interview dispatched from London which, as far as I could determine, was ignored by all the New York newspapers except the Journal-American, though to my mind it was one of the most surprising bits of musical news to be published in a long time. M. Monteux, with admirable candor, stated it as his opinion that of all the "modern" music written in recent decades, only a few works of Stravinsky would "perhaps" turn out to be of any permanent value. He expressed doubt about the staying power of Prokofieff's compositions, dismissed those of Shostakovich completely, and continued, "Berg: He will be finished in ten years. Hindemith: No inspiration. . . . He will not live. Bartók: I give him ten years. Mahler: He will not live. He's not a creator. He's an imitator. . . . I see what is in the interior of the works of all these composers. They have just a little inspiration in one bar of music and then they develop it. They have technique and technique and technique—and that's not interesting." While conceding that "probably one or two works of Debussy and of Ravel will live," M. Monteux added, "But when I play their works so many times, I see how they worked it. You should not see the work when you hear it."

There is no reason to doubt the wise old maestro's sincerity in making these rather sweeping statements. They do not reflect the grumpy reactions of an elderly gentleman complaining about the follies of youth. M. Monteux is talking about his own generation, not the one that came after it. Moreover, the statements are particularly interesting in view of the fact that M. Monteux—conductor of the famous Paris première of "Le Sacre du Printemps," among other things—has been closely identified throughout his life with the propagation of contemporary music.

I present these views of M. Monteux here mainly because so few people have had a chance to read them. I do not agree with his views on Mahler, and I think he is a little hard on Debussy, Ravel, Shostakovich, and Prokofieff. But the basic idea seems to me quite sound, and applicable to a great deal of music besides that which he mentioned. On Wednesday night, for example, I went to Carnegie Hall to hear Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony perform Walter Piston's Sixth Symphony, a work that falls neatly into the category of music M. Monteux was talking about. It is perhaps unfair to make Mr. Piston's rather well-constructed composition the target of the whole foregoing dissertation, since, as contemporary American symphonies go, it isn't a bad one. It has a fairly witty scherzo, and it gives its composer a chance to demonstrate his professional mastery of a technique he has invented for himself. But perhaps I can best explain my emotional reaction to it by saying that I could have read a newspaper during its performance without having my mind distracted in the least, and, in case there is any doubt about the point I am trying to make, I might add that this is something I could not do with even so unpretentious a creation of the fairly recent past as one of Saint-Saëns' concertos, or any song by Edvard Grieg. The same program contained Beethoven's Violin Concerto, played by Erica Morini with admirable virtuosity and great insight in respect to style, though the orchestra's performance, again under Mr. Munch, seemed to me quite slipshod by the standards usually maintained in the work of this fine ensemble.

MUNCH GIVEN OVATION AT WOOLSEY HALL

A Woolsey Hall audience was on its feet at both the opening and the conclusion of Tuesday evening's concert by the Boston Symphony. Our national anthem, performed in honor of Col. John Glenn's historic feat, got the program under way. It wound up with a standing ovation for conductor Charles Munch, who conducted for the last time here.

Dr. Munch and concertmaster Richard Burgin are in their last season with the Boston Symphony. Both have handed in their resignations to take effect at the close of this year's Berkshire Music Festival. So listeners at this sixth event of the Woolsey series said "farewell" to Dr. Munch in appropriate fashion.

The veteran concertmaster would have shared in the loud and lengthy applause but he played only the first half of the concert for some reason or other. Perhaps he graciously withdrew in order that his superior might receive "full honors." Burgin is that rare kind of musician!

Patrons of these concerts are indebted to the Boston Symphony for introducing many fine artists here over the years. Among those who made their debut here during the Munch tenure was "The Frail Thunder," Nicole Henriot. The superb artistry of this young French pianist was recalled by the performance of her older confrere, Jeanne Marie Darre, the guest artist in Tuesday's concert.

Mlle. Darre, currently a distinguished faculty member of the Paris Conservatory, made her American debut there weeks ago with the Boston Symphony, playing the Saint-Saens Concerto No. 2. She made her debut here in this work and her scintillating and forceful playing will remain as a memorable feature of the concert. She displayed a technique that made light of the work's virtuosic requirements, with brilliant passage and octave work. Mlle. Darre completely immersed herself in the music which she played with the utmost assurance and understanding of its contents. This was musicianship of a high order, with the artist's lyrical and poetical sensitivity complementing her surprising powers for fiery and powerful statement. The attractive pianist received a rousing reception at the conclusion.

Schubert, whose Symphony No. 5 received a tonally charming performance as the opening work, was the only "interloper" in this otherwise all-French program. The other two works—Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane, No. 2," and Ravel's "La Valse," were given the "typical" Boston treatment. This is to say that all the sonorous resources of this great orchestra were called on to squeeze every last ounce of impact in coloring, dynamics, rhythm, and momentum from these works by two masterful orchestrators. Climaxes were overpowering! A few orchestras may play as well as the Bostonians but they are in a class by themselves in this respect.

G.E.A.

Last Performance In New Haven

NEW HAVEN JOURNAL-COURIER,

Tears, Cheers Bid Munch Adieu

New Haven music lovers bid a fond farewell last night to Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who made his final appearance in Woolsey Hall before his retirement next fall at the end of the Berkshire Music Festival.

It was a long and prolonged farewell, with his audience rising as a single unit to honor the distinguished musician with a standing ovation. He took several bows, acknowledging the deafening applause, the shouts of "bravo" and the cheers, with smiles for everyone, at all times asking his men, and especially concertmaster Richard Burgin to share in the ovation. It was a memorable occasion for audience and musicians alike and there were many eyes that glistened with tears because this was really a "hail and farewell moment." It might also be said that very few such spontaneous standing ovations have been awarded in Woolsey Hall during the years.

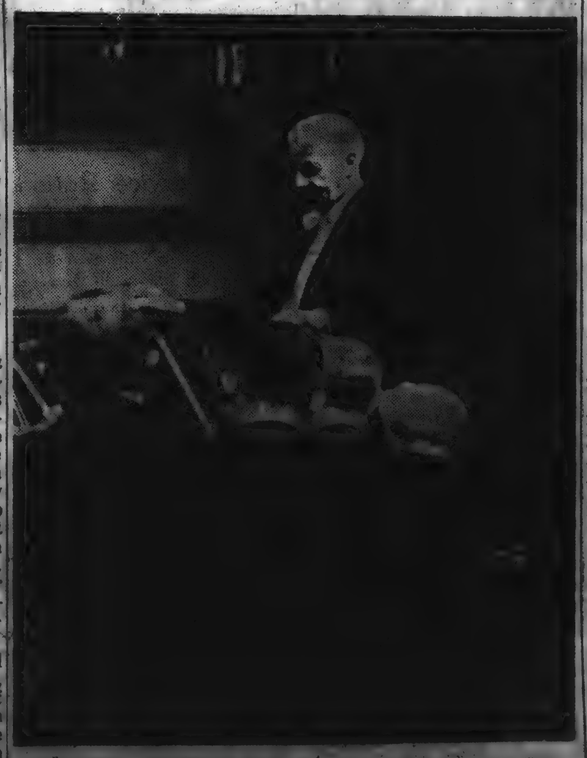
* * *

Munch at 70, has been a part of the New Haven musical picture since he first came here as conductor of the Orchestra National of France, just before he took over the baton of the late Serge Koussevitsky. That was in 1948 and since then fortunate New Haven area music lovers able to subscribe to the Woolsey concert series, have heard the Boston Symphony conducted by Dr. Munch, twice each year, a rather phenomenal achievement engineered by Daggett Lee, impresario of the Woolsey series.

Yesterday being an emotional day all around for Americans, who thrilled to the success of Astronaut John Glenn's flight in orbit, it was only natural that the evening's beautiful program should open with the national anthem. The bold and bracing presentation by the orchestra under Munch's enthusiastic baton had an almost magical effect upon the audience, many of whom cheered during the applause that followed.

And then the evening's program started with Schubert's cheerful Fifth Symphony setting the mood for the sparkling music that was to follow. This charming idyl, with its captivating meditations in the andante movement, was given the traditional graceful reading that Dr. Munch is noted for.

Then came the French composers, for Dr. Munch, very much of a Frenchman himself, is fond of including work from his native country in all of his programs. Last night's choice included three brilliant works, beginning, curiously enough, with a sparkling piece he had first played in this city with the French musicians.



FAREWELL PERFORMANCE—Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown as he conducted his final program in New Haven at Woolsey Hall last night. He retires next fall.

It was Roussel's ballet, Bacchus et Ariadne, with Dr. Munch giving an altogether refreshing and delightful interpretation to this exotic musical fantasy.

While last night's program will always be remembered as the glorious, last concert of Dr. Munch with the Boston, it will also be remembered for being the occasion of the New Haven debut of the distinguished French pianist, Mlle. JeanneMarie Darre, presenting the altogether spectacular Saint-Saens G minor Piano Concerto. This lithe and lovely French woman, beautiful in a tangerine-colored evening gown which set off her smartly coiffed white hair, performed the celebrated concerto with virtuoso perfection. In this particular work, the piano dominates the orchestra ensemble from start to finish and all eyes were on the flying fingers of the beautiful pianist.

* * *

This "show piece" is entrancing to see performed for it contains much crossing of the hands and countless breathtaking runs. Mlle. Darre gave three performances of this same concerto at her Boston debut a couple of weeks ago. She graciously attempted to have Dr. Munch share the applause with her but it was so like this old veteran to make her take her bows alone while her audience cried "more, more."

The evening ended with Ravel's expressive "La Valse" which combines the romance and grandeur of a Vienna ballroom with its lovely, pulsating theme, and the tragedy of war, in its strident dischords. Never has it been performed with more electrifying beauty and never has a Woolsey Hall audience responded so quickly by rising immediately as soon as the last note died away to express its appreciation in the only way an audience can—by long and loud applause.

F. B. J.

142

Seventeenth Week

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950
MAR 2 1962

Conductor Giulini Finds Color Here Despite Snow

By CYRUS DURGIN

Carlo Maria Giulini looked out the window of the Green Room of Symphony Hall upon a waste of snow and slush. Onlookers clucked disappointment that the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony, who will make his local debut this afternoon, had to spend his first extended visit here amid the drear of Bostonian Winter.

The tall Italian, a heavy white sweater covering the black, turtle-necked sweater in which he had conducted rehearsal, turned back and smiled. "All the same," he said in very serviceable English, "I like the color here. The color of the buildings, I mean. Not all white like Chicago. This is an older city."

CARLO MARIA GIULINI

Chicago was where Giulini made his first American appearance, four years ago. He was back in this country last season, with the Israel Philharmonic, but did not conduct it in Boston. He has learned something of this country, and his English is American-type.

"I'm at the end of a four weeks tour, or nearly so. Then back to home to Milan, my wife and I. We miss our three boys. No, not a real musical talent among them. They are 18, 15 and 14, know all about jazz, like good music, but I hope they will not try to make careers in music. I think youngsters have it too easy nowadays, with so many records to hear. They don't like to spend the time and trouble practicing themselves."

Giulini himself found that he wanted to practice when he was about 4, and asked for a violin. The moment one was put in his hands "I knew it was music for life."

Born in the Adriatic town of Barletta, far south in the province of Apulia, where his father then conducted business, Giulini is of Veronese ancestry. He really grew up in the north, and at 15 entered the Santa Cecilia Academy in Rome. By that time, he had settled on the viola as his instrument, and he played in orchestras for some years.

"If there is one thing I would advise all young conductors, it is 'Sit in an orchestra and play.' You get to know the music, the difference in conductors, your fellow players and their moods. It all contributes to what I call the 'humanity' of an orchestra, and it makes an experience a conductor can obtain in no other way.

"I don't think, really, that conducting can be taught. You can acquire knowledge from other conductors, but the ability of conducting you get through your own efforts. I learned much in the way of knowledge from Alfredo Casella. You remember him, of course. He conducted your Pops here for three seasons.

"My first appearance as conductor, apart from school orchestras, was in Rome the day after Italy was freed by the Allies, in 1945. At first I was interested only in conducting symphonic music. To students of my generation, opera was 'old-fashioned' until we grew a little older and realized the genius of Verdi and Rossini and Puccini.

"My first experience with opera was actually in concert form, after 1946 when I had become conductor of the Italian Radio. We had a good many broadcasts of opera. Later, at La Scala, I conducted as my initial theater production, "La Traviata." The transition from concert hall to theater was not difficult. Everything about an opera interests me—staging, action, costumes, settings and lighting, as much as the music. I believe you must think of opera as a whole, all these elements put together."

Giulini's first Violetta in that production was Renata Tebaldi. Shortly before the second performance, Tebaldi became sick, and Guilini returned to the theater to meet a stranger. "She was fat, round, huge, but with a beautiful voice and obviously the qualities of an artist. Her name was Maria Callas. A year afterward, I returned to La Scala for another production and passed a beautiful woman, dressed very chic, thin as a baton. She said, 'You do not recognize me, maestro! I am Callas!' Truly, she had lost so much weight, I hadn't known her."

Giulini today has no permanent post. He is enjoying the broader artistic adventure of guest conducting—both opera and symphonic music—in many places. He is acquiring a large repertory of classic, romantic and modern works. His favorite moderns are Stravinsky and Bartok, "links in the chain between past and future." Hindemith he has liked—less so now, and Prokofieff he admires. You gather Giulini has no fondness for the 12-tone system, and he regards Alban Berg as the talented dead end of what came after German Romanticism.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
MAR 1 1962

Giulini Guest Conductor For Weekend at Symphony Hall

Charles Munch has invited Carlo Maria Giulini to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its Symphony Hall concerts this Friday (Mar. 2, 2:15) — Saturday (Mar. 3, 8:30), Sunday Mar. 4, 3:00) and next Tuesday, Friday and Saturday. Mr. Giulini will also conduct the Orchestra's Open Rehearsal on Thursday, March 8. These concerts will be Mr. Giulini's first appearances in Boston.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer and the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Snciety will be Mr. Giullini's assisting artists at the concerts this weekend. The program will include the United States premiere of Ghedini's "Sonata da Concerto, for Flute and Orchestra," the overture to 'L'Italiana in Algeri" by Rossini, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi — Stabat Mater, Laudi alla Vergine Maria and Te Deum — in which the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Mr. Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it peformed in the United States in 1960 and in 1955 he made his Ameican debut as guest conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Mr. Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (R.I.A.) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many festivals throughout Europe.

Eleazar de Carvalho will be the Orchestra's guest conductor at its concerts March 16-20. Doctor Munch will next conduct the Orchestra in Boston on March 23 when his guest will be Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer.

Friday, Mar. 2, 2:15; Saturday, Mar. 3, 8:30; Sunday, Mar. 4, 3:00; Tuesday, Mar. 6, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Carlo Maria Giulini conducting:

Rossini, Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"; Ghedini, Sonata da Concerto, for Flute and Orchestra Soloist: Doriot Anthony Dwyer, United States Premier; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 2, in C minor, Op. 17; Verdi, Three Sacred Pieces Harvard Glee Club — Radcliffe Choral Society Elliot Forbes, Conductor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
FEB 24 1962

Giulini to Make Debut In Boston at Symphony

Charles Munch has invited Carlo Maria Giulini to conduct the Boston Symphony at its Symphony Hall concerts Friday (March 2, 2:15), Saturday (March 3, 8:30), Sunday (March 4, 3:00), and next Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday, March 6, 9, and 10. Signor Giulini will also conduct the orchestra's Open Rehearsal on Thursday, March 8. These concerts will be Signor Giulini's first appearances in Boston.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer and the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society will be Signor Giulini's assisting artists at his first weekend of concerts. The program will include the United States première of Ghedini's Sonata da Concerto for Flute and Orchestra, the Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" by Rossini, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2, and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi — Stabat Mater, Laudi alla Vergine Maria, and Te Deum—in which the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society will participate.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Signor Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it performed in the United States in 1960, and in 1955 he made his American debut as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Signor Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari. In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (RIA) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many festivals throughout Europe.

Eleazar de Carvalho will be the orchestra's guest conductor at its concerts March 16 - 20. Dr. Munch will next conduct the orchestra in Boston on March 23, when his guest will be Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer.

Dr. Munch, with André Navarra as his guest, will conduct the orchestra at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday (Feb. 27, 8:30). The program will consist of the Handel - Harty "Water Music" Suite, Schubert's Symphony No. 5, and the Concerto for Cello in B minor by Dvořák with Mr. Navarra as soloist.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAR 2 1962

Giulini Conducts

Carlo Maria Giulini is guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon, tomorrow night, Sunday afternoona nd Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

Program for today and tomorrow will be Haydn's Symphony No. 4, "Variations on a Theme of Purcell" by Britten and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5.

Program for Sunday and Tuesday will be Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," Sonata da Concerto by Ghedini, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as flute soloist, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi. In the last works the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will participate.

2-62

1431

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

1962

Giulini Guest At Symphony

Carlo Maria Giulini, by invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the next two weeks. He will conduct the same program at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, Sunday, Mar. 4, at 3 p.m., and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Mar. 6.

This will consist of Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"; Ghedini's Sonata da Concerto (United States Premiere), with first flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist; the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 2, in C minor, and the Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi. The last-named are Verdi's Stabat Mater, Laudi alla Vergine Maria (from Dante's "Paradiso"), and Te Deum. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Prof. Elliot Forbes, will sing in them.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Mr. Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it performed in the United States in 1960. In 1955 he had made his American debut as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Mr. Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome, with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari. In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (R.I.A.) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many festivals throughout Europe.

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Tuesday evening concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Feb. 27. The program will be the Handel-Harty Suite from the "Water Music," Schubert's Fifth Symphony, and the B minor Cello Concerto of Dvorak, with Andre Navarra as soloist. Dr. Munch's next appearances thereafter with the Orchestra will be the Symphony Hall concerts of Mar. 23 and 24, when pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist.

Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor at the Friday-Saturday concerts of Mar. 16 and 17; Monday, Mar. 19, and Tuesday, Mar. 20—all at Symphony Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,742

MAR 9 1962

Carlo Giulini is Guest Conductor of Boston Symphony

Guest conductor for the Boston Symphony last week and this was Carlo Maria Guilini, who was specially invited by Dr. Charles Munch.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Mr. Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it performed in the United States in 1960. In 1955 he had made his American debut as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Mr. Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome, with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari. In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (R.I.A.) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many fest.vals throughout Europe.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

MAR 4 1962

MUSICAL

Carlo Maria Giulini will conclude his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor this week with four concerts and an Open Rehearsal.

His program for the Symphony Hall concert today at 3 p.m. and for Tuesday evening will be Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," the Sonata da Concerto by Ghedini—with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist—Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi.

The orchestra and Mr. Giulini will make final preparations for the weekend concerts at an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The Friday-Saturday program will consist of Haydn's Symphony No. 94, "Variations on a Theme of Purcell" by Britten and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5.

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 3, at 8:30 o'clock

CARLO MARIA GIULINI, Guest Conductor

ROSSINI ..... Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"

GHEDINI ..... Sonata da Concerto, for Flute, Strings and Percussion
(First performance in the United States)
SOLOIST
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... Symphony No. 2, in C minor, Op. 17
I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino marziale
III. Scherzo: Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Moderato assai

INTERMISSION

VERDI ..... Three Sacred Pieces
Stabat Mater, for Chorus and Orchestra
(First performance at these concerts)
Laudi alla Vergine Maria (from Dante's "Paradiso"), for Women's Chorus a Cappella
(First performance at these concerts)
Te Deum, for Double Chorus and Orchestra

HARVARD GLEE CLUB and
RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY, ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

FEB 25 1962

CARLO MARIA GIULINI will appear for the first times in Boston as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

FEB 25 1962

CARLO MARIA GIULINI will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 25 1962

Giulini Guest At Symphony

Carlo Maria Giulini, by invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the next two weeks. He will conduct the same program at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15, Saturday at 8:30, Sunday, Mar. 4, at 3 p.m., and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., Mar. 6.

This will consist of Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"; Ghedini's Sonata da Concerto (United States Premiere), with first flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist; the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 2, in C minor, and the Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi. The last-named are Verdi's Stabat Mater, Laudi alla Vergine Maria (from Dante's "Paradiso"), and Te Deum. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Prof. Elliot Forbes, will sing in them.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Mr. Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it performed in the United States in 1960. In 1955 he had made his American debut as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Mr. Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome, with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari. In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (R.I.A.) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many festivals throughout Europe.

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Tuesday evening concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Feb. 27. The program will be the Handel-Harty Suite from the "Water Music," Schubert's Fifth Symphony, and the B minor Cello Concerto of Dvorak, with Andre Navarra as soloist. Dr. Munch's next appearances thereafter with the Orchestra will be the Symphony Hall concerts of Mar. 23 and 24, when pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist.

Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor at the Friday-Saturday concerts of Mar. 16 and 17; Monday, Mar. 19, and Tuesday, Mar. 20—all at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Italian News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 13,742
MAR 9 1962

Carlo Giulini is Guest Conductor of Boston Symphony

Guest conductor for the Boston Symphony last week and this was Carlo Maria Giulini, who was specially invited by Dr. Charles Munch.

Although he has not previously conducted in Boston, Mr. Giulini conducted the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra when it performed in the United States in 1960. In 1955 he had made his American debut as guest conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Italy in 1914, Mr. Giulini studied at the Academy of Santa Cecilia in Rome, with Alfredo Casella and Bernardino Molinari. In 1946 he was appointed conductor of the Italian Radio (R.I.A.) and in 1950 he became conductor of the orchestra of Radio Milano. For the past nine years he has been associated with La Scala Opera in Milan and has also conducted at many festivals throughout Europe.

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 2, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 3, at 8:30 o'clock

CARLO MARIA GIULINI, Guest Conductor

ROSSINI . . . . . Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"

GHEDINI . . . . . Sonata da Concerto, for Flute, Strings and Percussion
(First performance in the United States)
SOLOIST
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

TCHAIKOVSKY . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in C minor, Op. 17
I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino marziale
III. Scherzo: Allegro molto vivace
IV. Finale: Moderato assai

INTERMISSION

VERDI . . . . . Three Sacred Pieces
Stabat Mater, for Chorus and Orchestra
(First performance at these concerts)
Laudi alla Vergine Maria (from Dante's "Paradiso"), for Women's Chorus a Cappella
(First performance at these concerts)
Te Deum, for Double Chorus and Orchestra

HARVARD GLEE CLUB and
RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY, ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAR 4 1962

MUSICAL

Carlo Maria Giulini will conclude his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor this week with four concerts and an Open Rehearsal.

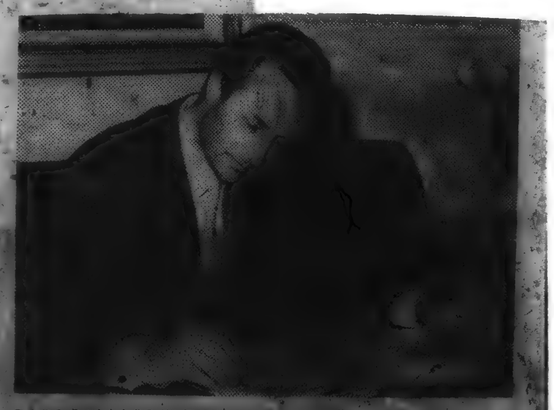
His program for the Symphony Hall concert today at 3 p.m. and for Tuesday evening will be Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," the Sonata da Concerto by Ghedini—with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist—Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi.

The orchestra and Mr. Giulini will make final preparations for the weekend concerts at an Open Rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The Friday-Saturday program will consist of Haydn's Symphony No. 94, "Variations on a Theme of Purcell" by Britten and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
FEB 25 1962

CARLO MARIA GIULINI will appear for the first times in Boston as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
FEB 25 1962



CARLO MARIA GIULINI will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next two weeks.

144

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAR 3 1962

Giulini in Boston Debut Conducting at Symphony

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 17th program of the Friday–Saturday Series. Carlo Maria Giulini, as guest conductor, made his Boston debut. Rossini: Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri;" Ghedini: Sonata da Concerto (first performance in United States), Doriot Anthony Dwyer, soloist; Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 2, in C Minor; Verdi: Stabat Mater (first performance in these concerts); Laudi alla Vergine Maria (first performance at these concerts); Te Deum. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by Elliot Forbes, asisted.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Carlo Maria Giulini was applauded and cheered at his Boston debut in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, where he began a two weeks visit as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The tall, dark Italian, with a noble Roman profile and a height that seemed 10 feet on the stand, is no stranger to much of the American public, however. He has appeared elsewhere in this country, and many hereabouts must know him from European recordings.

Though his initial program was something of a hodge-podge in its first half, Giulini handled it with the authority and the proficiency of the seasoned conducting hand that he is. The results, not unnaturally, were varied. Rossini's Overture, polished down to the last crescendo and mezzo-forte accent, went beautifully. The Ghedini, brand new in this country, seemed to be treated well, and Verdi's choral pieces had a clean, no-nonsense approach that the composer no doubt would have approved.

But Tchaikovsky's "Little Russia" Symphony, the one work out of place on this otherwise Italian program, was merely good and loud. For a string player, Giulini permitted some fearfully bad ensemble among the violins in the first movement, and all along the way there was much more vigor than finesse.

This is not to imply lack of taste, or any carelessness in Giulini's conducting. Nor, despite his bent-kneed and wide-footed stance, not the most attractive posture for a conductor, is Giulini given to unnecessary or extravagant gestures. He is a practical conductor, and dynamic, but the finest results, technical and interpretive, came in the Italian music. There the Orchestra played best for him.

Hearing the Stabat Mater, the unaccompanied Lauds to the Virgin and the Te Deum of Verdi—three of his Four Sacred Pieces—presented in sequence was a new experience. Continuity gave them a rather different effect from that of isolated performance. The style, inevitably operatic at times, thus seems more consistent.

Elliot Forbes had prepared the Harvard and Radcliffe choristers admirably. They now have a body of tone sufficient without strain to the demands of choral-with-orchestra works in a large hall. They sing very tidily and musically. The Radcliffe girls really distinguished themselves by their sculptured beauty of phrasing and sustained soft tone in the Lauds to the Virgin.

The Te Deum, the most theatrical of these sacred works of Verdi's old age, is also the best. It sounds praises to the Lord in violent contrast of soft and very loud, praise that sounds like praise. It concludes with a most felicitous hush in the cellos.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer has garnered many a laurel during her happy years as first flute of this Orchestra, and none ever was more deserved than the crown of them she received from the audience yesterday. Ghedini's Sonata da Concerto, though brief, must be thorny to memorize and play. It is a fine modern display piece, with a little solo flourish at the end so that the flute may be heard after a cadence by the strings that would smother it.

Ghedini, who will be 70 next July, managed an unusual texture, with but solo flute, strings and a battery of percussion (mostly drums). The long flute solo that begins the piece sounds like a 12-tone serial row, but isn't.

Mrs. Dwyer was rapturously acclaimed, as, later, was Prof. Forbes, brought out on stage bfiy Giulini.

Next week our guest conductor will present Hydn's "Surprise" Symphony, Britten's "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" (Varations on a Theme of Purcell) and Dvorak's "New World" Symphony.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 3 1962

The Symphony

Guest Conductor Magnetic Artist

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Carlo Maria Giulini, the 48-year-old Italian conductor who made his Boston debut at Symphony yesterday, is an artist of magnetism, dash and authority. Unfortunately, his music for the most part, demanded such qualities from him no more than from a man turning the crank of a barrel organ.

It was an incredibly haphazard program. The first part exists on a level slightly higher than a Pops concert; the final Three Sacred Pieces of Verdi, on the other hand, soars into the empyrean of liturgical music. Together with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Mr. Giulini raised the three sacred scores into a noble and affecting sunset statement from Stabat Mater to Laudi alla Vergine Maria to Te Deum.

Until that time, there had been no doubt about the maestro's capacity, but it was reassuring to see him confronted at last by a major challenge. One might reasonably expect a guest conductor to display either his musical specialty or his talent in the pages of the classic repertory. Mr. Giulini jumbled a program with a prodigality that seemed to sweep aside such considerations—or those of style, period or school.

Lyric Power

That his specialty is a lyric, ongful dramatic power, a graceul legato structure, ought not to urprise. Coming here from ilan's La Scala Opera, the lanky nd lean conductor who bears a light physical resemblance to the merican, Thomas Schippers, disloses an advanced baton technic, lively insight and control.

The Overture to "The Italian In lgiers" came off with the blithe omentum and a melodic charm hat conveyed the rococo ambience the opera delectably. This reuired verve and style; the flute oncerto by the rarely-heard Italan contemporary, Giorgio Ghezini, needed mostly tact.

For Doriot Anthony Dwyer of he orchestra was the star, and a plendid first-magnitude one, too. he concerto, in three uninterupted parts, is scored for strings nd percussion only, contrasting lamorous orchestral sonorities nd the mellow and slender ornaness of high-register flute. Mrs. wyer gave an enchanting perormance, her phrasing formida le trills and ornaments with float g brilliance.

Display Item

As a display item the Ghedini seemed to have enough validity, though melodically barren compared to, say, Chaminade; but the Tchaikovsky enabled Mr. Giulini to assume the limelight again. "The Little Russian," with its abundance of folk material has not been played here in 14 years, and is a novel choice of symphony indeed from an Italian visitor.

The Slavic elements of the Symphony No. 2—among the most somber and introspective that Tchaikovsky ever contrived—presented no problem to Mr. Giulini. He merely ignored these. Instead he concentrated on the excitement, vigor and theatricalism of the music.

It all sounded like a Russian "Rigoletto," the textures light, the line bel canto, the passions smouldering. And the performance projected an admirable vitality and panache. The symphony at best, a minor affair, gained in some ways, though one cannot call this idiomatic Tchaikovsky.

Symphony in G major, No. 94 ("Surprise"); Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," Op. 34; and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95.

Balance of Sound

With the Verdi compositions, the balance of sound shaped and moulded by Mr. Giulini, held vivid symmetry. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society produced a clear, shimmering tone. In the "Laudi," the capella woman's choirs created a pellucid texture. Volume, thrust and rhythmic prowess were in evidence, and at pianissimo the discipline was equally compelling.

Mr. Giulini conducted these last Verdian pages with an intensity worthy of their content. As he made his bow, sharing the stage with the singers' conductor, Elliot Forbes, one could not help but wish he had somehow scheduled a Beethoven Eighth or a Brahms First or a Mozart "Jupiter."

At next week's concerts Mr. Giulini plans to offer Haydn's

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carlo Maria Giulini, guest conductor, presented the 17th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, was the soloist. The Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus was under the direction of Elliot Forbes. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" ..... Rossini
Sonata da Concerto, for Flute, Strings and Percussion ..... Ghedini
Symphony No. 2 in C minor, Op. 17 ..... Tchaikovsky
Three Sacred Pieces ..... Verdi

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 3 1962

Giulini Acclaimed At Debut In Boston

By Harold Rogers
Boston

Little by little the excellent scores of Giorgio Federico Ghedini are being played in the United States, largely through the efforts of his countrymen who come here as visitors. Carlo Maria Giulini, the noted Italian conductor, is the most recent artist to sing Ghedini's praise and did so eloquently as he conducted the American première of the Sonata da Concerto for flute and orchestra at the first of the Boston Symphony's concerts this weekend.

Signor Giulini himself was making his Boston debut. Tall, slim, and poised, he employs a technique not particularly impressive at the outset, yet small things happen along the way that build into something truly exciting. At the interval he had already won his bravos. He does not always display the polished movements of his late colleague Guido Cantelli, but on the other hand he creates no uncomfortable tensions in his listeners. Signor Giulini can relax, even if only for a half second, and the music takes on tints and shades in spite of a baton hand that does little more than give the beat (there's no question about his beat) and a left hand that sometimes is more gauche than expressive.

Yet Signor Giulini has his graces, as were to be noted again and again in a program that wanted nothing in variety. His handling of the Rossini overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" was leggerissimo — light as bubbles in the wind. And that little sobbing theme in the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 2 came forth with all the heart that anyone could muster. There were moments of beatific loveliness in Verdi's Three Sacred Pieces, which called for the participation of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society (trained by Elliot Forbes, their conductor).

Laurels Won

Thus Signor Giulini gave himself an opportunity to show us what he can do as an accompanist, a symphonic conductor, and a choral director, winning laurels in all three. As a chorus man he follows the advice that Koussevitzky would have given: "Keep your hands high, conduct the chorus, and let the orchestra take care of itself."

With the Tchaikovsky he dramatized this early effort in such a way as to make it far more winsome than it might otherwise sound. Known as the "Little Russian," it doubtless stands head and shoulders above the so-called Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 7, a reconstructed work recently given its first United States performances by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (and reviewed by Miles Kastendieck on this page). Perhaps the school boy was not far wrong who, when asked how many symphonies Tchaikovsky wrote, answered: "Three—the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth."

Signor Giulini's ability as an accompanist brings us to the Ghedini Sonata. Of course Ghedini's bandwagon is hardly rolling in the United States or even in Boston. A hiatus of some 10 years stands between the performance of his Pezzo Concertante at Tanglewood under Victor de Sabata's direction, and Signor Giulini's present championship.

In 1951 Charles Munch conducted Ghedini's "Architetture," a seven-sectioned orchestral concerto, and then we heard nothing more of him until last month when the Quartetto di Roma gave us a rhapsodic traversal the early Piano Quartet that dates from 1917. Now, within a mere two weeks, we have Signor Giulini's presentation of the Sonata da Concerto, composed by Ghedini for the Venice Festival of 1958.

Thus Boston concertgoers have recently been able to witness the two distinct phases of Ghedini's style—the pre-1936 period: conservative, romantic, often rhapsodic; and the post-1936 period in which he expresses himself in a language of his own—a polyphonic idiom linked with no system of polytonality nor the 12-tone technique.

Special Honors

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Boston Symphony's admirable principle flute, won a special set of honors for herself as soloist in the Ghedini. The Sonata opens with a flute solo —meditative and aspiring—occasionally supported by a muted timpani roll or a progression from the double-basses. Then the strings enter (it is composed for flute strings, and percussion) and take an allegro tempo at a sturdy pace. The mood is vital and vibrant, the music somewhat angular. The flute comes in brilliantly, truly a tour de force as brought off by Mrs. Dwyer, lyrical as a lark in full-throated song.

The Sonata follows the usual form; there is a slow movement in which the flute again becomes pensive, and the finale picks up the speed to build to a climax of corruscating flutism, then to fall away to a quiet close.

Signor Giulini molded the orchestra to his soloist's performance and then graciously stood aside for Mrs. Dwyer to bask in her well deserved applause. He could bask in his own after the Tchaikovsky and the Verdi.

1451

Eighteenth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

The Symphony

Fine Musicianship In Inept Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Once again the Italian conductor, Carlo Maria Giulini, has demonstrated both a cultivated musicianship and a singular ineptitude at making programs.

Not that yesterday's concert didn't leave me beating with my spoon on the high chair. It was conducted, on the whole, with grace and skill. I'm afraid I found it a simple-minded affair, however, and while it momentarily brought me back to the innocent old days of youthful music appreciation courses, time, alas, has instilled a corrosive sophistication.

One Enough

Any one of the three scores would have been admirable as relief from a more complicated pattern. Marching in line, however, they provoked only the reflection that Mr. Giulini must be trying to educate us. I am willing. The Sorcerer's Apprentice, Nutcracker Suite and Berceuse from 'Jocelyn' should be the next step onward and upward.

Nevertheless, whether Mr. Giulini had a didactic purpose or not, he made a second gratifying guest appearance. The lanky conductor revealed a spirited and firm grasp of his art, and it would be churlish to criticize him because the program, bounteous in tunes, made one long for a tonic discord.

His treatment of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony and Britten's Variations and Fugue on Purcell's theme, constituted interpretation of a rousing order. What sounded arresting about the Symphony No. 94 was the vigor with which the conductor animated the score. Here was no languorous, powdered Haydn complete with beauty patches and elaborate snuff-box ceremonial; but rather, a vibrant and dramatic melodious design.

Brisk Direction

The ingenuity and wit appeared properly, the freshness of Haydn's invention. While it would not do to over-accent, Mr. Giulini's reading was far from understated, and seemed to me to proceed happily in its brisk and personal direction.

Similarly, the unfortunately-titled Britten (and without the title 'The Young Person's Guide' it would probably be revived more frequently) emerged as a resolute performance. It was big in proportion and the conductor focussed on the solo clusters of instruments without deflecting a sense of the music's unity.

The colorful and spectacular quick-tempo version of the fugal theme—which is drawn from the incidental airs Purcell provided for Mrs. Aphra Behn's 'The Moor's Revenge'—and the coda, held a kinetic power that stirred the audience into enthusiastic bravos.

From these scores, the crackling tempi and theatrical climaxes revealed Mr. Giulini's talent conveying the impetuous passions of the opera house. But the Slavic qualities of Dvorak's "New World" Symphony proved not as dramatically viable.

Mr. Giulini's work showed intense care; and the music eluded him. Instead of attaining density and weight, the sonorities had a kind of cheesecloth hyperbole.

It was a Verdian Bohemia. One can credit the conductor with attempting a passionate grandeur, a romantic sublimity that ruthlessly erased the sweet and slender strain of pensive nature poetry that distinguishes this introverted symphony. The attempt was valid enough. Only the conductor and the music were unsympathetic.

I am reminded of Shaw's comment that the music of Beethoven and Mendelssohn is the music of a Germany still under Franco-Italian influence. And one would like to hear Mr. Giulini return with these, in preference to the composers of a latter-day Central Europe.

Next week Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor. He has scheduled Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," Op. 6; Albeniz's "Iberia" Suite; and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36.

Stage Plays

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carlo Maria Giulini, guest conductor, presented the 18th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony in G maior, No. 94 ("Surprise") ..... Haydn
The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra, Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell, Op. 34 ... Britten
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95 ... Dvorak

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 1962

Last Week For Giulini At Symphony

Carlo Maria Giulini will conclude his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor this week with four concerts and an open rehearsal. His program for the Symphony Hall concert today at 3 p.m. and for Tuesday evening at 8:30 will include Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," the Sonata da Concerto by Ghedini; Doriot Anthony, soloist; Tchaikovky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in the Verdi choruses.

The orchestra and Giulini will make final preparations for the week-end concerts at an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The Friday-Saturday program will consist of Haydn's Symphony No. 94. Variations on a Theme of Purcell, by Britten, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5, "New World."

Eleazar de Carvalho, who has not conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949, will be guest conductor Mar. 16, 17, 19 and 20. His program will include Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, "Iberia," by Albeniz-Arbos, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts Mar. 23, 24, 25 and 25, when she will be soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Prokofieff.

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 10, at 8:30 o'clock

CARLO MARIA GIULINI, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in G major, No. 94 ("Surprise")
I. Adagio cantabile; Vivace assai
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Allegro di molto

BRITTEN ..... The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra
Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell, Op. 34

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95
I. Adagio; Allegro molto
II. Largo
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace
IV. Allegro con fuoco

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Music

Giulini Makes Debut With Boston Symphony

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Carlo Maria Giulini actually observed his debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra at this week's open rehearsal. The occasion that attracted an almost completely filled house was both musically qualified as well as thoroughly enjoyable.

Whether the orchestra went all out to assist a young man who, in his debut here, proved to be a musician of sturdy know-how and promise for the years to come, or whether the program of Haydn, Britten and Dvorak created the spark, is difficult to say. But facts do prove that this was one of the most successful "practice" sessions we have yet attended.

Robert Merrill

Mr. Giulini is an unassuming type of conductor, he goes about his duties with complete authority, rather fixed ideas on just what he expects and wants and nothing can be added as to his ability to approach composers of widely separate styles. This latter idea was well supported in the Britten Variations and Fugue and also as the lovely themes of Dvorak's "Goin' Home" music reached out over the footlights.

The Britten was clearly assembled—there were none of the broken phrases as the composer usually dots many of his works with. The conductor made everything jive, everything smoothly led into another subject, and especially well done were the coloring effects as the music skipped lightly along from one section to another. However, let us not forget, at this time, that the director had the finest assemblage of artists before him that could be brought together.

The Dvorak was beautifully interpreted. The absolutely perfectly played horns, woodwind, and clearly defined writing of the composer gathered together into the perfect performance.

Eighteenth Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 10 1962

The Symphony

Fine Musicianship In Inept Program

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Once again the Italian conductor, Carlo Maria Giulini, has demonstrated both a cultivated musicianship and a singular ineptitude at making programs.

Not that yesterday's concert didn't leave me beating with my spoon on the high chair. It was conducted, on the whole, with grace and skill. I'm afraid I found it a simple-minded affair, however, and while it momentarily brought me back to the innocent old days of youthful music appreciation courses, time, alas, has instilled a corrosive sophistication.

One Enough

Any one of the three scores would have been admirable as relief from a more complicated pattern. Marching in line, however, they provoked only the reflection that Mr. Giulini must be trying to educate us. I am willing. The Sorcerer's Apprentice, Nutcracker Suite and Berceuse from 'Jocelyn' should be the next step onward and upward.

Nevertheless, whether Mr. Giulini had a didactic purpose or not, he made a second gratifying guest appearance. The lanky conductor revealed a spirited and firm grasp of his art, and it would be churlish to criticize him because the program, bounteous in tunes, made one long for a tonic discord.

His treatment of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony and Britten's Variations and Fugue on Purcell's theme, constituted interpretation of a rousing order. What sounded arresting about the Symphony No. 94 was the vigor with which the conductor animated the score. Here was no languorous, powdered Haydn complete with beauty patches and elaborate snuff-box ceremonial; but rather, a vibrant and dramatic melodious design.

Brisk Direction

The ingenuity and wit appeared properly, the freshness of Haydn's invention. While it would not do to over-accent, Mr. Giulini's reading was far from understated, and seemed to me to proceed happily in its brisk and personal direction.

Similarly, the unfortunately-titled Britten (and without the title 'The Young Person's Guide' it would probably be revived more frequently) emerged as a resolute performance. It was big in proportion and the conducter focussed on the solo clusters of instruments without deflecting a sense of the music's unity.

The colorful and spectacular quick-tempo version of the fugal theme—which is drawn from the incidental airs Purcell provided for Mrs. Aphra Behn's 'The Moor's Revenge'—and the coda, held a kinetic power that stirred the audience into enthusiastic bravos.

From these scores, the crackling tempi and theatrical climaxes revealed Mr. Giulini's talent conveying the impetuous passions of the opera house. But the Slavic qualities of Dvorak's "New World" Symphony proved not as dramatically viable.

Mr. Giulini's work showed intense care; and the music eluded him. Instead of attaining density and weight, the sonorities had a kind of cheesecloth hyperbole.

It was a Verdian Bohemia. One can credit the conductor with attempting a passionate grandeur, a romantic sublimity that ruthlessly erased the sweet and slender strain of pensive nature-poetry that distinguishes this introverted symphony. The attempt was valid enough. Only the conductor and the music were unsympathetic.

I am reminded of Shaw's comment that the music of Beethoven and Mendelssohn is the music of a Germany still under Franco-Italian influence. And one would like to hear Mr. Giulini return with these, in preference to the composers of a latter-day Central Europe.

Next week Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor. He has scheduled Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," Op. 6; Albeniz's "Iberia" Suite; and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carlo Maria Giulini, guest conductor, presented the 18th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony in G major, No. 94 ("Surprise") . . . Haydn
The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra, Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell, Op. 34 . . . Britten
Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95 . . . Dvorak

Stage Plays

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 4 1962

Last Week For Giulini At Symphony

Carlo Maria Giulini will conclude his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor this week with four concerts and an open rehearsal. His program for the Symphony Hall concert today at 8 p.m. and for Tuesday evening at 8:30 will include Rossini's Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," the Sonata da Concerto by Ghedini; Doriot Anthony, soloist; Tchaikovky's Symphony No. 2 and Three Sacred Pieces by Verdi. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will participate in the Verdi choruses.

The orchestra and Giulini will make final preparations for the week-end concerts at an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The Friday-Saturday program will consist of Haydn's Symphony No. 94, Variations on a Theme of Purcell by Britten, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 5, "New World."

Eleazar de Carvalho, who has not conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949, will be guest conductor Mar. 16, 17, 19 and 20. His program will include Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, "Iberia," by Albeniz-Arbos, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts Mar. 23, 24, 25 and 25, when she will be soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Prokofieff.

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 9, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 10, at 8:30 o'clock

CARLO MARIA GIULINI, Guest Conductor

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in G major, No. 94 ("Surprise")
- I. Adagio cantabile; Vivace assai
- II. Andante
- III. Menuetto
- IV. Allegro di molto

BRITTEN . . . . . The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra
Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell, Op. 34

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Symphony No. 5, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95
- I. Adagio; Allegro molto
- II. Largo
- III. Scherzo: Molto vivace
- IV. Allegro con fuoco

These concerts will end about 4:00 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

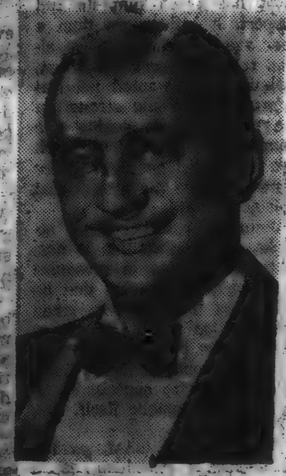
Music

Giulini Makes Debut With Boston Symphony

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Carlo Maria Giulini actually observed his debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra at this week's open rehearsal. The occasion that attracted an almost completely filled house was both musically qualified as well as thoroughly enjoyable.

Whether the orchestra went all out to assist the young man who, in his debut here, proved to be a musician of sturdy know-how and promise for the years to come, or whether the program of Haydn, Britten and Dvorak created the spark, is difficult to say. But facts do prove that this was one of the most successful "practice" sessions we have yet attended.



Robert Merrill

Mr. Giulini is an unassuming type of conductor, he goes about his duties with complete authority, rather fixed ideas on just what he expects and wants and nothing can be added as to his ability to approach composers of widely separate styles. This latter idea was well supported in the Britten Variations and Fugue and also as the lovely themes of Dvorak's "Goin' Home" music reached out over the footlights.

The Britten was clearly assembled—there were none of the broken phrases as the composer usually dots many of his works with. The conductor made everything jive, everything smoothly led into another subject, and especially well done were the coloring effects as the music skipped lightly along from one section to another. However, let us not forget, at this time, that the director had the finest assemblage of artists before him that could be brought together.

The Dvorak was beautifully interpreted. The absolutely perfectly played horns, woodwind, and clearly defined writing of the composer gathered together into the perfect performance.

146

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 7 1962

Symphony Plans

Giulini, Carvalho Conducting

Carlo Maria Giulini will conclude his engagement as Boston Symphony Orchestra guest conductor this week. He will make final preparations for the weekend concerts at an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall Thursday (March 8) at 7:30 p.m. On Friday (March 9, 2:15) and Saturday (March 10, 8:30) the program will consist of Haydn's Symphony No. 94, Variations on a Theme of Purcell by Britten, and Dvořák's Symphony No. 5.

Eleazar de Carvalho, who has not conducted the Boston Symphony in Boston since 1949, will be guest conductor for the orchestra's concerts on March 16, 17, 19, and 20. His program will include Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, "Ibéria" by Albeniz-Arbós, and the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4.

Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be Charles Munch's guest at the Boston Symphony concerts on March 23, 24, 25, and 26, when she will be soloist in performances of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

MAR 10 1962

Fine Haydn and Britten; Good Dvorak, by Giulini

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30 the 18th program of the Friday–Saturday series. Carlo Maria Giulini, guest conductor, presented the "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn; Benjamin Britten's Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell ("The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra"), and the "New World" Symphony by Dvorak.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Carlo Maria Giulini, yesterday making his final appearance before the Friday subscribers to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, repeated his popular success of a week ago. The handsome Italian guest conductor again won cheers and applause, especially after his rousing performance of Dvorak's "New World" Symphony.

What is more, Giulini strongly reinforced the impression he had made as a seasoned and practical craftsman. He has a musical personality of his own, and a fondness for a fairly lush and vibrant string tone. His sense of rhythm is muscular, that of tempo kinetically powerful without a disposition to displayful speed. In short, he is a highly talented musician with sensitivity to temper his dynamic nature.

Not yet, however, has Giulini gained that ultimate consistency through all of a long work, or the ear for clarity (at least the means always to command it) which bespeak the great master of the conducting art. Sometimes, in his rapt attention to the phrasing of a solo, he becomes oblivious to the fact that the quality of ensemble has begun to slip.

As in Dvorak's fast movements, when he sees the word crescendo, Giulini often increases the speed and later slows it down. That results in a certain stop-and-go effect which, if it does not destroy continuity, surely does not maintain it.

Giulini also appears to be so carried away by the emotional surge of a fast movement like the "New World" finale, notably when it is loud, that the tonal balance becomes top-heavy with brass. There was quite a bit of detail, yesterday, that did not penetrate the sound of the heavier instruments. To be sure, the Symphony is so fully scored in places that a conductor is forced to gauge sectional balance with almost superhuman care.

Nonetheless, the ability of Giulini is plain, and his visit to Boston has been pleasurable. His gentle handling of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony was a joy; the ensemble was closeknit, the dynamics suited to Haydn; nothing went too fast or too slow.

Benjamin Britten's Variations on a Theme of Purcell (which I think is the proper title when the explanatory part of the speaker is omitted, as in these performances) came off brilliantly. This is a most ingenious and delightful score, also very fussy and tricky. The whole thing was a show of orchestral virtuosity, and here, more than anywhere else, Giulini proved that he can spin a long line of continuity.

When it came to the fugue, each of the instruments entering in the traditional fashion, you heard every one of them; from there to the end the texture of moving voices was a real fugal texture.

Giulini may leave Boston with the certainty that he has won favor, and that he will be welcome again in the future.

Next week Eleazar de Carvalho will return as guest conductor for the first time since 1949. The Brazilian musician will present for the first time in Boston the Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Webern; Albeniz' "Iberia" in Arbos' orchestration, and the F minor Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 10 1962

Rediscovering Masterworks With Giulini

2-62

Haydn, Britten, and Dvořák Freshly Explored

By Harold Rogers

If Boston Symphony subscribers are under any impression that Carlo Maria Giulini pulled out all his stops at his concerts last weekend, they are in for a surprise. They heard not even the half of it. Yesterday afternoon this impassioned Italian ignited his own heart, thus lighting the hearts of his players, those of his listeners, and setting Symphony Hall on fire with the resulting blaze of cheers and applause.

His conducting produces the combination of a wondrous clarity of tone and precision of statement, set forth with inspired, vibrant emotion. At the outset his program held few hopes of excitement; he is evidently a man of conservative tastes. Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony no longer surprises, masterwork that it is; and "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" by Benjamin Britten, a clever piece of writing, is seldom thought of as being much more than a superficial entertainment. The concluding item, Dvořák's Symphony "From the New World"—well, as one old-timer remarked before the concert began, "That's something we can live without!"

As a matter of fact, these three works, noted in advance, might impress one as being easily dispensable; but how many, having heard Signor Giulini yesterday, would still feel like removing them from the repertoire? When they pass through his heart and mind they come forth all new and burnished. The cobwebs of the years suddenly vanish; we begin hearing things as we have not quite heard them before.

Haydn's No. 94 was the epitome of classical grace, all pearly, lucid, balanced, radiantly eloquent. But the surprise came not with Haydn, it came with the Britten in the first statement of the Purcell theme on which he based his variations and fugue. Suddenly Signor Giulini had become a dynamo of physical energy, actively drawing forth a flood of sound that had power without blare. He displayed an outstanding plastic sense, shaping beautiful phrases while never losing sight of the syntax. He is careful to see that interest does not lag during transitional passages; he keeps them buoyant, infusing them with almost as much interest as he does the thematic statements and their developments.

What was true of his reading of the Britten was equally true of the Dvořák Fifth. The folksy themes we know so well had somehow lost their triteness. One was constantly aware of the symphony's architecture, of Dvořák's great gift of organization. Signor Giulini again shaped the sound into an edifice that stood on foundations of rock.

Yet even more important, he made music that spoke with uncommon emotional power. The "New World" may be something we can live without; but we are grateful that on rare occasions—such as that granted us yesterday by Signor Giulini—it is something we can willingly live with.

Section III THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, MARCH 18, 1962 A 5
MUSIC, OPERA, POP RECORDS

Alas! Our Symphony Season Is Found Disappointing

By ROBERT TAYLOR

I hate to sound like a curmudgeon, but it seems to me that the 81st season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has produced as unrewarding a set of programs as any year in the ensemble's history.

The situation reached an extreme, for me, last week when Carlo Maria Giulini, the young Italian guest conductor, capped a fortnight's stay here with a puerile selection of standard works. Now Mr. Giulini is an able fellow and a sound musician; but the pablum he offered the Friday-Saturday audience was unworthy of his talents.

It has been that way all season long, I'm afraid, with glittering exceptions. The William Steinberg pairing of the Beethoven and Bruckner Eighth Symphonies was one; and Richard Burgin's inspired performance of Mahler's gigantic Third.

And Dr. Munch has come up with exceedingly lively afternoons such as the one in which he attempted to bail out Lukas Foss's porous "Time Cycle" with the Schubert Fifth and "Bacchus and Ariadne," by Roussel.

On the whole, however, it has been dispiriting to watch the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with its traditional grandeur, produce program of lustreless merit on the level of the provincial concert hall. You cannot crown a scapegoat, though it is probably humane nature to do so; and I shall not attempt to inject a sour note into the waning weeks of Charles Munch's distinguished and memorable reign by intemperate faultfinding.

Nevertheless, certain circumstances cannot be ignored. Dr. Munch is a great artist, who is also 70 years old, required to shoulder a spartan and physically exhausting schedule. He is also a lame duck conductor, a situation I deplore from any psychological standpoint. His successor Erich Leinsdorf, waits in the wings.

If Dr. Munch' absences from Symphony have been prolonged this season, and if he tends to rely on his past successes in the French repertory, who is to gainsay that? He needs the recuperative intervals; and he hasn't much incentive to memorize, rehearse and undertake the million-and-one details of new scores. Nevertheless he has done so to a degree, and his role has been fairly upheld.

The art of program-making, though, is extremely subtle; and, as the late Rudolph Elie was fond of pointing out, the first trait of a successful program-maker is to ignore the suggestions of amateurs like the music reviewers. Charles Munch's views (thanks to his book 'I Am A Conductor') concerning the subject are well-known.

He believes that a program should not contain more than 75 minutes of music (which automatically eliminates such composers as Mahler and Bruckner, for whom Dr. Munch's precise Gallic temper doesn't have much sympathy anyway) and that a symphony of large dimensions, the principal work, should be preceded, first, by a classical symphony, a baroque concerto or an overture, and then by a difficult or not-easily-assimilated new score.

"First we prepare the terrain and sharpen the receptivity," he declares, "Then we try to make the public love music whose tarntess may still be disturbing. Finally the classical, rich and solid, relaxes the atmosphere."

The formula is logical enough; and if it hasn't worked as well this season it is because much of the composition wasn't worth reviving. You can't hold Dr. Munch responsible for the creator.

And Mr. Giulini's elemental programs disclose how sensitive programming ought to be.

Mr. Leinsdorf, in as interview recently, announced that he believed the symphony of first rank should be the repository of Beethoven, Brahms and the masters, while the community orchestras should try the unknown.

I accept the first part of his proposition but reject the tail-end. There is so reason why programming shouldn't emphasize both tradition and frontiers; and, in my present curmudgeonly mood, I find Mr. Leinsdorf's quotes ominous.

NewEnglandNewspaperClippingAgency,Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

MAR 15 1962

At Symphony Hall
CARLO GIULINI CONDUCTS BSO

By ALLAN SLY

Last week's Advocate contained Mr. Berlin's masterly account of Carlo Maria Giulini's B.S.O. program. Others have registered a similiar impression of this conductor and the present writer gladly joins in the general acclaim.

Not only does the orchestra sound tidy and warmly glowing, the compositions radiate new life and stimulate in the hearer a joyful rejuvenation.

The Haydn "Surprise" Symphony was utterly delicious, very much in the Italian manner and as though spun from golden threads. Not since Toscanini had one heard such sounds, such turns of phrase and yet last weekend's performance seemed to have more humanity in it.

Britten's Purcell Variations ("Guide to the Orchestra") is surely the orchestral tour de force of all time! It is easy to recall the fascinating film that went with it: one hovered among the players, breathing the very essence of orchestral experience, and when Purcell reasserted himself over the Prokofieff-like fugue at the end, one withdrew to the auditorium to see how the conductor, like a view-obstructor, was after all at the center of things. Britten's virtuosity, his eclecticism, permeated the whole enterprise. And how did the work stand up at Symphony Hall last week? Better than ever, I'd say. It's the most unique fun, and Mr. Giulini drew from the B.S.O. members the most good-humored collaboration.

From the rear of the hall he reminded one in appearance of Danny Kaye. It was hardly possible not to enjoy what he did, though in the second half of the evening I confess to have started wondering about Dvorak's New World Symphony. To be sure it is strung together plausibly enough, but is it organically much more than a big grab bag from which one can extract and identify: formal procedures carried out with propriety: Czech merry-making in Iowa: Indian episodes; patronizing of the assumed musical character of the Negro; a certain theatrical tension set up and maintained rather deliberately; and an urban sophistication that now sounds like the nineties?

It embarrasses me to admit having entertained these thoughts while Mr. Giulini was trying so heroically to persuade us otherwise. Perhaps some of us are too sophisticated for our own good. Or perhaps Mr. Giulini's penchant for clarity reveals, like a scalpel, the hidden defects of an organism thought to be healthy. It certainly showed the perennial youth and clan of the Haydn and the outrageously entertaining wit of the Britten. We must hear some more Britten, and please, much more from Mr. Giulini.

147

148

Nineteenth Week

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 17, at 8:30 o'clock

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO, Guest Conductor

WEBERN ..... Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6

I. Langsam (Slowly)
II. Bewegt (With motion)
III. Mässig (Moderately)
IV. Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
V. Sehr langsam (Very slowly)
VI. Langsam (Slowly)

(First performance in Boston)

ALBÉNIZ ..... "Iberia," Suite (Orchestrated by E. Fernandez Arbós)

Evocación
El Puerto
El Corpus in Sevilla
Triana

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

APR 1 1962

Symphony's Last Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be away this coming week on its last tour of the season, and the farewell tour of Charles Munch as music director. They will play in New York, Washington and Princeton, N.J.

Richard Burgin will conduct the next concerts in Symphony Hall, Apr. 13 and 14. Ruth Posselt (Mrs. Burgin) will be soloist in the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber. The program otherwise will consist of Shostakovitch's Ninth Symphony; Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, and the "1812 Overture" by Tchaikovsky. The Schoenberg Variations, Op. 31, composed in 1927-28, have not been played previously by this Orchestra.

Nadia Boulanger will be guest conductor of a portion of the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall, Apr. 19 and 21 (the afternoon concert will be given Thursday of that week, to avoid Good Friday). She will present three choral works by her late sister, Lili Boulanger. The New England Conservatory Chorus will participate.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

APR 1 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch makes his farewell tour this week with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will conduct the orchestra in Princeton, Washington and New York. The Carnegie Hall concerts on Wednesday and Saturday — the orchestra's 709th and 710th concerts in New York — will mark the close of the orchestra's 76th consecutive season of concerts in New York.

The orchestra's last concert in the annual Providence series and Dr. Munch's farewell to that city will be given on Tuesday, April 10.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra's next Boston concerts at Symphony Hall Friday-Saturday, April 13-14.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

MAR 17 1962

Eleazar de Carvalho on Symphony Podium

Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

After a hiatus of 13 years Eleazar de Carvalho, one of Koussevitzky's protégés, has triumphantly returned to Symphony Hall as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Several changes were to be noted in this Brazilian, both in dress and technique. Yesterday afternoon he wore a cutaway, the first to be seen on the podium in at least a decade; and it would hardly be worth mentioning except that it somehow seemed an integral part of his conductorial posture. A cutaway slims, lengthens, and dignifies. Not that Senhor de Carvalho poses; he is far too fine a musician to fall into that trap. Yet he is never so lost in the music as to become totally unaware of his posture.

* * *

As for technique, he approaches the orchestra more expansively than ever. His gestures are wider, higher, and more handsome. He fans his musicians into flame. At times he figuratively bares his bosom and stands before them motionless, an ecstatic martyr, while the orchestra flays him with sound.

All this is very impressive. Even the music is impressive; and if it weren't, his self-dramatization would hardly be forgivable. He opened with the Boston première of Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, which have been waiting since 1909 for a hearing here. They are now to be found in the "classical" period of the atonal school. Compared to our modern serialists, fractionalists, and electronicists, Webern's pieces are poems of sheerest beauty.

In them the composer laid hold of rarefied essence, of moods so evanescent that they elude description. The third, for instance, was like a funeral march as seen in a weird dream, suddenly building into a garish and nightmarish climax. There are muted bells, drums, harps, celesta. At times the fiddles scrape sul ponticello. The scoring is extremely spare; Webern understood the power that is gained through attenuation.

Then Senhor de Carvalho gave us a different view of his posture—the torero view. He launched into the Albeniz "Iberia" Suite, as arranged by Arbós, and for the life of me I could not erase the vision of the bull ring. There was a true magnificence in the way Senhor de Carvalho could suddenly show himself in profile, paunch drawn in as the imaginary horns went charging by.

* * *

And the music was radiantly Iberian. There were no moonlight aromas of Falla, Ravel, or Granados. Perhaps there could have been, but Senhor de Carvalho simply let the orchestra have its head. In the final Triana one could see an almost imperceptible zapateado in Senhor de Carvalho's heels, with all the elegance of a José Greco.

And what about the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4? We all know that at 16 we believe it to be the greatest symphony in the world, at 26 the worst, and at 36 we somehow find it again on a new level of emotional experience. Yesterday I felt I had lost it again, but there is no gainsaying that Senor de Carvalho let it come forth with enough leisure to let it sing for itself. It poured forth in a kind of radiant noise; and afterwards—after the cheering was over—one listener confided:

"Wasn't it glorious! It sounded just like our stereo when we let it loose!"

148

Nineteenth Week

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 16, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 17, at 8:30 o'clock

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO, Guest Conductor

WEBERN ..... Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6

I. Langsam (Slowly)
II. Bewegt (With motion)
III. Mässig (Moderately)
IV. Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
V. Sehr langsam (Very slowly)
VI. Langsam (Slowly)

(First performance in Boston)

ALBÉNIZ ..... "Iberia," Suite (Orchestrated by E. Fernandez Arbós)

Evocación
El Puerto
El Corpus in Sevilla
Triana

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... *Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

I. Andante sostenuto
II. Andantino in modo di canzona
III. Scherzo: Pizzicato ostinato; Allegro
IV. Finale: Allegro con fuoco

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
APR 1 1962

Symphony's Last Tour

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be away this coming week on its last tour of the season, and the farewell tour of Charles Munch as music director. They will play in New York, Washington and Princeton, N.J.

Richard Burgin will conduct the next concerts in Symphony Hall, Apr. 13 and 14. Ruth Posselt (Mrs. Burgin) will be soloist in the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber. The program otherwise will consist of Shostakóvitch's Ninth Symphony; Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra; and the "1812 Overture" by Tchaikovsky. The Schoenberg Variations, Op. 31, composed in 1927-28, have not been played previously by this Orchestra.

Nadia Boulanger will be guest conductor of a portion of the Boston Symphony concerts in Symphony Hall, Apr. 19 and 21 (the afternoon concert will be given Thursday of that week, to avoid Good Friday). She will present three choral works by her late sister, Lili Boulanger. The New England Conservatory Chorus will participate.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
APR 1 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Charles Munch makes his farewell tour this week with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will conduct the orchestra in Princeton, Washington and New York. The Carnegie Hall concerts on Wednesday and Saturday — the orchestra's 709th and 710th concerts in New York — will mark the close of the orchestra's 76th consecutive season of concerts in New York.

The orchestra's last concert in the annual Providence series and Dr. Munch's farewell to that city will be given on Tuesday, April 10.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra's next Boston concerts at Symphony Hall Friday-Saturday, April 13-14.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 17 1962

Eleazar de Carvalho on Symphony Podium

Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra in Boston Première

By Harold Rogers

After a hiatus of 13 years Eleazar de Carvalho, one of Koussevitzky's protégés, has triumphantly returned to Symphony Hall as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Several changes were to be noted in this Brazilian, both in dress and technique. Yesterday afternoon he wore a cutaway, the first to be seen on the podium in at least a decade; and it would hardly be worth mentioning except that it somehow seemed an integral part of his conductorial posture. A cutaway slims, lengthens, and dignifies. Not that Senhor de Carvalho poses; he is far too fine a musician to fall into that trap. Yet he is never so lost in the music as to become totally unaware of his posture.

* * *

As for technique, he approaches the orchestra more expansively than ever. His gestures are wider, higher, and more handsome. He fans his musicians into flame. At times he figuratively bares his bosom and stands before them motionless, an ecstatic martyr, while the orchestra flays him with sound.

All this is very impressive. Even the music is impressive; and if it weren't, his self-dramatization would hardly be forgivable. He opened with the Boston première of Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, which have been waiting since 1909 for a hearing here. They are now to be found in the "classical" period of the atonal school. Compared to our modern serialists, fractionalists, and electronicists, Webern's pieces are poems of sheerest beauty.

In them the composer laid hold of rarefied essence, of moods so evanescent that they elude description. The third, for instance, was like a funeral march as seen in a weird dream, suddenly building into a garish and nightmarish climax. There are muted bells, drums, harps, celesta. At times the fiddles scrape sul ponticello. The scoring is extremely spare; Webern understood the power that is gained through attenuation.

Then Senhor de Carvalho gave us a different view of his posture—the torero view. He launched into the Albéniz "Iberia" Suite, as arranged by Arbós, and for the life of me I could not erase the vision of the bull ring. There was a true magnificence in the way Senhor de Carvalho could suddenly show himself in profile, paunch drawn in as the imaginary horns went charging by.

* * *

And the music was radiantly Iberian. There were no moonlight aromas of Falla, Ravel, or Granados. Perhaps there could have been, but Senhor de Carvalho simply let the orchestra have its head. In the final Triana one could see an almost imperceptible zapateado in Senhor de Carvalho's heels, with all the elegance of a José Greco.

And what about the Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4? We all know that at 16 we believe it to be the greatest symphony in the world, at 26 the worst, and at 36 we somehow find it again on a new level of emotional experience. Yesterday I felt I had lost it again, but there is no gainsaying that Senor de Carvalho let it come forth with enough leisure to let it sing for itself: it poured forth in a kind of radiant noise; and afterwards—after the cheering was over—one listener confided:

"Wasn't it glorious! It sounded just like our stereo when we let it loose!"

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

1491

Music of the Webern Type a Neurotic, Fugitive Art

Lacking Vigor, Heat And Passion, It Has Pallid Technic Only

By CYRUS DURGIN

DURGIN

The first work that Eleazar de Carvalho conducted during his all too brief visit as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was the Opus 6 of the late Anton Webern, titled collectively Six Pieces for Orchestra. These were first Boston performances, and very likely they will be the last for a while.

Although the type of art represented by such music seems to me to be neurotic and fugitive, we all have a duty to listen at least once to compositions which serious and esteemed musicians deem worth the time and effort required to rehearse and perform them. That has been accomplished, I think, in the case of Webern's Opus 6.

Reaction

In a reaction against German musical romanticism—which began well before World War I—Webern adopted the usage of atonal music, the style which abandoned the theories of tonality under which Western music for three centuries had evolved. He sought to compress his music into the barest minimum of notes and length; he adopted a new manner of writing melody which often dispersed the notes of a single phrase among several instruments of contrasting range and tone color. He was an erudite man in the tonal science, and sought further to utilize the various resources of counterpoint.

Nothing wrong about that. Webern's music, ideally speaking, ought then to have been total music, all non-essentials eliminated, all excrescences cleansed away, the honest and basic art of a well-trained and highly intellectual man.

But what came out was, in my view, a so-called music that lacked vigor, heat, passion, the spirit of human life and a sense of human communication. It seemed the reflection of a neurotic temperament, an art fleeing from this world into a never-never refuge of unnatural calm and synthetic order. It was, as I hear it, music of reaction and defeat, of fear and inanition, an avenue of retreat which proved, at the last, a dead end.

Not Enough

Webern's pallid technic remained the only element worth consideration, and that was not enough. This was music not only dead, but which never had lived. Now one may take that or leave it, according to taste, for taste is ultimately the determining force in the survival of any art—taste exercised widely by many persons over a considerable period of time.

But what I do object to wholeheartedly, is the claim of those who profess to find Webern's music viable, that he was the Way, the Truth and the Light for our present and posterity's future. He was nothing of the sort, I believe, and anything but the seminal force his proponents claim his influence to be today.

This is said in the sense of the large public that consumes music by listening to it, as the large public of the visual arts looks at painting and sculpture, and reads literature, old and new, for pleasure. Art may inform, and the best of it surely educates, but its first function is that of pleasing. A great gap has spread between the contemporary public and the academic sort of artistic creators who fabricate alleged art works for each other, and who themselves do not especially like them.

Will to Please

It is quite true that a creator of art must please himself before he pleases other people, but the important fact is that the creator who proves great does please himself and subsequently others. The acknowledged great musical masters of the 20th Century, thus far, have not fled and become ingrown. Hindemith, whose art has constantly grown, shows enormous vigor in his work. So did Bartok. So did that of Prokofieff down to the last, sad years under Soviet domination.

For that matter, there is infinitely more life and pleasure in such evidently lesser figures as Shostakovich, Khatchaturian and Kabalevsky than in Webern's wan futilities!

It is not the fact of dissonance that is at issue, nor the 12-tone and serial systems. It is the music, and the spirit which animates it that is important. Whatever technical devices that will work for a composer and produce genuine, living music, are fine. But they are the concern of the composer only, and not of his listeners. Webern's technique quite logically will find its place in the theoretical history of the tone-art of our times. But it did not produce living music!

Enjoy CYRUS DURGIN in the daily Globe, too. To have the morning or evening Globe home delivered, call AVenue 8-8000 any time.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

de Carvalho Conducting Symphony

Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian musician, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts next Friday at 2:15 and Saturday at 8:30; Monday at 8:30, March 19, and Tuesday at 8:30, March 20. His program will be the same for all four concerts: Six Pieces for Orhestra (first performance in Boston), Webern; Suite, "Iberia," Albeniz-Arbos; Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Tchaikovsky.

Although Mr. de Carvalho has not conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949, he has continued to work closely with it each Summer at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. de Carvalho, who heads the orchestra and conducting department at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center, first came to Tanglewood from his native Brazil in 1946 to study with Serge Koussevitzky.

In addition to his activities in this country, Mr. de Carvalho is music director of the Orquestra Sinfonica Brasileira in Rio de Janeiro, and general director of the Juventude Musical Brasileira.

Charles Munch will return from holiday to conduct the concerts beginning March 23. Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist Mar. 23, 24, 25 and 27 when she will participate in performances of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2. Dr. Munch's program, in addition to the concerto, will include the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962); and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. At the Mar. 25th concert, however, Handel's "Water Music" Suite has been scheduled rather than Mr. Fine's Symphony.

Catharine Crozier will give the final concert of this season's organ concerts at Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, Mar. 25, at 6 p.m.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAR 7 1962

A Music Writer To Editorial Writer

Dear Uncle Dudley—It was not politeness but the urgency of other matters to be discussed in my recent review of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of the Symphony in B-flat by Ernest Chausson, that accounted for no reference to the ancestry of the slow movement.

This is indeed a "reminiscence" movement, and you are quite right in pointing out what are almost—but not quite—quotations from the beginning of the Prelude to Act 3 of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

But the movement divides in two distinct sections, and the second of them is quite different from the first. In the second, you find almost a quotation of material Chausson used in his own "Poem of Love and the Sea." The Symphony was completed in 1890; "Poem of Love and the Sea" (and why isn't that ever done nowadays, there are plenty of good contraltos for the voice part!), begun in 1882, was finished in 1892.

Yet even when the reminiscence of Wagner has been acknowledged, the music, in my belief, remains essentially French. Wagner influenced many composers, especially through the chromatic harmony of "Tristan," as no one knows better than you. Chromaticism had been coloring music from the time of Chopin, Liszt, Berlioz and Schumann, and it fascinated many of the French, notably Cesar Franck. Authorities apparently disagree where Franck got his chromatic harmony. Was it from Wagner or other sources?

Upon this questioning note (pun intended), I remain

Your affectionate nephew,
CYRUS DURGIN
Boston

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 63,288
MAR 17 1962

De Carvalho Performance Is Acclaimed

BOSTON, March 17 (UPI)—Brazilian conductor Eleazar de Carvalho won audience and critical acclaim yesterday as guest director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after a 13-year absence.

De Carvalho had appeared in recent years at the Berkshire Music Center but had not conducted in Boston since 1949.

His program included the Boston premiere of Anton Webern's six pieces for orchestra.

There was an audience ovation for de Carvalho's reading of the Iberia Suite of Albeniz and the D Minor Symphony of Tchaikovsky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
MAR 10 1962

De Carvalho To Conduct BSO On March 16

BOSTON (UPI) — Eleazar de Carvalho will return as a regular season guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra March 16 for the first time since 1949.

In the interim the Brazilian conductor has appeared at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox.

The orchestra also announced Friday night that auditions will be held March 19 in Symphony Hall for instrumentalists applying for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox.

Orchestra members who serve on the center's instrumental faculty will audition string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp performers.

Applicants accepted in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 9 1962

ELEAZAR DeCARVALHO will be guest conductor at this week end's Symphony concerts.

150

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185

FEB 24 1962

Music

De Carvalho to Be Guest Conductor

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has invited Elezar de Carvalho to be guest conductor in the programs listed for late March.

Earlier in the month, Carlo Maria Giulini will make his Boston debut as conductor. He will be heard in programs on March 2, 3, 4, 6, and also at the open rehearsal on March 8. He will also appear on the concerts of the 16th and 20th.

Elezar de Carvalho

Guest solists to be heard in March include, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; the Harvard Glee club, Radcliffe Choral society and Elliot Forbes as conductor of the choral groups. Appearing as guest soloist at the Tuesday evening concert next week will be Andre Navarra, 'cellist, who will be heard in the Dvorak "Concerto for 'Cello in B-minor."

Apparently, the Youth Symphony programs, being conducted in this city, are rapidly catching on. The far-sighted parents and musical experts who are making this possible have definitely created a new era in our community. It seems that both the idea and the necessary material was unavailable in the past. With the advent of such a medium all because of the availability of the members of one of the world's greatest orchestras, many communities found themselves easily within reach of the finest of music for their children.

The committee in charge in the local area has performed a tremendous thing for music and just how far reaching all of this can be should become apparent in the not too distant future.

Along the same line, that of creative work in music, is the jazz club at Lowell State college. The young musicians, all students at the school, have given modern styled music a firm and respected foundation upon which to stand.

The community has gained much from this endeavor, and it is quite possible that such an endeavor as this could also influence the younger musical set.

THE NATIONAL PIANO GUILD sectional auditions that were established here a few seasons ago was actually the first organization to foster the cause of art appreciation and know-how among the younger element. This attempt to advance musical interest and formal study proved to be an instant success.

Listening to the Met broadcasts on Saturday not only provides much in the way of musical enjoyment, but also an insight into just what is being done to make music in our country as well as abroad something that should be a part of everyone's social and educational way of life.

The latter part we are concerned with are the between the acts programs that embrace both historical and philosophical fact in opera. Many of the finest musical minds of our time have made "guest" appearances on one panel or another. But as was proven only recently, the greatest of minds at times fail to realize that such an emotion as enthusiasm can easily blind one to what the basic problems that face opera actually are.

The announcement that one of the world's greatest foundations has entered the field and with all sincerity desires to aid in the cause that will advance the creation and standing of modern day opera, is indeed welcome. The idea is fine, it is unselfish, but unfortunately is also a million miles away from what the true target should be.

How can we have modern opera written that stems from an era almost childish in its knowlege of voice culture? The musical centers of the world are filled with voice teachers of no ability and with people who learn composition from teachers who actually believe that they are able to write for the voice as well as any of the instruments. As a closing example, are these so-called experts on the radio so closed in their minds or limited in their knowledge that they believe that the voice is in the category of an ordinary instrument?

Great writing can only come when great voice teachers are created. What a step in the direction of the future it would be if these fantastic sums of money were spent to create and train people who might build the voices of the future. Surely natural voices are not restricted to any era or century.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

MAR 17 1962

The Symphony

Visitor Displays Ardor and Grace

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian maestro, returned to Symphony Hall yesterday after an absence of 13 years to confirm what the regular visitor to Tanglewood knows: that he is a musician of ardor and grace and consequence.

In short, this was a comely program adorned by a guest who has been a member of the conducting faculty of the Berkshire Music Center during many seasons, and whose familiarity with the arts of the conductor is assured. His point-of-view is Latin. His presance is cosmopolitan. His technique, from the dramatic expressivity of his left hand to the precise yet flexible pattern of the beat with his right, demonstrates a suave cultivation.

Lyric Line

Mr. de Carvalho distills the long lyric line, and coruscating color and drama. The balance is neither wholly European in character, nor Brazilian; he recognizes when to interfere and when to let momentum carry the passage. He sounds spirited, resilient and fresh, and the light South American accent to his phrasing carries a piquant geniality.

To be sure, the Webern Op. 6, the most intellectually imposing part of the program, affords little chance for these qualities. The composer here deals with extraordinarily refined senorities, attenated to the point of silence.

Webern strove for the utmost economy of statement, recalling the ancient Chinese brush painters, but aside from brevity, there is no correspondence. It was the purpose of the Chinese brush painter to contract with meaning of all experience into a line—Webern is concerned with sound for sound's sake. As Desmond Shawe-Taylor so aptly says in the notes, Webern ignored immense areas of the human condition.

Certain Nooks

On the other hand, he probed certain nooks exhaustively, and I enjoyed the 100 or so bars that constitute Op. 6 as an exotic, specialized affair. Only the initiate can discern the inversions and retrograde subtleties. The members of the audience whom I overheard grumbling about not being able to catch a note haven't need of an ear trumpet yet. Silence forms part of the composer's textural material: a rather austere and chilly substance.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting, presented the 19th program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6 ..... Webern
"Iberia," Suite ..... Albeniz (orchestrated by Arbos)
Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36 ..... Tchaikovsky

The "Iberia" Suite, where Mr. de Carvalho touched his interpretive height, escorted everyone back from galactial regions without problems of re-entry, however. It was earthy, sensual, and burning with Andalusian passion.

Probably one may argue that Arbos laid on the local color juicily in his orchestration. I am not averse to the romantic and idealized, though, and "Iberia," lacking pretense, seems exactly the right work for gusto and extroversion. Mr. de Carvalho's fandanguillos, coplas, paso dobles, gypsy seguidallas, saetas and polos swept along with blazing pageantry. The treatment captured the processional sweep of a toreador's Spain. The conductor is born to the rhythms of Albeniz' idiom.

Hit High Cost

I was less enthralled by his Tchaikovsky Fourth, though on the whole this proved a capable, gracious account. The tonal contrasts of the inner movements struck me as being contrived; the conductor spent too much time preparing these so that he could unleash a vibrant and striding finale.

This he attained, but the cost came high. The ensemble was superb, and the volume, smoothness and clarity of the symphony's melodious elements represented the warm realization of Eleazar de Carvalho's agreeable talents.

Next weekend Dr. Charles Munch will offer the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962). Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 16. "Tod und Verklarung," Tone Poem, Op. 24, of Richard Strauss, completes the program.

151

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

MUSICAL

Eleazar de Carvalho will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its Symphony Hall concerts this Friday-Saturday, Monday and Tuesday. At these concerts Mr. de Carvalho will conduct the first performances in Boston of Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" suite by Albeniz and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

Although Mr. de Carvalho has not conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston since 1949, he has continued to work closely with it each summer at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. de Carvalho, who heads the Orchestra and Conducting Department at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center, first came to Tanglewood from his native Brazil in 1946 to study with Serge Koussevitzky.

Charles Munch returns from holiday to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its concerts beginning March 23. Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be his guest at the concerts on March 23, 24, 25 and 27 when she will participate in performances of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Catharine Crozier will give the final concert of this season's Organ Concerts at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, March 25, at 6 p.m.

Other concerts this week include:

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

MAR 17 1962

Conductor de Carvalho Introduces Webern Six

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 19th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Eleazar de Carvalho, guest conductor, presented Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, for the first time in Boston; the Suite "Iberia" by Albeniz, in the orchestration by Fernandez Arbos, and the F minor Symphony by Tchaikovsky.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Eleazar de Carvalho, returning for the first time since 1949 as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made himself a lot of new friends and reawakened the admiration of those already familiar with his talent. At concert's end, yesterday, he was the object of a true ovation, as that term is known in concert halls today.

But how many friends he won for the serial technic of Anton Webern, whose Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, he conducted for the first time in Boston, that is another matter. Probably it is not even a moot point. I doubt if many converts were made, though de Carvalho and the Boston Symphony musicians achieved what seemed to be a most careful and dedicated account of these brief, introverted movements.

Utmost brevity, strict formality in serial technic, introversion of manner and style and substance. All those usual, pious words, carefully chosen for the purpose, applied with high seriousness to describe—what? Even a newspaper reviewer is likely to feel uneasy if a musical expression typical of a certain movement of the present does not, at the least, seem "interesting" or arresting". What horror if he should condemn what ultimately may become "popular"! What sheer unbearable horror!

Putting on my frayed Admiral's cap, inherited from Farragut, I say "Damn the torpedoes and full speed ahead." I do condemn this sort of alleged music as piddling nonsense.

O yes, one finds contrasts of timbres and sonorities in the so-called melodies that bounce from one group of instruments to another. One also finds a nearly total absence of rhythm, and marvels that so evidently honest, sincere and serious a man as Webern could summon the conceit to call these fragments "pieces."

What sort of psychic illness this tonal essay defines, may be named by the psychiatrists. The solution of technical problems may be stated by the theory teachers, avant garde subdivision. This sort of work, not only dead but which never lived, is for as well as by, a precious group of solitary pedants, withdrawn into their wormy ivory tower, apart from life, humankind, warmth, from all those aspects of living which make genuine music a communication from one person to another.

Nonetheless, there must be a challenge to a conductor to conduct this stuff, and to musicians to play it. It deserves one performance for that reason alone. But one is enough!

de Carvalho has grown into a most competent, commanding and dynamic conductor in the years since last he appeared here. The former Koussevitzky protege meanwhile has spread his repute through the ranks of Berkshire Music Center students who have studied conducting or played under his baton at Tanglewood.

In Fernandez Arbos' orchestration, the original piano pieces of Albeniz take on a wondrous variety of color (vitality and rhythmic ingenuity already were there!) and they seem more Spanish and less consciously polished than Debussy's "Iberia." Yesterday's performance was full proof of how de Carvalho has developed individuality of his own.

The Tchaikovsky "Fate" Symphony also was given a full-blown reading, full-blown taking on a special shade of meaning when the huge blasts of brass resonance are considered! The performance was a bit rough but never commonplace.

Next week Dr. Charles Munch will return. He will conduct first performance of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), the Second Piano Concerto of Prokofieff, with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as soloist, and "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

152

Twentieth Week

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
FRAMINGHAM, Mass.
Circ. 13,826

MAR 17 1962

Boston Symphony to Play Natick Man's New Work

WALTHAM, March 17 — Director Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23 in the premiere performance of a new work by Prof. Irving Fine of Brandeis University, a Natick resident.

The composition, "Symphony (1962)," commissioned by the Orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant, will be performed in Boston's Symphony Hall. The performance will be repeated on March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 27 at Sanders Theater in Cambridge, Mass., and on Aug. 12 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The March 27 performance will be broadcast live over WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Mr. Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music and chairman of the council of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis, received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from Harvard University, where he worked with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston. He studied composition with Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in France and conducting with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

A member of the Brandeis faculty for 12 years, Prof. Fine was previously assistant professor of music at Harvard and assistant director of the Harvard Glee Club. He was co-director of the Music Seminar at the Salzburg Seminar for American Studies in 1950 and was a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood from 1946 through 1957.

The Boston-born composer has received many awards and commissions, including two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Fullbright Research Professorship for France, awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the Society for the Publication of American Music and commissions from the Board Foundation, the Julliard School of Music, the Koussevitsky Foundation, the Fromm Foundation and others. His "Notturno" was awarded a Chamber Music Prize, and his "Partita for Wind Quartet" a New York Critics' Citation.

Among his published works are "Children's Fables for Grown-Ups"; "String Quartet"; "Alice in Wonderland Suite for Chorus and Orchestra"; and "Toccata Concertante," which the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed many times. Several of his compositions have been recorded, including "Serious Song for String Orchestra," by the Louisville Orchestra, and "String Quartet" by the Julliard String Orchestra.

Besides his activities as composer and teacher, Prof. Fine, a resident of Natick, Mass., has written many articles and reviews for music periodicals and newspapers.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

MAR 22 1962

Charles Munch To Conduct Premier Of Fine's Symphony

Charles Munch has returned from a holiday and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this weekend. At the Friday (March 23, 2:15) — Saturday (March 24, 8:30) concerts Doctor Munch will conduct the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962) which was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the American Music Center commissioning series under a grant from the Ford Foundation. At these concerts Doctor Munch will also conduct the Richard Strauss tone poem "Tod und Verklarung" and pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Mr. Fine, professor of Music and Chairman of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis University, studied in this country with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston at Harvard and in Europe with Nadia Boulanger.

The final concert in the Orchestra's Sunday Afternoon Series will be given next Sunday (March 25, 3:00). Charles Munch will conduct and the program will include Schubert's Symphony No. 5, the Prokofieff Piano Concerto No. 2 with Nicole Henriot Schweitzer as soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Tod und Verklarung."

Catherine Crozier will give the last of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m. Sunday (March 25).

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161

SUN MAR 18 1962

Boston to Hear New Fine Symphony

WALTHAM, Mass.

A new symphony by Irving Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music at Brandeis University here, will have its first performances in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts on March 23 and 24 in Boston's Symphony Hall, with Charles Munch conducting. The work, commissioned by the Boston Symphony under a Ford Foundation grant, will be repeated by this orchestra March 27 in Cambridge and on Aug. 12 in the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

Mr. Fine, who has been a member of the Brandeis faculty for twelve years, is also chairman of the council of the university's School of Creative Arts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,488

MAR 20 1962

Boston Symphony to Play Composition by Prof. Fine

Director Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23 in the premiere performance of a new work by Prof. Irving Fine of Brandeis University.

The composition, "Symphony (1962)," commissioned by the orchestra as part of the American Music Center's commissioning series under a Ford Foundation grant, will be performed in Boston's Symphony Hall. The performance will be repeated on March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 27 at Sanders Theater in Cambridge, and on Aug. 12 at Tanglewood in Lenox. The March 27 performance will be broadcast live over WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Prof. Irving Fine

Mr. Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music and chairman of the council of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis, received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from Harvard University, where he worked with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston. He studied composition with Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in France and conducting with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

A member of the Brandeis faculty for 12 years, Prof. Fine was previously assistant professor of music at Harvard and assistant director of the Harvard Glee Club. He was co-director of the Music Seminar at the Salzburg Seminar for American Studies in 1950 and was a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood from 1946 through 1957.

The Boston-born composer has received many awards and commissions, including two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Fulbright Research Professorship for France, awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the Society for the Publication of of American Music and commissions from the Ford Foundation, the Julliard School of Music, the Koussevitsky Foundation, the Fromm Foundation and others. His "Notturno" was awarded a Chamber Music Prize, and his "Partita for Wind Quartet" a New York Critics' Citation.

Among his published works are "Children's Fables for Grown-Ups"; "String Quartet"; "Alice in Wonderland Suite for Chorus and Orchestra"; and "Toccata Concertante," which the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed many times. Several of his compositions have been recorded, including "Serious Song for String Orchestra," by the Louisville Orchestra, and "String Quartet" by the Julliard String Orchestra.

Besides his activities as composer and teacher, Prof. Fine, a resident of Natick, has written many articles and reviews for music periodicals and newspapers.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Times
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 9,790

MAR 22 1962

PROFESSOR IRVING FINE of Brandeis University is the composer of "Symphony (1962)", a new work that will have its premiere performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23, at Symphony Hall, under the baton of Charles Munch. The composition was commissioned by the Orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant. The performance will be repeated on March 24.

Mr. Jacob Cohen, Executive di-

Twentieth Program

AFTERNOON, MARCH 23, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 24, at 8:30 o'clock

Symphony (1962)

I. Introduction: Andante quasi allegretto
II. Capriccio: Allegro con spirito
III. Ode: Grave

First performance

Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 16

Andantino; Allegretto; Andantino
Scherzo: Vivace
Intermezzo: Allegro moderato
Finale: Allegro tempestoso

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

SOLOIST
NICOLE HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER
Mrs. HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
M. 50,000
MAR 31 1962

The Mr. Peacock label, under the aegeis of Larry Uttal, is handling national distribution of the Rome label. The Earls recorded for Rome. Uttal's label is also distributing Australian artist Johnny O'Keefe's record of "I'm Counting on You." . . . The Bandbox label in Denver has signed Don May, Sue Lebah and Dean Hayden. . . . The Ford label of New York has pacted thrush Genifer Glenn, guitarist Robert Gallo and warbler Mike Cahill. . . . Rocky Rolf, head of Pelican distribs in New Orleans, has opened a retail record shop in that city. . . . Frances Williams, of the BMI Nashville office, marries Ernest Preston April 13 in Nashville. . . . The Original Piano Quartet gives its first New York concert since 1949 on March 29 at Town Hall, New York, under the auspices of Bob Gardiner. Group used to be called the First Piano Quartet. . . . Irving Fine's new work, "Symphony," was presented last week by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 2[illegible] 1962

At Symphony

Charles Munch, back from a vacation, conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this afternoon, tomorrow evening and Sunday afternoon.

The program today and tomorrow will include the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), commissioned by the Boston Symphony under a grant from the Ford Foundation.

The balance will be the Richard Strauss tone poem "Tod and Verklarung" and pianist Nicole Henrio-Schwitzer as soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto, No. 2. These two will be on the Sunday program with Schubert's Symphony No. 5 replacing Mr. Fine's work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,512
MAR 27 1962

Symphony By Fine Praised

A premiere performance of Irving Fine's "Symphony (1962)" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Charles Munch last Friday won critical acclaim from Boston critics.

Fine, the nephew of Edward Fine Sr., of this city, is chairman of the department of music at Brandeis university and formerly was associated with Harvard.

The work by Fine was described as music that "breathes, moves and lives" by Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe. The Herald's music critic, Robert Taylor, reported it to be "a work of moderately impressive substance." While Fine is recognized as a composer of considerable range, this is his first work in the symphonic form.

This first symphony, writes Taylor, "is big, hortatory, eminently serious. The virtues distinguishing his earlier work, the aesthetic concerns of elaborate polyphony, galvanic rhythm and logical design, glimmer throught his score, yet in another context."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

MAR 24 1962

The Symphony

New Work Is Big, Hortatory, Serious

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), his first in the form, which received a world premiere with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch yesterday, is a work of moderately impressive substance.

Lest this sound like a malediction with faint praise, I hasten to add that my reaction was conditioned by two factors: the vehemence and magnitude of the composer's statement, and the exceedingly difficult nature of his idiom. It was not prepared for the former, while the latter also demanded some adjustment.

Mr. Fine teaches at Brandeis University, where he helped organize the music department; prior to 1950 he was associated with Harvard. His composition, which ranges from the incidental music of a dramatized "Alice in Wonderland," to the cantata "The Choral New Yorker," based on poems from the magazine, to string and wind combinations and a "Toccata Concertante," has long been familiar to the local audience.

Wit, Grace

I admire this output for qualities of wit, grace and formal sensibility—most especially for eloquent emotional understatement. Now Mr. Fine has gone to the opposite extreme. His First Symphony is big, hortatory, eminently serious. The virtues distinguishing his earlier work, the aesthetic concerns of elaborate polyphony, galvanic rhythm and logical design, glimmer through his score, yet in another context.

And the context is not particularly congenial to Mr. Fine's talents. It is rather as though an immensely gifted writer of well-wrought short stories had decided to produce a novel on the scale of Doestoevsky.

Mr. Fine is too brilliant an exponent of the art of development to create a novel out of several interwoven tales. Nevertheless, the fastidious sense of form is not enough to make up for the fact that scale seldom enhances understatement.

The symphony is in three sections, the first slow and pastoral; the second a lively scherzo; the third a solemn fantasia with a succeeding epilogue of pomp and circumstances. Of these I felt the middle part, which bristles with crisp vigor and offers acrid and angular figurations timbling and capering, to be most fully realized.

Overt Echoes

Segments of the other two movements eluded me. The opening features Shostakovitch-like bassoons, and I noted the influence of Hindemith in the Ode, but the Symphony is singularly devoid of overt echoes.

I could not tell if serial fragmented handling entered into the work, because of the staccato rhythms and instrumental clusters, the wide leaps of pattern that attracted attenion at first hearing. Mr. Fine has apparently chosen to adopt the prevailing international mode of Stravinskyan neo-classicism with a Schoenberg punctuation. I missed his melodic imagination here; but his technical prowess was everywhere patent.

Returning with the Prokofieff Second Concerto, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer repeated the unflawed triumph she forged with this mighty score in 1957. While the music is perhaps less lyrical than the entrancing Third Concerto, it is far more formidable in its virtuosic requirements.

Musical Accord

Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer did not pound, neither did she bang. Her scale passages were splendidly articulated, and her pedaling unblurred. She exhibited a crystalline tone. Her dynamics were adapted to the occasion, the Concerto emerged with proportions that were tense and driving, and still the approach was not so large that finesse vanished.

She gave an imposing interpretation, and the partnership of Dr. Munch and the orchestra represented an ultimate of musical accord.

I wish I could say as much for the "Death and Transfiguration," a dry Gallic reading. Although he lacks sympathy for the sensuous depth of Germanic tone, Charles Munch is not unaware of the drama. His treatment stresses explosive climaxes and whiplash contrasts. It is exciting but earthbound Strauss. Next week, however, in his penultimate appearance, Dr. Munch revisits the realm of French music where he is the world's acknowledged master: Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAR 18 1962

Weekend Concerts Premier Symphony

Charles Munch has returned from a vacation and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this week-end. At the Friday-Saturday concerts Munch will conduct the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), comsioned by the Boston Symphony in the American Music Center commissioning series under a grant from the Ford Foundation. The program will also include the Richard Strauss tone poem poem "Tod und Verklarung" and pianist Nicole Henriot-Schwietzer will be soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

FINE

Fine, professor of music and chairmn of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis University, studied in this country with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston at Harvard and in Europe with Nadia Boulanger.

Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony concerts Monday and Tuesday, Mar. 19 and 20 at 8:30. The program will be Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" Suite by Albeniz and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The final concert in the Sunday Afternoon Series will be given next Mar. 25 at 3:00. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5, the Prokofieff Piano Concerto No. 2 with Mme. Henriot-Schueitzer as soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Tod und Verklarung."

Catharine Crozier will give the last of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m., Mar. 25.

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 23, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 24, at 8:30 o'clock

FINE ..... Symphony (1962)

I. Intrada: Andante quasi allegretto
II. Capriccio: Allegro con spirito
III. Ode: Grave

First performance

PROKOFIEFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Op. 16

I. Andantino; Allegretto; Andantino
II. Scherzo: Vivace
III. Intermezzo: Allegro moderato
IV. Finale: Allegro tempestoso

INTERMISSION

STRAUSS ..... "Tod und Verklärung," Tone Poem, Op. 24

SOLOIST

NICOLE HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER

MRS. HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER plays the Baldwin Piano

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BILLBOARD MUSIC WEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 50,000
MAR 31 1962

The Mr. Peacock label, under the aegeis of Larry Uttal, is handling national distribution of the Rome label. The Earls recorded for Rome. Uttal's label is also distributing Australian artist Johnny O'Keefe's record of "I'm Counting on You." . . . The Bandbox label in Denver has signed Don May, Sue Lebah and Dean Hayden. . . . The Ford label of New York has pacted thrush Genifer Glenn, guitarist Robert Gallo and warbler Mike Cahill. . . . Rocky Rolf, head of Pelican distribs in New Orleans, has opened a retail record shop in that city. . . . Frances Williams, of the BMI Nashville office, marries Ernest Preston April 13 in Nashville. . . . The Original Piano Quartet gives its first New York concert since 1949 on March 29 at Town Hall, New York, under the auspices of Bob Gardiner, Group used to be called the First Piano Quartet. . . . Irving Fine's new work, "Symphony," was presented last week by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAR 23 1962

At Symphony

Charles Munch, back from a vacation, conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this afternoon, tomorrow evening and Sunday afternoon.

The program today and tomorrow will include the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), commissioned by the Boston Symphony under a grant from the Ford Foundation.

The balance will be the Richard Strauss tone poem "Tod and Verklarung" and pianist Nicole Henrio-Schwitzer as soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto, No. 2. These two will be on the Sunday program with Schubert's Symphony No. 5 replacing Mr. Fine's work.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,512
MAR 27 1962

Symphony By Fine Praised

A premiere performance of Irving Fine's "Symphony (1962)" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Charles Munch last Friday won critical acclaim from Boston critics.

Fine, the nephew of Edward Fine Sr., of this city, is chairman of the department of music at Brandeis university and formerly was associated with Harvard.

The work by Fine was described as music that "breathes, moves and lives" by Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe. The Herald's music critic, Robert Taylor, reported it to be "a work of moderately impressive substance." While Fine is recognized as a composer of considerable range, this is his first work in the symphonic form.

This first symphony, writes Taylor, "is big, hortatory, eminently serious. The virtues distinguishing his earlier work, the aesthetic concerns of elaborate polyphony, galvanic rhythm and logical design, glimmer throught his score, yet in another context."

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 24 1962

The Symphony

New Work Is Big, Hortatory, Serious

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), his first in the form, which received a world premiere with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch yesterday, is a work of moderately impressive substance.

Lest this sound like a malediction with faint praise, I hasten to add that my reaction was conditioned by two factors: the vehemence and magnitude of the composer's statement, and the exceedingly difficult nature of his idiom. It was not prepared for the former, while the latter also demanded some adjustment.

Mr. Fine teaches at Brandeis University, where he helped organize the music department; prior to 1950 he was associated with Harvard. His composition, which ranges from the incidental music of a dramatized "Alice in Wonderland," to the cantata "The Choral New Yorker," based on poems from the magazine, to string and wind combinations and a "Toccata Concertante," has long been familiar to the local audience.

Wit, Grace

I admire this output for qualities of wit, grace and formal sensibility—most especially for eloquent emotional understatement. Now Mr. Fine has gone to the opposite extreme. His First Symphony is big, hortatory, eminently serious. The virtues distinguishing his earlier work, the aesthetic concerns of elaborate polyphony, galvanic rhythm and logical design, glimmer through his score, yet in another context.

And the context is not particularly congenial to Mr. Fine's talents. It is rather as though an immensely gifted writer of well-wrought short stories had decided to produce a novel on the scale of Doestoevsky.

Mr. Fine is too brilliant an exponent of the art of development to create a novel out of several interwoven tales. Nevertheless, the fastidious sense of form is not enough to make up for the fact that scale seldom enhances understatement.

The symphony is in three sections, the first slow and pastoral, the second a lively scherzo, the third a solemn fantasia with a succeeding epilogue of pomp and circumstances. Of these I felt the middle part, which bristles with crisp vigor and offers acrid and angular figurations timbling and capering, to be most fully realized.

Overt Echoes

Segments of the other two movements eluded me. The opening features Shostakovitch-like bassoons, and I noted the influence of Hindemith in the Ode, but the Symphony is singularly devoid of overt echoes.

I could not tell if serial fragmented handling entered into the work, because of the staccato rhythms and instrumental clusters, the wide leaps of pattern that attracted attenion at first hearing. Mr. Fine has apparently chosen to adopt the prevailing international mode of Stravinskyan neo-classicism with a Schoenberg punctuation. I missed his melodic imagination here; but his technical prowess was everywhere patent.

Returning with the Prokofieff Second Concerto, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer repeated the unflawed triumph she forged with this mighty score in 1957. While the music is perhaps less lyrical than the entrancing Third Concerto, it is far more formidable in its virtuosic requirements.

Musical Accord

Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer did not pound, neither did she bang. Her scale passages were splendidly articulated, and her pedaling unblurred. She exhibited a crystalline tone. Her dynamics were adapted to the occasion, the Concerto emerged with proportions that were tense and driving, and still the approach was not so large that finesse vanished.

She gave an imposing interpretation, and the partnership of Dr. Munch and the orchestra represented an ultimate of musical accord.

I wish I could say as much for the "Death and Transfiguration," a dry Gallic reading. Although he lacks sympathy for the sensuous depth of Germanic tone, Charles Munch is not unaware of the drama. His treatment stresses explosive climaxes and whiplash contrasts. It is exciting but earthbound Strauss. Next week, however, in his penultimate appearance, Dr. Munch revisits the realm of French music where he is the world's acknowledged master: Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 18 1962

Weekend Concerts Premier Symphony

Charles Munch has returned from a vacation and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this week-end. At the Friday-Saturday concerts Munch will conduct the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962), comsioned by the Boston Symphony in the American Music Center commissioning series under a grant from the Ford Foundation. The program will also include the Richard Strauss tone poem poem "Tod und Verklarung" and pianist Nicole Henriot-Schwietzer will be soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

FINE

Fine, professor of music and chairmn of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis University, studied in this country with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston at Harvard and in Europe with Nadia Boulanger.

Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony concerts Monday and Tuesday, Mar. 19 and 20 at 8:30. The program will be Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" Suite by Albeniz and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The final concert in the Sunday Afternoon Series will be given next Mar. 25 at 3:00. Munch will conduct Schubert's Symphony No. 5, the Prokofieff Piano Concerto No. 2 with Mme. Henriot-Schueitzer as soloist, and Richard Strauss' "Tod und Verklarung."

Catharine Crozier will give the last of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concerts at 6 p.m., Mar. 25.

154

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Brighton Crusader
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 15,000

MAR 30 1962

Boston Symphony Gives Performance Of New Work By Irving Fine

WALTHAM, MASS. ... Director Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23 in the premiere performance of a new work by Prof. Irving Fine of Brandeis University.

The composition, "Symphony (1962), commissioned by the Orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant, will be performed in Boston's Symphony Hall. The performance will be repeated on March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 27 at Sanders Theater in Cambridge, Mass., and on Aug. 12 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The March 27 performance will be broadcast live over WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Mr. Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music and chairman of the council of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis, received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from Harvard University, where he worked with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston. He studied composition with Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in France and conducting with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

A member of the Brandeis faculty for 12 years, Prof. Fine was previously assistant professor of music at Harvard and assistant director of the Harvard Glee Club. He was co-director of the Music Seminar at the Salzburg Seminar for American Studies in 1950 and was a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood from 1946 through 1957.

The Boston-born composer has received many awards and commissions, including two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Fulbright Research Professorship for France, awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the Society for the Publication of American Music and commissions from the Ford Foundation, the Julliard School of Music, the Koussevitsky Foundation, the Fromm Foundation and others. His "Notturno" was awarded a Chamber Music Prize, and his "Partita for Wind Quartet" a New York Critics' Citation.

Among his published works are "Children's Fables for Grown-Ups"; "String Quartet"; "Alice in Wonderland Suite for Chorus and Orchestra"; and "Toccata Concertante," which the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed many times. Several of his compositions have been recorded, including "Serious Song for String Orchestra," by the Louisville Orchestra, and "String Quartet" by the Julliard String Orchestra.

Besides his activities as composer and teacher, Prof. Fine, a resident of Natick, Mass., has written many articles and reviews for music periodicals and newspapers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

MAR 24 1962

Munch Returns, Leads New Symphony by Fine

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 20th program of the Friday-Saturday series. Irving Fine: Symphony (1962), first performance; Prokofieff: Piano Concerto No. 2, in G minor, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer soloist; Strauss: "Death and Transfiguration."

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch returned to the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, after an absence of five weeks, and gave first performance of the Symphony (1962) by Irving Fine. This work by the Professor of Music at Brandeis University is dedicated to the Boston Symphony and Dr. Munch, who commissioned it in the American Music Center Series under a Ford Foundation grant. It is indeed new, having been completed last Feb. 20.

Although the Friday audience gave Mr. Fine a courteous hand as he bowed from the stage, it displayed no real enthusiasm for this large and recondite score. Symphony (1962) is not likely to win the public heart, for it makes hard listening upon first acquaintance. But it probably will please other musicians by its elaborate organization and uncompromising modernity.

It is, indeed, music, real music, for those with a notion of what Mr. Fine was about. The work is pure abstraction (although the composer refers to "choreographic action" in Entrada (an "entrance piece") which forms the first movement. For all its complexity and sometimes fierce dissonance, this is a work that lives, breathes and moves. It is not ingrown, withdrawn. One cannot fail to recognize its animation, passion and sense of life.

Often mechanistic in its ejaculation of short, forceful rhythmic and melodic fragments, the work pays a compliment now and again to Igor Stravinsky (going as far back as the Sacre du Printemps), and to Aaron Copland. This is evidence that whatever recourse Fine had to the 12-tone system, and there obviously was some, sense of tonality is not missing. Nor is the rhythmic flow or melodic trickle constricted, although melody here is extremely fragmented.

Fine, like most contemporaries, was pre-occupied on paper with the frequent metrical changes and inner subdivisions of rhythm which strike the eye and often fail to be perceived by the ear. To this extent, Symphony (1962) impressed me as theoretical and cerebral. But I suspect repeated listening will make more of Entrada and Capriccio (second movement), and I hope—just hope—the same will be true of the chunkily scored and screechingly dissonant Ode which is the finale. The shell on this nut is very hard.

Prokofieff's G minor Piano Concerto revived after five years, with the same soloist who played it in 1957—Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer—did not follow well after Fine. Both scores are too big, long and solid to hear without a break between. Nonetheless, this exceedingly difficult Concerto received a virtuoso performance from all hands, those of Mme. Henriot-Schweitzer glinting over the keyboard with almost supernatural speed and control of dynamics. The French pianist, long a Boston favorite, again was applauded most cordially.

If the Boston Symphony and its conductor had been impressive with Fine and Prokofieff, they were equally so, and tonally solacing into the bargain, with "Death and Transfiguration." The slow introduction may have been almost amorphous, and the coda very slow, but all the luscious juice in the score was squeezed, savored and rolled upon the aural taste buds. The Orchestra sounded magnificent, the performance was Munch at his most passionate, and we all went home happy.

Next week Dr. Munch will conduct three of his famed specialties from the French repertory: Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony, "La Mer" by Dubussy, and the Second Suite from Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 475,000

MAR 20 1962

Holidaying Charles Munch Resumes at BSO

Charles Munch has returned from holiday and will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this weekend.

At the Friday 2:15 and Saturday 8:30 p. m. concerts Dr. Munch will conduct the world premiere of Irving Fine's Symphony (1962) which was commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the American Music Center commissioning series under a grant from the Ford Foundation.

At these concerts Dr. Munch will also conduct the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Tod und Verklarung," and pianist Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer will be soloist in Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

Mr. Fine, professor of music and chairman of the school of creative arts at Brandeis University, studied in this country with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston at Harvard and in Europe with Nadia Boulanger.

Eleazar de Carvalho, who conducted last night's concert, will conduct again tonight. The program will consist of Webern's "Six Pieces for Orchestra," the "Iberia" Suite by Albeniz and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

BSO to Premiere Irving Fine Work

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23 in the premiere

IRVING FINE

performance of a new work by Prof. Irving Fine of Brandeis University.

The composition, "Symphony (1962)," commissioned by the Orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant, will be performed in Boston's Symphony Hall. The performance will be repeated March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 27 at Sanders Theater in Cambridge, and on Aug. 12 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The March 27 performance will be broadcast live over WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Mr. Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music and chairman of the council of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis, received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from Harvard University, where he worked with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston. He studied composition with Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in France and conducting with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

A member of the Brandeis faculty for 12 years, Prof. Fine was previously assistant professor of music at Harvard and assistant director of the Harvard Glee Club. He was co-director of the Music Seminar at the Salzburg Seminar for American Studies in 1950 and was a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood from 1946 through 1957.

The Boston-born composer has received many awards and commissions, including two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Fulbright Research Professorship for France, awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the Society for the Publication of American Music and commissions from the Ford Foundation, Juilliard School of Music, Koussevitsky Foundation, Fromm Foundation and others. His "Notturno" was awarded a Chamber Music Prize and his "Partita for Wind Quartet" a New York Critics' Citation.

Among his published works are "Children's Fables for Grown-Ups"; "String Quartet"; "Alice in Wonderland Suite for Chorus and Orchestra" and "Toccata Concertante". Several of his compositions have been recorded, including "Serious Song for String Orchestra," by the Louisville Orchestra, and "String Quartet" by the Juilliard String Quartet.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC NOT AVAIL.

APR 1962

Paul Pisk is working on a composition for accordian duo and chamber orchestra called Adagio and Rondo Concertante.

Study for Orchestra by William Sydeman was premiered by the Symphony of the Air in White Plains, N. Y., in February. Leeds Music recently published Sydeman's Variations for Piano. His Second Woodwind Quintet will be premiered by the Clarion Quintet

Alexander Tcherepnin will teach at the Salzburg Mozarteum this summer in addition to master classes at the International Music Academy in Nice.

James Beale's Symphony No. 2 was premiered by Milton Katims and the Seattle Symphony on March 12.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony premiered the Symphony (1962) by Irving Fine on March 23. The work was commissioned by the orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation Grant.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

MAR 24 1962

Fine's New Symphony

By Harold Rogers
Boston

It is usually a cause for rejoicing when a new work by Irving Fine is announced. He is not a prolific composer, and in the past his music has manifested integrity and a high degree of careful thought.

There was not much rejoicing, however, when his new Symphony (1962) was heard in its first performance Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Granted, the Friday audience probably represents Boston's most conservative listeners, yet one cannot help feeling that the fault in this case is Mr. Fine's.

Composed as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a grant from the Ford Foundation, Mr. Fine's new piece is dedicated to the Boston Symphony and to its director Charles Munch. In three movements, the work has apparently departed from Mr. Fine's finely chiseled methods and has splattered itself across the score paper in a kind of formless array. It must be disturbing for a composer to be told that he is eclectic, even more so to be told that he is reminiscent of Stravinsky, especially when he has arrived at a point in his career when he should be singing with a voice of his own.

Busy Music

Yet these are the hard facts: there were Stravinskian rhythms, Stravinskian timbres, Stravinskian expostulations. At the same time the score is wanting, with few exceptions, in Stravinskian economy. It is extremely busy music, scrubbing and shouting and skipping and hopping, though there are welcome respites such as the night mood in the first movement when the English horn takes a graceful turn.

But the over-all impression, after but one hearing, is that it is composed in a kind of stream-of-consciousness fragmentation that does not sink easily into most listeners' ears. Perhaps we should not be so conservative as to require a sense of form from our contemporary composers, yet some kind of recognizable architecture is still required if the composer desires to meet his listeners at least half way. Otherwise they will not follow, and with but few exceptions they did not follow at the première.

Brilliant Pianism

Mr. Fine's Symphony was followed by Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2, with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer at the piano, and one could at once take note of the element that is wanting in Mr. Fine's music. As for the scoring, Mr. Fine's was in the coloristic vein of Prokofiev's, but Prokofiev's concerto has a sweep and flow, a formalistic integrity that carries the listener on the crest of the wave.

Mme Henriot - Schweitzer gave one of her brilliantly banging performances, as usual, but this is the kind of concerto that invites explosive pianism; indeed, it would be dull without it.

She won an extended ovation, and her success was all the more impressive when some of us learned during the interval that she decided to fill her Boston engagement in spite of the fact that her father's funeral was being held on the same day. In this respect Dr. Munch's final selection—Strauss's "Tod und Verklärung"—was appropriate if unforeseen; and his interpretation was radiantly inspired, especially in the climax of the transfiguration.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

15 1962

BSO to Premiere Irving Fine Work

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23 in the premiere performance of a new work by Prof. Irving Fine of Brandeis University.

IRVING FINE

The composition, "Symphony (1962)," commissioned by the Orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation grant, will be performed in Boston's Symphony Hall. The performance will be repeated March 24.

Additional performances of the symphony will be given on March 27 at Sanders Theater in Cambridge, and on Aug. 12 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The March 27 performance will be broadcast live over WGBH-TV, Channel 2.

Mr. Fine, Walter W. Naumburg professor of music and chairman of the council of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis, received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from Harvard University, where he worked with Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston. He studied composition with Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in France and conducting with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

A member of the Brandeis faculty for 12 years, Prof. Fine was previously assistant professor of music at Harvard and assistant director of the Harvard Glee Club. He was co-director of the Music Seminar at the Salzburg Seminar for American Studies in 1950 and was a faculty member at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood from 1946 through 1957.

The Boston-born composer has received many awards and commissions, including two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Fulbright Research Professorship for France, awards from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the Society for the Publication of American Music and commissions from the Ford Foundation, Juilliard School of Music, Koussevitsky Foundation, Fromm Foundation and others. His "Notturno" was awarded a Chamber Music Prize and his "Partita for Wind Quartet" a New York Critics' Citation.

Among his published works are "Children's Fables for Grown-Ups"; "String Quartet"; "Alice in Wonderland Suite for Chorus and Orchestra" and "Toccata Concertante". Several of his compositions have been recorded, including "Serious Song for String Orchestra," by the Louisville Orchestra, and "String Quartet" by the Juilliard String Quartet.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

APR 1962

Paul Pisk is working on a composition for accordian duo and chamber orchestra called Adagio and Rondo Concertante.

Study for Orchestra by William Sydeman was premiered by the Symphony of the Air in White Plains, N. Y., in February. Leeds Music recently published Sydeman's Variations for Piano. His Second Woodwind Quintet will be premiered by the Clarion Quintet.

Alexander Tcherepnin will teach at the Salzburg Mozarteum this summer in addition to master classes at the International Music Academy in Nice.

James Beale's Symphony No. 2 was premiered by Milton Katims and the Seattle Symphony on March 12.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony premiered the Symphony (1962) by Irving Fine on March 23. The work was commissioned by the orchestra as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a Ford Foundation Grant.

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

MAR 24 1962

Fine's New Symphony

- By Harold Rogers

Boston

It is usually a cause for rejoicing when a new work by Irving Fine is announced. He is not a prolific composer, and in the past his music has manifested integrity and a high degree of careful thought.

There was not much rejoicing, however, when his new Symphony (1962) was heard in its first performance Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Granted, the Friday audience probably represents Boston's most conservative listeners, yet one cannot help feeling that the fault in this case is Mr. Fine's.

Composed as part of the American Music Center's Commissioning Series under a grant from the Ford Foundation, Mr. Fine's new piece is dedicated to the Boston Symphony and to its director Charles Munch. In three movements, the work has apparently departed from Mr. Fine's finely chiseled methods and has splattered itself across the score paper in a kind of formless array. It must be disturbing for a composer to be told that he is eclectic, even more so to be told that he is reminiscent of Stravinsky, especially when he has arrived at a point in his career when he should be singing with a voice of his own.

Busy Music

Yet these are the hard facts: there were Stravinskian rhythms, Stravinskian timbres, Stravinskian expostulations. At the same time the score is wanting, with few exceptions, in Stravinskian economy. It is extremely busy music, scrubbing and shouting and skipping and hopping, though there are welcome respites such as the night mood in the first movement when the English horn takes a graceful turn.

But the over-all impression, after but one hearing, is that it is composed in a kind of stream-of-consciousness fragmentation that does not sink easily into most listeners' ears. Perhaps we should not be so conservative as to require a sense of form from our contemporary composers, yet some kind of recognizable architecture is still required if the composer desires to meet his listeners at least half way. Otherwise they will not follow, and with but few exceptions they did not follow at the premiere.

Brilliant Pianism

Mr. Fine's Symphony was followed by Prokofiev's Concerto No. 2, with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer at the piano, and one could at once take note of the element that is wanting in Mr. Fine's music. As for the scoring, Mr. Fine's was in the coloristic vein of Prokofiev's, but Prokofiev's concerto has a sweep and flow, a formalistic integrity that carries the listener on the crest of the wave.

Mme Henriot - Schweitzer gave one of her brilliantly banging performances, as usual, but this is the kind of concerto that invites explosive pianism; indeed, it would be dull without it.

She won an extended ovation, and her success was all the more impressive when some of us learned during the interval that she decided to fill her Boston engagement in spite of the fact that her father's funeral was being held on the same day. In this respect Dr. Munch's final selection—Strauss's "Tod und Verklärung"—was appropriate if unforeseen; and his interpretation was radiantly inspired, especially in the climax of the transfiguration.

156

Twenty-first Week

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 31, at 8:30 o'clock

BERLIOZ — *Fantastic Symphony, Op. 14a

I. Reveries, Passions
Largo; Allegro agitato e appassionato assai

II. A Ball
Waltz: Allegro non troppo

III. Scene in the Meadows
Adagio

IV. March to the Scaffold
Allegretto non troppo

V. Dream of the Witches' Sabbath
Larghetto; Allegro

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY — *La Mer (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

RAVEL — *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2

Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
APR 5 1962

At the BSO

Dr. Munch Conducts French Master

By ALLAN SLY

Herewith no review, no criticism of the BSO's twenty-firs program, but an attempted appraisal of its unique qualities. Everyone knows by now that Dr. Munch conducted from memory the Berlioz Fantastique, Debussy's La Mer and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2; that the audience cheered; that

French orchestral genius, 1830-1911, offers a wide sweep that we can respond to instinctively. It also plays right into Dr. Munch's hands and into those of the BSO as he has fashioned it. The summation of thirteen years' work is exciting to contemplate, though of course in the case of Dr. Munch we were reaping the fruits of a whole career, a whole epoch. We have watched him piloting the orchestra through many a new and unpredictable score, somewhat quizzically at times, but always with security and responsibility. Many a time the interpreter of classics far removed from Gallic thought. But last weekend occurred the perfect consummation—of program, performer(s) and listeners.

While revealing what is, to him, discernible in a score, Dr. Munch induces in the performance qualities of reflection, resolve, exaltation one could hardly have anticipated. Further, in a program intimately suited to him tempermentally, and long familiar to him, there is a spectator fascination, almost a sporting interest, in watching how he prepares ahead for each event, each change of texture, each level of excitement. And incidentally this was the day for Mr. Voisin, the batterie, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Speyer. But the whole complex was very much on its mettle.

Not so the ushers. They still let people wander in and out any old time. And in my corner of Symphony Hall a "No Talking" sign would be useful.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 31 1962

Munch Playing His Favorites

2-62

Berlioz, Debussy, Ravel

By Harold Rogers

Charles Munch scored a great personal triumph at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. As his final season in Boston is drawing to a close it has become more apparent than ever that he is playing his favorites. He is enjoying himself, and most of us—whether we fully approve of his programing or not — are happy to have him do so.

Though the fare is a little rich this weekend, it goes down easily. Dr. Munch is opening with the Berlioz "Fantastique" Symphony, continuing with Debussy's "La Mer," and closing with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé," Suite No. 2. We know them well, and we know what he can do with them.

It therefore came as no surprise yesterday when he conducted them magnificently.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 25 1962

Berlioz 'Fantastic' Featured by Munch On French Program

The "Fantastic" Symphony by Hector Berlioz will be featured on an all-French program in which Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Debussy's "La Mer" and the Second Suite from Ravel's Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe" will complete the list. Each of these has been a "specialty" with the conductor during his regime at Symphony Hall. There will be an Open Rehearsal of this program Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The final Sunday concert of the season, at Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3, also will be conducted by Dr. Munch. It will consist of Schubert's Fifth Symphony; the Second Piano Concerto by Prokofieff, with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as soloist, and "Death and Transfiguration" by Strauss.

The same program — except that Irving Fine's new Symphony (1962) will replace the Schubert work — will be heard at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30.

156

Twenty-first Week

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 30, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 31, at 8:30 o'clock

BERLIOZ ..... *Fantastic Symphony, Op. 14a

I. Reveries, Passions
Largo; Allegro agitato e appassionato assai

II. A Ball
Waltz: Allegro non troppo

III. Scene in the Meadows
Adagio

IV. March to the Scaffold
Allegretto non troppo

V. Dream of the Witches' Sabbath
Larghetto; Allegro

INTERMISSION

DEBUSSY ..... *La Mer (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

RAVEL ..... *"Daphnis et Chloé," Ballet, Suite No. 2

Lever du jour — Pantomime — Danse générale

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
APR 5

At the BSO

Dr. Munch Conducts French Master

By ALLAN SLY

Herewith no review, no criticism of the BSO's twenty-firs program, but an attempted appraisal of its unique qualities. Everyone knows by now that Dr. Munch conducted from memory the Berlioz Fantastique, Debussy's La Mer and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2; that the audience cheered; that

French orchestral genius, 1830-1911, offers a wide sweep that we can respond to instinctively. It also plays right into Dr. Munch's hands and into those of the BSO as he has fashioned it. The summation of thirteen years' work is exciting to contemplate, though of course in the case of Dr. Munch we were reaping the fruits of a whole career, a whole epoch. We have watched him piloting the orchestra through many a new and unpredictable score, somewhat quizzically at times, but always with security and responsibility. Many a time the interpreter of classics far removed from Gallic thought. But last weekend occurred the perfect consummation—of program, performer(s) and listeners.

While revealing what is, to him, discernible in a score, Dr. Munch induces in the performance qualities of reflection, resolve, exaltation one could hardly have anticipated. Further, in a program intimately suited to him tempermentally, and long familiar to him, there is a spectator fascination, almost a sporting interest, in watching how he prepares ahead for each event, each change of texture, each level of excitement. And incidentally this was the day for Mr. Voisin, the batterie, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Speyer. But the whole complex was very much on its mettle.

Not so the ushers. They still let people wander in and out any old time. And in my corner of Symphony Hall a "No Talking" sign would be useful.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
MAR 31 1962

Munch Playing His Favorites

2-62

Berlioz, Debussy, Ravel

By Harold Rogers

Charles Munch scored a great personal triumph at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. As his final season in Boston is drawing to a close it has become more apparent than ever that he is playing his favorites. He is enjoying himself, and most of us—whether we fully approve of his programing or not — are happy to have him do so.

Though the fare is a little rich this weekend, it goes down easily. Dr. Munch is opening with the Berlioz "Fantastique" Symphony, continuing with Debussy's "La Mer," and closing with Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé," Suite No. 2. We know them well, and we know what he can do with them.

It therefore came as no surprise yesterday when he conducted them magnificently.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
MAR 25 1962

Berlioz 'Fantastic' Featured by Munch On French Program

The "Fantastic" Symphony by Hector Berlioz will be featured on an all-French program in which Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Debussy's "La Mer" and the Second Suite from Ravel's Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe" will complete the list. Each of these has been a "specialty" with the conductor during his regime at Symphony Hall. There will be an Open Rehearsal of this program Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The final Sunday concert of the season, at Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3, also will be conducted by Dr. Munch. It will consist of Schubert's Fifth Symphony; the Second Piano Concerto by Prokofieff, with Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer as soloist, and "Death and Transfiguration" by Strauss.

The same program — except that Irving Fine's new Symphony (1962) will replace the Schubert work — will be heard at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
MAR 3 1 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAR 3 1 1962

1571

The Symphony

A Farewell One Will Never Forget

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Charles Munch unofficially completed his musical testament in Boston yesterday, and left the vivid air of Symphony Hall signed with his honor.

Dr. Munch does not retire for another month, when he conducts Beethoven's Ninth; and during the intreval he will present Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Yesterday, however, constituted a farewell that one will never forget, the more so because it was phrased not in terms of ceremonial, but as a musical experience. He spoke the language closest to his heart.

To hear such program conducted by Charles Munch is to know what the French idiom "la gloire" means in music. It means the repertory he truly celebrates, the French style he governs with a sympathy born not only of the intellect but of mind and heritage and intuition. He has built the Boston symphony into the world's peerless instrument for sounding the Gallic depths of creativity.

Three Scores

The three scores of the 21st concert, associated with Dr. Munch throughout his tenure here, were perfectly deployed. The massive yet harmonically simple "Symphony Fantastique." "La Mer" a splendid foil, and the complexities of Debussy in turn preceding the robust color of the "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2. Each was related, yet each distinct, each occupying a significant place in the development of French music and the western cultural tradition of which it is a part.

And when, indeed, shall we again encounter a Fantastic Symphony so superbly uttered, so replete with fragile detail and kindled by such dramatic passion. This interpretation forms one of Dr. Munch's triumphs. His scale

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the 21st program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:
Symphonic Fantastique, Op. 14a Berlioz
La Mer, Three Symphonic Skeiches Debussy
"Daphnis et Chloe," Ballot Suite No. 2 Ravel

is large, but his touch uneering. The character of the protean "fixed idea" theme achieves grace and vibrancy throughout its many transformations.

The misterioso will spell that trances the pensive English horn and oboe duet, the melancholy pastoral twining against the dying thunderstorm—then the arcadian mood that furls before the near-surrealistic Dies Irae—all are realized with clarity, brilliance, command.

Double Fugue

True, Dr. Munch drives the orchestra through the final double fugue with a fury approaching the demonic. This, however, is not inappropriate to the work, and the tempo is turbulent rather than beyond human limitations. As for the rest of it, the feathery string passages in the crinoline waltz sequence, the melodic line of exceeding litheness, the shrewd balance of byronic emotional temperature that boils one instant and broods the next should be mentioned, too. The Charles Munch version of Berlioz's masterwork can be declared definite today.

Similarly while the conductor has presented "La Mer" on seeming countless occasions, he has never, I thought, given it quite as authoritatively. The nebulous haze shimmering over Debussy's ocean, that evocation which perhaps the palette of Monet might fix, glowed magically; and the treatment of the principal subject, the agitation of the last section, disclosed adroitness and care.

Unstable Genius

Debussy's scrimshaw intricacies fall pleasantly on the ear after the melodically rich but harmonically unstable genius of Berlioz. The sensuous texture was projected by the orchestra with an uncommon lyrical outline. I find the Munch "La Mer" sounds definitive to me on every successive occasion, and I am sorry to reach the end of a series.

His "Daphnis and Chloe" displayed the same prismatic tone, but, appropriately, with more structural vigor and incisiveness. "La Mer," after all, must be restless and vague. The radiant movements of the Ravel suite mount toward a kinetic close that sends the audience out smiling. It is handled with great affection, warmth and sparkle. One could not help consider the appropriateness of the program a kind of revelation of the humanity of its conductor during his generous Boston reign.

Next week the orchestra tours the Eastern seaboard. Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts of April 13-14, with Ruth Pesselt as violin soloist in Barber's Concerto. Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31, Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 9, Op. 70 and the "1812" Overture of Tchaikowsky, Op. 49, are also listed.

Munch Conducts French Program With Brilliance

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Dr. Charles Munch, music director, performed in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 21st program of the Friday–Saturday series. Berlioz: "Fantastic" Symphony; Debussy: "The Sea"; Ravel: Second Suite from the Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe."

By CYRUS DURGIN

This chronicler listened to Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a full heart and a touch of sadness, yesterday afternoon. He conducted and they performed brilliantly, a French program of pieces which have been Munch "specialties" these 13 years past—Berlioz' 'Fantastic" Symphony, "La Mer" by Debussy, and Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphnis and Chloe."

But amid all the tonal richness, all the splendor of sound and execution, all the sweep and passion, floated the realization that this week will be the last time we shall hear these Gallic masterpieces projected in just this way. This essentially French way, so very personal with Charles Munch and so concentrated a distillation of the orchestral style and interpretive manner he has inculcated during his regime.

These three pieces are, collectively, a symbol of the finest of Munch's art, by which he will be most remembered long after he has yielded his post to Erich Leinsdorf. Indeed, this is the last French music Munch will have conducted at these concerts, and unless some big piece is chosen to companion Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the final pair of concerts, the last time he will have conducted in Boston the full numbers of the Orchestra as its music director.

With the music of Berlioz, which happily he has often presented, Munch has proved himself unequalled. Yesterday his performance of the "Fantastic" Symphony was absolutely sovereign. There was something in the youthful spirit whereby he recreated this young and fanciful and extravagant work, sculptured the spreading eloquence of the five movements into a poetic entity, that brought tears to these eyes. Here, briefly, we all were on a peak, not alone of this season but of all the years Munch has been with us. We shall not hear the "Fantastic" done this way again.

With "La Mer" and "Daphnis," especially the latter, sound and concept were much the same. Munch's fashion with these kinetic scores, the first an evocative tone-picture that almost emanates salt air, the second a blend of moods and balletic energy, are not the only way to play them. (His predecessor Koussevitzky had his own magnificent manner with "La Mer.") But none that I have heard has been so indisputably personal and French, which are indeed special qualities.

In generalities and particulars, the Boston Symphony has not played better (though sometimes as well!) all this season. The strings were sweet and flexible and luminous, the woodwinds likewise (and better in tune than usual); the brass was muscular and mellow, and the percussion section covered itself with excellence in Berlioz and Ravel.

For individual mention must be noted the solos from Louis Speyer's English horn and John Holmes' oboe in the scene in the fields of the "Fantastic," and Doriot Anthony Dwyer's virtuoso flute in "Daphnis."

The bells for the "Fantastic" this time were placed offstage, so far as I could determine, and the sound effect was much better. The strength of those clashing overtones was considerably lessened, and the fundamental tone emerged much clearer.

Next week the Orchestra will make its final trip of the season. At the Symphony Hall concerts of Apr. 13 and 14, Richard Burgin will conduct Shostakovitch's Ninth Symphony; Samuel Barber's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt (Mrs. Burgin) as soloist; Shoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 (first times at these concerts), and the "1812" Overture by Tchaikovsky.

50TH ANNIVERSARY

158

Fifth New York Tour

Princeton, N. J.

PRINCETON, N.J.
TOWN TOPICS
W. 12,408

APR 8 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE

Directed by Munch. On Tuesday evening at McCarter Theatre, the final concert in Series I of the Princeton University Concerts presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of its retiring Music Director, Charles Munch. For his farewell series of concerts, Mr. Munch is presenting three of the standbys of his repertoire: Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique", Debussy's "La Mer", and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloe", and this was the program on Tuesday evening, although in truth this was Mr. Munch's first Princeton appearance as well as his leavetaking.

There was, in some quarters, unhappiness about the conventional nature of the program; under the circumstances, however, it would seem Mr. Munch's privilege to play his own favorite music on his farewell tour, and anyone acquainted with the performances of the Boston Symphony in recent years would be hard put to suggest music which they now play any more satisfactorily (only the Saint-Saens Organ Symphony springs to mind, and that is hardly practicable for touring).

The difference between performances of Boston "specialties" in Koussevitzky's later years and those which we heard on Tuesday night are rather marked; in both cases, the mannerisms were more noticeable as time passed, but whereas with Koussevitzky they were accompanied by (and, in part, stemmed from) a polishing and refining of all details of performance, with Mr. Munch they are related to a general lack of precision and of attention to details of execution.

A good example of this was the exaggerated statement of the "idee fixe" in the first movement of the Berlioz, especially as contrasted with its return later in the same movement. One would suppose, from the orchestration, that Berlioz intended the recapitulation to be more agitated than the first statement, but the opposite resulted from Mr. Munch's failure to control the expressive inflections of the first statement. Only in the final two movements of this work did the orchestral playing reach the standards one associates with a major orchestra, the winds being especially at fault in matters of intonation.

This same difficulty marred the opening of the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite, where a tacky clarinet managed to stick out of the texture, in a passage whose major musical point would seem to depend upon its blend and polish. In addition, the middle portion of this piece, whose form derives from the scenario rather than from the more "musical" ideas present in the end movements, tends to lose its point if all the orchestral tricks do not come off with dazzling effect.

"La Mer", because of its musical substance is better equipped to withstand such difficulties; suffice it to say that the interpretation was of the overwrought variety. Perhaps symptomatic was the presence, in the buildup before the last statement of the main theme in the last movement, of the motive in the brass which Debussy removed from the score very soon after its premiere, more than 50 years ago. It is hard to believe that news of this emendation has not yet reached Boston (in point of fact, Koussevitzky knew about it at least 20 years ago), but its inclusion was entirely in keeping with Mr. Munch's approach to the score.

PRINCETON, N.J.
PACKET
W. 5,790

MAR 29 1962

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Berlioz, Ravel

The last concert of Series I of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 3 in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Opus 140, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in 1881 and quickly rose to fame. It is now one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played here since Princeton University celebrated its bicentennial in 1946 to 1947.

Succeeding Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, one of France's foremost musicians, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

FRANKLIN PARK, N.J.
CENTRAL POST
W. 6 200

MAR 29 1962

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Berlioz, Ravel

The last concert of Series I of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 3 in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Opus 140, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in 1881 and quickly rose to fame. It is now one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played here since Princeton University celebrated its bicentennial in 1946 to 1947.

Succeeding Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, one of France's foremost musicians, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

PRINCETON, N.J.
HERALD
TW. 1,447

MAR 30 1962

CONCERT TUESDAY NIGHT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The fifth and last concert of the first series of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 o'clock on Tuesday evening, April 3rd, in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonic Fantastique, Opus 14 A, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe: Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert in 1881. It is now regarded one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played in Princeton since Princeton University celebrated its bi-centennial in 1946-47. Succeeding Serge Koussevitsky, Charles Munch, French musician, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

All seats for the Princeton concert have been sold out by subscription, but 50 tickets for standing room will be available at McCarter Theatre box office at 7:30 on the night of the concert.

158

Fifth New York Tour

Princeton, N.J.

PRINCETON, N.J.
TOWN TOPICS
W. 12,408

APR 8 1962

BOSTON SYMPHONY HERE

Directed by Munch. On Tuesday evening at McCarter Theatre, the final concert in Series I of the Princeton University Concerts presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of its retiring Music Director, Charles Munch. For his farewell series of concerts, Mr. Munch is presenting three of the landbys of his repertoire: Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique", Debussy's "La Mer", and the Second Suite from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloe", and this was the program on Tuesday evening, although in truth this was Mr. Munch's first Princeton appearance as well as his leavetaking.

There was, in some quarters, unhappiness about the conventional nature of the program; under the circumstances, however, it would seem Mr. Munch's privilege to play his own favorite music on his farewell tour, and anyone acquainted with the performances of the Boston Symphony in recent years would be hard put to suggest music which they now play any more satisfactorily (only the Saint-Saens Organ Symphony springs to mind, and that is hardly practicable for touring).

The difference between performances of Boston "specialties" in Koussevitzky's later years and those which we heard on Tuesday night are rather marked; in both cases, the mannerisms were more noticeable as time passed, but whereas with Koussevitzky they were accompanied by (and, in part, stemmed from) a polishing and refining of all details of performance, with Mr. Munch they are related to a general lack of precision and of attention to details of execution.

A good example of this was the exaggerated statement of the "idee fixe" in the first movement of the Berlioz, especially as contrasted with its return later in the same movement. One would suppose, from the orchestration, that Berlioz intended the recapitulation to be more agitated than the first statement, but the opposite resulted from Mr. Munch's failure to control the expressive inflections of the first statement. Only in the final two movements of this work did the orchestral playing reach the standards one associates with a major orchestra, the winds being especially at fault in matters of intonation.

This same difficulty marred the opening of the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite, where a tacky clarinet managed to stick out of the texture, in a passage whose major musical point would seem to depend upon its blend and polish. In addition, the middle portion of this piece, whose form derives from the scenario rather than from the more "musical" ideas present in the end movements, tends to lose its point if all the orchestral tricks do not come off with dazzling effect.

"La Mer", because of its musical substance is better equipped to withstand such difficulties; suffice it to say that the interpretation was of the overwrought variety. Perhaps symptomatic was the presence, in the buildup before the last statement of the main theme in the last movement, of the motive in the brass which Debussy removed from the score very soon after its premiere, more than 50 years ago. It is hard to believe that news of this emendation has not yet reached Boston (in point of fact, Koussevitzky knew about it at least 20 years ago), but its inclusion was entirely in keeping with Mr. Munch's approach to the score.

PRINCETON, N.J.
PACKET
W. 5,790

MAR 29 1962

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Berlioz, Ravel

The last concert of Series I of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 3 in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Opus 140, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in 1881 and quickly rose to fame. It is now one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played here since Princeton University celebrated its bicentennial in 1946 to 1947.

Succeeding Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, one of France's foremost musicians, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

FRANKLIN PARK, N.J.
CENTRAL POST
W.. 6 200

MAR 29 1962

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Berlioz, Ravel

The last concert of Series I of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 3 in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Opus 140, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloe Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony gave its first concert in 1881 and quickly rose to fame. It is now one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played here since Princeton University celebrated its bicentennial in 1946 to 1947.

Succeeding Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, one of France's foremost musicians, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

PRINCETON, N.J.
HERALD
TW. 1,447

MAR 30 1962

CONCERT TUESDAY NIGHT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

The fifth and last concert of the first series of the Princeton University Concerts will take place at 8:30 o'clock on Tuesday evening, April 3rd, in McCarter Theatre, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will play Berlioz' Symphonic Fantastique, Opus 14 A, Debussy's La Mer, and Ravel's Daphnis et Chloè: Suite No. 2.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert in 1881. It is now regarded one of the world's greatest orchestras. It has not played in Princeton since Princeton University celebrated its bi-centennial in 1946-47. Succeeding Serge Koussevitsky, Charles Munch, French musician, came to Boston in 1949. He will retire at the close of the present season.

All seats for the Princeton concert have been sold out by subscription, but 50 tickets for standing room will be available at McCarter Theatre box office at 7:30 on the night of the concert.

159

Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D- 267,283 S 313,407
APR 1 1962

NEWS OF MUSIC

National Symphony Plans Big Season

By IRVING LOWENS
Star Music Critic

The National Symphony Orchestra's 1962-3 Constitution Hall series will include 19 pairs, it has been announced. This is the same number as the current series despite the defection of the Philadelphians.

The length of the season comes as no surprise. A cutback at a time when the orchestra has risen to national leadership would be unthinkable.

Two guest conductors are on top: The venerable Charles Munch (leading the Boston here Thursday in his last local appearance as music director and conductor), and the energetic Enrique Jorda of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra.

The Soloists

Instrumental soloists have been announced as follows:

Pianists: Van Cliburn, Jorge Bolet, Robert Casadesus, Rudolf Firkusny, John Browning and Claudio Arrau.

Violinists: Ruggiero Ricci, Zino Francescatti, Henryk Szeryng and Nathan Milstein.

Subscribers to the Alexandria series will also get a chance to hear the brilliant youngster Erick Friedman, a protege of Jascha Heifetz.

Choir

The Howard University Choir and Singers Lois Marshall, Carol Smith, John McCollum and Donald Gramm will join the orchestra to close the season with the Verdi Requiem.

Thus, with 19 National Symphony pairs and five Philadelphia concerts, Washington is going to have more first-rate orchestral music next season than at any time in its past history.

The wealth of events and the glittering array of soloists is most welcome. All this should help the renewals and the new subscriptions to pour in.

Beethoven Cycle

But a word of caution would seem to be in order at this time, before the programs have been definitely set.

Of the five Philadelphia concerts, one will be all-Beethoven and another will be all-Brahms.

The National Symphony Orchestra has advertised a "Beethoven cycle"—all nine symphonies.

There is plainly a very practical reason behind this enthusiasm for the old standbys. Both orchestras are apparently running scared—they want to sell tickets and they feel that the best way to do this is to give audiences what they know.

The desire for full houses is by no means reprehensible.

Box Office Magic

And Beethoven and Brahms got to be old standbys because of their solid merit—it would be ridiculous to object to the playing of great masterpieces by great orchestras.

Music critics complain at having to hear the same works year in and year out, but there are very few music critics attending Constitution Hall concerts—and they don't pay for their tickets.

What may be old hat to the cognoscenti is a magic world of discovery to others—to deprive them of the experience of this world because it has lost its novelty for you is both snobbish and foolish.

Listening to a familiar piece has never yet killed a critic, and if the familiar piece happens to be a masterpiece, the effort required to pay attention might prove an excellent exercise in self-discipline.

New as Well as Old

But it does look as if Washington is in for a pretty stiff dose of old favorites, and too much of anything—even Beethoven and Brahms—is a dangerous thing.

It seems to me that both the National Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia owe their audiences a sincere effort to cultivate carefully that sense of excitement and adventure so essential to growth in musical comprehension and discrimination.

This means the presentation of the new as well as the old.

The two Bs are good, solid, "meat and potatoes" fare, but no good physician would think of prescribing only (or even predominantly) such food.

As good physicians, maestros Mitchell and Ormandy surely should prescribe well-balanced meals. This calls for other criteria besides the effect of programs on the box-office.

A Shirt Story

The three Bs are running neck and neck in a league that has always been better known among fans of Mickey Mouse, Bugs Bunny and Donald Duck or Yale, Harvard and Princeton men.

Busts of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms printed in black on gray cotton shirts have been rapidly replacing the cartoon characters and the names of the colleges, according to a recent release. In the past few weeks Macy's alone has sold nearly 5,000 such items.

Other New York stores have the shirts displayed on main-floor dummies and in street windows.

Bloomingdale's, at last report still cynical, says that it will not stock the shirts because their customers' tastes are offended by them.

The shirts were introduced on the West Coast as a mail-order advertising gimmick last year, first arrived in New York last fall and became popular with the sportswear set only last month.

* * * *

SOVIET VIOLINIST BOWS

Igor Oistrakh, son of the renowned David Oistrakh, in Constitution Hall today.

MUNCH
Finale

mos Club Auditorium. George Steiner will direct the accompanying orchestra. . . . William T. Cameron, solo harpist of the Navy Band, retires this week after a 30-year career.

* * * *

NEWS FROM THERE—Towson, Md.: This is Nadia Boulanger Week at Goucher College. The world-famed teacher lectures here tomorrow evening and on Wednesday conducts a performance of the Faure Requiem. The public is invited—no charge. . . . Baltimore: The Peabody Art Theater Orchestra makes its bow today with Robert Gerle as soloist in the first local performance of the Frank Martin violin concerto. Laszlo Halasz conducts. . . . New York: Winner of the Metropolitan Opera National Auditions was Mezzo-Soprano Janis Martin, a 22-year-old finalist from the Eastern region. John Thomas of Washington, who won the local auditions, didn't make the finals but was given the $300 Henry F. Lenning Award for his great potential. . . . Lenox, Mass.: The annual Tanglewood concerts get under way this summer with a July 4 program by the Budapest String Quartet. . . . San Francisco: Soloist in the Paganini D major concerto with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra this week is Ruggiero Ricci.

* * * *

BITS AND PIECES—The 1962 Alice M. Ditson Conductor's Award for distinguished service to American music went to English-born Guy Fraser Harrison of the Oklahoma City Orchestra. . . . Joan Sutherland has canceled all engagements this summer, including a tour of her native Australia, due to an ailing back. . . . The March monthly bulletin of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia—of all places—contains a detailed study of the economics of the performing arts. . . . Colonial Williamsburg has just released a color film, "Music of Williamsburg," portraying the art in 18th century Virginia. . . . At the Chicago meeting of the National Association of Broadcasters this week, 13 one-hour TV concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be released for national distribution, all conducted by Charles Munch. . . . The National Federation of Music Clubs sixth annual ASCAP Award, given to the organization or individual who most effectively increases the appreciation of American music abroad, went to the University of Michigan Symphony Band. Last year, the Howard University Choir was the winner; in 1960, it was Howard Mitchell and the NSO.

* * * *

BULLETIN BOARD—Auditions for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study with orchestra and chamber music performance at Tanglewood will be held here this Thursday. . . . The Washington Opera Guild Chorus is holding auditions for basses and baritones. For further information, phone Dorothy Remington, AD. 4-8738. . . . Auditions for membership in the Student Group of the Friday Morning Music Club are scheduled for April 29. Details from Mrs. Benton A. Hause, JE. 2-4606.

160

Brooklyn

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463,241 SAT. 176,139
APR 2 1962

Footlights and Spotlights

By FELIX KESSLER

Munch to Conduct Friday

There was a good deal of buzzing (and some back-biting) in musical circles a few years back when Charles Munch was named to succeed the retiring Serge Koussevitzky as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Perhaps it was inevitable, for in 1949 Koussevitzky was leaving behind an association of 25 years with the symphony. Audiences in New York, Boston and Tanglewood did not come just to hear the late conductor make music; they came to worship him.

Dr. Munch already had a world reputation, of course, but who can follow a monument? Today, on the eve of his own retirement, it is evident that Dr. Munch could.

"The public receives him with enthusiasm the moment he appears on stage, and his conducting, which so far has been first class, often gets thunderous demonstrations," a critic reported from Tanglewood in 1951.

That critic hedged needlessly by saying Dr. Munch was first class "so far." For twelve years now, the French-born conductor has produced readings that earned every bit of applause audiences could muster.

On Friday, Dr. Munch makes his farewell appearance here with the Boston at the Academy of Music, certainly a sentimental occasion.

Over the years the cornerstone of Dr. Munch's fame has rested on his interpretations of French composers. He has had no rivals here, producing masterful music even from poor scores.

His program, which begins at 8:30 p.m., will consist of three French works. He will repeat the program this weekend at Carnegie Hall and at Tanglewood this summer.

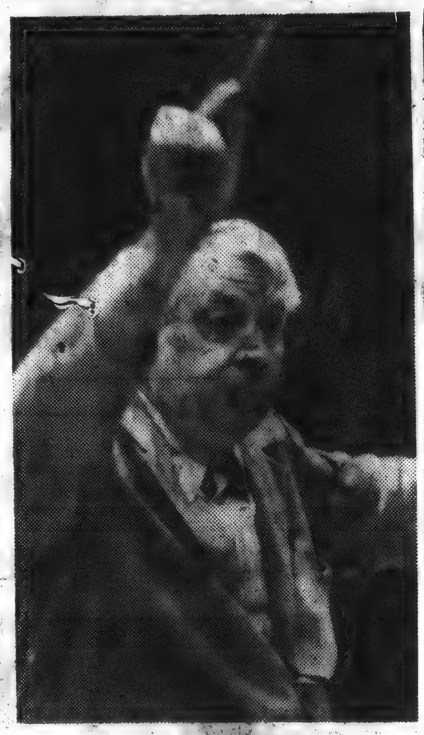
The music will be Berlioz's "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2 These are familiar works, of course, but you cannot say you heard them before if Dr. Munch did not conduct.

In 1954, Dr. Munch conducted Berlioz's "Requiem" on another sentimental occasion, a concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood. It was one of the most moving and powerful performances in the memory of many professionals, and it opened the eyes of at least one listener never previously stirred by Berlioz.

Next year will be Erich Leinsdorf's turn to be on the spot. The former Metropolitan Opera conductor succeeds Charles Munch, himself not an easy man to follow.

The Brooklyn Opera Company opens its fourth spring season at the Academy with Bellini's "Norma" at 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

Heading the cast will be soprano Herva Nelli of the Metropolitan Opera. Also in the production, which Carlo Moresco will conduct, are Joann Grillo, Giovanni Consiglio and Irwin Densen.



CHARLES MUNCH.
In farewell Academy appearance.

Later this month, Siegfried Landau of the Brooklyn Philharmonia will make his first appearance with the company when he conducts "La Traviata."

Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth" will be presented at 8:40 p.m. Friday and Saturday by the Long Island University Theater at the St. Felix St. Playhouse, adjacent to the Academy. Performances will also be April 13 and 14.

BROOKLYN DAILY
Friday, April 6, 1962

Charles Munch In Farewell Appearance At Academy of Music

Brooklyn will show its gratitude to Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he makes his farewell appearance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music this Friday evening, April 6 at 8:30 p.m. Enthusiasm of the Friday night audience is building for the silver-haired maestro who has served them with matchless music for the past 13 years.

Officials of the Borough, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Brooklyn Academy of music will be on hand to present an official citation honoring Dr. Munch on this occasion.

The citation will read in part: "Tonight we pay homage to a giant among the conducting artists of our time, and express our affectionate farewell since this concert, by his own election, marks the close of his era in the seventy-four year Brooklyn history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

"Therefore, with admiration and gratitude, we of the Borough of Brooklyn . . . tender this citation on behalf of the many thousands among our fellow citizens whose lives have been enriched permanently by CHARLES MUNCH."

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 3 900
APR 5 1962
PAGE ONE

Charles Munch to Receive a Citation At His Last Performance in Brooklyn

Charles Munch will make his final Brooklyn Academy of Music performance tomorrow night at 8:30. Soon to retire as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Munch tomorrow evening will receive a tribute from cultural figures here and from officials of the borough.

Brooklynites who have attended the Academy performances when the Boston Symphony made its annual series of appearances there will long remember the masterly touch and the solid Continental dignity of the silver-haired maestro who will shortly lay down his baton forever as the head of the orchestra he directed for 13 years.

This appreciation will be embodied in a citation to be given Dr. Munch tomorrow night. It will be presented by officials of the borough and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Munch was born in Strasbourg, France, seventy years ago. He switched from a medical to a musical career in his youth, already having become proficient on the violin. During World War II he worked for the French underground by sheltering escaped Allied prisoners in his home and shielding Jewish musicians threatened by the Nazis. He was appointed permanent director of music of the Boston Symphony in 1948.

Tomorrow evening's performance will be an all-French program. Dr. Munch will lead the orchestra in Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer," and the second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe" by Ravel.

* * *

Other activities at the Academy, 30 Lafayette Ave., include the final performance of the current season by the Brooklyn Ballet Company Saturday evening at 8:30. The dancers will present two newly choreographed productions, "Variations Serieuses," scored by Mendelssohn, and "Les Sylphides" of Chopin. Also on the program are the "Mother Goose Suite" by Ravel and a production by Alan Banks, the company's director. Mr. Banks' work is entitled "Divertissement."

Also on Saturday evening, the Brooklyn Opera Company will open its season with "Norma." The company is backed by a newly formed Opera Society of Brooklyn. The president of the society is Andrew L. Gomory, 84 Joralemon St.

The LaSalle String Quartet will appear at the Academy Tuesday, April 10, at 8:30 P.M. The program will be comprised of selections by Mozart, Schumann and Alban Berg.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 10,215
APR 7 1962

HIGHLIGHT:

Charles Munch

Brooklyn will show its gratitude to Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he makes his farewell appearance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music htis Friday evening, April 6 at 8:30 p.m. Enthusiasm of the Friday night audience is building for the silver-haired maestro who has served them with matchless music for the past 13 years.

Officials of the Borough, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be on hand to present an official citation honoring Dr. Munch on this occasion.

Charles Munch's final program on Friday will be devoted to French music, including Berlioz' Symphonie Fantastique, Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," Suite No. 2. Munch has long been acknowledged master of these works, which are also favorites of audiences everywhere.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 40,130
APR 6 1962

Charles Munch In Farewell Appearance At Academy of Music

Brooklyn will show its gratitude to Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when he makes his farewell appearance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music this Friday evening, April 6 at 8:30 p.m. Enthusiasm of the Friday night audience is building for the silver-haired maestro who has served them with matchless music for the past 13 years.

Officials of the Borough, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Brooklyn Academy of music will be on hand to present an official citation honoring Dr. Munch on this occasion.

The citation will read in part: "Tonight we pay homage to a giant among the conducting artists of our time, and express our affectionate farewell since this concert, by his own election, marks the close of his era in the seventy-four year Brooklyn history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

"Therefore, with admiration and gratitude, we of the Borough of Brooklyn . . . tender this citation on behalf of the many thousands among our fellow citizens whose lives have been enriched permanently by CHARLES MUNCH."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463 241 SAT. 176,139

APR 6 1962

Mrs. Michaels To Be Honored

By RUTH G. DAVIS.

MRS. DOROTHY L. MICHAELS, president of the Assembly of Jewish Women's Organizations, will be honored at the Assembly's 36th annual luncheon Thursday in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Presidents of affiliated organizations also will be honored.

Ruth Gruber Michaels, author and foreign correspondent, will speak on "1962 Challenge to the American Jewish Woman." Dr. Baruch Silverstein, rabbi and spiritual leader of Temple Emanu-El of Borough Park, also will speak. Songs and dances will be provided by the Sabres.

Ruth Davis

Mrs. Dorothy Lewis is chairman of the event and Mrs. Rae Weinstein, co-chairman.

For the luncheon, the assembly publishes a yearbook. Chairmen of the book are Mrs. June Lavine and Mrs. Lucy Gamberg. Reservation chairmen are Mrs. Sylvia J. Goodman, Mrs. Ruby Kronfeld and Mrs. Lee Gruskoff.

* * *

Mrs. Joseph Ramsey Hewitt, of Elk Hollow Ranch, Saratoga, Wyo., will be guest of honor this evening at a dinner given by Mrs. Albert C. Magee at her home, 200 Hicks St. The dinner will precede the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music.

Guests will be Mr. and Mrs. Philip F. Broughton, Mrs. Benjamin M. Cissel, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hallan, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Heindel, Mr. and Mrs. John W. James, Miss Essie Magee, David Scott, Mrs. Boyd Squires, Miss Florence Thayer, Redmond Thayer, Mr. and Mrs. Hollis K. Thayer and Marine PFC David Magee.

Mrs. Darwin R. James 3rd is sponsoring a reception at her home, 2 Pierrepont Pl., following the concert in honor of Charles Munch, director of the orchestra.

* * *

161

162

New York

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
THU APR 5 1962

Music: Munch Leads French Scores

Heard in Carnegie Hall in Last Week Here

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

THERE was that concert at the Champs-Elysées Theatre in Paris, winter of 1944. It was a cold December evening, and coal was not yet making its way into Paris. The members of the orchestra wore overcoats on stage, and some of them had muffs into which they stuck their hands whenever possible. As the audience breathed, clouds of vapor ascended, it was that freezing.

By the time the concert was over the temperature inside the hall had risen quite a few degrees, and the emotional temperature was sizzling. The conductor was Charles Munch, not yet known in America except through hearsay and a few records. He was tall, suave and handsome then, as he is tall, suave and handsome now. He led a "Daphnis et Chloe" that was amazing in its color, vigor and brilliance; and one auditor wrote home to America that very night, saying that if the Boston Symphony were ever looking for a successor to Serge Koussevitzky, here was the man.

●

This was about the only time that the auditor ever guessed right. Mr. Munch did come to America and did, in 1949, succeed Koussevitzky as leader of the Boston Symphony. And last night the cycle came to an end, appropriately and nostalgically with the Ravel second "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite.

It was Mr. Munch's last week with his orchestra in New York. He will conduct the Berkshire Festival this summer, and it may be that he will be back at some future time as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. But last night was his official good-by to the Wednesday subscribers, and on Saturday afternoon the skein will be cut for good as far as this city is concerned.

Instead of a retrospective concert, one that might have had one or more of the forty-six works he has introduced to New York, Mr. Munch chose to conduct three French scores with which he has long been associated—and which, it safely can be said, he is unexcelled. They are "his" scores. These were, in addition to the Ravel, the Berlioz "Symphonie fantastique" and the Debussy "La Mer."

●

It was the "Fantastique" that caused a sensation when Mr. Munch directed it with the New York Philharmonic shortly afer the war. Last night's performance was equally sinuous and hair-raising. As for the Debussy and Ravel, they were in the great traditions of the orchestra

Karsh, Ottawa
Charles Munch

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Charles Munch, conductor. At Carnegie Hall.

Fantastic Symphony In C, Op. 14.....Berlioz
La Mer.....Debussy
Daphnis et Chloe, Suite No. 2.....Ravel

Three Works Offered By Boston Symphony

(for those were also two of Koussevitzky's specialties), and those traditions were fully upheld.

Naturally Mr. Munch leads the impressionist scores in quite a different manner than Koussevitzky used to. With Koussevitzky it was all color, personality and tone. Mr. Munch, in this kind of repertory, also has personality and color, but he brings to it a degree of controlled classicism that is most unusual.

It is the repertory in which he is most at home, and he has achieved identification with it. In some of the German repertory, for instance, he tends to rush. But his tempos in "La Mer" and "Daphnis et Chloe" are never very fast. Indeed, they are slower than those of many conductors.

●

But they never give the feeling of lagging. The phrasing is so idiomatic, the textures so right, that the music falls right into place. And the element of classicism—of form, objectivity, balance—is very refreshing in music that can, in less experienced hands, sound like disconnected blobs of color. Mr. Munch is not out to use the music as an orchestral spree. Rather, he uses the music as music.

Last night was a special effort. The Boston Symphony was out to play as it never had played before, and Mr. Munch must have been moved by the rising ovation he received on his entrance. At the end there were, of course, cheers. Mr. Munch did nothing more than bring forward his flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, whose work had done so much to give "Daphnis et Chloe" its effect. There were no speeches and no encores. Mr. Munch bowed and bowed, and then left the stage.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
APR 1 1962

The Music World

Munch Is to Symphony What Bow Is to Fiddle

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK(UPI) — To the countless fans of the Boston Symphony, this waning music season has been a long exercise in the sentiment of sweet parting. Concert by concert, the orchestra is parting from its music director and conductor, Charles Munch. And, of course, Munch is parting from the orchestra. For 13 years they have been like bow to fiddle.

Fans Delight

Munch made it an installment parting by announcing his impending retirement before the season began. It becomes final in the fall, before he becomes 71 years old in September.

Other bows will play upon this magnificent instrument no less beautifully than the Munch bow does. Yet few bows will evoke quite the same spirituality which suggests man's essence is in music.

Music fans delight in such an evocation. It makes it seem they have the answer to all philosophical problems. They are awed by any kind of dedication to music, and Munch's dedication surmounts the routine and the ordinary.

He is an animated music score, in a manner of speaking, and it is instantly apparent. An Alsatian by birth, he was in the German Army during World War I, (having been conscripted) and played in a German orchestra for six years afterward.

Without Question

But he considered himself a Frenchman and the French accepted him as such without question. During World War II he remained in Paris throughout the occupation which made many a Frenchman of his prominence at least suspect to the liberators.

Not Munch. He had stuck to his last, which then was conducting the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. Anyone could see, and still can, that the world apart from music hardly exists for this tall, rather lumbering man. His is more than a dedication, It is an utter absorption.

In his own book-length rundown of what it means to be a conductorial musician (published in 1955) it is odd that he did not speak of the joy or pleasure of it, but of the suffering in it. "You perch on a pedestal in the middle of a battlefield," he said. "You are St. Sebastian exposed to the Roman arrows. You are Joan of Arc ready to burn at the stake for what you love."

Sacred Calling

"Conducting," he asserted, "is not a profession at all but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often even a disease—a disease from which the only escape is death."

However any of this may really be, Munch has made a profound impression on American music-making in the 13 years he led the Bostonians. He is no caterer to popular tastes; he serves up that music which he believes it is his mission to perform. Once he told his Boston patrons that perhaps they didn't care for the modern composers but it was their duty to listen to them, and there hardly is ever a Boston program without a modern on it.

Next week Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in New York's Carnegie Hall for the last time as its music director, and he'll play the French composers—Debussy, Berlioz and Ravel—with whom people have come to identify him because they think of him as a French musician.

His Scorecard

But in the 16 years ending in 1959, Munch put the orchestra through Beethoven 65 times, which made Beethoven his top composer. Mozart was second, with 53 performances. Then followed Bach with 45 and Brahms with 44. Ravel placed fifth, Debussy seventh and Beet... ninth.

MUNCH TO CONDUCT NATIONAL SYMPHONY

NEW YORK—Further light on the plans of Charles Munch after he gives up the direction of the Boston Symphony at this season's end is shed by an announcement from the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington. He will be its guest conductor at some as yet unspecified time, but probably in sequence with his previously announced visit to Philadelphia in February.

Conductor Howard Mitchell has also extended an invitation to Enrique Jorda of the San Francisco Symphony, who will in turn, relinquish his place to Mitchell for a week in January, 1963.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 313,349 S. 253,061
APR 5 1962

Munch Makes New York Adieu With Bostonians

By HENRY BECKETT

Charles Munch, of France and Massachusetts, is presenting three masterpieces of three of the greatest French composers at his final concerts here as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Last night's program, to be repeated at Carnegie Hall on Saturday, consisted of the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Cohle," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

All three are of the stuff of Frenchmen's dreams. That of Berlioz, early in the 19th century, had a woman of mystery in it, but also a waltz, ball, meadow march to the scaffold and witches' sabbath. Debussy created a sea of dreams. In a Greece of his dreams Ravel fashioned an orchestral web for lovers and shepherds.

The contrived effects of Berlioz can become tiresome unless handled with the finesse and devotion of a Munch.

He conducted with authority and the orchestra played with usual musicianship throughout the evening and at the end the large audience rose and cheered.

One thought of Munch as a musicial aide to Charles DeGaulle in that stubborn hero's crusade for the grandeur of France.

These composers are part of the real grandeur of France and so is Munch. He belongs in the company of Monteux, Camus, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, and his old Alsatian neighbor, Albert Schweitzer. Much as he despised the Nazi occupation, Munch conducted in France during World War II to keep his orchestra together, prevented the players' deportation, to Germany, and gave all of his pay to the underground, the resistance.

Loved by players and audiences, in his 13 years as Boston music director Munch has conducted a first New York performance of 46 compositions, has presented 168 contemporary works, 36 by Americans, has taken the orchestra to Europe, Japan, Australia and New Zealand, and his was the first Western orchestra to play in the Soviet Union.

In September he will be 71 and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, and the Boston orchestra's 77th season concerts here will be given in Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center.

UTICA OBSERVER DISPATCH
March 4 1962

Utica-Bound Group Has a Musical Toy

By DELOS SMITH

New York (UPI) — The Philadelphia Orchestra has a new musical toy which is a wonder to behold. It it a violin concerto by Henk Badings, the contemporary Dutch composer, which requires two violinists for its solo part.

A duo to weave a solo is a confusing idea and you may call it a "double concerto" if you wish. Yet one violin does not support the other. In musical line they are not separated. There is no "conversation" between them, which is the basis of the conventional "double concerto."

Rather they pass the ball rapidly and with marvelous agility back and forth, in a manner of speaking. That ball is the solo part. And what fun Anshel Brusilow, the Philadelphia's concertmaster and his associate, David Madison, have with it.

Badings ran up this complex exhibition of violinistic juggling for two violinists of a Dutch orchestra. Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, heard it in Europe. His Brusilow and Madison were no less adept for acrobatic oneness, he figured.

With Ormandy conducting and with Brusilow and Madison in finest fettle, the orchestra gave the piece its American premiere in Philadelphia and performed it again in New York's Carnegie Hall.

(Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra in Utica in September for the opening performance of the Great Artists Series.)

The Boson Symphony, with Charles Munch conducting also had something spectacular to offer in its last concert in New York. It was a person rather than a piece—a slender platinum blonde who played the piano with the strength and endurance of a man twice her heft.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre, a distinguished French piano virtuoso and teacher who this season is playing in the United States for the first time. With the Bostonians she played Saint-Saens' 2nd Concerto which is not for a pianist who is faint of heart or flabby of muscle.

ERT SHAW

...sey, Berlioz and ... whom people have ...ntify him because ... him as a French

...Scorecard
...10 years ending in ... put the orchestra ...ethoven 65 times, ... Beethoven his top ... Mozart was second, ...formances. Then fol... with 45 and Brahms ... Ravel placed fifth, ...enth and Berlioz

TO CONDUCT ...NAL SYMPHONY

...YORK—Further light ...ans of Charles Munch ... gives up the direction ...ston Symphony at this ...end is shed by an an... ...nt from the National ... Orchestra of Wash... He will be its guest ... at some as yet un... time, but probably in ... with his previously ...d visit to Philadelphia ...ary.

...ctor Howard Mitchell ... extended an invitation ...que Jorda of the San ...co Symphony, who will, ... relinquish his place to ... for a week in Janu... I. K.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
APR 5 1962

BOSTONIANS AT CARNEGIE HALL

Munch in Touching Farewell

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CHARLES MUNCH BID FAREWELL to the Wednesday subscribers of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night.

He did so with a program of works closely identified with him during his 13-year tenure as music director of the orchestra: Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2.

Those who had heard him perform them through these years felt a twinge of nostalgia, for who would there be to give such performances henceforth?

Munch has left an imprint of intensity of these works which will be hard to erase. It is an incandescence peculiar to his temperament and indicative of the Bostonians' response to him.

Fond Memories

Present again last night, it led to impassioned moments in this music no other living conductor has created with his own orchestra. In a sense this farewell epitomized the man and the musician in almost unique fashion.

Who has fired himself or his musicians with the sense of drama that crystalizes the witches' dance at the end of Berlioz? Who stirs up the sea to its depths or lets the breeze just slightly ruffle its surface as Munch in "La Mer?" Who has capitalized on all the shimmering color and imparted such moments of exhilaration and sheer excitement in the Ravel?

These are the memories revivified last night and to be treasured in the years to come. Perhaps all the agony of disciplining an orchestra has not been his suit, though it played with admirable precision last night; but all the ecstacy of a score has frequently been Munch's contribution to a concert, especially when he has been so well attuned in works like these three.

Evokes Cheer

Igniting a score both imaginatively and emotionally has been his inspiration of the moment. It is a tribute to a great orchestra that they have always been equal to his musical enthusiasm and his dramatic impulses.

Thus the concert ended with a splash of color and a surge of orchestral splendor that evoked many cheers and loud applause. It ended also with a rising audience, paying tribute as it had when he first appeared at the start of the program.

That Munch took no bow alone either before or after the concert but shared the applause with a standing orchestra indicated with what humility he has led the Boston through these years. In the midst of his final bows, he gestured for Richard Burgin, retiring as concertmaster, to bow also.

This program will be repeated in Brooklyn tomorrow night and in Carnegie Saturday afternoon to mark the close of another notable chapter in the history of the Boston Symphony. Munch does not actually retire until the end of the Tanglewood season, but these concerts mark his swan song in New York.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 680,265 S. 1,306,418
SUN APR 15 1962

REPRISE

OPERA: The concert version of Strauss' "Ariadne auf Naxos" presented by Thomas Scherman and the Little Orchestra Society showed that the "joyous" score "continues to enchant." At the Met, Richard Tucker was "spectacular" as Enzo in "La Gioconda" and Regina Resnik "brought down the house" as Klytaemnestra in "Elektra." Chester Ludgin contributed an "extremely well sung" Tabor to the New York City Opera's "Ballad of Baby Doe." The Brooklyn Opera Company opened its season by playing "Norma" for its "raw and rip-snorting power."

ORCHESTRAS: Charles Munch said farewell by leading the Boston Symphony in "his" scores: Berlioz' "Fantastique," Debussy's "La Mer" and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloë." Rudolf Firkusny played Beethoven's Third Concerto with "pearl-like beauty of tone" with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. André Previn played Shostakovich's First Piano Concerto with "authority and aplomb" when he appeared with the New York Philharmonic.

LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
D. 66,493 S. 65,765
MAR 4 1962

The Music World

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK, March 3 (UPI)—The Philadelphia orchestra has a new musical toy which is a wonder to behold. It is a violin concerto by Henk Badings, the modern Dutch composer, which requires two violinists for its solo part.

A duo to weave a solo is a confusing idea and you may call it a "double concerto" if you wish. Yet one violin does not support the other. In musical line they are not separated. There is no "conversation" between them, which is the basis of the conventional "double concerto."

Rather they pass the ball rapidly and with marvelous agility back and forth, in a manner of speaking. That ball is the solo part. And what fun Anshel Brusilow, the Philadelphia's concertmaster and his associate, David Madison, have with it.

Badings ran up this complex exhibition of violinistic juggling for two violinists of a Dutch orchestra. Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia orchestra, heard it in Europe. His Brusilow and Madison were no less adept for acrobatic oneness, he figured.

With Ormandy conducting and with Brusilow and Madison in finest fettle, the orchestra gave the piece its American premiere in Philadelphia and performed it again in New York's Carnegie hall.

The composer is among the more remarkable figures on the current musical scene. He was 28 years old when he decided to give up mining engineering for which he had been educated and to become a composer. He will be 55 this year and he has composed eight symphonies, three operas, four ballets, eight concertos, 12 volumes of songs and much music for small instrumental combinations.

The Boston Symphony, with Charles Munch conducting, also had something spectacular to offer in its last concert in New York. It was a person rather than a piece—a slender platinum blonde who played the piano with the strength and endurance of a man twice her heft.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre, a distinguished French piano virtuoso and teacher who this season is playing in the United States for the first time. With the Bostonians she played Saint-Saens' Second Concerto which is not for a pianist who is faint of heart or flabby of muscle.

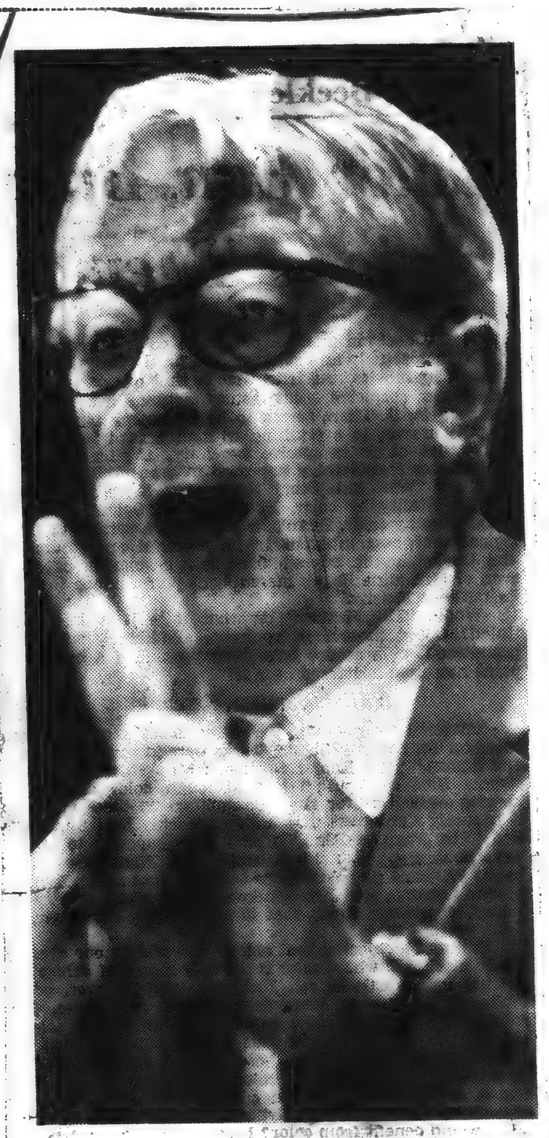
Miss Darre dazzled with her mighty fortissimos, her long, rapid and beautifully sustained pianissimos, which were soft as any whisper. She flexed her tone, and colored it superbly. She showed them how Saint-Saens can be played—spectacularly yet beautifully.

The New York Philharmonic had momentary conductorial trouble when Fritz Reiner, music director of the Chicago Symphony, was forced to cancel his two week guest conductor engagement because of illness. But Leopold Stokowski, who will be 80 years old in April, was ready to fill the breach, as he always is.

Alfred Wallenstein will take over Reiner's other concert series next week.

164

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 1 1962



Charles Munch, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony, will make his last appearances in New York at Carnegie Hall Wednesday and Saturday.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 617,250 S. 773,579
APR 8 1962

AN 'ERA' ENDS

By MILES KASTENDIECK

CONDUCTING his final Carnegie Hall concert as music director of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch bid farewell to New York yesterday afternoon. His program consisted of three war-horses in his repertory: Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite. He has identified himself so closely with this music that New Yorkers naturally think of his incandescent performances whenever these works turn up on concert programs.

●

WHEN MUNCH came to the Boston 13 years ago, he affected considerable change in the orchestra. He injected into its performances a fire that will now be missed just as much as his predecessor's refinement. Undoubtedly, his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, will make an entirely different contribution.

Though the Boston Symphony programs, especially those at Tanglewood, have become more rubber-stamped than usual in recent years, Munch can look back on an impressive record of first performances. He has introduced 46 new works to New York.

Six of these have received the New York Music Critics Circle Award: Haieff's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra; Bloch's Concerto Grosso No. 2 for String Orchestra; Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques (Symphony No. 6), Smit's Symphony No. 1 in E-Flat, Piston's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, and Poulenc's Gloria, For Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra. No other orchestra or conductor has done so well in the same space of time.

●

ALSO FROM these compositions, Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and Haieff's Symphony No. 2, received American International Music Fund Awards. Perhaps mention should also be made of the 9 Grand Prix du Disques that have come to the orchestra. Incidentally, he has performed works by 35 American composers, among whom Walter Piston figures prominently.

TWO contemporary composers, now deceased, received special recognition through Munch's sympathetic interest in their music: Honegger and Martinu. Undoubtedly, he has done more for the former than any other conductor in this country. It may be that this promotion will flower into substantial acceptance as the years go by. Martinu's music may encounter more difficulty, but Munch may be well satisfied with his efforts on Martinu's behalf.

●

THOUGH UNEVEN and erratic in his New York concerts. Munch has nevertheless conducted many memorable performances. He has done much for French music here. He will be sorely missed on the musical scene.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events in weekday issues of the Journal-American.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 463 241 SAT. 176,139
APR 5 1962

Music

Munch Conducts Last N.Y. Concert

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

After thirteen years of mutual admiration, Charles Munch and his New York evening public parted company in Carnegie Hall last night. On Saturday afternoon he bids the city goodbye for good.

This is the French conductor's last season with the Boston Symphony, his last in America, and perhaps his last as a full-time conductor anywhere. A richly deserved rest and retirement have long been beckoning.

When he strode out last night, he was given a standing ovation by the hundreds of friends he has made here through the forceful auspices of his art. A still warmer demonstration awaited him at the end.

As farewell program Mr. Munch chose three works by composers who were closest to his heart because they were geniuses of the first rank and compatriots too. These were Berlioz, Debussy and Ravel.

The performance of Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony was recognizable in the conviction and emotional drive that Mr. Munch has always given it. There seemed the added impact of a last embrace, as if to sum up a lifetime's loyalty.

Treated as a nightmare confession, the "Fantastic" is one of the most gripping documents in the history of music. That was there last night, but over and beyond it the vivid surge and flight of imaginative art too.

Leave it to Mr. Munch to weave the two worlds — the musical and the dream-world — into cohesive drama of living tone. With last night's performance he set all standards a little higher for Berlioz in New York.

What followed was just as good, if quite different—the luminous, sinuous play of feigned wind and wave in Debussy's "The Sea," the iridescent tumult of Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" Ballet Suite No. 2.

Only a conductor with a deep nostalgia for France and the sea could summon the fervor and awe that radiated out to the Boston Symphony last night, and, in turn, to the audience.

Certainly a heady cross-section of French genius in action was offered last night's audience by a Frenchman with the will and the way to clarify it. This was Mr. Munch's final message — and a memorable one.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 5 1962

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Orchestra

CARNEGIE HALL

Conductor, Charles Munch. The program:
Fantastic Symphony.....Berlioz
"La Mer".....Debussy
"Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2...Ravel

By Paul Henry Lang

Last night's concert of the Boston Symphony was an affair both spirited and a bit melancholy. Spirited, because Charles Munch played a program consisting of music he knows and interprets best, melancholy, because this was his last visit in New York at the head of the great orchestra which he has led for years with distinction and affection.

Mr. Munch carries us back to an older generation with its good taste and manners and courteous formality—the breed is rapidly vanishing. The type represented by Mr. Munch have an alchemy in their soul that takes the bitterness out of life. He is indeed a romantic, a profession of faith quite evident from his excellent performance of Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony." The old war horse, the queer tale of a queer personality, came to life under his baton; Mr. Munch made it dramatic and full of ominous tension. We have often witnessed this ability of the veteran conductor to take a romantic work that is a scrap book and then make it clear that all the scraps come from the same mind.

The orchestra was vibrant, powerful, and rhythmic; grand in sound and spirit—Mr. Munch had them eat out of his hands. (But what an awfully coarse and corny piece that "March to the Gallows" is, and how un-French!)

Mr. Munch is a good conductor. If his methods and style seem to belong to a tradition presently a bit out of fashion, they are really none the worse for that. Perhaps he is a little too partial to French music of all sorts, but then every one is naturally inclined to favor music with which he is most familiar. And after all, for every piece by Saint-Saens or Chausson he also gave us excellent Debussy, or Honegger, or Roussel.

Last night Debussy's "La Mer" shone as an impressionist gem in a setting of natural loveliness. This is French music, utterly and enchantingly French, every sixteenth note of it. The following number, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite (the second) is also French to its fingertips, and it has a way of seeming radiant. But unlike with Debussy, the musical ideas are shallow, wrung forth by weariness, a fact that is for the most part concealed by craftsmanship. The charm brought before us at the outset is gradually broken, the alluring image is lost at length in the brilliance of the manner. This brilliance was well captured by Mr. Munch with an insight which redeems so many faults.

We shall miss the genial Boston conductor, and for more than one reason. He did not stay aloof from the music of this country, he has seen and judged many of our composers, played their works, watched the interplay of their temperaments. Especially the composers in his own community could always count on his interest. The range of this interest and the capacity for hard work have combined to keep for Mr. Munch the sympathy and generous outlook of youth. We trust that the warm ovation tendered by the New York public will echo in his ears for many years to come.

NEW YORK, N
TIMES
D. 644,175 S.
SUN APR

13-YEAR-REGI
Boston Symphon

IN THE ORLE
admirers after

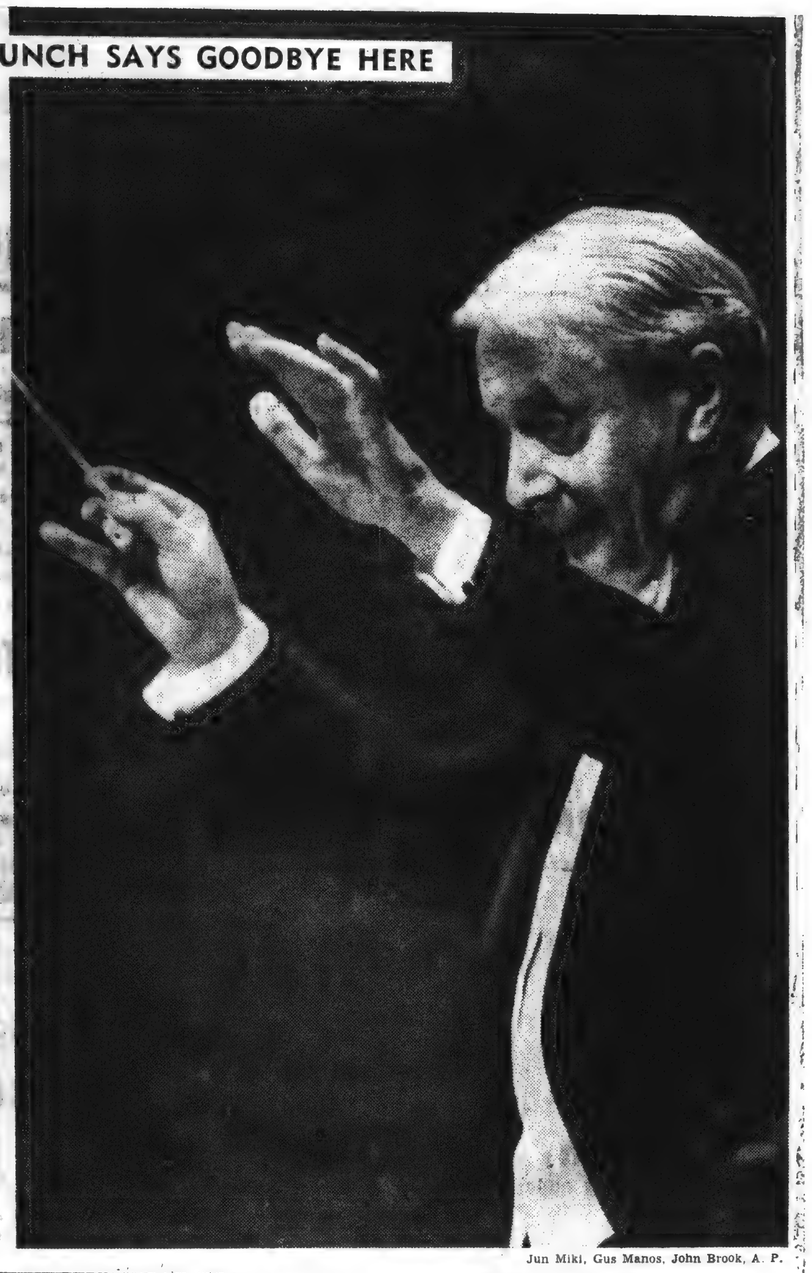
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
SEP 1 1962

THE BOSTON'S CHARLES MUNCH SAYS GOODBYE HERE

13-YEAR-REGIME ENDS—Dr. Munch, above and right, who will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony after its Tanglewood season, will conduct three final concerts this week.

IN THE ORIENT—Dr. Munch joins two admirers after a concert in Tokyo in 1960.

IN RUSSIA—A bouquet is offered to Dr. Munch in Leningrad during 1956 Soviet tour.



Jun Miki, Gus Manos, John Brook, A. P.

166

RELUCTANT AU REVOIR

Bostonians, Who Were Hard to Win, Are Sad to See Charles Munch Leave

By HAROLD ROGERS

BOSTON.

WHEN Charles Munch came to Boston as Serge Koussevitzky's successor thirteen seasons ago, Bostonians felt the same trepidation they are now feeling with Erich Leinsdorf in prospect as his successor. Now that Munch is bringing his tenure to a close as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, music-lovers here are as reluctant to see him leave as they were to bid farewell to Koussevitzky.

It was not easy at the outset for Munch to win his way into Boston hearts. That he eventually did was a tribute to his musicianship alone. At first he had at least two strikes against him: he changed the tone of the city's beloved orchestra and he would have nothing to do with extra-musical social activities.

When Munch first stood before the orchestra the tone was notably different; by the end of his first season the musicians had completely capitulated to his will. No longer did the strings melt with Koussevitzkian emotion; no longer did the choirs blend and swell in orotund radiance. Many symphony-goers were indignant.

Difference

Yet others began to see that the orchestra under Munch was no less brilliant; it was brilliance of a different kind. The strings were drier, brighter. Each choir spoke in its characteristic way, coexisting but not fraternizing with the others. Details stood out in crystalline focus.

Socially, Munch has been available only to a restricted circle of good friends, most of whom are French-speaking. English is still a chore for him. Shy by nature, he recoiled from post-concert receptions with dowagers in the Green Room. Traditions of court established by Koussevitzky during his twenty-five-year reign in Symphony Hall were quickly brushed aside by Munch. He has lived in seclusion with his servants in a large house near Milton, about eight miles from Boston.

During Munch's first season there were those who thought that he might prove to be an "interim conductor." Yet he has had the second longest uninterrupted term, Koussevitzky having had the longest. Wilhelm Gericke, like Munch, served thirteen years, but in two terms.

Koussevitzky was always "good press." Whenever he was disposed to deliver himself of a pronouncement, the reporters were immediately called in. It made little difference what he had to say. He would say it with such magnificent conviction that the newsmen could rush back to their typewriters, a hot story pouring from their fingertips.

Munch, on the other hand, was bad press from the beginning. While Koussevitzky always opened a season by inviting the press to a luncheon, such luncheons with Munch were soon discarded as fruitless. With but one major exception, Munch has had little to say, even in French, and the exception occurred about six or seven years ago when he suddenly waxed eloquent and divulged all of RCA Victor's recording plans with the Boston Symphony for the ensuing season.

Koussevitzky, ever the grand seigneur, was seldom at peace with the orchestra's management, and their spats were often common knowledge. As far as anyone can tell, the Munchian years in Symphony Hall have been serene. He has been loved by management and musicians alike.

Some of the players have said that he has been too easy on them, that they were not being sufficiently disciplined for the best in music-making. This may have been true. But the men have enjoyed their pleasant working conditions and morale has been high. It remains to be seen if Leinsdorf will restore the iron discipline once exercised by Koussevitzky.

SOLOIST — Glenn Gould, pianist, will appear with the Philharmonic this week.

Munch has never neglected his obligations to the music of our day. During his stay in Boston he has conducted thirty-nine world premières, seventeen first performances in the United States and thirteen Boston premières. He has programmed 168 contemporary works, thirty-six of which have been by American composers.

Munch is not a man to conduct a performance exactly as rehearsed. Once before an audience, he leans heavily on the inspiration of the moment. His players admit that they are never certain in advance of how things will go, or indeed if the same work will ever be played in the same way. Perhaps at such times of white-hot verve Munch may lose his intellectual control over the music and permit it to run away with him. This doubtless accounts for some of his speedy readings.

Yet, should he lose an inch of control, he nearly always gains a mile in excitement. This is what Bostonians will miss; this is what Bostonians are hoping that Leinsdorf will be able to supply. Say what you will, Munch is seldom less than exciting.

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, March 4, 1962

Orchestra Boasts 'Double Concerto'

By DELOS SMITH

The Philadelphia Orchestra has a new musical toy which is a wonder to behold. It is a violin concerto by Henk Badings, the contemporary Dutch composer, which requires two violinists for its solo part.

A duo to weave a solo is a confusing idea and you may call it a "double concerto" if you wish. Yet one violin does not support the other. In musical time they are not separated. There is no "conversation" between them, which is the basis of the conventional "double concerto."

Rather they pass the ball rapidly and with marvelous agility back and forth, in a manner of speaking. That ball is the solo part. And what fun Anshel Brusilow, the Philadelphia's concertmaster and his associate, David Madison, have with it.

Badings ran up this complex exhibition of violinistic juggling for two violinists of a Dutch orchestra. Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, heard it in Europe. His Brusilow and Madison were no less adept for acrobatic oneness, he figured.

In Carnegie Hall

With Ormandy conducting and with Brusilow and Madison in finest fettle, the orchestra gave the piece its America premiere in Philadelphia and performed it again in New York's Carnegie Hall.

The composer is among the more remarkable figures on the current musical scene. He was 28 years old when he decided to give up mining engineering for which he had been educated and to become a composer. He will be 55 this year and he has composed eight symphonies, three operas, four ballets, eight concertos, 12 volumes of songs and much music for small instrumental combinations.

The Boston Symphony, with Charles Munch conducting, also had something spectacular to offer in its last concert in New York. It was a person rather than a piece — a slender platinum blonde who played the piano with the strength and endurance of a man twice her heft.

She is Jeanne Marie Darre, a distinguished French piano virtuoso and teacher who this season is playing in the United States for the first time. With the Bostonians she played Saint-Saens' 2nd Concerto which is not for a pianist who is faint of heart or flabby of muscle.

Miss Darre dazzled with her mighty fortissimos, her long, rapid and beautifully sustained pianissimos, which were soft as any whisper. She flexed her tone, and colored it superbly.

She showed them how Saint-Saens can be played — spectacularly yet beautifully.

The New York Philharmonic had momentary conductorial trouble when Fritz Reiner, music director of the Chicago Symphony, was forced to cancel his two-week guest conductor engagement because of illness. But Leopold Stokowski, who will be 80 years old in April, was ready to fill the breach, as he always is.

Alfred Wallenstein will take over Reiner's other concert series next week.

Twenty-second Week

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
APR 12 1962

Richard Burgin To Conduct Boston Symphony This Week

Richard Burgin will conduct theBoston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday (April 13, 2:15)—Saturday (April 14, 8:30). His guest artist will be violinist Ruth Posselt who will be soloist in a performance of the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber. Mr. Burgin's program will include the first performance by the Orchestra of Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31, Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 9.

These concerts — the 14th and 15th Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts conducted by Mr. Burgin this season — will be Mr. Burgin's 322nd and 323rd since he first conducted the Orchestra in 1924. His concerts with the Orchestra, in the United States, Australia and Japan, have included the first Boston performance of 25 compositions, six United States premieres, and seven world premiere performances.

At these concerts Miss Posselt, known for her many tours in this country and Europe and for her world premiere performances of several concerti, will be making her 62nd and 63rd appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch will conduct his farewell concerts as Boston Symphony Orchestra Music Director in Providence Tuesday (April 10) and in Cambridge April 17. Doctor Munch's next concerts in Symphony Hall will be on April 19 and 21 when he has invited Nadia Boulanger to conduct the second half of the program.

Complete programs:

Friday, April 13, 2:15; Saturday, April 14, 8:30; Symphony Hall. Richard Burgin conducting:

Shostakovitch: Symphony No 9, Op. 70; Barber: Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Posselt); Schoenberg, Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 (First performance at these concerts) Tchaikovsky: Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Op. 49.

Tuesday, April 17, 8:30; Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Charles Munch conducting:

Berlioz: Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14a; Debussy: "La Mer,' Three Symphonic Sketches; Ravel: "Dapnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

Thursday, April 19, 2:15; Saturday, April 21, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Charles Munch and Nadia Boulanger conducting:

Mozart: Masonic Funeral Music, K. 77 (Munch); Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 5, in D minor, 'Reformation', Op. 107 (Much); Lili Boulanger: Du Ford de l'abime (Psalm 130); Lili Boulanger: Ils m'ont assez opprime (Psalm 24); Lili Boulanger: La Terre appartient a' lEternal (Psalm 24); (First performances in Boston — conducted by Mme. Boulanger) Marguerite Paquet Contralto; Roland Gagnon, Tenor; Donald Gramm, Baritone; Berj. Zamkochian, organ; New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
APR 22 1962

From the Aisle

SCREEN—Some of "Moon Pilot," Walt Disney's farce at the Uptown Theater, Boston and the Cinema, Framingham, was pretty broad, but some of it was very funny. "The Counterfeit Traitor," at the Paramount, was an unusually interesting spy film with exteriors filmed in Germany, Sweden and Denmark. The new production of "State Fair," at the Metropolitan was large and noisy, but had lost most of its original warmth. There was lovely scenery in "Rome Adventure," at 11 Greater Boston theaters, with an embarrassingly and sometimes tastelessly thin story. "The Day the Earth Caught Fire," at the Keith Memorial, was exciting, convincing and enough "to scare you out of your wits—at least for a couple of hours."

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—Richard Burgin's Symphony concerts last weekend, his last as an active member of the orchestra, was a sad occasion to reflect on how much he has contributed during 42 years. Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, blonde, handsome and swamped by roses, opened the new Harvard Square Concert Series before a passionately welcoming audience.

Twenty-second Program

(To follow a tour of Princeton, New York, Washington, Brooklyn, April 3–7)

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SHOSTAKOVITCH — Symphony No. 9, Op. 70

I. Allegro
II. Moderato
III. Presto
IV. Largo
V. Allegretto

BARBER — Concerto for Violin and Orchestra

I. Allegro molto moderato
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Presto, in moto perpetuo

INTERMISSION

SCHOENBERG — Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31

(First performance at these concerts)

TCHAIKOVSKY — Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Op. 49

SOLOIST
RUTH POSSELT

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
MAR 12 1962

Notes and Footnotes

BIT PARTS: Sally Willeke o South Mountain Temple of Musi the other day attended a Bosto Symphony Orchestra concert a Sanders Memorial Theater at Har vard University, and reports many in the audience were secretl tickled by Joseph De Pasquale orchestra violist. The program opened with Handel's "Water Mu sic," and Mr. De Pasquale wa wearing rubbers! . . . From Con

Twenty-second Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
APR 12 1962

Richard Burgin To Conduct Boston Symphony This Week

Richard Burgin will conduct theBoston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday (April 13, 2:15)—Saturday (April 14, 8:30). His guest artist will be violinist Ruth Posselt who will be soloist in a performance of the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber. Mr. Burgin's program will include the first performance by the Orchestra of Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31, Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 9.

These concerts — the 14th and 15th Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts conducted by Mr. Burgin this season — will be Mr. Burgin's 322nd and 323rd since he first conducted the Orchestra in 1924. His concerts with the Orchestra, in the United States, Australia and Japan, have included the first Boston performance of 25 compositions, six United States premieres, and seven world premiere performances.

At these concerts Miss Posselt, known for her many tours in this country and Europe and for her world premiere performances of several concerti, will be making her 62nd and 63rd appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Charles Munch will conduct his farewell concerts as Boston Symphony Orchestra Music Director in Providence Tuesday (April 10) and in Cambridge April 17. Doctor Munch's next concerts in Symphony Hall will be on April 19 and 21 when he has invited Nadia Boulanger to conduct the second half of the program.

Complete programs:

Friday, April 13, 2:15; Saturday, April 14, 8:30; Symphony Hall. Richard Burgin conducting:

Shostakovitch: Symphony No 9, Op. 70; Barber: Concerto for Violin and Orchestra (Posselt); Schoenberg, Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 (First performance at these concerts) Tchaikovsky: Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Op. 49.

Tuesday, April 17, 8:30; Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Charles Munch conducting:

Berlioz: Symphonie fantastique, Op. 14a; Debussy: "La Mer,' Three Symphonic Sketches; Ravel: "Dapnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2.

Thursday, April 19, 2:15; Saturday, April 21, 8:30; Symphony Hall, Charles Munch and Nadia Boulanger conducting:

Mozart: Masonic Funeral Music, K. 77 (Munch); Mendelssohn: Symphony No. 5, in D minor, 'Reformation', Op. 107 (Much); Lili Boulanger: Du Ford de l'abime (Psalm 130); Lili Boulanger: Ils m'ont assez opprime (Psalm 24); Lili Boulanger: La Terre appartient a' l'Eternel (Psalm 24); (First performances in Boston — conducted by Mme. Boulanger) Marguerite Paquet Contralto; Roland Gagnon, Tenor; Donald Gramm, Baritone; Berj. Zamkochian, organ; New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
APR 22 1962

From the Aisle

SCREEN—Some of "Moon Pilot," Walt Disney's farce at the Uptown Theater, Boston and the Cinema, Framingham, was pretty broad, but some of it was very funny. "The Counterfeit Traitor," at the Paramount, was an unusually interesting spy film with exteriors filmed in Germany, Sweden and Denmark. The new production of "State Fair," at the Metropolitan was large and noisy, but had lost most of its original warmth. There was lovely scenery in "Rome Adventure," at 11 Greater Boston theaters, with an embarrassingly and sometimes tastelessly thin story. "The Day the Earth Caught Fire," at the Keith Memorial, was exciting, convincing and enough "to scare you out of your wits—at least for a couple of hours."

★ ★ ★

MUSIC—Richard Burgin's Symphony concerts last weekend, his last as an active member of the orchestra, was a sad occasion to reflect on how much he has contributed during 42 years. Elissabeth Schwarzkopf, blonde, handsome and swamped by roses, opened the new Harvard Square Concert Series before a passionately welcoming audience.

Twenty-second Program

(To follow a tour of Princeton, New York, Washington, Brooklyn, April 3–7)

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 13, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 14, at 8:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Conductor

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 9, Op. 70

I. Allegro
II. Moderato
III. Presto
IV. Largo
V. Allegretto

BARBER ..... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra

I. Allegro molto moderato
II. Andante sostenuto
III. Presto, in moto perpetuo

INTERMISSION

SCHOENBERG ..... Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31

(First performance at these concerts)

TCHAIKOVSKY ..... Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Op. 49

SOLOIST
RUTH POSSELT

These concerts will end about 4:05 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:20 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
MAR 12 1962

Notes and Footnotes

BIT PARTS: Sally Wilcke, a South Mountain Temple of Musi the other day attended a Bosto Symphony Orchestra concert a Sanders Memorial Theater at Har vard University, and reports many in the audience were secretl tickled by Joseph De Pasquale orchestra violist. The program opened with Handel's "Water Mu sic" and Mr. De Pasquale wa wearing rubbers! ... From Con

168

The Symphony

Burgin Receives Rising Ovation

By ROBERT TAYLOR

Let us be grateful for Richard Burgin. He will continue as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Nontheless, this weekend's pair of concerts mark the last he will lead as an active member of the orchestra he has served so dedicatedly as concertmaster during 42 years.

The occasion, therefore, held an edge of sadness. Thanks to Mr. Burgin's Mahler, Bruckner, Schoenberg, Shostakovitch and Middle European repertoire, the Boston Symphony over the last 13 years has not been exclusively Gallic. He has impressed his own character on these years; and he deserved the rising ovation scattered burghers gave him at his first appearance.

I do not think yesterday's program represented the ideal swan song. We have heard Burgin programs of wider scope and nobler aim. But aspects of originality and vision so apparent in past Burgin afternoons lighted parts of the design.

Interior Parts

These were the interior parts. I could have eschewed the Russian end-pieces. "Musicians will love to play (my Ninth Symphony)," said Shostakovitch, "and critics will delight in blasting it."

Very well. At the behest of the composer I shall do my best to comply. Shostakovitch's Ninth Symphony, in five movements, is a composition of treacly dullness. It is generally monotonous and when not boring one to death, tries to deliver the coup de grace through sentimental vulgarity.

The symphony, it must be remembered, was composed at the close of World War II when Stalinism was in flower and Shostakovitch suspect. One rather concludes that the composer conceived this as a fawning bid for favor; or at least for keeping out of the Lubianka prison. The tunes are undistinguished, and the bathos of the expression would do credit to a reedy baritone singing "Trees" at a parlor musicale. Stalin ought to have revelled in it.

Flute Solo

Doriot Anthony Dwyer supplied a pastoral flute solo here, and took a bow, and the "1812" Overture went loudly and chauvinistically as it should. The refinement of musical content occurred with Ruth Posselt's magnificent account of Samuel Barber's seldom-heard Violin Concerto; and the astonishingly inventive Schoenberg Variations heard for the first time in the Friday-Saturday series.

Miss Posselt's treatment of the Barber Concerto disclosed a long, legato line of glowing sensitivity and ardor. The thematic structure of the work contains a warmly meditative impulse. There is no self-conscious attempt at musical "nationalism," and the score harks back to the rhapsodic introversion, slender in outline and intensely emotional, of such a late romantic as Dvorak. I think the sweep of its melodic arch is destined to endure.

Miss Posselt's delicate tone, rhythmic accuracy and technical mastery in general supplied an enormously satisfying artistry. Better still, her intuitive and intellectual understanding of the Concerto brings out interpretive depth and power. She was superb.

The set of variations, which Schoenberg wrote in 1928 constitute a milestone in the development of serial technique; but in themselves seem to me masterworks. The theme made up of 12 different notes as in a "row" is proceeded by an introduction climaxed by the musical notation of Bach's name (misprinted in the program), which gives the listener an idea of the orientation. The handling of the ideas, to the modern ear, sounds strangely tonal.

Schoenberg is the product of the romantic era. The strength, originality, power and glory of his advancement of romantic frontiers, however, is almost beyond belief. I could have listened to the nine variations extended on and on, but let us close this finite series, again with thanks to Richard Burgin.

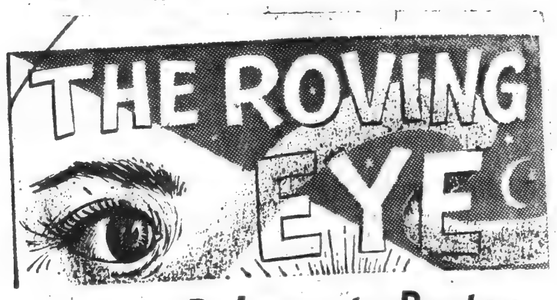
Next week's concert falls on Thursday and Saturday to bracket Good Friday. Dr. Munch has scheduled Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, Op. 107. Nadia Boulanger is guest conductor in works by her sister, Lili, based on Psalms 130, 129 and 24, which will be sung by The New England Conservatory Chorus.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, presented the 22nd program of the 81st season yesterday at Symphony Hall. The soloist was Ruth Posselt, violin. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Symphony No. 9, Op. 70 . . Shostakovitch
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra . . Barber
Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 . . Schoenberg
Ouverture Solenelle, "1812," Op. 49, Tchaikowsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 12 1962



Burgin Belongs to Boston

By ROBERT TAYLOR

HE NEVER PLAYED SECOND FIDDLE, certainly not in the affections of civilized Boston. But now he steps down, and the exit of Richard Burgin, concertmaster, who has been a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for half the Orchestra's lifetime—a record exceeded by only two men—will be characteristically modest, quiet, self-effacing.

It isn't Mr. Burgin's fault nor Dr. Charles Munch's, that their retirement should jointly occur, and that the attention of the national press must center inevitably upon the master conductor. If it were not so, we shouldn't violate our normal procedure in this space to write a music story.

BURGIN

Richard Burgin, however, isn't a music story, he's an institution in Boston. Today, on the verge of his conductorship of a pair of guest concerts this weekend, seems a splendid time to pay him homage. Still, how do you pay homage to an honorable institution, which has an enduring quality, which simply is — and for whom purple adjectives must be only a superfluity of breath?

★ ★ ★

OH, THE INTEGERS ARE THERE if you want them: at the end of this season Mr. Burgin will have conducted 323 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston, the U. S., Australia and Japan. We shall not presume to catalogue his concerts as a player, not knowing them all, and having some respect for the limitations of our pocket computer. Yet 323 concerts, if you think of statistics, represents a tenure as guest conductor exceeding the official sway of many a permanent leader.

He was a legend years before he arrived in Boston, too. Richard Burgin made his debut as a violin soloist at the age of 10—mature as fiddling wonderchildren run, but juvenile enough to awe the average person. It was December 7, 1903, and his supporting orchestra was the Warsaw Philharmonic.

By the age of 19 he was concertmaster of the Helsinki Symphony Orchestra of Finland. Pierre Monteux engaged Mr. Burgin to be the Boston Symphony's concertmaster 42 years ago; and Serge Koussevitsky appointed him Assistant Conductor in 1935, and invited him to become Associate Conductor, in 1943.

★ ★ ★

IN ADDITION TO ALL THIS over the years, he appeared as soloist with the Bostonians 77 times in 13 concertos; and in three concerts with his wife, the distinguished violinist, Ruth Posselt. One cannot scant his contribution on that day when he and Charles Munch together retire—the one symbolizing the leadership of the great orchestra, the other the spirit of the men who compromise that instrument.

There are poignant, personal things to remember, as well. Richard Burgin's fabulous reputation among musicians around the globe—and his inability to remember as mundane an article as his violin mute. He is notoriously absent-minded. Once, by way of tribute, his colleagues presented him with a bag of mutes (indeed, so few were available in Boston that violinist Harry Dickson had to send to New York for a supply), scores and scores of violin mutes.

The next day at rehearsal one of Mr. Burgin's first acts was to turn to a fellow player. "Could I borrow a mute?" he asked. I lost the bag."

This is part of the Burgin legend, which is mostly an "inside" sanction of his peers; but the public may recall many delightful touches with it. The rumpled sturdy thrust of his back, the bulldog jaw, the thatch of grizzled hair, all Richard Burgin, but most of all, the peculiar mannerism with which he cradles his violin, his cheek briefly, tenderly touching the grain, and then the sweep of the bow . . . He never played second fiddle, but certainly he prefers to now.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1962

Burgin on Symphony Podium

THE BOSTON GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1962

Burgin Leads Symphony, Ruth Posselt Is Soloist

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 22d program of the Friday-Saturday series. Richard Burgin conducted. Shostakovitch: Symphony No. 9; Barber: Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt soloist; Schoenberg: Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31 (first times at these concerts); Tchaikovsky: "1812" Overture.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is at the helm of the concerts this week, and his wife, known professionally by her maiden name of Ruth Posselt, is soloist in the best music of the program.

This is the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber, which Miss Posselt introduced here in 1942 and again played in 1949. Barber's Concerto is declared to be the best of this program not because it is especially contemporary in character or because it is the easiest listening. It is the best, I believe, because it is beautiful, and it shows that the solo violin can be treated in the 20th Century like a bowed string instrument.

Compared to the recognized masterworks in the concerto form, this dreamy rhapsodic piece of Barber may be inconsiderable. But it is music in the idiom of the violin, and it appeals upon the basis of sensuous resonance. It is also possessed of no little invention, and the blending and contrasting of the solo instrument with the orchestra is that of an expert.

Miss Posselt performed it superbly, as one would expect from this admirable musician, and was duly rewarded with applause. In many respects, the Orchestra did its best work of the afternoon accompanying her.

To be candid, the program as a whole was not, by far, anywhere near the best Burgin has given us. Yes, the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 9 was good to renew acquaintance with, after more than 15 years. It is not the most typical Shostakovitch. The first movement recalls the manner of Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony; the songful moderato owes something to the nocturne quality of Khatchaturian. The remainder is more like Shostakovitch and at his lightest. While it is pleasant, the Symphony No. 9 does not add much to the composer's stature.

Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31, were new to these concerts. Brace yourself for the usual observations about serial-technic music: These nine Variations (which include a couple of statements of the well-known "wedge" theme, on the notes that spell the name of Bach, H being B-natural in the German system) begin and end with fine rhythmic vigor. There they are muscular.

In between they flag and sag and become, to my taste, quite dull, not even the dissonance being effective enough to compel attention. No doubt these Variations are interesting for musicians to play and conductors to conduct, and analysts to write about. Their appeal otherwise is confined to that area of the head above the ears. Let Burgin be thanked for this opportunity for a first hearing—and respectfully requested not to do it again.

As for the "1812" Overture, played entire, why?

Next week Dr. Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music (K. 477) and Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Nadia Boulanger will conduct choral settings of Psalms 130, 129 and 24 by her late sister, Lili Boulanger. The afternoon concert will be Thursday at 2:15, to avoid Good Friday.

Ruth Posselt Soloist In Barber's Concerto

By Robert J. Crosin

One of the saddest cultural effects of the Soviet government has been its attempt to direct the arts along political lines. Thus, Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 9, Op. 70, which opened the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, was officially denounced in 1946, a year after its successful première in Leningrad, for its failure "to reflect the true spirit of the Soviet people."

The symphony itself is actually an innocent and tuneful essay in the neoclassical style. The first movement is a clear-cut sonata structure; the second is a song form; the last three, which are played without pause, include a scherzo, a slow transitional passage, and a lively finale. Under the secure leadership of the orchestra's assistant conductor, Richard Burgin, all the performers communicated ebullience and fun. Most of the first-desk personnel had numerous opportunities for soloistic display, and each one appeared to revel in his work. Sherman Walt's cadenzas on the bassoon in the fourth movement were particularly impressive.

* * *

The progression of works followed in reverse chronological order: the program continued with Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Op. 14 (1941), Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra Op. 31 (1928), and Tchaikovsky's Overture "1812," Op. 49 (1882).

The Barber concerto is again a derivative work, rooted in tradition—in this case the melodic lyricism of the romantic era. The violin sings placidly throughout the first two movements, only to conclude with a virtuosic perpetual motion finale. The soloist, — Ruth Posselt,—exhibited a consistently pleasant and even tone quality in her performance; she played with suavity and warmth in slow sections and commanded all the necessary technical fluency in the finale.

* * *

The performance of Schoenberg's Variations for Orchestra was the first at these concerts. Although this work was the earliest of the three 20th-century compositions played, it was also the only one which has a truly contemporary sound. It is a beautifully written piece, based on a twelve-tone row, and using serial techniques. However, internal complexity is secondary to the wonderful sound produced.

The nine contrasting variations are framed by an introduction and coda that contain the musical theme based on the letters of Bach's name, which in German usage is B-flat, A, C, B-natural. This theme has been used by many earlier composers, most notably by Bach himself, in the last part of his "Art of the Fugue."

Here it signifies a glance back at the musical heritage from which the composer broke away, but which he still loved. The performance could hardly have been better; the texture was clear and transparent, despite the heavy orchestration. This great work should be heard more often, performed as well as it was yesterday.

Tchaikovsky's octogenarian score is closer than the Shostakovitch Symphony to the approved ideal of Russian music in the Soviet Union today, since its nationalistic elements are obvious. The Overture "1812" may sound dated to some ears, but it is surely less so than the two "modern" works which comprised the first half of the program. It was given a rousing, generally well played interpretation, and the audience went home in high spirits.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
APR 8 1962

Burgin Conducts Symphony

Richard Burgin will conduct the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:15, and Saturday evening at 8:30. Mrs. Burgin, known professionally by her maiden name, Ruth Posselt, will be soloist in the Violin Concerto by Samuel Barber.

The program will include the Ninth Symphony by Shostakovitch; first performances at these concerts of the Variations for Orchestra, Op. 31, by the late Arnold Schoenberg, and Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture.

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the final concert at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday evening at 8:30, Apr. 17. His program will consist of Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony; "La Mer" by Debussy, and the Second Suite from Ravel's Ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

Dr. Munch has invited Nadia Boulanger to conduct part of the Symphony Hall concerts April 19 and 21. She will present three choral works by her talented sister, Lili Boulanger, who died when very young. They are "Du fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130); "Ils m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129), and, new to Boston, "La Terre appartient a l'Eternel" (Psalm 24). Soloists will be Marguerite Pacquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. The chorus will be that of the New England Conservatory, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon.

Dr. Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music (K. 477), and the "Reformation" Symphony by Mendelssohn.

The afternoon concert that week will be given Thursday, to avoid Good Friday.

170

Providence

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
APR 8 1962

Charles Munch Conducts For the Last Time Here

THE EIGHTIETH season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Providence concerts will conclude Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Dr. Charles Munch will be conducting the orchestra as music director for the last time here.

Dr. Munch, who has been conducting the orchestra for 13 years, will present an all-French program at Tuesday's concert. During the time he has served as head man with the Boston orchestra he has conducted 39 world premieres, 17 first United States performances and 13 Boston premieres. In all, he has programmed 168 contemporary works, 36 of which have been by American composers.

There are no more seats available for the performance.

The program:

Berlioz: Fantastic Symphony, Op. 14a
I. Reveries, Passions
Largo; Allegro agitato e appassionato assai
II. A Ball
Waltz: Allegro non troppo
III. Scene in the Meadows
Adagio
IV. March to the Scaffold
Allegretto non troppo
V. Dream of the Witches' Sabbath
Larghetto; Allegro

Debussy:
"La Mer" (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches
I. de l'aube a midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

Ravel:
"Daphnis et Chloe," Ballet, Suite No. 2
Lever du jour, Pantomime, Danse generale

THE BOSTON Pops Orchestra directed by Arthur Fiedler will present a concert, featuring 55 members of the Boston Pops Orchestra, at Rhodes-on-the-Pawtuxet Friday at 8:30 p.m. The program is for the benefit of the Roger Williams General Hospital.

The program:

French Military March — Saint-Saens
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Irish Tune from County Derry — Grainger
Capriccio Italien — Tchaikovsky
Suite from "Masquerade" — Khachaturian
Waltz—Romance—Galop
By the Beautiful Blue Danube — Strauss
Theme from "Exodus" — Gold
Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
I Feel Pretty, Maria, Something's Coming, Tonight, One Hand, One Heart, Cool, America
Mack the Knife, from "The Three-Penny Opera" — Weill

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 61,175
APR 11 1962

DR. CHARLES MUNCH directs the Boston Symphony Tuesday at their final Providence concert this season.

Music Last Night

Dr. Munch Receives Ovation At Final Concert in City

By RUTH TRIPP

Charles Munch was given a standing ovation last evening after the brilliant concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Veterans Auditorium had been sold out for a month. The occasion was Dr. Munch's final appearance here. He will retire as music director of the orchestra at the close of the Berkshire Festival season in August.

We shall miss the dramatic impact of his conducting. He is one of the great conductors of his generation. The clarity of thought which illuminates his musicianly interpretations has brought many pleasant hours of listening to his devoted public in Providence and, in whatever direction his new assignments will take him, he will always have the admiration and best wishes of his Providence friends. This was apparent last evening. The audience was reluctant to leave the hall.

As if to give us one of his very choicest programs, Dr. Munch played the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz, "La Mer" by Debussy and the "Daphnis and Chloe" Ballet Suite by Ravel. The orchestra rose to the challenge of delivering every nuance of every expressive phrase of this French music. There was no first choice. Each work in its turn was superlative.

We were shown the remarkable virtuosity of the string section in the Berlioz. The solo reeds, in turn, sang with exquisite tone. The harps were scintillating. The brass was magnificent when it was required and as for the percussion section, it earned its laurels early in the program. This imaginative score by Berlioz may not be your favorite of the symphonic repertoire, but, as Charles Munch delineates it for you, there is nothing the composer wished you to hear which is denied you. Berlioz has had no more enthusiastic interpreter than Dr. Munch.

The Debussy interpretation also was memorable. It was a veritable picture in sound and the beauty of the imaginative orchestration was as fresh as if it had been written yesterday. Here again there was brilliance and verve in every line of the score.

The Ravel ballet was exciting in its own way. This is one of my favorite scores. The interpretation we heard left nothing to be desired.

The virtuoso orchestra which Charles Munch has built over the years of his tenure as conductor has earned international acclaim. We had ample proof of this virtuosity at last night's concert. It was a wonderful way to say "Au revoir."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 28,133
APR 11 1962

Music In Review

Symphony Audience Gives Dr. Munch Rousing Farewell

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were given a standing ovation with applause that persisted for fully 20 minutes last night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

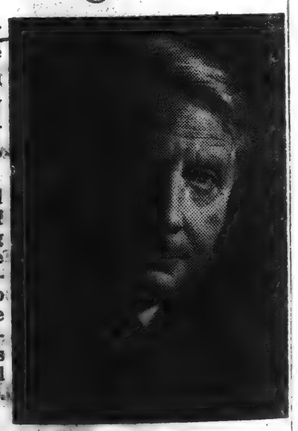
The capacity audience stood and cheered after a program of all French composers including Berlioz, Debussy and Ravel. The resounding and prolonged ovation was attributable equally to the superb performance of the musicians and as a parting tribute to Dr. Munch who retires this year and last night directed his final concert in Providence.

+++

THE BERLIOZ, which comprized the entire first half of the program, was the "Fantastic Symphony, Opus 14a." If Dr. Munch conducted the work with affection, the orchestra played it with passion. It was rightfully named, for it was fantastic in its sheer beauty and understandable utterances. From the impassioned reveries in the first movement, through the subdued merriment and stately grace of the waltz, the ominous roll of drums in the "March to the Scaffold," to the weird, but not grotesque, "Witches' Sabbath," it was communication of the utmost clarity. Berlioz not only spoke and narrated, he explained and persuaded with Dr. Munch as the translator.

+++

AFTER INTERMISSION, the descriptive tone poem, Debussy's "Le Mer," proved the superior virtuosity of this orchestra with its contrast of tone coloring, now shimmering, now somber, changing from tranquil to turbulent, rippling to racing, swelling and overwhelming in climbing climaxes.



DR. CHARLES MUNCH

The closing work, Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe Ballet Suite, No. 2," included the three movements, "Daybreak, Pantomime and General Dance." It built up a tension of suspense in the audience that was released with an explosion of handclapping when the last chord was sounded. They recalled Dr. Munch five times to the center and the members of the orchestra joined in the ovation.

C.H.L.

Twenty-third Week

Twenty-third Program

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 21, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477

MENDELSSOHN ..... Symphony No. 5, in D minor ("Reformation"), Op. 107

I. Andante; Allegro con fuoco
II. Allegro vivace
III. Andante
IV. Chorale: Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott (Andante con moto); Allegro vivace; Allegro maestoso

INTERMISSION

NADIA BOULANGER, Guest Conductor

LILI BOULANGER ..... Du Fond de l'abîme (Psalm 130)

LILI BOULANGER ..... Ils m'ont assez opprimé (Psalm 129)

LILI BOULANGER ..... La Terre appartient à l'Éternel (Psalm 24)

(First performances in Boston)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Director

MARGUERITE PÂQUET, Contralto
ROLAND GAGNON, Tenor
DONALD GRAMM, Baritone

BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN, Organ

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000

APR 19 1962

Nadia Boulanger To Conduct Boston Symphony Concert

Nadia Boulanger will conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The concerts will be given on Thursday (April 19) at 2:15 — rather than Friday afternoon, Good Friday — and Saturday evening (April 21) at 8:30.

At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 5 by Mendelssohn and after intermission Mlle. Boulanger will conduct the first Boston performances of three compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger: "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Il's m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129), and "La Terre appartient a l'Eternel" (Psalm 24). The soloists will be Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone; and Berj Zamkochian, organ. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director.

Mlle. Boulanger previously conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1925 and in 1938. She is the first woman to have conducted this Orchestra as well as the first woman to have conducted the Royal Philharmonic Society of London and the New York Philharmonic.

Born in Paris in 1887, Mlle. Boulanger studied at the Paris Conservatory and became the third generation of her family to teach there. Her classes at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau and the Ecole Normale de Musique of Paris are also well known. Her influence on contemporary American composers and on American music has been significant. Her former pupils include Arthur Berger, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Herbert Elwell, Roger Goeb, Alexei Haieff, Roy Harris, Harrison Kerr, Douglas Moore, Walter Piston, Bernard Rogers, Roger Sessions, Virgil Thomson, among others.

Doctor Munch conducted the final concert of the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Tuesday (April 17) at Sander Theatre. He will conduct his final concerts in the Monday evening series at Symphony Hall on April 23; and the last concert of the Tuesday evening series on April 24. The program for the concerts of April 17, 23 and 24 will consist of the "Symphonie fantastique" by Berlioz, Debussy's "La Mer" and the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2 by Ravel. Doctor Munch's final open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday, April 26.

Program for April 19-21:

Thursday, April 19, 2:15; Saturday, April 21, 8:30; Symphony Hall; Charles Munch and Nadia Boulanger conducting:

Mozart — Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477; Mendelssohn — Symphony No. 5, in D minor, "Reformation", Op. 107.

Charles Munch conducting.

Lili Boulange r— Du Fond de l'abime (Psalm 130); Lili Boulanger — Ils m'ont assez opprime (Psalm 129); Lili Boulanger — La Terre appartient a l'Eternel (Psalm 24).

Nadia Boulanger conducting.

New England Conservatory Chorus; Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone; Berj Zamkochian, organ.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 16 1962

Dr. Munch Shares Baton With Mlle. Boulanger

Nadia Boulanger will conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The concerts will be given on Thursday at 2:15 p. m.—rather than Friday afternoon, Good Friday —and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 5 by Mendelssohn. After intermission Mlle. Boulanger will conduct the first Boston performances of three compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger: "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Ils m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129) and "La Terre Appartient a l'Eternel" (Palm 24).

The soloists will be Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone, and Berj Zamkochian, organ. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Tuesday at Sanders Theater.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

APR 20 1962

Nadia Boulanger, Munch Share Symphony Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to avoid Good Friday, and will repeat Saturday night at 8:30, the 23rd program of the "regular" series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music (K. 477) and the "Reformation" Symphony by Mendelssohn. Nadia Boulanger, as guest, conducted for the first times in Boston three settings of Psalms by her late sister, Lili Boulanger. In the latter, the chorus was that of the New England Conservatory, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon. Soloists were Marguerite Pacquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone, and Berj Zamkochian, organ.

By CYRUS DURGIN

For many years, the fame of Nadia Boulanger as pedagogue and French musician extraordinary, has been established upon several continents. For a span even longer, Mlle. Boulanger has placed bouquets to the memory of her sister, Lili, by performing the music of that so very gifted woman who died so very young.

Yesterday, by invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, Nadia Boulanger conducted half the Boston Symphony concert, and presented for the first time in this city three settings of Psalms by Lili Boulanger. When Mlle. Boulanger first appeared on stage (where she last had been guest conductor in 1938, with the Faure Requiem), some in the audience stood to applaud her. At the end, all stood, and remained applauding until she had returned several times to the stand.

It took only a minute or less to realize that the small, frail appearance of this remarkable woman now 75, was only in the eye of the beholder. Relying on a score but using no baton, Mlle. Boulanger established firm control over the entire stage with the first down beat. No detail escaped her graphic gestures of reminder to orchestra, chorus and soloists. She conducted music of extraordinary power and weight as if neither effort nor complication was involved, as if the eloquence she guided into the being of sound were the easiest thing in the world.

I wish we could know how easy or difficult the creation of this music has been to Lili Boulanger, the victim of poor health, and of death at 25. These Psalm settings are far from the conventions one would expect of most composers aged 23. There is nothing of Gallic Impressionism, nothing by way of Romantic echoes. The idiom was very modern in 1916, and in 1961 is by no means old-fashioned.

The chorus sang especially well, I thought, and its preparational conductor, Lorna Cooke de Varon, together with soloists Pacquet, Gagnon and Gramm were roundly acclaimed for their work.

Charles Munch presented in the first half of the program the moving and exalted Masonic Funeral Music of Mozart, and Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. These performances were superb, both technically and as a matter of interpretive felicity. The "Reformation" is a bit dull to my ears, but it has its merits.

Other Theater News On Pages 30, 31

Twenty-third Week

Twenty-third Program

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 19, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 21, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477

MENDELSSOHN ..... Symphony No. 5, in D minor ("Reformation"), Op. 107

I. Andante; Allegro con fuoco
II. Allegro vivace
III. Andante
IV. Chorale: Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott (Andante con moto); Allegro vivace; Allegro maestoso

INTERMISSION

NADIA BOULANGER, Guest Conductor

LILI BOULANGER ..... Du Fond de l'abîme (Psalm 130)

LILI BOULANGER ..... Ils m'ont assez opprimé (Psalm 129)

LILI BOULANGER ..... La Terre appartient à l'Éternel (Psalm 24)

(First performances in Boston)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DEVARON, Director

MARGUERITE PAQUET, Contralto
ROLAND GAGNON, Tenor
DONALD GRAMM, Baritone

BERJ ZAMKOCHIAN, Organ

These concerts will end about 3:55 o'clock on Thursday Afternoon; 10:10 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 11,000
APR 19 1962

Nadia Boulanger To Conduct Boston Symphony Concert

Nadia Boulanger will conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The concerts will be given on Thursday (April 19) at 2:15 — rather than Friday afternoon, Good Friday — and Saturday evening (April 21) at 8:30.

At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 5 by Mendelssohn and after intermission Mlle. Boulanger will conduct the first Boston performances of three compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger: "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Il's m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129), and "La Terre appartient a l'Eternel" (Psalm 24). The soloists will be Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone; and Berj Zamkochian, organ. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director.

Mlle. Boulanger previously conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1925 and in 1938. She is the first woman to have conducted this Orchestra as well as the first woman to have conducted the Royal Philharmonic Society of London and the New York Philharmonic.

Born in Paris in 1887, Mlle. Boulanger studied at the Paris Conservatory and became the third generation of her family to teach there. Her classes at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau and the Ecole Normale de Musique of Paris are also well known. Her influence on contemporary American composers and on American music has been significant. Her former pupils include Arthur Berger, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Herbert Elwell, Roger Goeb, Alexei Haieff, Roy Harris, Harrison Kerr, Douglas Moore, Walter Piston, Bernard Rogers, Roger Sessions, Virgil Thomson, among others.

Doctor Munch conducted the final concert of the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Tuesday (April 17) at Sander Theatre. He will conduct his final concerts in the Monday evening series at Symphony Hall on April 23; and the last concert of the Tuesday evening series on April 24. The program for the concerts of April 17, 23 and 24 will consist of the "Symphonie fantastique" by Berlioz, Debussy's "La Mer" and the "Daphnis et Chloe" Suite No. 2 by Ravel. Doctor Munch's final open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday, April 26.

Program for April 19-21:

Thursday, April 19, 2:15; Saturday, April 21, 8:30; Symphony Hall; Charles Munch and Nadia Boulanger conducting:

Mozart — Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477; Mendelssohn — Symphony No. 5, in D minor, "Reformation", Op. 107.

Charles Munch conducting.

Lili Boulange r— Du Fond de l'abime (Psalm 130); Lili Boulanger — Ils m'ont assez opprime (Psalm 129); Lili Boulanger — La Terre appartient a l'Eternel (Psalm 24).

Nadia Boulanger conducting.

New England Conservatory Chorus; Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone; Berj Zamkochian, organ.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565
APR 16 1962

Dr. Munch Shares Baton With Mlle. Boulanger

Nadia Boulanger will conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The concerts will be given on Thursday at 2:15 p. m., rather than Friday afternoon, Good Friday, —and Saturday at 8:30 p. m.

At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 5 by Mendelssohn. After intermission Mlle. Boulanger will conduct the first Boston performances of three compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger: "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Il's m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129) and "La Terre Appartient a l'Eternel" (Palm 24).

The soloists will be Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone, and Berj Zamkochian, organ. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Tuesday at Sanders Theater.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
APR 20 1962

Nadia Boulanger, Munch Share Symphony Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to avoid Good Friday, and will repeat Saturday night at 8:30, the 23rd program of the "regular" series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music (K. 477) and the "Reformation" Symphony by Mendelssohn. Nadia Boulanger, as guest, conducted for the first time in Boston three settings of Psalms by her late sister, Lili Boulanger. In the latter, the chorus was that of the New England Conservatory, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon. Soloists were Marguerite Pacquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone, and Berj Zamkochian, organ.

By CYRUS DURGIN

For many years, the fame of Nadia Boulanger as pedagogue and French musician extraordinary, has been established upon several continents. For a span even longer, Mlle. Boulanger has placed bouquets to the memory of her sister, Lili, by performing the music of that so very gifted woman who died so very young.

Yesterday, by invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, Nadia Boulanger conducted half the Boston Symphony concert, and presented for the first time in this city three settings of Psalms by Lili Boulanger. When Mlle. Boulanger first appeared on stage (where she last had been guest conductor in 1938, with the Faure Requiem), some in the audience stood to applaud her. At the end, all stood, and remained applauding until she had returned several times to the stand.

It took only a minute or less to realize that the small, frail appearance of this remarkable woman now 75, was only in the eye of the beholder. Relying on a score but using no baton, Mlle. Boulanger established firm control over the entire stage with the first down beat. No detail escaped her graphic gestures of reminder to orchestra, chorus and soloists. She conducted music of extraordinary power and weight as if neither effort nor complication was involved, as if the eloquence she guided into the being of sound were the easiest thing in the world.

I wish we could know how easy or difficult the creation of this music has been to Lili Boulanger, the victim of poor health, and of death at 25. These Psalm settings are far from the conventions one would expect of most composers aged 23. There is nothing of Gallic Impressionism, nothing by way of Romantic echoes. The idiom was very modern in 1916, and in 1961 is, by no means old-fashioned.

The chorus sang especially well, I thought, and its preparational conductor, Lorna Cooke de Varon, together with soloists Pacquet, Gagnon and Gramm were roundly acclaimed for their work.

Charles Munch presented in the first half of the program the moving and exalted Masonic Funeral Music of Mozart, and Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. These performances were superb, both technically and as a matter of interpretive felicity. The "Reformation" is a bit dull to my ears, but it has its merits.

Other Theater News On Pages 30, 31

172

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 20 1962

Boulanger Music at the Symphony

2-62

Mlle Nadia Conducts Psalms by Mlle Lili

By Harold Rogers

Sharing the Boston Symphony podium this week, Charles Munch and Nadia Boulanger have arranged somewhat of an ecumenical program for the Easter season. During the first half yesterday afternoon Dr. Munch set forth a Protestant statement with with Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music, K. 477, and Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony No. 5. During the last half Mlle Boulanger came forward with a Roman Catholic view—three settings from the Psalms for chorus, soloists, and orchestra composed by her sister Lili.

Thus the Christians in the audience could find a deep personal response to at least part of the program, though the music was so movingly played as a whole that it took on universals superseding doctrinal limitations. Throughout Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music there sings a song of eternal life. The mood is sorrowing, yet buoyed aloft by a serene and positive faith.

★ ★ ★

The Mendelssohn "Reformation" Symphony, of course, is a stronghold of sturdy Protestantism, containing as it does those radiant statements of the Dresden amen in the first movement (also employed by Wagner in his "Parsifal") and the magnificent variations on Martin Luther's "Ein' feste Burg" in the finale. Dr. Munch played both the Mozart and the Mendelssohn as one inspired; the latter marched forward with a stanch sense of grandeur and victory.

Mlle Boulanger, here in the United States on the occasion of her 75th anniversary, has the distinction of being the first and only woman ever to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her first appearance in this capacity took place in 1938. Yesterday she returned with three unusual works by Lili Boulanger, an extraordinary composer who passed on in 1918 at the age of 24. These three psalms—"Du Fond de l'abime," "Ils m'ont assez opprimé," and "La Terre appartient à l'Eternel"—are all listed on the program as first Boston performances, though Mlle Boulanger said afterward that she had conducted "Du Fond de l'abime" at Symphony Hall in 1939.

★ ★ ★

Lili, if one can judge by her music, was a mystic, composing in the vein that many composers have since followed, notably Olivier Messiaen. There is a certain aura of austerity about her music, a visionary quality that at times seems foreign to the Hebraic texts.

But musically these scores are amazing documents. Mlle Lili lived in Paris during those exciting years when composers had been emancipated by the appearance, in 1913, of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du printemps." Her work shows a thrust toward the future—so much so that again and again one was struck by the sensation of hearing something that was composed today. She was fearless in the use of dissonance; her harmonies have a masculine bite to them. Her femininity, however, shines forth in those floating melodies that often overlap one another in Renaissance splendor. This is music for contemplation in the Catholic mien, rather than participation after the Protestant manner.

Yet musically there was an unexcelled participation of the musicians involved. Mlle Boulanger herself — standing straight and slim, conducting with vigorous and unmistakable gestures — welded the choral and orchestral forces into an expressive union of balance, of ebb and flow.

Superb soloistic support was given by Marguerite Pâquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. The choristers of the New England Conservatory schooled by their conductor Lorna Cooke de Varon, sang with their usual richness and polish.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
APR 15 1962

Nadia Boulanger To Direct Sister's Music at Symphony

Nadia Boulanger, the distinguished French musician and teacher, will by invitation of Dr. Charles Munch, conduct part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The afternoon concert, by exception, will be played on Thursday at 2:15, that Good Friday may be avoided. The evening concert, as usual, will be Saturday at 8:30.

Miss Boulanger will direct three choral compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger, a greatly talented composer who died when very young. All settings of Psalms, the works are "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Ils m'ont assez opprime" (Psalm 129), and "La Terre appartient a l'Eternel" (Psalm 24).

The chorus will be that of the New England Conservatory, prepared by conductor Lorna Cooke de Varon. Soloists will be Marguerite Pacquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, bass-baritone, and Berj Zamkochian, organ.

Dr. Munch will open these concerts with the Masonic Funeral Music (K. 477) by Mozart, and the "Reformation" Symphony by Mendelssohn.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concerts in three of the shorter series: at Sanders Theater, Cambridge, Tuesday at 8:30; Symphony Hall Monday at 8:30, Apr. 23, and Tuesday at 8:30, Apr. 24. His program will be the same for all three: "Fantastic" Symphony, Berlioz; "La Mer," Debussy; Second Suite from the Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe," Ravel.

The final Open Rehearsal of the season will be at Symphony Hall, Thursday at 7:30, Apr. 26.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
APR 29 1962

From the Aisle

THEATER—"Bells Are Ringing," at the Bradford Roof, was a small, neat production. Lillian Hellman's "The Autumn Garden," less brilliant and violent than her other plays, was presented lucidly and interestingly at the Charles Playhouse. The M.I.T. Dramashop did a good job with Ionesco's inscrutable play-of-the-absurd, "Amedee, or How To et Rid of It."

★ ★ ★

SCREEN—"Last Year at Marienbad," a new French film at the Exeter, was an extraordinary and beautifully photographed blend of recollection, fantasy and dream. "Black Tights," at the Capri, had color and excitement for ballet enthusiasts. John Ford's "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," at Loew's Orpheum, was an entertaining, dependable western. At the Brattle, Akira Kurosawa's "The Hidden Fortress" was a friendly and adventurous tale. "Experiment in Terror," at the Pilgrim, was an average thriller.

★ ★ ★ ★

MUSIC—At last weekend's Boston Symphony concerts Nadia Boulanger crowned the second half of a "solemn and noble" program. At Jordan Hall the first Boston performance of Edgar Varese's "Deserts" was another frightening glimpse of music on electronic tape.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
APR 17 1962

Nadia Boulanger Again To Conduct Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Miss Nadia Boulanger, 74, of Paris, France, who in 1938 was the first woman ever to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the famed group again Wednesday morning. She will lead the orchestra in a rehearsal before an audience of the newly established council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Boulanger will present three works composed by her late sister, Lili.

She is noted as a choral conductor, a concert organist and a teacher of many composers, including Walter Piston, Roy Harris, Aaron Copland, Irving Fine, Virgil Thomson, Elliott Carter.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 63,288
APR 17 1962

Woman to Lead Symphony Again

BOSTON, April 17 (AP) — Miss Nadia Boulanger, 74, of Paris, who in 1938 was the first woman ever to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the famed group again tomorrow morning.

She will lead the orchestra in a rehearsal before an audience of the newly-established Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Boulanger will present three works composed by her late sister, Lili.

She is noted as a choral conductor, a concert organist and a teacher of many composers, including Walter Piston, Roy Harris, Aaron Copland and Irving Fine.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

APR 15 1962

MUSICAL CALENDAR

Nadia Boulanger will conduct a portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Symphony Hall this week. The concerts will be given on Thursday at 2:15 p.m. —rather than Friday afternoon, Good Friday—and Saturday evening at 8:30.

At these concerts Charles Munch will conduct Mozart's Masonic Funeral Music and the Symphony No. 5 by Mendelssohn and after intermission Mlle. Boulanger will conduct the first Boston performance of three compositions by her late sister, Lili Boulanger: "Du Fond de l'abime" (Psalm 130), "Ils m'ont assex opprime" (Psalm 129), and "La Terre appartient a l'Eternal" (Psalm 24).

The soloists will be Marguerite Paquet, contralto; Roland Gagnon, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone; and Berj Zamkochian, organ. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, director.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concert of the Orchestra's annual Cambridge series on Tuesday at Sanders Theatre. He will conduct his final concerts in the Monday evening series at Symphony Hall on April 23; and the last concert of the Tuesday evening series on April 24.

The program for the concerts of April 17, 23 and 24 will consist of the "Symphonie fantastique" by Berlioz, Debussy's "La Mer" and the "Daphnins et Chloe" Suite No. 2 by Ravel. Dr. Munch's final open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday, April 26.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

APR 20 1962

The Symphony

Concert Exalted, Solemn, Noble

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The legendary Nadia Boulanger, the first—and only—woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the venerated teacher of uncounted Americans in music, yesterday crowned the final half of a solemn and noble Symphony Hall afternoon.

The concert arranged by Holy Week custom to bracket Good Friday, was of exalted quality throughout. Seldom has Charles Munch soared to more eloquent, radiant statement than in the massive, melodic "Reformation" Symphony of Mendelssohn and the Mozart Masonic Funeral Music. And for the great Madame Boulanger, who in September celebrates her 75th birthday, the New England Conservatory Chorus sang angelically.

Audience Rose

She picked her way across the stage yesterday, while the audience rose in a tide of standing homage, a stately angular grey-haired lady who might have been sketched in a severe black dress by Juan Gris, purposeful in her movements and suggesting ascetic simplicity. Around her clung the admiring shadows of her famous pupils: Markevitch, Copland, Harris, Piston, Sessions, Carter, Fine, Glanville-Hicks, Haieff, Moore, Blitzstein, and others, a roster of distinguished contemporary talent almost limitless.

According to my source, Johnson's "Symphony Hall, Boston," yesterday marked Nadia Boulanger's third appearance here as BSO conductor; the first came in 1925, the second, 1938. Once again she devoted the concert to the scores of her sister, Lili, whose full name was Marie-Julitte, and whose death in her 24th year robbed French music and the world of a composer of striking gifts.

Her Head Rules

Nadia's symphonic appearances have always been dedicated to this departed immortal sister of her youth, an act of love recalling the ties of Van Gogh and his brother, Theo.

In any case, it is obvious that not only does family affection prompt such championship, but common sense, for Lili Boulanger's mystical three Psalms, her most sizable work, would be remarkable at any time, and coming from a girl of 23 must be accounted unique.

Those ideals that Nadia embodies, discipline, rigor, control over one's artistic material, show forth in her conducting; and her head rules her heart, though not despotically.

While there is something sibylline about her bearing, Mme. Boulanger's conducting style is businesslike. The beat is gracefully maintained, the phrasing plastic. The New England Conservatory Chorus mustered an impressive volume of sound but the timbre at piano was even more authoritative, pure and floating. Psalm 130 called for a dense weighty coloration; 129 for a brisk lyricism doubling with tenor; and the a capella opening of Psalm 24 demanded a balanced choral blend. The Chorus reflected credit on Lorna Cooke de Varon, who came forward at the end during tumultuous enthusiasm.

The set of Psalms demands much from the soloists, yet their role is not too prominent. I was especially attentive to the opulent texture of Mr. Gramm's baritone; but it also struck me that Miss Paquet and Mr. Gagnon preformed expressively and lucidly. Berj Zamkochian's organ added dimensions to the reverberant cry from the abyss. The complete work, though, projected most graphically as Nadia Boulanger intended: testimony to the powers of Lili.

Force, Vigor

This concert would not be complete without a further comment on Dr. Munch's "Reformation" Symphony. Here is one of the scores he does transcendently — and need we point out it is not in the Gallic repertory, either? The Dresden Amen, shaped with force and vigor, the sprightly scherzo, the grandeur of the fugue-chorale, raise this symphony, which can be flabby and jingling under the wrong man, to the level of Bache's B minor Mass. I think it shows some of the scope of Charles Munch; we are sometimes too conscious of his depth to note such triumphs outside his chosen realm.

Next week brings his 13-year reign over the Boston Symphony to a close. Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the Chorul Pro Musica under Alfred Nash Patterson will be heard on the historic occasion.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Charles Munch conducting, presented the 23rd program of the 81st season yesterday in Symphony Hall. The guest conductor with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorne Cooke DeVaron director, was Nadia Boulanger. Marguerite Paquet, contralto, Ronald Gagnon, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone, were the soloists; and Berj Zamkochian the organist. The concert will be repeated Saturday night at 8:30:

Masonic Funeral Music, K.477 .. Mozart
Symphony No. 5, in D minor ("Reformation"), Op. 107 .. Mendelssohn
Du fond l'abime (Psalm 130)
Ils m'ont assez opprime (Psalm 129); La Terre appartient a l'Eternal (Psalm 24) by Lili Boulanger.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

APR 26 1962

At the BSO

Boulanger Conducts Sister's Works

By R.E. GARIS

Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony last week performed one of the most tediously pious programs within recent memory. We heard a Masonic Funeral March (K.477) of Mozart, Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony and Lili Boulanger's setting for chorus and orchestra of three Psalms. A kind of interfaith religious symposium — this much of Mr. Munch's intention is painfully obvious. But what was his intention in choosing such dull music?

The Mozart piece is hackwork. That it was written by the world's greatest composer and nevertheless remains hackwork should not be puzzling or upsetting. Mozart was not only a very great but a very busy composer. But when Mr. Munch plays music which displays only Mozart's busy-ness, not his greatness, he shows a kind of piety which furthers the living interests of neither music nor religion.

The Mendelssohn symphony is bad in an odder way and therefore somewhat more interesting. For there is a sad kind of interest in watching a composer of genius writing against the grain of his genius. The materials of the "Reformation" Symphony (inasmuch as they can be inspected in and for themselves) seem to call for a heavily earnest meditation in the religioso style — Bruckner fifty years too soon, so to speak. But Mendelssohn, for the life — for the musical life — of him, could not Brucknerize (thank Heavens) and his religious symphony, which is by no means merely a pot-boiler, is nevertheless oddly inconsequential and pointless. It is gray in color, rather like tallow or margarine in texture, insincere without being meretricious — in a word, quite mysteriously and irritatingly dull.

Mr. Munch played these two pieces acceptably. He should not have played them at all.

One of the great musicians of our time, Nadia Boulanger, conducted the second half of the program, which was devoted to music by her sister Lili. Listening to this part of the program, one found it hard to separate out the different claims to one's attention and interest and emotion. The tragic early death of the composer, her sister's loyal dedication to the mission of keeping this music alive the powerfully expressive performance of the music which this dedication produced — these made the second half of Saturday's concert moving and impressive in ways which were not altogether musical but by no means unrelated to music. Lili Boulanger's Psalms for large chorus and orchestra, written at the age of twenty three (the composer died two years later), are by no means inconsequential; and her sister, our most experienced teacher of musical composition, is in a unique position to judge with authority the degree of promise shown in this early work. One can accept her conviction that a considerable talent was lost in this early death.

But the music itself reveals to my ears no more than promise. What I heard was a series of musical effects, of rhetorical gestures — some of them more interesting than others — but in the end merely a series, not an alive progression. Fortissimo climaxes were immense in sonority and were projected by chorus and orchestra and — alas — by organ with extraordinary sustained power, but these climaxes were not motivated by intense dramatic inner life and seemed, to tell the truth, a little willful and noisy, yielding the suspicion of impotence rather than strength. The melodic line was of a slightly synthetic "purity," somewhat mellifluous, not expressive with nervous sensitivity. And the melodic and harmonic orientalism sounded very decidedly 1916 — faded Parisian chic, however sublime the subject.

The oddest claim on one's attention in this music, though, was one's sense that its promise had, in fact, been achieved by another and far greater composer, by in fact our great composer—Stravinsky. Though a direct influence is, I should think, decidedly improbable, yet certain of Lili Boulanger's sonorities, certain of her choices in musical strategy, certain of her over-all conceptions of a proper liturgical style seemed to anticipate Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms.

At first I hardly knew what to make of these resemblances. I firmly disbelieve the idea that there is a "Spirit of the Age" in artistic matters, yet I did seem to be hearing the spirit of the early twentieth century humming to itself in this music of Lili Boulanger. The answer to the puzzle lies, I think, in the fact that all our twentieth century composers make their musical choices, above all their choices of style, in a frame of mind unquestionably more "intellectual," more intentional and deliberate than the frame of mind in which we imagine the composers of earlier periods to have worked. And this is true of Stravinsky too, great natural genius though he also was. Thus it ought not be suprising to find the young Lili Boulanger and the mature Stravinsky sharing some of the same stylistic conceptions, some of the same general musical habits and aims — for these were, as it happened, matters of practically public debate. In the earlier work, which has not achieved a real musical life of its own, we hear mainly the style, the intention, the deliberateness of a young composer choosing certain materials and certain methods.

But Stravinsky's work is not a masterpiece because it came later, and in any way was benefited by earlier attempts — it is great because it came from a great creative mind. And, when all is said for the sake of sentiment and loyalty, how much more truly loyal to music Nadia Boulanger would have been if she had used the available resources last Saturday to give us — what I should have valued in the highest degree — her reading of Stravinsky's Psalms.

174

WASHINGTON, D.C.
NATIONAL OBSERVER
SUN. - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 15 1962

Miss Boulanger in Boston

'Godmother' to Many Composers Still Teaching, Conducting at 74

Early this week the 106 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will gather onstage in Boston's venerable Symphony Hall to rehearse for concerts scheduled Thursday afternoon and Saturday night. With them will be several vocal soloists and a 130-voice chorus. And rapping for attention at the head of this massive musical force will be no long-maned male conductor but a wiry, silver-haired, bespectacled woman: Nadia Boulanger, 74, who has taught more noted musicians and composers than anyone else in this century.

Miss Boulanger, who normally makes her home in Paris, is on a three-month tour of the eastern U.S. (begun in early February, slated to end in early May) which so far has taken her from Exeter, N.H., to Cleveland, from Potsdam, N.Y., to Pittsburgh. In February she became the first woman ever to conduct a full concert by the 120-year-old New York Philharmonic. This week, sharing the Boston Symphony podium with the orchestra's regular conductor, Charles

Paul Affelder

Conductress Boulanger

Munch, she will lead orchestra, chorus and soloists in three psalms composed by her gifted sister, Lili, who died in 1918 at the age of 24.

Boston's musicians doubtless will see much the same Boulanger-in-action as New York's saw two months before. Clad in a white blouse, lavender sweater, and black skirt, Miss Boulanger hopped on and off a high stool and conducted with masculine vigor and intensity, occasionally emphasizing a rhythm by stamping her foot. She used no baton.

In one day she rehearsed the chorus at 7:30 in the morning, led two-and-a-half hour rehearsals of the full forces both morning and night, then spent the evening working with the soloists. "She stopped us at almost every measure," one fatigued orchestra member recalls.

Fewer Stops, Sage Advice

The following day there were fewer stops, though Miss Boulanger frequently called out instructions or corrections. When she did stop, it was usually with a piece of interpretive wisdom. To the chorus: "You try to please me. I want you to please yourself. You must feel it." To the orchestra: "When you play music, you must enter into the character of the music, whether that character pleases you or not."

After 40 years of teaching, Miss Boulanger has been called "the godmother of composers." Americans who have come under her influence include Robert Russell Bennett, Arthur Berger, Marc Blitzstein, Elliott Carter, Aaron Copland, David Diamond, Herbert Elwell, Irving Fine, Alexei Haieff, Roy Harris, Douglas Moore, Walter Piston, Bernard Rogers, Roger Sessions, Harold Shapero, Elie Siegmeister, and Virgil Thomson. Other ex-pupils are the English composers Stanley Bate and Lennox Berkeley, the Russian-born composer-conductor Igor Markevitch, and the French composer-pianist Jean Francaix.

But despite this impressive roster Miss Boulanger is not resting on her laurels. In Paris she gives private lessons from morning till night. And most of her U.S. tour is being devoted to lecturing (and occasionally conducting) at colleges and universities from the Eastern seaboard to Chicago. She is avoiding the West Coast only because she refuses to fly.

Talent: The Intrinsic Quality

Miss Boulanger is modest about her unusual success in training composers. "A teacher has the luck to have good pupils, or the misfortune to have bad ones," she said during a rehearsal break in New York. "If he has success, other pupils come. You cannot take away talent and you cannot give it."

Once, many years ago, she advised a talented young composer not to study with her. "I told him, 'You do one thing wonderfully. Why try to learn some other way?'" His name was George Gershwin.

Her favorite pupil was her sister Lili, who composed a quantity of striking music during her short life. Miss Boulanger, who still wears mourning for her, has devoted much of her effort to having that music performed.

Heir to a musical family (both her father and grandfather were professors at the Paris Conservatory), Miss Boulanger studied at the Conservatory under Gabriel Faure, Alexandre Guilmant, and Charles-Marie Widor. She had illustrious classmates, too: Maurice Ravel, Georges Enesco, Jean Roger-Ducasse, and Florent Schmitt. She has taught at the Conservatory, at the Ecole Normale de Musique, and at the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau.

Frequently asked about today's trends in composition—such as 12-tone music, with its mathematical disciplines and its absence of a tonal "home base," or electronic music, created on tape recorders in a sound laboratory—she maintains an open mind. What is important, she says, is the end result—not the means to that end. Her own students get a classic education, both in music and the humanities, then are allowed to develop along their own lines. And several are working in the 12-tone idiom.

What kind of music will we be hearing in the future? Miss Boulanger won't hazard a guess. "As Robert Casadesus would say, 'I'll tell you in a hundred years.' One is in a great period of research. Research can show curiosity of mind or despair of mind. What lies ahead depends on the attitude of the mind, and therefore on the nature of the musical research."

Conductor, organist, pianist, teacher, lecturer, and scholar, Miss Boulanger also was a composer in her youth. She once even won a second prize in the Prix de Rome competition. Why did she not continue to compose? "Because," she said with finality, "I wrote only useless music. Not even bad—useless." —PAUL AFFELDER

The Boston Globe

Women's Pages

Confidential Chat • Fashions • Food • Society

Thirty FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 1962

Society: New Boston Symphony Unit to Honor Friends

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

A newly formed unit, the Boston Symphony's Council, is setting a new trend. By way of a special dividend, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's faithful Friends are being invited to a concert preview on Wednesday, Apr. 18. Mlle. Nadia Boulanger will be here from Paris to conduct the Easter week concerts on Thursday and Saturday.

Sharing the program with retiring conductor Charles Munch, Mlle. Boulanger will prepare a first performance in Boston of her Psalms set by her late sister, Lily Boulanger. Luncheon will be served to the Friends after the morning concert preview.

Mrs. Norman Cahners was hostess at her Brookline house on Wednesday at a meeting of the Council's Steering Committee, led by Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham, a cousin of Henry B. Cabot of Dover, President of the Symphony's trustees.

Also helping to get invitations out for the special program and luncheon are Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood, first woman trustee of the B. S. O.; Mr. Cabot, James Lavin of Milton, Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman of Cambridge and Mrs. Edward S. Stimson of Wellesley Hills.

(Globe Photograph by Edward Carr)

SETTING THE STAGE for a closer association between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its Friends, Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman and Mrs. Louis Cabot arrive at meeting to plan an Apr. 18 concert preview conducted by Mlle. Nadia Boulanger.

...400 but honor guests for whom she

Cahners' Home Elegant
A Big Day

(Traveler Staff Photos by Ernest Hill)

WHITE-WASHED BRICK home of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Cahners in Brookline is shown right above. Mrs. Cahners (right) is co-chairman with Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham (far right) of new Council of Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Cahners' library, paneled in quartered oak, (above) is done in soft greens, golds and browns, while living room (top) has pearl gray walls and carpeting. Chintz on tufted sofa and in draperies are gray and white. Chairs are ruby red velvet.

Cahners' Home Elegant

A Big Day For Ladies

By VIRGINIA BOHLIN

The ladies will be making history tomorrow in historic Boston.

For the first time in the 80 years of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, women as a group, will attend a concert rehearsal. Some 100 women have been invited to watch Mlle. Nadia Boulanger conduct the orchestra. Later they will have luncheon in Symphony Hall.

The women being afforded this special privilege are members of the newly-established Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Council was formed this spring to help the trustees increase the number of Friends of the orchestra.

"You can be a Friend for $1 or $1 million," said Mrs. Norman Cahners of Brookline, co-chairman of the Council with Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham.

Actually the group is reaching out to present Symphony subscribers — rather than the general public — to become friends.

"But if anyone who isn't a subscriber wishes to be a Friend, we'd welcome them," said Mrs. Cahners.

It was at Mrs. Cahners' delightful home at 39 Worthington Rd. that the Council's steering committee met recently to plan tomorrow's event.

And if a setting can inspire a cause then the new Council should be off to a good start.

Mrs. Cahners, whose husband heads one of the nation's largest industrial publishing companies has made her home the epitome of English country house elegance.

But elegant as it is, with its 18th century mahogany antiques and quilted chintzes, it's still the kind of home that is lived in — every inch.

"I can't see having a house where you have to tell the children, 'You can't go into the living room.' We live all over our house and use everything. And then once a year we call in the upholstery and rug cleaners," said the effervescent Mrs. Cahners.

The Cahners' have three children — Robert at Dartmouth; Andrew at Phillips Academy at Andover, and Nancy at Beaver Country Day School.

Mrs. Cahner's father is Sidney R. Rabb, chairman of the board of Stop & Shop, Inc.

Pictures of various members of the family taken over the years fill both walls of the little hallway leading from the main hall to the breakfast room.

"This is our family gallery. They're all old snapshots that I had enlarged and framed. Nobody is supposed to see these but the family," said Mrs. Cahners, the former Helene Rabb.

However, on view for visitors is the Cahners' interesting collection of paintings that range from American primitive to contemporary.

Over the dining-room sideboard hangs a handsome old Chinese silk panel embroidered with pastel and gold threads. Called "Fertility," it shows a girl leaving her home with her parents for her wedding.

"I found this in Florida. It was part of an old Chinese ceremonial gown. It has such lovely colors that I had it framed so I could hang it on the wall."

The walls of the dining room are covered with white raw silk to match the curtains at the floor-to-ceiling windows. The draperies are a heavy emerald green silk and the seat covers on the Hepplewhite chairs are a beige needlepoint with pastel flowers.

176

Twenty-fourth Week

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 28, at 8:30 o'clock

HONEGGER . . . "Le Chant de Nigamon" (after Gustave Aimard)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125

I. Allegro ma non troppo, un poco maestoso
II. Molto vivace: Presto
III. Adagio molto e cantabile
IV. Presto: Allegro
Allegro assai
Presto
Baritone Recitative
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro assai
Tenor Solo and Chorus: Allegro assai vivace, alla marcia
Chorus: Andante maestoso
Adagio ma non troppo, ma divoto
Allegro energico, sempre ben marcato
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro ma non tanto
Chorus: Prestissimo

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor
ADELE ADDISON, Soprano
FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
JOHN McCOLLUM, Tenor
DONALD GRAMM, Baritone

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:05 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Charles Munch

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

APR 22 1962

Munch's Last Concerts Here As Symphony Music Director

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts in Boston as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week. His last appearances will be made at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. His actual retirement will come at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, late in August.

The Friday and Saturday program will consist of Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon" and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. Honegger's work was composed in 1917. The only previous performances in Boston were in January, 1929, when Honegger was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by its conductor, Alfred Nash Patterson. Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall, Thursday, at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concerts in two of the shorter Symphony Hall series, Monday, at 8:30 p.m., and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. His program for both will consist of Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony; "Le Mer," by Debussy and the Second Suite from the Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe," by Ravel.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 29, 1962

President Salutes Dr. Munch's Finale

By CYRUS DURGIN

President John F. Kennedy has honored retiring music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, with a personal message from the White House. The letter, received yesterday at Symphony Hall, was read from the stage by Symphony Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., before Dr. Munch's farewell concert last night.

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express th ewarm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership," Mr. Kennedy wrote.

"It is most reassuring to know that you will continue your conducting both in this country and abroad. I am sure that you relinquish your Boston association with a genuine sense of achievement.

"This government owes you a special debt of gratitude for the outstanding tours abroad of the Boston Symphony during the past years and the hospitality you have shown at all times to the new compositions of American composers.

"As you begin your next career, Mrs. Kennedy and I send warmest best wishes. Sincerely, John F. Kennedy."

Sends Reply

Dr. Munch sent the following reply:

"Dear Mr. President: Your letter touches me profoundly. I can hardly express my thanks to you and to Mrs. Kennedy for your interest in my retirement from the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"In our tours abroad, which have carried the name of Boston so far, my contribution has surely been a small one and it is the people of Boston who deserve whatever gratitude may be due. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a great institution, it is because this alert, intelligent and generous community wishes it so.

"The high level of achievement attained by American composers and performers, the great richness of American musical life can only grow in the future. I shall be proud to reflect their glories as long as I can. Most sincerely yours, Charles Munch."

The emotional temperature ran high in Symphony Hall as Dr. Munch bade goodbye—metamorphically—for he uttered no words in public—to his Boston public.

Orchestra and audience rose in greeting as he entered the stage. The listeners would have kept him bowing longer had he not turned and addressed himself to the musicians for the first work of the evening: Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon."

When the conductor, with a big sharp gesture, cut off the final chord of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, his 13 years' regime was over. Without an instant's pause, clapping and cheers filled the auditorium as they had on Friday afternoon.

Back, again and again, came Munch, his white hair and shirt front slightly rumpled from his exertions, but all smiles.

As he did Friday, the conductor took retiring Concertmaster Richard Burgin and retiring cellist Jacobus Langendoen by the arm, and shared a bow with them. Twice thereafter, he pullec Burgin to center stage for special tribute. At this, the din of applause increased.

Dr. Munch clasped his hands in the traditional prize fighter's gesture of triumph, crossed his arms over his chest, waved and smiled some more. The great green laurel wreath, presented by the Symphony's trustees, was brought out again on its stand. More smiles, more bows, and Charles Munch vanished.

176

Twenty-fourth Week

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 27, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 28, at 8:30 o'clock

HONEGGER . . . . . "Le Chant de Nigamon" (after Gustave Aimard)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . *Symphony No. 9, in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125

I. Allegro ma non troppo, un poco maestoso
II. Molto vivace: Presto
III. Adagio molto e cantabile
IV. Presto: Allegro
Allegro assai
Presto
Baritone Recitative
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro assai
Tenor Solo and Chorus: Allegro assai vivace, alla marcia
Chorus: Andante maestoso
Adagio ma non troppo, ma divoto
Allegro energico, sempre ben marcato
Quartet and Chorus: Allegro ma non tanto
Chorus: Prestissimo

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor
ADELE ADDISON, Soprano
FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
JOHN McCOLLUM, Tenor
DONALD GRAMM, Baritone

These concerts will end about 3:50 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:05 o'clock on Saturday evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Charles Munch

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
APR 22 1962

Munch's Last Concerts Here As Symphony Music Director

Dr. Charles Munch will conduct his final concerts in Boston as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this week. His last appearances will be made at Symphony Hall Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. His actual retirement will come at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood late in August.

The Friday and Saturday program will consist of Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon" and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. Honegger's work was composed in 1917. The only previous performances in Boston were in January, 1929, when Honegger was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be the Chorus Pro Musica, prepared by its conductor, Alfred Nash Patterson. Soloists will be Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, baritone. These concerts will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall, Thursday, at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final concerts in two of the shorter Symphony Hall series, Monday, at 8:30 p.m., and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. His program for both will consist of Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony; "Le Mer," by Debussy and the Second Suite from the Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe," by Ravel.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—APRIL 29, 1962

President Salutes Dr. Munch's Finale

By CYRUS DURGIN

President John F. Kennedy has honored retiring music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, with a personal message from the White House. The letter, received yesterday at Symphony Hall, was read from the stage by Symphony Manager Thomas D. Perry Jr., before Dr. Munch's farewell concert last night.

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express the warm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership," Mr. Kennedy wrote.

"It is most reassuring to know that you will continue your conducting both in this country and abroad. I am sure that you relinquish your Boston association with a genuine sense of achievement.

"This government owes you a special debt of gratitude for the outstanding tours abroad of the Boston Symphony during the past years and the hospitality you have shown at all times to the new compositions of American composers.

"As you begin your next career, Mrs. Kennedy and I send warmest best wishes. Sincerely, John F. Kennedy."

Sends Reply

Dr. Munch sent the following reply:

"Dear Mr. President: Your letter touches me profoundly. I can hardly express my thanks to you and to Mrs. Kennedy for your interest in my retirement from the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"In our tours abroad, which have carried the name of Boston so far, my contribution has surely been a small one and it is the people of Boston who deserve whatever gratitude may be due. If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a great institution, it is because this alert, intelligent and generous community wishes it so.

"The high level of achievement attained by American composers and performers, the great richness of American musical life can only grow in the future. I shall be proud to reflect their glories as long as I can. Most sincerely yours, Charles Munch."

The emotional temperature ran high in Symphony Hall as Dr. Munch bade goodbye—metamorphically—for he uttered no words in public—to his Boston public.

Orchestra and audience rose in greeting as he entered the stage. The listeners would have kept him bowing longer had he not turned and addressed himself to the musicians for the first work of the evening: Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon."

When the conductor, with a big sharp gesture, cut off the final chord of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, his 13 years' regime was over. Without an instant's pause, clapping and cheers filled the auditorium as they had on Friday afternoon.

Back, again and again, came Munch, his white hair and shirt front slightly rumpled from his exertions, but all smiles.

As he did Friday, the conductor took retiring Concertmaster Richard Burgin and retiring cellist Jacobus Langendoen by the arm, and shared a bow with them. Twice thereafter, he pulled Burgin to center stage for special tribute. At this, the din of applause increased.

Dr. Munch clasped his hands in the traditional prize fighter's gesture of triumph, crossed his arms over his chest, waved and smiled some more. The great green laurel wreath, presented by the Symphony's trustees, was brought out again on its stand. More smiles, more bows, and Charles Munch vanished.

177

Charles Munch Turns a Page

Noted Conductor Bidding Farewell to Boston

By Harold Rogers
Boston

Last year at this time Charles Munch announced his plans to retire, and his days as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are now drawing to a close. For 13 seasons he has been the reigning sovereign at Symphony Hall—benevolent, benign, beloved. At the concert Friday afternoon—the first of the final pair—his listeners gave him a rising vote of thanks in a touching farewell.

And yet it was not a final good-by, for Dr. Munch will return to Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home) on July 4 to complete his last stint of eight weeks as director of the Berkshire Music Festival. Prior to July 4 he will conduct a steady schedule of concerts in France and Switzerland, beginning with a Debussy program in Paris honoring the centennial of the composer's birth. He will have but two weeks of vacation at his home outside of Paris before coming to the Berkshires. And next season he will return to Symphony Hall as a guest.

Break With Tradition

In 1949 when Dr. Munch succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as director of the Boston Symphony, some observers felt that he might prove to be an "interim" conductor. Many subscribers held disturbing reservations about his musicianship, since it was obvious that he was not following in the Koussevitzkian tradition. Some felt that his Beethoven was more French than German, that his tempos flew like the wind — faster, in fact, than his musicians could play.

Yet Dr. Munch has had the second longest uninterrupted term. Koussevitzky had the longest — 25 years. Wilhelm Gericke, like Dr. Munch, served 13 years, but in two terms.

If there were those who at the outset felt that Dr. Munch may have been superficial, he soon proved that he was no such thing. His quiet waters ran deep. He at once established a tradition of his own — the alternation each spring of the St. John Passion with the St. Matthew Passion. His Bach is always beatific, often seraphic. He also penetrated the tender mysteries of Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," displaying his rare understanding of religious music. Quite appropriately he has chosen to conduct Beethoven's Ninth Symphony as his Boston finale.

As for French music, he may be equaled but hardly surpassed. Perhaps no one has done more for Berlioz in this century than has Dr. Munch; it has been largely through his championship that Berlioz is now recognized as the greatest French composer of the 19th century. When it comes to Debussy, Ravel, Roussel, Dukas, and Saint-Saëns, Dr. Munch is an interpreter par excellence.

Nor has he ever neglected his duties to the music of our time. During his Boston tenure he has conducted 39 world premières, 17 first performances in the United States, and 13 Boston premières. His programs have included 168 contemporary works and the music of 36 American composers.

Dr. Munch has never been one to waste words, simply because his English has seldom been equal to the moment. But on rare occasions the force of his thought and emotion have pushed through the words in a touching and in a revealing expression. He himself gave us the key to his masterful music making in his remarks at Mrs. Gardner's palace on April 15, after he had been the recipient of tributes from the trustees of both the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Gardner Museum.

'Between the Words'

"Now I must turn a page in my life," he said. "It is not an end. It is a beginning. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. It is not the words that say it. It is what is felt between the words. Perhaps between the words you can hear my heart. It is not the notes that make the music. It is the music you hear between the notes."

Here then, simply stated, Dr. Munch has told us what many of us have known all along—that his artistry is derived from his ability to look through the notes and to seize upon the poetic substance merely symbolized by the notes.

So far as we can tell—and this is especially true when he is conducting a work that he loves—he is able to enter into the heart of the music 100 per cent, thus taking his listeners along with him. A mere technician is able to see that all the elements of the orchestra are in place and are functioning in good mechanical order. But this results only in the production of sound, not in music.

With Dr. Munch the music—and the meaning of the music—has always come first, and this is why he has seldom been less than exciting.

Beethoven Finale

For the ultimate in excitement Dr. Munch apparently released untapped reserves of energy during his performance of the Beethoven Ninth on Friday afternoon. He had opened his program with a short and early work of Honegger's — "Le Chant de Nigamon"—which served to settle the listeners until Mayor Collins of Boston could offer Dr. Munch a tribute and a silver bowl from the city.

But with the first mysterious bars of the Ninth the wonder began to take place. It was obvious that Dr. Munch was caught up in the inspiration generated by the occasion, that he would certainly leave us with an unforgettable memory of his genius.

The scherzo bounced along its peppery way with brilliance; the melodies and counter-melodies in the Adagio glowed with an unwonted warmth; and in the introduction of the final choral movement the declamations of the orchestral recitative were dramatized beyond the usual.

Then came the entrance of the "Ode to Joy," its magnificent development by the orchestra, and the first vocal statement of Schiller's words by the baritone—in this case Donald Gramm.

There were no dark horses in this quartet; the potentialities of each artist have long since been a known factor, for each has had many appearances with the Boston Symphony. The ring of Mr. Gramm's baritone was matched in radiance by the tenor of John McCollum, the contralto of Florence Kopleff, and the soprano of Adele Addison.

The choral forces, too—those of the Chorus pro Musica, one of Boston's two leading choral groups—were commendable for their power, balance, and blend. Alfred Nash Patterson, the Chorus pro Musica's founder and director, was duly honored at the close for his part in the preparation of the Ninth.

After the double bar—and a truly magnificent finale — the listeners stood at their seats while applauding and cheering, calling Dr. Munch forward for half a dozen bows. He directed some of the ovation to Richard Burgin, who, though retiring as concert-master after 42 seasons, will continue as the orchestra's associate conductor.

Yes, there was joy, and there has been joy, as Henry B. Cabot said at the testimonial dinner given Dr. Munch by the trustees:

"There has been joy — joy among all your associates in our orchestra, joy among all of us who have taken such pride in our 'Symphony,' a pride in this orchestra which we think of as ours, but which in truth has no such narrow bound, for it has won and held the admiration of the lovers of music throughout the world."

Reiner to Retire

By the Associated Press

Fritz Reiner, for nine years the musical director of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, has announced his intention to resign his post though he will conduct a few programs and continue as musical advisor.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Record-American
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 531,565

APR 21 1962

Dr. Munch's Final Boston Concerts

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in four concerts as well as an Open Rehearsal at Symphony Hall next week.

These concerts will conclude the orchestra's 81st Boston season and will be Dr. Munch's final concerts in Boston before his retirement, at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival, as the orchestra's music director.

Dr. Munch's program for the 8:30 p. m. concerts on Monday and Tuesday will consist of three works long associated with him: Berlioz' "Symphonie Fantastique," "La Mer" by Debussy and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," Suite No. 2.

At the Orchestra's Open Rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30, Dr. Munch will make final preparations for his Friday and Saturday concerts, at 2:15 and 8:30 p. m., respectively, when the program is scheduled to include Honegger's "Le Chant de Nigamon" and the Symphony No. 9 by Beethoven.

Soloists in the Beethoven symphony will be Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; Donald Gramm, baritone, and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director.

MOVIE DIRECTORY

BLANK PAGE

178

BLANK PAGE

180

BOSTON RECORD AMERICAN, MONDAY, APRIL 30, 1962

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Dr. Munch Conducts Simple Farewell

Dr. Charles Munch conducted his final concert at Symphony Hall as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with simplicity and dignity. There was no ceremony and there were no speeches. After 13 years as leader of what is probably the world's greatest orchestra, he led his musicians and the huge Chorus Pro Musica through Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with vigor and they kept it up.

They called him back six times. The Saturday nighters, who are much less inhibited than the concertgoers of Friday afternoons, shouted their approval, their admiration, their regret at losing the white-haired maestro. They boomed out their bravos against the magnificent sounding board of the hall. They brought him back, brisk, smiling, modest six times.

Elliot Norton

Anyone else in the world, on such an occasion, would have made a speech. Not Charles Munch. That he was moved was obvious enough. That his hearers were excited enough to abandon all Boston reserve was plain: In the top balcony, where emotions are more explicitly expressed, they drummed a salute to the leaving leader with their heels.

"DEBT OF GRATITUDE"

Every last seat in the hall had been taken. In such odd corners as the two radio booths at stage right, special guests were jammed in to seats of vantage. Although it is against the rules, there were critics standing against the wall in the top balcony. It was worth standing.

Just before the performance began a letter from President Kennedy to Doctor Munch was read to the audience. Mr. Kennedy put into words what quite a few million people surely feel:

"As you conduct your last concert in Boston as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express the warm appreciation which the nation shares with the Boston community for your splendid musical leadership . . . This government owes you a special debt of gratitude for the outstanding tour abroad of the Boston Symphony during the past few years . . ."

The letter was read without comment to the delighted audience by Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the orchestra. Dr. Munch, who was deeply moved by the spontaneous Presidential tribute, had already answered it.

AUDIENCE RISES

"Your letter touches me profoundly," he had written from a full heart. "I can hardly express my thanks to you and Mrs. Kennedy for your interest in my retirement from the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . ." For Boston and the Bostonians who have supported him, he added: "If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is a great institution, it is because this alert, intelligent and generous community wishes it so."

When he walked on the stage to begin his concert, he was businesslike.

In white tie and tails, he looked, as always, impeccable and handsome.

The audience rose and so did the great orchestra in a quick tribute that was completely spontaneous and unforced. Dr. Munch acknowledged their greeting with a bow. Nothing more. Then he got down to the business of conducting.

In the next hour and a half, he conducted first the curious "Chant de Nigamon," then, after an intermission, the tremendous Beethoven Ninth.

In both works, he was crisply authoritative, forceful, commanding, impressive. In both, the musicians responded with the brilliance, the precision and the extraordinary musical "color" and warmth for which, at their best, they are applauded all across the world. On Saturday evening, it seemed to an admiring layman who stood throughout the evening, that they were playing at their absolute best.

The Beethoven is a spectacular work, particularly in the final movement, with orchestra and chorus combining to produce jointly greating crashing cadences of sound.

The audience rose then with a great roar of approval. The leader paused, bowed in his courtly way, then walked swiftly off the stage. When they kept up the clamor for his return, he kept coming back. He brought on the soloists of the Chorus Pro Musica; shook hands heartily with concertmaster Richard Burgin twice, crossed his hands on his breast, bowed, smiled, and then walked off for the last time.

Although he will lead at Tanglewood and will appear as guest conductor here in years to come, he had finished without sentimentality his great career at Symphony Hall on a professional note.

THANKS—Charles Munch thanks Mayor Collins, who has just presented him with a silver Paul Revere bowl and the greetings of the city.

MUNCH

Continued from the First Page

Some of us out front realized our throats were tight and tears trembled in the eyes. What emotions Munch felt, having for the last time as head of his own orchestra conducted a Friday concert, were kept to himself.

With him it was all grace and charm, French without tears. To the last, unwilling to risk public speech in English, he refrained from saying a word.

These 11 minutes were the peak of an afternoon which began with a certain expectant tension in the air, and which grew vastly exciting during the course of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The City of Boston was officially represented by Mayor Collins, on stage in his wheel chair at the beginning of intermission. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony's trustees, introduced the mayor, who then read a heartfelt speech of parting. Said Mayor Collins:

"Mr. Munch, it is with mixed emotions that I participate in this ceremony today. It is always difficult to say farewell to a friend. It is particularly difficult for me, as mayor of the City of Boston, and as a private citizen, to adequately express the sincere regret I feel at your retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"We owe you a great debt of gratitude for the joy you have brought to so many through your unmatched talent; the contributions you have made to Boston's culture will be long remembered.

"During the 13 years you served as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra you gained our esteem and affection. It is my sincere hope, as mayor, speaking in an official capacity and as a private citizen with great personal admiration for you, that you will visit with us again soon.

"I have just returned from a visit to Strasbourg — your home and Boston's sister city. I found there that the citizens of Strasbourgh—indeed citizens throughout Europe—look to you and revere you as we do here in Boston.

"In presenting you with this memento of the occasion of your official leave-taking I wish you good health, good cheer and many additional years of happiness."

The memento was that admirable official gift of this city to honored and distinguished men: a large silver Paul Revere bowl.

What Mr. Munch said in reply, as he bent and shook hands with Mayor Collins, did not carry over the microphone.

As a French musician whose performance of French music is his especial glory, Munch appropriately included one last Gallic piece upon his farewell program: the brief "Le Chant de Nigamon" by the late Arthur Honegger.

It is obscure music, describing, of all things, a French novelist's notion of the scalping of the Iroquois Indian Nigamon by Tareah, a Huron Indian. It had not been heard in Boston since its composer conducted it upon visit in January, 1929.

But the great choral Ninth Symphony of Beethoven—the same work with which Serge Koussevitzky said goodby to Boston in 1949—was what the audience had been awaiting.

Munch has done it here before, several times, and we knew what to expect—a clear, vigorous, dynamic performance. It was all of that, in deed in many respects one of the most exciting accounts of this masterwork I ever have heard.

The proportions of this performance were as vast as the music itself; the classic grandeur and the emotional eloquence derived both from the score and from Munch's own profound personal comprehension of the Symphony.

The four soloists, singly and taken as a group, were unquestionably the finest, best-matched I have heard: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Donald Gramm, bass. They deservedly shared a bow with Munch at the end.

Effect: Enormous

So, too, Chorus Pro Musica, excellently prepared (as always!) by Alfred Nash Patterson, dealt with the high range and the difficulties of their parts, not only with ability but to enormous effect.

Munch led them at a febrile tempo through the fast sections, but they kept the pace and the volume and the rhythm, and they sounded exceedingly well. Twice Munch brought Patterson out to share applause.

So, amid the heartfelt esteem and effection of Bostonians who have sat before him 13 years, and of some younger, was made the last farewell but one to Munch. That final au revoir (for he will return as guest conductor next season) will be uttered tonight.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991

APR 28 1962

Tears, Cheers Bid Munch Adieu

By CYRUS DURGIN

A tumultuous and emotional leave-taking was that between Charles Munch and the subscribers to the Friday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

As the audience had risen to greet him when he appeared on stage at Symphony Hall, so they leaped to their feet the instant Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was over. But with a difference: this time the applause was nearly drowned by a spontaneous cheer that burst from 2000 throats.

For the next 11 minutes it was all a show of admiration and affection for the man who is ending 13 years as music director of the orchestra.

Back Munch came, and again and again, all smiles except once when the strain of fatigue showed upon his face. He waved to the public, touched his right hand, still holding its baton, toward his heart, smiled again, bowed again.

Next time out, Munch took by the arm Richard Burgin, who is retiring as concertmaster, and retiring cellist Jacobus Langendoen, urged them to center stage that they might take a bow with him.

Still the clapping and the cheers went on. A huge— not large, really huge—beribboned green laurel wreath was brought out, the gift to Munch of the Boston Symphony trustees.

Munch grinned broadly this time, folded both arms across his chest as if to embrace the Boston listeners who were so reluctant to let him go. Then one more bow and he departed, signalling as he went, with a nod of the head, to the musicians to leave the stage.

MUNCH
Page Eight

181

Munch Finale

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

Munch Reshaped Boston Symphony

By ROBERT TAYLOR
First of Three Articles

Bostonians resist change. And with the announcement 13 years ago that 74-year-old Serge Koussevitzky, the beloved conductor of The Boston Symphony, was going to retire, all Boston trembled.

Who would succeed the legendary Koussevitzky? His young protege, Leonard Bernstein? The silver-haired Alsatian, Charles Muench, who, for three seasons preceding 1949, had taken by storm most of the major U. S. orchestras as guest conductor? Or a bald, dynamic Greek named Dimitri Mitropoulos, then conducting in Minneapolis?

★ ★ ★

Munch (the "e" was later dropped) it was. In October, 1949, "le beau Charles," as the sighing women of Paris called him, assumed responsibility for the world-famous precision instrument, the Boston Symphony.

On that day began one of the most fascinating reigns in the history of the American symphony orchestra—a regime that comes to an end on the last weekend of April here, when Dr Munch retires. His successor, Erich Leinsdorf, tarries in the wings, as he has been waiting for a year since he was proclaimed the next in line for what is generally considered the most prestigious—and daunting—job in world orchestras.

Mr. Leinsdorf, indeed, faces something of the same situation that confronted Charles Munch here 13 years ago. Not only would anybody succeed, but could anybody succeed? It confirms Dr. Munch's success that he has been able to emerge from the shades of the great Koussevitzky, and to reshape the orchestra in his own image.

The process has caused controversy. Gently, without fuss, in a manner benign yet firm, Charles Munch has turned the Boston Symphony into a French instrument. He has used it to express the repertoire of his choice. And few would deny that today the orchestra stands pre-eminent in a chosen realm. This is not the orchestra of Koussevitzky, nor is it intended to be. But the transformation has elapsed, and without too much criticism, the difference in sound.

LEINSDORF

What were Charles Munch's credentials? Who was the man behind the public facade of the artist?

He was 57 when he arrived in Boston. His father was an Alsatian musician, his mother a Parisian, and he was born in Strasbourg. Like his fellow Alsatian, Robert Schumann, who later became France's distinguished Cabinet minister, he was unwillingly conscripted into the German Army in World War I, and wounded at Verdun.

This early entanglement with the tragic politics of modern Europe reached a second climax in 1929 when he faced the dilemma of becoming a German citizen or giving up his job as concertmaster of the Gowandhaus Orchestra. Munch chose France.

DR. CHARLES MUNCH

His early musical interests centered around the violin, which he first studied with his father, and later under Lucien Capet and Carl Flesch. Not until 1930, at the age of 40, did he switch from the orchestra to full-time conducting, though undoubtedly he had learned much under Furtwaengler and Walter. He founded the Orchestra Symphonique de Paris in the season of 1930-31, by 1938 had become leader of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra.

★ ★ ★

During the war years he continued to lead the Paris Conservatory Orchestra, but he turned over his salary to the cause of the Resistance.

His first American appearance took place with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, December 27, 1946. It marked a succession of triumphs culminating in the all-important Boston Symphony job. Since then Charles Munch's achievements—the European tour of 1952, the first American orchestra to visit Russia (1956), the idea of Open Rehearsals, the 168 new scores played (36 by Americans, 39 world premieres, 17 first U. S. performances)—are part of the record.

Nevertheless, what of the man? Few Bostonians know him, really. Accessible to a circle of intimates as the most gregarious and charming of companions, Dr. Munch has not preferred to follow the flamboyant Koussevitzky tradition of social grandeur. He speaks through music.

Remember, however, that in his younger days, Charles Munch knew the dubious joys of the matinee idol. An early version of the French bobby-socker were called "Munchettes."

Furthermore, just before he came to Boston, in June, 1949, a poll was taken by the magazine "Elle," in which 10,000 female readers were asked: "What man would you like to have dinner with tonight, if you could make your choice?"

Winston Churchill took first place, Charles Munch, second. He thereby edged out screen actor Jean Marais, President Auriol, Gary Cooper, and Joseph Stalin, in that order.

NEXT SUNDAY—Munch, the man nobody knows.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

APR 5 1962

GARBER'S GRANDSTAND

By BERNIE GARBER

While I am grabbing a few days of Miami sunshine, I thought you'd like to hear from well-traveled erudite Leopold Muszkat, one of my right hands.

Mr. Bernard Garber, before leaving for his well deserved vacation, asked me to write a column for him. Why did he choose me as "guest" columnist? I suppose the reason is that I am one of the few foreign-born persons employed in his Brookline office and he wanted me to share with the readers some of my impressions about the Hub.

Before asking me, he knew very well that I like Boston very much and he was sure that my observations would be pleasant to read for Bostonians. However, every recipe for sweet cake includes a little bit of lemon rind. That's the reason why I will "bitter up" my remarks with some criticisms.

Mr. Garber very wisely eludes any suspicion of using his column to advertise his professional activities. I have to do the same, so I won't mention anything about my all-day activities and observations, but will limit myself to my evening experiences.

Boston certainly has a lot to offer any person interested in music and drama. It is wonderful to be able to listen 24 times a year to the Symphony Orchestra which can be modestly described as one of the best in the world. They are wonderful, but seem to know it and sometimes act in a way quite different than their colleagues in other symphony orchestras. I have often heard members of B.S.O. addressed as "Gentlemen of B.S.O." That they certainly are, but the knowledge of their value and achievements results in a kind of complacency even in their concert behavior. When observing the attitude and behavior of members of symphony orchestras which visited Boston in the last two seasons, one can easily notice that the musicians show extreme eagerness and interest in the "proceedings." They literally sit on the edges of their chairs during the whole of the concert, one thing which I never noticed among the Gentlemen of B.S.O.

Boston University's concert series run by Aaron Richmond is deserving of every praise. The choice of musicians appearing is excellently judged and the proof of it is in many sell-outs of the hufe Symphony Hall, but . . . aren't these concerts too few for a big music-loving community which can be found in Boston? The Boston University series is run on the Hurok Line (nothing but "attractions"). There would certainly be room for solo or chamber appearances of many, many young talents, especially the American ones in the Boston area. There are at least two accoustically excellent medium-sized concert halls available: Jordan Hall and Sanders Theatre. They certainly could be used much more often than they are at present for musical purposes by an impresario with foresight.

I found the activities of both Boston Opera groups (Sarah Caldwell's and Goldovsky's) extremely rewarding, but found out much to my regret that the local public doesn't care for this kind of entertainment. The attendances at Donnelly's were not large enough, and those at the Wilbur were shocking.

Via opera we are coming to the theatrical area. I am a theatre fan and I hardly missed a performance. My most rewarding memories are connected with productions of amateur or student performances, such as B.U., Loeb and Tufts . . . good choice of plays and eager young actors.

Boston's pre-Broadway tryouts are generally as good as their Broadway runs, which means only some will be worthy to survive. It seems to me that there is an unfortunate trend in Broadway tryouts. The number of tryouts in the current season is lower than last season. There must be a reason for this. Philadelphia holds firm first-place as the tryout city, Toronto and Detroit are coming up. Wilmington, Delaware, figured a few times during this season, but Boston's runs are coming down. The theaters, however, are kept as busy as ever with post-Broadway runs and these are acted by the so-called national companies and usually on a level which cannot be claimed as fit for such cultural centers as Boston.

During my visits to the theaters I have noticed a very unpleasant feature. The directors of Boston's legitimate theaters are preserving class distinction amongst their patrons. Those paying more for their admission ticket receive "full treatment," which means full program publication. The others who pay less (second balcony) have to satisfy themselves with a much shorter resume. I have not observed this in any other theater in the world, or as a matter of fact, on Broadway. I am wondering how this situation is tolerated by advertisers in the theatre programs. Aren't they aware that their advertisements reach only a part of the theatre crowd?

The column runs out, so only one more thought. It took me some time to get accustomed to such references as the Hub, Athens of America and so on, but I got used to them and now I rather like them. They show Bostonians' pride, but, alas not civic pride. I don't think there is a place in the world, except perhaps some provincial towns in India where dirt and litter would be so prominent as it is in lane ways and even in streets in Back Bay. Nevertheless, when all is said and done, I think it's wonderful to live in Boston!

* * *

I wrote the above notes last Thursday and then . . . I heard the French music concert at Symphony Hall. Dr. Munch was inspired and all the musicians sat on the edges of their chairs throughout the whole proceedings. Result? Ovations on such a scale as I have rarely witnessed during my long years of concert attendance.

182
MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

national report

Boston

Mostly Symphony

Charles Munch in recent weeks has confirmed the impression that he is conducting an unannounced review of his repertory from his dozen years with the Boston Symphony. To that end he has given us Honegger's Symphony No. 5, the Symphony in B-Flat of Ernest Chausson, Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques, which the late composer wrote at Munch's invitation, and Ravel's La Valse.

This music of Honegger and Martinu, perhaps even of Chausson, is a good deal greater than Ravel's intended ballet score, but the fact remains the latter has been a tour de force here with Munch. Even Koussevitzky, who did it well, never managed quite the orgiastic sense nor the extreme clarity, at beginning and end, which is the hallmark of a Munch performance.

Munch also has given us a brace of admirable French-trained soloists — pianist Jeanne Marie Darré, and cellist André Navarra, each of whom made a highly successful American debut and were heard in New York with the orchestra. Mme. Darré played the Piano Concerto No. 2, in G Minor of Saint-Saëns and Navarra performed Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B Minor. Rudolf Serkin's appearance in the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto was unaccountably coarse and distorted and a grievous disappointment. So was the accompaniment from Munch and the orchestra. Between his concerts in Manhattan, George Szell brought the Cleveland Orchestra to Symphony Hall on February 11. They played, for the first time in Boston; the Symphony by Kodály. Rossini's La Gazza Ladra Overture and Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony received performances remarkable for sculptured phrasing and refined detail.

The week following, Munch and the Boston Symphony gave a pension fund concert—the last Munch will conduct. Isaac Stern was soloist — contributing his services — and the program was built around him. He was heard in all four numbers—the Bach Concerto in A Minor, Mozart's Adagio in E, K. 261 and Rondo in C, K. 373 and the Brahms Concerto in D Major. What a gorgeous afternoon! Virtuosity and musicianship from all hands!

Locally, the Civic Symphony under its new conductor, Kalman Novak, has been making extraordinary progress. So has Novak. At Jordan Hall on Feb. 13 they performed Haydn's Symphony No. 83, "La Poule," the F Minor Symphony of Vaughan Williams and Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat, K. 364. These semi-professional players showed a great advance over their work in December of this year.

Other activity of the month has been a "Rossini Festival" (consisting of Il Barbiere di Seviglia and Il Turco in Italia—three performances each, Wilbur Theater) by Boris Goldovsky and his Opera Theater; a fine evening, in the Mason Music Foundation Series, by the Quartetto di Roma and a somewhat dismaying talk about electronic music by Milton Babbitt who made good sense of this chilling topic.—Cyrus W. D...

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
L'Independant
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 3,718
APR 10 1962

En l'honneur de M. Charles Munch

Jeudi, le 19 avril, au consulat général de France, 3 avenue Commonwealth, Boston, monsieur et madame Jean Savelli donneront une réception en l'honneur de monsieur Charles Münch, directeur éminent de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, à l'occasion de son prochain départ de Boston, où il laissera une légion d'admirateurs et amis.

La réception, nous annonce M. le consul général, aura lieu de 5 hrs. à 7:30 p.m., sur invitation personnelle.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER AND NEWS
D. 38,544 S. 38,420
APR 1 1962

TO THE COUNTLESS fans of the Boston Symphony, this waning music season has been a long exercise in the sentiment of sweet parting. Concert by concert, the orchestra is parting from its music director and conductor, Charles Munch. For 13 years they have been like bow to fiddle. Munch made it an installment parting by announcing his impending retirement before the season began. It becomes final in the fall, before he becomes 71 years old in September. Other bows will play upon this magnificent instrument no less beautifully than the Munch bow does. Yet few bows will evoke quite the same spirituality which suggests man's essence is in music.

* * *

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 407,089 S. 474,073
APR 6 1962

Postlude

Charles Munch Bids Forceful Farewell—But He'll Be Back in January

By Paul Hume

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony played their first Washington concert last night for a Constitution Hall audience that found it hard to say "Farewell."

Some time ago Munch announced that the present season, concluding with the summer at Tanglewood, would be his last with the orchestra he has led for thirteen years. Washington will see and hear him again, and before too long, for he will be back in the big hall next January as guest conductor of the National Symphony in three concerts.

Last night's program was a survey of great French symphonic literature of the past century and a quarter. It was drawn from the three outstanding French orchestral masters, Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel. Predictably, it began with the Fantastic Symphony, in a reading that was at once familiar and fresh.

Dallying over the introduction, Munch moved the main body of the allegro with welcome vitality, a mood he sustained throughout the remainder of the long score, even in the slow movement. In this particular passage, his sense of the need for continuing the three outmotion, even in slow episodes, was a marvelously enlivening force. To the outbursts, two of them, that close the work, he brought a tremendous control so that the climaxes were achieved with a clear sense of the fundamental rhythms and textures.

It would be highly unjust not to single out, from an entire orchestra that played superlatively, the solo sounds of the Speyer English horn, the answering Gomberg oboe, Debussy, as in "Pelleas," and the chansons, enamored of the high clarinet of Cardillo lent rhythms and harmonic ideas precisely the right frenzied touches.

Debussy's seascape was full of mystery, the dynamic swellings from "ppp" to "ppp" and back again, and the fluent adjustments of tempo giving a wonderful plasticity. So sensitively was the orchestral color managed that one seemed to hear the very sound of distance. Here was Debussy, as in "Pelleas," and the chansons, enamored of the French, and marvelously Munchian.

No one can doubt that the Boston Symphony is on the verge of a vast change in personality, as an orchestra. It will play and sound very differently from the way it does now and has for many years. We can only wait and listen.

But the grand music that the orchestra has made for

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 7 1962

DR. MUNCH'S CULTURAL LEADERSHIP OF HIGHEST

To the Editor of the Herald:

Dr. Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for twelve years, will retire at the end of this, the orchestra's eighty-first season.

He has proved a most worthy successor to the great Serge Koussevitzky. A man's success during his span of active life may be measured in terms of the cultural and aesthetic values he has given his fellow man, the quality of his leadership, and the loftiness of his standards. Charles Munch has been successful almost beyond measure.

The Orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction has maintained its place as a leader among the world's foremost orchestras. It is fortunate that, after his retirement, the world of fine music will still have the benefit of his talent and wisdom as a consultant and, it is hoped, as an occasional guest conductor with the Boston Symphony.

MALCOLM WILLOUGHBY
Arlington

THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, APRIL 22, 1962 A 47

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1962

national report

Boston

Mostly Symphony

Charles Munch in recent weeks has confirmed the impression that he is conducting an unannounced review of his repertory from his dozen years with the Boston Symphony. To that end he has given us Honegger's Symphony No. 5, the Symphony in B-Flat of Ernest Chausson, Martinu's Fantaisies Symphoniques, which the late composer wrote at Munch's invitation, and Ravel's La Valse.

This music of Honegger and Martinu, perhaps even of Chausson, is a good deal greater than Ravel's intended ballet score, but the fact remains the latter has been a tour de force here with Munch. Even Koussevitzky, who did it well, never managed quite the orgiastic sense nor the extreme clarity, at beginning and end, which is the hallmark of a Munch performance.

Munch also has given us a brace of admirable French-trained soloists — pianist Jeanne Marie Darré, and cellist André Navarra, each of whom made a highly successful American debut and were heard in New York with the orchestra. Mme. Darré played the Piano Concerto No. 2, in G Minor of Saint-Saëns, and Navarra performed Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B Minor. Rudolf Serkin's appearance in the Beethoven "Emperor" Concerto was unaccountably coarse and distorted and a grievous disappointment. So was the accompaniment from Munch and the orchestra. Between his concerts in Manhattan, George Szell brought the Cleveland Orchestra to Symphony Hall on February 11. They played, for the first time in Boston; the Symphony by Kodály, Rossini's La Gazza Ladra Overture and Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony received performances remarkable for sculptured phrasing and refined detail.

The week following, Munch and the Boston Symphony gave a pension fund concert—the last Munch will conduct. Isaac Stern was soloist — contributing his services — and the program was built around him. He was heard in all four numbers—the Bach Concerto in A Minor, Mozart's Adagio in E, K. 261 and Rondo in C, K. 373 and the Brahms Concerto in D Major. What a gorgeous afternoon! Virtuosity and musicianship from all hands!

Locally, the Civic Symphony under its new conductor, Kalman Novak, has been making extraordinary progress. So has Novak. At Jordan Hall on Feb. 13 they performed Haydn's Symphony No. 83, "La Poule," the F Minor Symphony of Vaughan Williams and Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat, K. 364. These semi-professional players showed a great advance over their work in December of this year.

Other activity of the month has been a "Rossini Festival" (consisting of Il Barbiere di Seviglia and Il Turco in Italia—three performances each, Wilbur Theater) by Boris Goldovsky and his Opera Theater, a fine evening, in the Mason Music Foundation Series, by the Quartetto di Roma and a somewhat dismaying talk about electronic music by Milton Babbitt who made good sense of this chilling topic.—Cyrus W. Durgin

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
L'Independant
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 3,718
APR 10 1962

En l'honneur de M. Charles Munch

Jeudi, le 19 avril, au consulat général de France, 3 avenue Commonwealth, Boston, monsieur et madame Jean Savelli donneront une réception en l'honneur de monsieur Charles Münch, directeur éminent de l'orchestre symphonique de Boston, à l'occasion de son prochain départ de Boston, où il laissera une légion d'admirateurs et amis.

La réception, nous annonce M. le consul général, aura lieu de 5 hrs. à 7:30 p.m., sur invitation personnelle.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER AND NEWS
D. 38,544 S. 38,420
APR 1 1962

TO THE COUNTLESS fans of the Boston Symphony, this waning music season has been a long exercise in the sentiment of sweet parting. Concert by concert, the orchestra is parting from its music director and conductor, Charles Munch. For 13 years they have been like bow to fiddle. Munch made it an installment parting by announcing his impending retirement before the season began. It becomes final in the fall, before he becomes 71 years old in September. Other bows will play upon this magnificent instrument no less beautifully than the Munch bow does. Yet few bows will evoke quite the same spirituality which suggests man's essence is in music.

Postlude

Charles Munch Bids For Forceful Farewell—But He'll Be Back in January

By Paul Hume

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony played their last Washington concert last night for a Constitution Hall audience that found it hard to say "Farewell."

Some time ago Munch announced that the present season, concluding with the summer at Tanglewood, would be his last with the orchestra he has led for thirteen years. Washington will see and hear him again, and before too long, for he will be back in standing for the big January concert of the National Symphony in three concerts.

Last night's program was a survey of great phonic literature of the past century and a quarter. It was all very French, and marvelously Munchian.

No one can doubt that the Boston Symphony is on the verge of a vast change in personality, as an orchestra. It will play and sound very differently from the way it does now and has for many years. We can only wait and listen. But the grand music that the orchestra has made for

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 407,089 S. 474,873
APR 6 1962

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 7 1962

DR. MUNCH'S CULTURAL LEADERSHIP OF HIGHEST

To the Editor of the Herald:

Dr. Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for twelve years, will retire at the end of this, the orchestra's eighty-first season.

He has proved a most worthy successor to the great Serge Koussevitzky. A man's success during his span of active life may be measured in terms of the cultural and aesthetic values he has given his fellow man, the quality of his leadership, and the loftiness of his standards. Charles Munch has been successful almost beyond measure.

The Orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction has maintained its place as a leader among the world's foremost orchestras. It is fortunate that, after his retirement, the world of fine music will still have the benefit of his talent and wisdom as a consultant and, it is hoped, as an occasional guest conductor with the Boston Symphony.

MALCOLM WILLOUGHBY
Arlington

Thanks to Dr. Charles Munch for Power and Beauty

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"Munch will be remembered," says Irving Kolodin in this week's Saturday Review, "more for the strength of his narrow affinities than the depth of his broad sympathies." The verdict may be rephrased with finer semantic justice:

"Charles Munch built the Boston Symphony into the world's greatest French orchestra."

So successful has been Dr. Munch's work, the Gallicism of the Boston Symphony today can be taken for granted. But is Charles Munch strictly a conductor of the French repertoire; and has the Boston Symphony primacy slipped under his rule?

Single Challenge

The second question is easier to answer: Dr. Munch has maintained the standard. One of the favorite plaints of the orchestra's critics revolves around the fact that change and decay corrode the BSO. This keening invokes an echoing response in the past; it was not unheard during the "golden" Koussevitzky years.

Knowing that Dr. Munch has sustained a standard is not a matter of hearing the Bostonians sporadically, but of attending the concerts Friday after Friday, and of comparison with the nation's other leading orchestras in Symphony. Only the Philadelphia, I would say, has any right to challenge the Boston in its present estate, although the Cleveland under Szell comes dangerously close, and at times plays better.

The Boston Symphony, however, is a different, though not inferior, instrument under Charles Munch. If Koussevitzky was an absolute dictator, Munch has been the constitutional monarch of Boston music.

The sound he strives for is typically shimmering, crisp, dry. His phrasing seeks lucidity, and his concern for the precise definition of inner voice displays the French love of logic and form. At his best the orchestra acquires a golden patina not unlike the tonalities of a Watteau or Fragonard. Comparison of Koussevitzky-Munch sound and balance reveals the truth of the axiom that there are no orchestras, only conductors.

